Out of my experience in the State of New York I have come to believe that there is great hope for economic progress by the farmer through cooperative organization. I realize that there are many difficulties in the road of cooperation. They are not all the result of opposition by external enemies; probably a large proportion of them are internal, but there is no need for despair because there are many failures in cooperative enterprises. All of you gentlemen know that there are also many failures in private business. I doubt if the proportion of failures in farmers' cooperatives is as high. To those who object to the invasion of what they regard as the legitimate field of private business by farmer cooperative enterprises the answer should be made that anything which contributes to the economic stability of the farming industry contributes also to the general stability of our industrial life. The free growth of farm cooperatives is just as fully justified as the free growth of other producing enterprises which seek by every means possible to stabilize the conditions of sale of their products. Farming affects the welfare of a larger proportion of our population than any one other industry, and it is properly a matter of Government concern to foster and protect a sound business organization for it.

In developing this policy the Federal Government, ever since 1916, has given its attention to the development of a sound system of finance, both for the individual farmer and for cooperative credit organizations, as well as cooperative marketing organizations. In recent years there have been added emergency measures which provide direct loans for farmers, and it is due to the unfortunate conditions that have prevailed that an element of subsidy has entered and the valuable principle of cooperation has been to a degree sacrificed. Other illogical features have developed, the most conspicuous of which is that the Government has created a number of separate agencies, all concerned with the farmers' credit problem, with large independent organizations and often with conflicting policies. Thoughtful men, interested in farm financing, have deplored this scattering of governmental effort, which was due more to circumstances than to lack of forethought, and have foreseen that a consolidation of this governmental assistance to farmers in their credit problems must eventually occur.

President Roosevelt is one who has long given thought to this problem and the result—his first consolidation order pursuant to extraordinary powers granted by Congress—was to order the consolidation of government lending agencies. We are now in the midst of the problem of effecting that consolidation. It is no small problem and I have time only to outline its scope very briefly. The new agency created is the Farm Credit Administration. Under the terms of President Roosevelt's Executive order, it will come into active functioning the latter part of this month. The agencies to be consolidated are the Federal land banks and intermediate-credit banks, now supervised by the Federal Farm Loan Board, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is chairman, and with 6 other members, 1 of whom is the active executive head and is known as the "Farm Loan Commissioner"; the regional agricultural credit corporations, of which there are 12, 1 in each Federal land-bank region, under the direction of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the Crop Production Loan Division, and the Seed Loan Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, which through regional offices disburses emergency crop and seed loans, in relatively small amounts, to all parts of the country; and the Federal Farm Board, which was created in 1929 to furnish assistance to cooperative marketing enterprises and through other devices to promote orderly marketing or agricultural products.

The form of organization prescribed by the President discards the board system of control. Both the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Farm Board are abolished and their powers are concentrated in the office of Governor of the Farm Credit Administration. Likewise the control of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation over the affairs of the regional agricultural credit corporations is brought to an end and these corporations also are responsible solely to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, who in turn will be responsible directly to the President. In exercising the general supervisory and administrative functions of these various agencies, it has seemed to the President and his advisers that there is no more compelling reason why decision should be reached by a board of many members than for having similar boards of control in authority over the executive departments of the Government. The board system is inevitably cumbersome; it delays decisions and divides instead of concentrating responsibility. It seems the more unnecessary because of the fact that in several of these activities, that is, those having a banking aspect, there are separate local boards of directors and loan committees to deal with applications and with policies.

All these present agencies of the Government deal with similar problems and in many cases they deal with the same individuals, or groups of individuals, seeking to borrow from Government funds or from funds gathered under Government auspices and supervised by Government agencies. There are a great duplication of records and paralleling of investigations. There is also a diversity of loan policies. From the standpoint of the borrowers the situation is even more complicated and confusing. It is not to be expected that an ordinary farmer-borrower shall know the details of all the statutes and plans of operation of these different governmental agencies and therefore when he undertakes to obtain a loan, or the refinancing of an indebtedness, he is forced to embark on an investigation to find out where he should go to obtain what he wants and inevitably he may be referred from one agency to another, with resulting loss of time and vexation before he gets the final answer to his application.

We expect to accomplish, through the consolidation, simplicity of control, a unified policy, a consolidation of records and more direct and satisfactory dealings with applicants. We have in mind another policy which seems not less important; that policy is a gradual but definite effort to return to the cooperative principle in granting credit. Around the system of Federal land banks and intermediate credit banks, with their affiliated loan associations and credit corporations made up of farmer-borrowers, it is our hope to build up a complete system of cooperative local credit organizations which will do business with the regional branches of the Farm Credit Administration. Many of the problems of the Farm Board, with respect to loans to cooperative-marketing organizations, are essentially local in their character and can be handled more effectively and prudently by regional subdivisions than through action by a central board in Washington, as is the case at present. It is expected that the future dealings of the central office of that division of the Farm Credit Administration, which has to do with loans to cooperatives, will be exclusively with national cooperative organizations, while local problems will be dealt with primarily in the regions.

Our tentative plans call for five divisions of the work of the Farm Credit Administration, each one of which will be headed by a commissioner, who will be an adviser to the governor of the administration in his particular line of activity. The proposed divisions are: Land loans, intermediate credit loans, production credit loans, cooperative marketing loans, and emergency loans. The emergency-loan division will consolidate the existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation regional loans and the crop production loans of the Department of Agriculture, which are, except as to the limit in the amount allowed to an individual borrower, almost identical in character. The production-loan division's task will be to promote the formation of strictly cooperative credit corporations, which will borrow through the intermediate credit system. The function of the intermediate credit division is, and will remain of a banking character. Its scrutiny will be concentrated on the character of the individual loan, while the production credit division will generally oversee the functioning of the credit corporations.

At the outset of its career the Farm Credit Administration has a very heavy problem imposed upon it to administer the provisions of the Farm Mortgage Refinancing Act, which entails the issue of up to two billions of new land-bank bonds, on which interest is guaranteed by the Government; a general reduction in interest rates to all borrowers; new terms as to interest and amortization and provision for direct loans on second mortgages and chattel mortgages on a 10-year basis. This refinancing program is naturally very closely related to the emergency credit functions which are being absorbed in the new administration, and consolidation of these functions is thus most timely.

I think there is pretty general agreement that the unequal and in many cases unjust debt burden resting on most American farmers is one of the most serious obstacles to a return to stable conditions in agriculture. The mortgage refinancing plan and the creation of the Farm Credit Administration are not mere temporary emergency measures but they look toward putting the industry of farming on a more satisfactory basis by making permanent provision for meeting farm-credit needs in an adequate and businesslike manner.

I have not, as I indicated at the outset of this brief talk, attempted a comprehensive view of policies affecting agriculture. I have, I think, however, by reference to those questions that have come within my own experience, touched upon lines of policy that are most vital to the whole problem. These as I regard them are: Planned production, the cooperation of individuals with State and Federal Governments, and cooperation among farmers themselves to solve their own credit and their own production problems, so that agriculture may be put firmly on its feet as the most stable of our industries and the one most essential to the country's welfare.

PROPOSED BANKING LEGISLATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BULKLEY

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record an address on the subject of proposed banking legislation delivered by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] before the United States Chamber of Commerce on May 4, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The Glass subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has just concluded its deliberations on the revised Glass bill, and that measure is being reintroduced by Senator GLASS and Congressman STEAGALL.

The subcommittee began its work more than 2 years ago pursuant to a resolution passed by the Senate in the Seventy-first Congress, directing the Banking and Currency Committee to make a complete survey of the Federal Reserve and national banking systems, and specifically to inquire as to whether the facilities of these systems had been used to an improper extent to finance the carrying of speculative securities. The subcommittee was directed to make a full compilation of essential facts and to report its recommendations for legislation.

The Glass subcommittee made an exhaustive study, by public hearings and by questionnaires directed to Federal Reserve banks and member banks, and first reported in the spring of 1932 a bill which, after further hearings before the full Committee on Banking and Currency, was reported to the Senate and there debated in May of last year. It became necessary to displace the bill in order to consider the emergency revenue bill, with the result that consideration of the Glass bill was not concluded during the session. It was brought up again on the floor last January and, after lengthy and spirited debate, passed the Senate with only minor changes, by the handsome majority of 54 to 9. However, this occurred so late in the session that the bill did not come up for consideration in the House of Representatives.

With the beginning of the extra session of the Seventy-third Congress the Glass subcommittee resumed its labors and has now concluded to report the Glass bill as it passed the Senate in the last Congress, with very few changes. One of the changes to be proposed, however, is of the greatest importance and public interest; it provides for the insurance of bank deposits. This new feature of the bill is what I want to discuss here, and I shall assume that this audience is already reasonably familiar with the other very important features of the Glass bill, including the increased powers given to the Federal Reserve Board and Federal Reserve banks to prevent undue use of the credit facilities of member banks for the purpose of carrying speculative securities; the divorcement of all member banks from affiliate relationship; the complete separation of the investment banking business from commercial banking; the extension of branch banking in the national banking system to such extent as may be permitted by the laws of the several States respectively; and the regulation of holding companies which control member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

In addition to the provisions I have just enumerated and a few minor amendments to the National Bank Act and the Federal Reserve Act, the Glass bill, as passed by the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress, provides for the incorporation of a liquidating corporation with a view to providing means whereby the depositors in closed banks might more promptly receive a substantial share of such amounts as they might be entitled to upon their deposit accounts. The experiences which we have had during and following the banking holiday of March 1933 have convinced the subcommittee that a more far-reaching plan is desirable, if not imperative.

Accordingly, in place of the liquidating corporation provided for in the old Glass bill, the subcommittee now proposes the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation. The initial capital of this corporation is to be provided by a subscription of $150,000,000 by the United States Treasury, a subscription by the Federal Reserve banks in an amount equal to one half of the surplus of such banks, and a subscription by each member bank of an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of its total deposit liabilities. The amount so subscribed by the Federal Reserve banks would be approximately $140,000,000; the amount to be realized from member bank subscriptions is difficult to estimate because undoubtedly this very provision for bank-deposit insurance will draw large numbers of nonmember banks into the Federal Reserve System. It is believed that the subscription by member banks will aggregate more than $150,000,000 so that the original capital stock of the Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation will be about $450,000,000.

In order to provide still greater resources the corporation is authorized to issue and sell bonds, notes, or debentures in an aggregate amount equal to twice its capital stock.

All deposit accounts of $10,000 and less will be fully insured. Accounts in excess of $10,000 will be insured to the extent of 75 percent of the excess over $10,000 up to $50,000, and will be insured to the extent of 50 percent of all the excess over $50,000.

The small depositor is not so likely as the large depositor to have facilities for analyzing the condition of his bank or arriving at a valid conclusion as to its soundness, and it is, therefore, in the public interest that the small depositor should be protected in full. There is another very logical reason that supports the argument for full protection to the small depositor, and that is that in time of stress and doubt it is the aggregate withdrawals of small depositors which have in many cases so drained our banking institutions of cash that even completely solvent banks have been unable to meet the cash demands of their depositors. Those demands were not due to any actual need of cash but were inspired only by fear for the safety of the accounts. The insurance provided by this proposed act will so far remove any possible legitimate cause for such fear that it is most unlikely that in the future there will be any runs on banking institutions whose deposits may be insured by this Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Now, as to the manner of making the insurance effective for the benefit of the depositor: Immediately upon the closing of a member bank the insurance corporation will establish a new banking unit which will be ready at once to function with respect to checking accounts. This new unit will assume the net deposit liabilities of the closed bank, and as soon as the amount of the depositors' net claims, after offsets, can be determined, the depositors will be credited with the amount of their approved claims in the form of a deposit in the new banking unit, subject to check. The new unit will be authorized to accept deposits, so that depositors may proceed, almost without interruption, to transact with the new unit their daily business of drawing and depositing checks, just as they had previously conducted it with the old bank. The Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation will be obligated to the new banking unit in an amount equal to the net deposit liabilities of the closed bank, and will provide the new unit with such cash as may be required to carry on its business and allow a low rate of interest on the balance of the obligation. The new banking unit will thus be 100 percent liquid, and its depositors, having nothing to fear, will have no motive to withdraw their accounts, but will undoubtedly retain their balances in the new unit to the same extent that they would have retained them in the old bank had there been no suspicion of insolvency. This will make it possible to protect the safety and convenience of the depositors without any necessity for the insurance corporation to advance in cash the entire amount necessary to pay the depositors in full.

This proposed new banking unit will be completely under the direction of the Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation and will be operated, without any board of directors, by an executive officer appointed by the corporation. Until fully established on the basis I am about to explain, this new banking unit will not carry on any other function than that of deposit banking, and its only assets will be cash, Government securities, balance in the Federal Reserve bank, and balance due from the Deposit Insurance Corporation. In other words, it will be absolutely 100 percent liquid.

As soon as convenient the Bank Deposit Insurance Corporation will cause books to be opened for subscription to capital and surplus of a new national bank to carry on the business of the new banking unit which I have just described. The amount of capital and paid-in surplus will be fixed in reasonable proportion to deposit liabilities of the new banking unit, and stockholders of the closed bank, whose liabilities shall have been assumed by the new banking unit, will be given the first opportunity to subscribe for stock in the new bank. If the amount fixed as the appropriate capital and surplus should be subscribed and paid in, the stockholders would proceed to elect their directors and take over the management of the business of the new banking unit, which would thus become a full-fledged national bank.

If subscriptions should not be forthcoming for a new bank, the insurance corporation would have the right to turn over the going business of the new banking unit to any approved banking institution already in existence which might be willing to take over the assets and liabilities of the new banking unit upon making a showing that its own condition was such as to enable it safely to do so.

In either case, whether the new banking unit should, by the subscription of new capital, become a new national bank, or whether it should be merged into an existing institution, it would, as I have just explained, have complete liquidity of its assets. In fact, its liquidity would at first be too great to permit of profitable operation. It would therefore be sound business to draw on its credit with the insurance corporation in order to acquire loans and investments yielding a better return than the interest which would be allowed by the insurance corporation, and nothing could be more natural than that it would want to acquire all of the sound loan accounts of its customers—the depositors which it inherited from the old bank which had to close.

The new bank, therefore, would be the natural and normal customer to buy from the receiver the sound assets of the old bank, leaving the frozen and questionable items to be liquidated through the receivership. The same consideration would apply, of course, if a previously existing institution should take over these deposit liabilities; it would most naturally want to use some of its cash assets to buy the sound loans of the closed bank.

So much for the transfer and continuation of the business of a closed bank. Now, let us see how the insurance corporation will work out on the other end of the situation. Having obligated itself to the new banking unit in an amount equal to the entire net deposit liabilities of the closed bank, and having thus assured the depositors the full amount of their deposit accounts, the insurance corporation becomes subrogated to the rights of those depositors against the closed bank.

The bill provides that the corporation shall itself be appointed receiver if the closed institution happens to be a national bank, and that it may accept appointment as receiver of a State member bank if that is possible under the laws of the State in which the member bank was incorporated. In either case, it must proceed at once to determine the probable realizable value of the depositors' claims which it has thus acquired. Pursuant to that determination the estimated value of those claims will be set up on the books of the insurance corporation as a sound asset. The amount of this asset must, of course, be less than the amount of the deposit liability which the insurance corporation has been obliged to assume. This difference represents the estimated loss of the particular transaction, and will be charged immediately against a deposit insurance account. The losses charged against that deposit insurance account must be made good from time to time by assessments against the banks which are members of the system.

The bill, therefore, provides that whenever the aggregate debit, representing losses to the insurance corporation, shall exceed an amount equal to one fourth of 1 percent of the total deposit liabilities of all the member banks, there shall be an assessment of one fourth of 1 percent of such liability made against all member banks, and the amount collected from such assessments will be credited to the deposit insurance account. In that manner losses will be promptly restored to the insurance corporation. It will, of course, be found after complete administration of the affairs of any closed bank, that the realization will be either more or less than the estimate, so that ultimately there will be an adjusting debit or credit entry in the deposit insurance account. Such adjusting entries will in all probability be relatively small in amount. The insurance corporation will keep itself sound and solvent by requiring its members to pay losses promptly from time to time as frequently as estimated losses may aggregate an amount equal to one fourth of 1 percent of the deposit liabilities of member banks.

Now, having set up the appropriate loss charge to the deposit insurance account, the insurance corporation proceeds, as receiver, to liquidate the assets of the closed bank in an orderly manner and to collect the stockholders' liability. As we have already seen, there is a natural customer for the sound assets of the closed bank. That customer, the new banking unit, is able to pay for those sound assets with cash or its equivalent. It will undoubtedly make payment by drawing against the credit which it has with the insurance corporation and thus the insurance corporation realizes on those assets of the closed bank by the simple process of reduction of its own liabilities to the new successor bank. The slow or frozen assets must be liquidated out over a period of time with due regard to the interest of all concerned. Of course, settlements in the nature of liquidating dividends will have to be paid to creditors of the closed bank other than depositors, and in many cases also to large depositors whose accounts were not fully insured. These are details with which we need not here be concerned.

The plan has been so devised as to afford complete insurance to the mass of small depositors and a substantial measure of insurance to all depositors, and yet so as never to require the actual paying out of all deposit liabilities of any institution at any time. In normal circumstances depositors in any bank are depositors simply because the deposit credit in a banking institution is of greater convenience in the normal course of business than a similar amount of currency. As long as they can be sure that their deposit credit is available and not in danger of being lost, there is no occasion to draw it out except in the making of payments in the ordinary course of business transactions. With deposits in banks insured, as provided by the Glass bill, there need be no fear of loss, and therefore there can be no incentive for a run on a bank. Even if a bank should close, a new deposit credit with the new temporary banking unit will, under the provisions of this bill, be available to depositors almost immediately, and the regular routine business of collections and payments would be carried on almost without interruption.

It follows that a new unit bank, carrying on the business of a closed bank, will practically never have to call upon the insurance corporation to pay in cash the full amount which the insurance corporation undertakes to make available to the new bank, which, as I have explained, is an amount equal to the deposit liabilities of the new bank. Instead of being called upon to pay that whole amount in cash, the insurance corporation will satisfy its obligation in large part by turning over to the new bank the sound and quick assets of the closed bank, to which assets the insurance corporation will have become entitled by virtue of its subrogation to the rights of the depositors of the closed bank. Of course, the new bank will require some cash and will therefore call upon the insurance corporation to pay some part of its obligation in cash. Such cash payments on the part of the insurance corporation will, in part, be replenished promptly by assessment of losses against member banks, and in part will be replenished more slowly by the liquidation, over a considerable period of time, of the slow and frozen assets of the closed banks.

The carrying of such assets for the time necessary to accomplish an orderly liquidation necessitates a certain investment of funds by the insurance corporation. If the investment required proves to be more than the amount made available by the original capital subscriptions to the insurance corporation, then that corporation will have to issue and sell its debentures, which it is authorized to do to the extent of twice the amount of its capital stock.

The bill provides that the stock in the insurance corporation held by the Federal Reserve banks shall be entitled to voting power but not to dividends, while the stock held by the United States Government or by the member banks is entitled to dividends.

Let us consider from what sources the insurance corporation will derive the income which will be necessary to pay interest on debentures and dividends on stock. One source will be the income derived from the investment of its capital, which at first would perhaps be largely invested in Government securities and later shifted gradually into an investment in the slow assets of the closed banks. Even such slow assets should yield some income. The second source of earnings for the corporation will be the earning of fees as receiver of closed banks.

The insurance losses will not be losses to the insurance corporation itself, but will be carried by it only temporarily, to be promptly repaid by the member banks. It is very reasonable to expect, therefore, that the insurance corporation will be able to earn enough to pay reasonable dividends upon its capital stock.

It is proper to inquire whether the member banks can reasonably afford to pay the assessments which will be made against them from time to time to meet losses. This general question is too large to treat with finality in the brief time at my disposal here. The losses to bank depositors over the course of the last few years are, of course, staggering in amount. It is fair to presume, however, that if, as provided in the Glass bill, the only banks which will be permitted to participate in the insurance system are those which are now able to pass a thorough and searching examination, the probability of any substantial loss within that system will be reduced to a minimum.

There was a time, prior to the recent increase in bank casualties, when over a considerable period of years an annual assessment of one thirtieth of 1 percent of deposit liabilities of all the banks in the United States would have been sufficient to pay all losses. With a proper rigid examination of member banks as a condition precedent to membership in the insurance system, and with diligent and efficient supervision to follow, it is not too much to hope that the occasional assessment of one fourth of 1 percent of deposit liabilities will come at intervals satisfactorily infrequent.

The Glass bill prohibits member banks from paying interest upon demand deposits, and authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to regulate the interest on savings and time deposits. Without attempting at this time to submit complete proof, I venture to express the view that the amount saved to the banks by restrictions on the payment of interest on deposits will be more than enough to pay the assessments made by the insurance corporation on account of losses. On the other hand, depositors will be more than compensated for the elimination of interest on demand deposits and its possible reduction on time and savings deposits by the effective insurance which this bill provides against loss and against the freezing up of deposit credit.

Any discussion of the insurance of bank deposits would be incomplete without at least a brief reference to the classical arguments against any form of insurance or guaranty. I shall, therefore, notice them here, though it will be necessary to refrain from arguing them at length.

It will, of course, be said that the history of all attempts to guarantee or insure bank deposits is unfavorable, and has demonstrated the impracticability of the idea. It must be admitted that past experience has, on the whole, been very unsatisfactory, but it may fairly be answered that no experiment has ever been tried on so large a scale and with so satisfactory a diversification of risk as is now proposed.

It will, of course, be said that any law which makes every bank as safe as every other bank promotes bad banking because it does not require depositors to discriminate and to place their deposits only with the best bankers. To this it must be answered that the vast majority of depositors can never be expected to be so informed as to understand which bank is absolutely safe, and that there have recently been too many bitter disappointments in the closing of banks which had enjoyed good reputations. It may further be answered that a strict limitation on the payment of interest on deposits will eliminate the most unsound method of competition for deposit accounts, and still further it might be answered that the mutual responsibility and mutual liability of all bankers for all banking losses will have a strong tendency to bring about better banking, through more complete cooperation among bankers and through the creation of a definite selfish motive on the part of each banker to be active in preventing unsound banking practices by neighboring banks.

In the stress of the recent banking crisis many a banker, who had for years opposed any form of bank guarantee or insurance, and who for years had repeated the classical arguments which I have just reviewed, suddenly changed his mind when the general loss of confidence in all banks became so great as to threaten a serious run on his own institution, and indeed on all banks generally, regardless of how soundly they might have been managed. During that crisis there was a very definite appeal from bankers for the United States Government itself to insure all bank deposits so that no depositor anywhere in the country need have any fear as to the loss of his account. Such a guarantee as that would indeed have put a premium on bad banking. Such a guarantee as that would have made the Government pay substantially all losses which had been accumulated, whether by misfortune, by unwise judgment, or by sheer recklessness, and it might well have brought an intolerable burden upon the Federal Treasury.

The plan now proposed differs sharply from that. It puts the burden of losses directly on the member banks. It compels the large depositor either to distribute his deposits widely or to select his banking institution wisely. It gives the small depositor the absolute assurance to which he is properly entitled. It frees the banker from that fear of his own depositors which has so distressed the banking fraternity in recent months. And it compels the cooperation of all banks toward the perfection of a system so sound as to eliminate all losses to depositors.

There may still be some opposition to the insurance of bank deposits. No doubt it is true that the system now proposed does in a sense make one man pay for another man's fault. But unfortunately our present method does that too, and with much more dangerous consequences. Still too fresh in our memories must be the picture of countless losses to innocent depositors, and countless instances of indefinite postponement of realization on bank-deposit credits, which everyone ought to have the right to regard as the most liquid and readily available of all assets.

We cannot afford to permit a repetition of our recent experience. Our social values as well as our business soundness depend upon a restoration of complete confidence that the deposit of a lifetime's savings as well as the deposit of a necessary business working account is safe beyond the peradventure of a doubt. Our existing system has not met that test. The necessary measure of safety will not come without definite and decisive governmental action. That necessary action is proposed in the Glass bill. Let us proceed to make our banks safe for all of our people.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Henry H. McPike, of California, to be United States attorney, northern district of California.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk announced Executive C, Seventy-second Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932, as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. F. T. O'Connor, of California, to be Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on two occasions I have caused this nomination to go over for sufficient reasons. I have no desire further to prevent action by the Senate, and therefore make no objection at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Lucile F. McMillin, of Tennessee, to be Civil Service Commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry B. Mitchell, of Montana, to be Civil Service Commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed. Without objection, the President will be notified.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the practice of notifying the President immediately has not met with the full accord of a great many Members of the Senate. At one time, I believe, a lawsuit arose out of action of that kind. I think notification concerning these nominations should await the time required under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

HENRY H. McPIKE

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a moment ago, from the Judiciary Committee, I reported the nomination of Henry H. McPike, of California, to be United States attorney for the Northern District of California. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry H. McPike, of California, to be United States attorney for the Northern District of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

J. F. T. O'CONNOR

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, so far as I am informed, the Senate is not ready to proceed with any important measure. Unless some Senator has some important measure or matter to take up tomorrow, I intend, when the Senate resumes legislative session, to move a recess until day after tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion for a motion?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the Senate went into executive session I was necessarily absent and was unable to get here promptly. I wish to refer briefly to the nomination of Mr. O'Connor, of California, to be Comptroller of the Currency.

I do not mean to move to reconsider the confirmation of Mr. O'Connor's nomination, but I should like to register my objection to it, which is not based on any grounds personal to Mr. O'Connor. I am assured by those who know him, and I am quite ready to believe, that he is a gentleman of integrity and ability. But the post to which he is appointed, that of Comptroller of the Currency, is one of the key positions in the Government. It is a position which in this time of crisis and banking difficulties is probably, outside of the Presidency and the office of Director of the Budget, the most important single position in the United States Government.

Mr. O'Connor has never had any banking experience whatsoever. He has never been an officer of a bank. He has never been a director of a bank. He has never been counsel for a bank. So far as the Finance Committee could learn, he knows no more about banking than any depositor would know from having had a checking account. Yet he has been put into this position of great power, of great responsibility, of great authority over the entire banking system of the United States; and, because of his inexperience, it is necessarily going to take him months before he can learn his job as Comptroller of the Currency should know it. I am extremely sorry that President Roosevelt should have seen fit to appoint a man so inexperienced to a job so vital.

It ought not to be a job. It ought to be a position and yet I cannot discover, in what we learned in the Finance Committee, any single reason for selecting Mr. O'Connor for this position except it be his general reputation for integrity and his reputation for general ability. I have no doubt that, like most lawyers, he has learned to cram on a case rapidly, and to get the necessary knowledge to function; but he ought to have that knowledge at this moment. It is like appointing him to be captain of an ocean liner in the middle of a hurricane. Doubtless with his ability he would in time learn to be captain of an ocean liner and doubtless he will learn the duties of this position; but he does not know them now, and I regard his appointment as a great mistake.

I am perfectly well aware that any opposition to confirmation would be fruitless. We cannot muster enough votes on the two sides of the aisle to prevent confirmation, but I did not want the matter to be disposed of without registering my protest, as I have done.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I have listened with interest as I always do to any remarks by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, but in this matter I do not concur at all in the judgment he has rendered upon Mr.

O'Connor. I rather gather from what he said that his chief objection to Mr. O'Connor is that he is inexperienced in banking.

Mr. REED. That is my only objection.

Mr. McADOO. That is the Senator's only objection. I regard that as a virtue in this particular position. I speak advisedly because, having been for 6 years Secretary of the Treasury, I learned something of the duties and obligations of this great office, which is administered under the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. We do not need so much in this office a man experienced in banking as a man experienced with bankers; and Mr. O'Connor in his lifetime has had ample experience with bankers.

I do not mean to have the Members of the Senate infer that I am casting any reflections upon bankers. They fill a highly desirable place in the general economy of the country, and I have great respect for them. The Comptroller's Office, however, is the statutory policeman of the bankers of the United States; and I found while I was in the Treasury that it is more important to have in that position a man who is free and independent, without a biased mind in any direction, than to have someone who has had technical banking experience.

Throughout the history of the Comptroller's Office the men who have been most conspicuous as Comptrollers of the Currency have been lawyers. Every lawyer of large practice has had experience in banking—enough, at least, to qualify him for this position.

The first Comptroller of the Currency, for instance, was Hugh McCulloch, subsequently one of the great Secretaries of the Treasury. He was a lawyer. He did not know anything about the office when he took possession of it. How could he? It was created for the first time during the Civil War. He had to organize it and administer it.

Subsequently James H. Eckles, of Chicago, became Comptroller of the Currency. The objection was raised to him at the time that he was not only too young but, being only a lawyer and having no banking experience, was not qualified to discharge the duties of the comptrollership. Eckles turned out to be one of the ablest of the Comptrollers of the Currency; and the same thing may be said of other lawyers who have occupied that position.

I think, by the way, that Charles G. Dawes, when he was appointed Comptroller of the Currency, was not a lawyer, but he certainly had had no experience in banking at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He was a lawyer.

Mr. McADOO. Was Charles G. Dawes a lawyer?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. McADOO. I did not know that that was one of his many accomplishments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He was a partner of Pershing when he began practicing law.

Mr. McADOO. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for the information.

The Secretaries of the Treasury, under whom the Comptroller of the Currency must exercise these duties, have frequently been men without any experience whatever in banking.

Alexander Hamilton was a lawyer. He was not a banker, and yet he was the greatest Secretary of the Treasury this country has ever produced.

Salmon P. Chase was a lawyer, and one of the great Secretaries of the Treasury. What did he know about the duties of that great office when he was appointed?

I could cite many similar instances.

I want to say in reference to Mr. O'Connor that he is a man of exceptionally fine ability. He has a quick mind. He knows something about the problems confronting the country; and I know that he will, with great ability and integrity and courage, administer the great office to which the Senate has just confirmed him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the nomination now under discussion has been acted upon by the Senate, and by unanimous vote confirmation has been accorded to Mr. O'Connor. The criticism of the qualifications of Mr. O'Connor by the Senator from Pennsylvania comes too late to affect the judgment of the Senate.

The nomination was reported by the Finance Committee. No objection was interposed to favorable action. After favorable action had been taken, the Senator from Pennsylvania expresses a doubt in his own mind as to the fitness of Mr. O'Connor to perform the very responsible duties of Comptroller of the Currency because Mr. O'Connor is not a practical banker.

I think anyone at first thought would be disposed to give credence to that objection and criticism; but, after all, particularly at this time, the duties of the Comptroller are of such a general and comprehensive nature that someone with more liberal, someone with broader experience than a cashier of a bank, or even a president of a bank, is needed to carry on the functions of that office. As stated by the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], it is well worth while to have at that post now one who enjoys a liberal experience in the great legal profession, for the test of the success of his efforts will be the interpretation and the application of laws—not only the laws that have been passed during the present extraordinary session of the Congress but laws which have been on the statute books for quite a while, and which, according to the common judgment of the people of the country, have not been effective in the accomplishment of the purposes for which they were designed.

I express the hope and belief that the services of Mr. O'Connor in this important position will fully vindicate the soundness of the judgment exercised in his selection by the Executive and his confirmation by the Senate.

It is, of course, regrettable that the President's choice did not meet with the approval of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but the position of Comptroller of the Currency under the administration which the Senator from Pennsylvania dominated, or is alleged to have dominated, was vacant during the greater part of the last 2 years. President Hoover did not appoint a Comptroller of the Currency after the resignation of Mr. Pole. We had an Acting Comptroller of the Currency. Now, after the nomination has been made and the judgment of the Senate expressed on the subject, the Senator from Pennsylvania seeks to raise a doubt as to the propriety of the selection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely desire to call attention as a matter of history to the fact that in the old civilizations of Europe, built up after centuries and centuries, we saw the most tremendous collapse ever known in history. Austria and Germany completely fell down. Their financial affairs were, and had been, in the hands of bankers. We have seen the financial affairs of the United States supervised and controlled and directed largely by bankers.

I do not reflect on bankers in these statements, but that is history. Why insist that bankers must stand in positions of control and direction continuously hereafter? They have certain views and certain ideas about how things should be managed. All very well, and we appreciate that; but if there is any lesson to be learned from it, it is that bankers have not been successful in the conduct of the financial affairs of this country or of Europe.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our Redeemer, full of grace and glory, to Thee we come. A mighty fortress is our God, a bulwark never failing. As the work of the day unfolds, clothe our thoughts with wisdom and our wisdom with action that can stand the scrutiny of broad daylight and sound true to the last. Help us by giving us a very close acquaintance with Thee. Strengthen us with the royalty of an unsullied conscience. Hear us, blessed Lord God, for our country. Mercifully be with the unemployed and idle multitudes all over our land. O give this Congress wisdom to solve their problems. Do Thou subdue all restless clamor, the turbulence of selfish strife, and melt all discord into harmony. Remember us individually. Take each one of us and draw us nearer and nearer to the divine embodiment of the peerless manhood of the Perfect One. O may we dream and strive after the impossible—these are the immortal motives. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 5, 1933, was read and approved.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the speech delivered by the President of the United States last night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the radio address delivered by the President last night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting the address delivered over the radio last night by President Roosevelt.

It is one of the most reassuring and timely speeches ever delivered by a President and one that has inspired the American people with renewed courage and renewed hope.

The address reads as follows:

THE SECOND RADIO REPORT OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AS TO WHAT THE ADMINISTRATION HAS DONE AND WHAT IT IS PLANNING TO DO

My friends, on a Sunday night a week after my inauguration I used the radio to tell you about the banking crisis and the measures we were taking to meet it. I think that in that way I made clear to the country various facts that might otherwise have been misunderstood and in general provided a means of understanding which did much to restore confidence.

Tonight, 7 weeks later, I come for the second time to give you my report—in the same spirit and by the same means—to tell you about what we have been doing and what we are planning to do.

Two months ago we were facing serious problems. The country was dying by inches. It was dying because trade and commerce had declined to dangerously low levels; prices for basic commodities were such as to destroy the value of the assets of national institutions such as banks, savings banks, insurance companies, and others. These institutions, because of their great needs, were foreclosing mortgages, calling loans, refusing credit. Thus there was actually in process of destruction the property of millions of people who had borrowed the money on that property in terms of dollars which had had an entirely different value from the level of March, 1933. That situation in that crisis did not call for any complicated consideration of economic panaceas or fancy plans. We were faced by a condition and not a theory.

TWO ALTERNATIVES FACED

There were just two alternatives: The first was to allow the foreclosures to continue, credit to be withheld, and money to go into hiding, and thus force liquidation and bankruptcy of banks, railroads, and insurance companies, and a recapitalizing of all business and all property on a lower level. This alternative meant a continuation of what is loosely called "deflation", the net result of which would have been extraordinary hardship on all property owners and, incidentally, extraordinary hardships on all persons working for wages through an increase in unemployment and a further reduction of the wage scale.

It is easy to say that the result of this course would have not only economic effects of a very serious nature but social results that might bring incalculable harm. Even before I was inaugurated I came to the conclusion that such a policy was too much to ask the American people to bear. It involved not only a further loss of homes, farms, savings, and wages, but also a loss of spiritual values—the loss of that sense of security for the present and the future so necessary to the peace and contentment of the individual and of his family. When you destroy these things you will find it difficult to establish confidence of any sort in the future.

It was clear that mere appeals from Washington for confidence and the mere lending of more money to shaky institutions could not stop this downward course. A prompt program, applied as quickly as possible, seemed to me not only justified but imperative to our national security. The Congress—and when I say Congress I mean the Members of both political parties—fully understood this and gave me generous and intelligent support. The Members of Congress realized that the methods of normal times had to be replaced in the emergency by measures which were suited to the serious and pressing requirements of the moment.

NO SURRENDER OF POWER

There was no actual surrender of power. Congress still retained its constitutional authority, and no one has the slightest desire to change the balance of these powers. The function of Congress is to decide what has to be done and to select the appropriate agency to carry out its will. This policy it has strictly adhered to. The only thing that has been happening has been to designate the President as the agency to carry out certain of the purposes of the Congress. This was constitutional and in keeping with the past American tradition.

The legislation which has been passed or is in the process of enactment can properly be considered as part of a well-grounded plan.

First, we are giving opportunity of employment to one quarter of a million of the unemployed, especially the young men who have dependents, to go into the forestry and flood-prevention work. This is a big task, because it means feeding, clothing, and caring for nearly twice as many men as we have in the Regular Army itself. In creating this Civilian Conservation Corps we are killing two birds with one stone. We are clearly enhancing the value of our national resources and, second, we are relieving an appreciable amount of actual distress. This great group of men have entered upon their work on a purely voluntary basis, no military training is involved, and we are conserving not only our natural resources but our human resources. One of the great values to this work is the fact that it is direct and requires the intervention of very little machinery.

Second, I have requested the Congress and have secured action upon a proposal to put the great properties owned by our Government at Muscle Shoals to work after long years of wasteful inaction, and with this a broad plan for the improvement of a vast area in the Tennessee Valley. It will add to the comfort and happiness of hundreds of thousands of people and the incidental benefits will reach the entire Nation.

Next, the Congress is about to pass legislation that will greatly ease the mortgage distress among the farmers and the home owners of the Nation, by providing for the easing of the burden of debt now bearing so heavily upon millions of our people.

PLANS FOR PUBLIC WORKS

Our next step in seeking immediate relief is a grant of half a billion dollars to help the States, counties, and municipalities in their duty to care for those who need direct and immediate relief.

The Congress also passed legislation authorizing the sale of beer in such States as desired. This has already resulted in considerable reemployment and incidentally has provided much-needed tax revenue.

We are planning to ask the Congress for legislation to enable the Government to undertake public works, thus stimulating directly and indirectly, the employment of many others in well-considered projects.

Further legislation has been taken up which goes much more fundamentally into our economic problems. The farm relief bill seeks by the use of several methods, alone or together, to bring about an increased return to farmers for their major farm products, seeking at the same time to prevent in the days to come disastrous overproduction which so often in the past has kept farm commodity prices far below a reasonable return. This measure provides wide powers for emergencies. The extent of its use will depend entirely upon what the future has in store.

Well-considered and conservative measures will likewise be proposed which will attempt to give to the industrial workers of the country a more fair wage return, prevent cut-throat competition and unduly long hours for labor, and at the same time to encourage each industry to prevent overproduction.

Our railroad bill falls into the same class, because it seeks to provide and make certain definite planning by the railroads themselves, with the assistance of the Government, to eliminate the duplication and waste that is now resulting in railroad receiver-ships and continuing operating deficits.

I am certain that the people of this country understand and approve the broad purposes behind these new governmental policies relating to agriculture and industry and transportation. We found ourselves faced with more agricultural products than we could possibly consume ourselves and surpluses which other nations did not have the cash to buy from us, except at prices ruinously low.

We have found our factories able to turn out more goods than we could possibly consume, and at the same time we were faced with a falling export demand. We found ourselves with more facilities to transport goods and crops than there were goods and crops to be transported.

BLAMES LACK OF PLANNING

All of this has been caused in large part by a complete lack of planning and a complete failure to understand the danger signals that have been flying ever since the close of the World War. The people of this country have been erroneously encouraged to believe that they could keep on increasing the output of farm and factory indefinitely and that some magician would find ways and means for that increased output to be consumed with reasonable profit to the producer.

Today we have reason to believe that things are a little better than they were 2 months ago. Industry has picked up, railroads are carrying more freight, farm prices are better; but I am not going to indulge in issuing proclamations of over-enthusiastic assurance. We cannot ballyhoo ourselves back to prosperity. I am going to be honest at all times with the people of the country. I do not want the people of this country to take the foolish course of letting this improvement come back on another speculative wave. I do not want the people to believe that because of unjustified optimism we can resume the ruinous practice of increasing our crop output and our factory output in the hope that a kind Providence will find buyers at high prices. Such a course may bring us immediate and false prosperity, but it will be the kind of prosperity that will lead us into another tail spin.

It is wholly wrong to call the measures that we have taken Government control of farming, control of industry, and control of transportation. It is rather a partnership between Government and farming and industry and transportation—not partnership in profits, for the profits would still go to the citizens, but rather a partnership in planning and partnership to see that the plans are carried out.

Let me illustrate with an example. Take the cotton-goods industry. It is probably true that 90 percent of the cotton manufacturers would agree to eliminate starvation wages, would agree to stop long hours of employment, would agree to stop child labor, would agree to prevent an overproduction that would result in unsalable surpluses. But, what good is such an agreement if the other 10 percent of cotton manufacturers pay starvation wages, require long hours, employ children in their mills, and turn out burdensome surpluses? The unfair 10 percent could produce goods so cheaply that the fair 90 percent would be compelled to meet the unfair conditions.

LIFTING ANTITRUST LAWS

Here is where Government comes in. Government ought to have the right and will have the right, after surveying and planning for an industry, to prevent, with the assistance of the overwhelming majority of that industry, unfair practice and to enforce this agreement by the authority of Government.

The so-called "antitrust laws" were intended to prevent the creation of monopolies and to forbid unreasonable profits to those monopolies. That purpose of the antitrust laws must be continued. But these laws were never intended to encourage the kind of unfair competition that results in long hours, starvation wages, and overproduction.

The same principle applies to farm products and to transportation and every other field of organized private industry.

We are working toward a definite goal, which is to prevent the return of conditions which came very close to destroying what we call modern civilization. The actual accomplishment of our purpose cannot be attained in a day. Our policies are wholly within purposes for which our American constitutional Government was established 150 years ago.

I know that the people of this country will understand this and will also understand the spirit in which we are undertaking this policy. I do not deny that we may make mistakes of procedure as we carry out the policy. I have no expectation of making a hit every time I come to bat. What I seek is the highest possible batting average, not only for myself, but for the team. Theodore Roosevelt once said to me: "If I can be right 75 percent of the time, I shall come up to the fullest measure of my hopes."

Much has been said of late about the Federal finances and inflation, the gold standard, and so forth. Let me make the facts very simple and my policy very clear. In the first place, Government credit and Government currency are really one and the same thing. Behind Government bonds there is only a promise to pay. Behind Government currency we have, in addition to the promise to pay, a reserve of gold and a small reserve of silver.

OUR LIMITED GOLD SUPPLY

In this connection it is worth while remembering that in the past the Government has agreed to redeem nearly thirty billions of its debts and its currency in gold and private corporations in this country have agreed to redeem another sixty or seventy billions of securities and mortgages in gold. The Government and private corporations were making these agreements when they knew full well that all of the gold in the United States amounted to only between three and four billions, and that all of the gold in all of the world amounted to only about eleven billions.

If the holders of these promises to pay started in to demand gold, the first-comers would get gold for a few days, and they would amount to about one twenty-fifth of the holders of the securities and the currency. The other 24 people out of 25, who did not happen to be at the top of the line, would be told politely that there was no more gold left. We have decided to treat all 25 in the same way, in the interest of justice and the exercise of the constitutional powers of this Government. We have placed every one on the same basis in order that the general good may be preserved.

Nevertheless, gold, and to a partial extent silver, are perfectly good bases for currency, and that is why I decided not to let any of the gold now in the country go out of it.

A series of conditions arose 3 weeks ago which very readily might have meant, first, a drain on our gold by foreign countries, and secondly, as a result of that, a flight of American capital, in the form of gold, out of our country. It is not exaggerating the possibility to tell you that such an occurrence might well have taken from us the major part of our gold reserve and resulted in such a further weakening of our Government and private credit as to bring on actual panic conditions and the complete stoppage of the wheels of industry.

POLICY ON PRICE RAISING

The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed. We do not seek to let them get such a cheap dollar that they will be able to pay back a great deal less than they borrowed. In other words, we seek to correct a wrong and not to create another wrong in the opposite direction. That is why powers are being given to the administration to provide, if necessary, for an enlargement of credit, in order to correct the existing wrong. These powers will be used when, as, and if it may be necessary to accomplish the purpose.

Hand in hand with the domestic situation which, of course, is our first concern, is the world situation, and I want to emphasize to you that the domestic situation is inevitably and deeply tied in with the conditions in all of the other nations of the world. In other words, we can get, in all probability, a fair measure of prosperity return in the United States, but it will not be permanent unless we get a return to prosperity all over the world.

In the conferences which we have held and are holding with the leaders of other nations we are seeking four great objectives:

First, a general reduction of armaments, and through this the removal of the fear of invasion and armed attack, and, at the same time, a reduction in armament costs, in order to help in the balancing of government budgets and the reduction of taxation.

Secondly, a cutting down of the trade barriers, in order to start the flow of exchange of crops and goods between nations.

Third, The setting up of a stabilization of currencies, in that trade can make contracts ahead.

Fourth, The reestablishment of friendly relations and greater confidence between all nations.

Our foreign visitors these past 3 weeks have responded to these purposes in a very helpful way. All of the nations have suffered alike in this great depression. They have all reached the conclusion that each can best be helped by the common action of all. It is in this spirit that our visitors have met with us and discussed our common problems. The international conference that lies before us must succeed. The future of the world demands it and we have each of us pledged ourselves to the best joint efforts to that end.

To you, the people of this country, all of us, the Members of the Congress and the members of this administration, owe a profound debt of gratitude. Throughout the depression you have been patient. You have granted us wide powers, you have encouraged us with a widespread approval of our purposes. Every ounce of strength and every resource at our command we have devoted to justifying your confidence. We are encouraged to believe that a wise and sensible beginning has been made. In the present spirit of mutual confidence and mutual encouragement, we go forward.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by Mr. Justice Stone in eulogy of the late President Coolidge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am in-serting the address made by Mr. Justice Harlan F. Stone, of the Supreme Court of the United States, at a meeting in memory of Calvin Coolidge held at Northampton, Mass., April 30, 1933.

The address is as follows:

On the 5th of January the country was startled by the announcement of the death at his home in this city of Calvin Coolidge, the thirtieth President of the United States. The very suddenness of his going, without warning, without hint of failing health, gave to his countrymen an indescribable shock and sense of bereavement. The quiet dignity and poise with which he had borne the burden of life had given to those who knew him best an illusion of his abiding physical strength and endurance. Unconsciously they had interpreted it in terms of his long life and long-continued public service. For them it was difficult to comprehend the sad truth that in the sixty-first year of a life devoted to the service of his country that strength and endurance were spent and the end had come. To all came an overwhelming sense of public loss; that in a time of peculiar stress and anxiety his capacity for wise counsel, the steadying influences of his personality and character were lost to the Nation.

His death brought to its conclusion a life of almost continuous public service. From the humblest elective office he had passed, step by step, from post to post, to which he had been chosen by the will of the people, to the highest office in the gift of the Nation—common councilman, solicitor, and mayor of this city, member of the Massachusetts Legislature, senator, Lieutenant Governor, and Governor of the State, Vice President and President of the United States—such is the formal record of his public service. Clearly, as we perceive its distinction and the high qualities he brought to it, its appraisal is not for us or for our generation. That must await the ultimate judgment of history.

We are assembled here today, not to pronounce a final verdict upon it but in the fullness of our hearts, in this all too brief an hour, to speak of him whom we have known as friend and neighbor, and of those attributes of mind and character which made him the man the Nation delighted to honor.

Calvin Coolidge was a distinctive product of New England. The strength and dignity of his character, his sane and balanced judgment, his common sense, were the true inheritance from ancestors who for 3 centuries had dwelt among the rugged hills of New England. John Coolidge, the first American member of the family, came from England in 1630 to the Massachusetts Bay Colony, where he settled in Watertown. In 1780 his descendant, John Coolidge, settled in Plymouth, Vt., which became his home and that of his descendants until the birth of Calvin Coolidge on July 4, 1872, the son of John Coolidge and Victoria Josephine Moor Coolidge. His mother's forbears, who were of Scotch-Welsh ancestry, had long dwelt in New England. From them, as from his paternal ancestors, Calvin Coolidge inherited those qualities of mind and character which, in so many instances, were carried forth from New England to make fruitful the intellectual and spiritual life of the Nation. On both sides his ancestors were of the race of pioneers who, building their homes in the New England wilderness, wrung a scanty livelihood from a reluctant soil. In lives of frugality and self-denial, with humble and unflinching devotion to the principles of religion and education, but with sturdy independence and the will to do battle for the right, they laid the foundations of that intellectual and moral leadership which for more than a century gave New England a dominating influence in American life.

Plymouth, at the time of Calvin Coolidge's birth, was, as it still is, like many another New England hill town. Its great natural beauty is more wild and rugged than that of the gentler slopes with which we are familiar along the Connecticut River Valley. Even when wrapped in the snows of winter, tall pine and verdant spruce and hemlock clothe its heights with a beauty which, entering into the very soul of the New Englander, becomes a permanent part of his being. Remote from cities and from the turmoil of business and industry, life there is simple, natural, and untroubled.

Here Calvin Coolidge spent a youth like that of many another New England country boy. His father was the chief man of the village, farmer, storekeeper, deputy sheriff, and member of the State legislature. He was a competent business man, thrifty, shrewd, and prudent. His integrity and sound judgment commanded the confidence and respect of the countryside. Neither direction nor discipline was wanting in the daily life of the son. There were chores to be done, simply homely duties to be performed. He shared with his father in the work of the farm and the store. Church, school, and the New England town meeting were the institutions which gave direction and character to the life of the community. Honesty, industry, thrift, and careful economy were the rule of his life and those about him. It was a life filled with the petty, but exacting, cares of a small and still primitive country town, a life that present-day boys might regard as dull and irksome. But it never seemed dull to him. In his later years the indelible impressions of his youth were often recalled and stated in terms of the beauty and poetry of the life among his native hills.

The simplicity of that life, its naturalness, its genuineness and essential dignity, had their possibilities of character building to be fully realized only in other times and at other places. Integrity—moral and intellectual—industry, thrift, fidelity to the day's task, however humble, and belief in the worthiness of public service, all his by inheritance, were nurtured and strengthened by environment.

Boy and man he was modest, reticent, silent; he had no small talk. His reticence, his unconquerable aversion to any form of self-advertisement concealed from casual acquaintances the clarity and vigor of his mind and his capacity to form judgments which could be firm and decisive when occasion demanded. Knowledge of these qualities of the inner man came slowly, even to his intimates, but with strangely cumulative force as the years and experience revealed them.

At 12 years of age tragedy came into his life with the death of his mother, then 39 years of age. Of her he said:

"She was practically an invalid ever after I could remember her, but used what strength she had in lavish care upon me and my sister, who was 3 years younger. There was a touch of mysticism and poetry in her nature which made her love to gaze at the purple sunsets and watch the evening stars. Whatever was grand and beautiful in form and color attracted her. It seemed as though the rich green tints of foliage and the blossoms of the flowers came for her in the springtime, and in the autumn it was for her that the mountain sides were struck with crimson and with gold."

Five years later the sister, too, was laid to rest in the Plymouth churchyard with his dead, "pillowed on the breast of the eternal hills."

Some years of the rough-and-ready training of the district school in the little stone schoolhouse of the village, 4 more at the Black River Academy at Ludlow, 12 miles away, interspersed with summer vacations spent in work on the farm, guided his footsteps to the threshold of Amherst College and for the first time into this community which, for most of his life, he was to regard as his home.

Only those who knew the Amherst of his day and in later years came to understand something of the inner workings of his mind can appreciate how profoundly Calvin Coolidge was affected by his experiences at Amherst. It is a small college, but it has always enjoyed the priceless blessing of the presence there of great teachers. For more than a century that presence has meant the intellectual and spiritual rebirth of eager students who have thronged its halls. The unobtrusive, green mountain boy who spent the years 1891 to 1895 in Amherst found there a small group of men who were great teachers because they were great men. Of them, those who, perhaps, made the most profound impression upon him were Professor Morse and Professor Garman. Morse was a teacher of history, of exceptionally enlightened and penetrating mind. All history in his view was to be measured in terms of human progress. The whole range of modern history was his province, but his discussions of the development of party government in the United States were a unique and important contribution in that field. He dealt with political parties as instruments of government essential to the functioning of democracy, by which the will of the people is formulated in public discussion and translated into political action at the polls. It was in the classroom of this gifted teacher that direction was given to that profound insight into the nature and function of party action which was to distinguish the career of his most famous student. It was no accident that Calvin Coolidge, a politician in the truest and noblest sense, always referred, and rightly, to worthy party service as public service.

Garman, the philosopher, taught his students to stand on their own feet intellectually, not to bow blindly and obsequiously to authority, but to be open-eyed seekers of the truth. Of him Calvin Coolidge said, in the full maturity of his judgment and experience: "We looked upon Garman as a man who walked with God. . . . In ethics he taught us that there is a standard of righteousness; that might does not make right; that the end does not justify the means; and that expediency as a working principle is bound to fail. The only hope of perfecting human relationships is in accordance with the law of service under which men are not so solicitous about what they shall get as they are about what they shall give. . . . For a man not to recognize the truth, not to be obedient to law, not to render allegiance to the State, is for him to be at war with his own nature—to commit suicide. That is why 'the wages of sin is death.' Unless we live rationally, we perish, physically, mentally, and spiritually."

These college experiences stirred profoundly the responsive soul beneath the quiet exterior of this New England boy. Repeatedly in after years he was to recur to them specifically or by unmistakable allusion. Calvin Coolidge was not given to self-revelation. But if we search beneath the surface for the guiding principles of his life we shall find them in his lifelong desire to be obedient to truth, to the law of service, and to adhere steadfastly to the principles of the rational life.

Graduating from college in 1895, he began his professional career in the office of prominent lawyers of this city. Here he established his home and maintained it until his death. To it he brought his bride, Grace Goodhue Coolidge, whom he married at Montpelier, Vt., in October, 1905, beginning a married life which, until the moment of his death, continued to be singularly fortunate and happy. Here their children, two sons, were born.

Study and practice of the law in this community and daily contacts with its business and social life completed the preparation for the role which he was to play in the political life of State and Nation. A superlative, natural talent for the art of politics enlisted his interest in the political activities of city and State and gradually drew him away from the practice of his chosen profession, in which he would otherwise have come to a position of leadership. "In general", he said, "only the man of broad and deep understanding of his fellow men can meet with much success in politics." He possessed that understanding in rare degree. That, and the unfailing loyalty and integrity with which he administered every office for which he was chosen, brought to him success in 18 out of the 19 contests at the polls in which he engaged. They carried him by successive steps from membership in the city council of Northampton to the various other offices of city and State which he occupied, and finally to the Presidency of the United States.

In 1916, after serving in the lower house of the State legislature and after 2 years' service as State senator, he was again elected to the senate and chosen its presiding officer. On that occasion he made a notable address. It was notable in that it gives us, perhaps for the first time, a real insight into his maturing political philosophy, and reveals those qualities of mind which soon were to attract the attention of the Nation and to open the way to the highest office in its gift. Parts of this address were obviously directed to the problems of the hour, and so may now be regarded as but ephemeral, but some of it revealed a profound understanding of the problems of legislation and the enduring principles which should guide political action. Well known as they are, they are, nevertheless, worthy of repetition here.

"Do the day's work", he said. "If it be to protect the rights of the weak, whoever objects, do it. If it be to help a powerful corporation, better to serve the people, whatever the opposition, do that. Expect to be called a standpatter, but don't be a standpatter. Expect to be called a demagogue, but don't be a demagogue. Don't hesitate to be as revolutionary as science. Don't hesitate to be as reactionary as the multiplication table. Don't expect to build up the weak by pulling down the strong. Don't hurry to legislate. Give administration a chance to catch up with legislation."

"We need a broader, firmer, deeper faith in the people—a faith that men desire to do right; that the Commonwealth is founded upon a righteousness which will endure, a reconstructed faith that the final approval of the people is given not to demagogues, slavishly pandering to their selfishness, merchandising with the clamor of the hour, but to statesmen, ministering to their welfare, representing their deep, silent, abiding convictions."

"Statutes must appeal to more than material welfare. Wages won't satisfy, be they ever so large; nor houses; nor lands; nor coupons, though they fall thick as the leaves of autumn. Man has a spiritual nature. Touch it, and it must respond as the magnet responds to the pole. To that, not to selfishness, let the laws of the Commonwealth appeal. Recognize the immortal worth and dignity of man. Let the laws of Massachusetts proclaim to her humblest citizen, performing the most menial task, the recognition of his manhood; the recognition that all men are peers, the humblest with the most exalted; the recognition that all work is glorified. Such is the path to equality before the law. Such is the foundation of liberty under the law. Such is the sublime revelation of man's relation to man—democracy."

Here spoke the genius of New England, intelligently conservative, but also cautiously and wisely progressive; instinct with the spirit of justice for all men, with faith in the capacity of man's spiritual nature to triumph over a sordid materialism; and hence with faith in the capacity of democracy itself to function as both the source and the instrument of good government.

These were profound thoughts to come from the modest Hampshire County politician. Spoken to strengthen the faith of his fellow citizens in Massachusetts, they inspired in all to whom they came a profound faith in the speaker himself. It was a faith which never waned. After another year in the Senate, he took, as had become his habit, a step forward and upward, to become lieutenant governor for 3 years. The office was one involving both executive and administrative duties. It afforded renewed opportunity for public service and training for larger responsibilities which, in 1918, he assumed as Governor of the State.

His two terms as Governor were notable for their wise and efficient administration. In obedience to an amendment of the State constitution requiring reorganization of the administrative agencies of the State government he secured the requisite legislation and carried it into effect with skill and celerity. He did not hesitate to veto several measures, apparently popular, and to expose their fallacies. His first term was proceeding quietly, almost uneventfully, to its end when, within 2 months of the election in which he was to be a candidate for reelection, the State was suddenly thrown into a crisis, which proved to be also the crisis of his life. Efforts had been made to unionize the metropolitan police force of Boston, which was subject, in some very limited respects, to the ultimate authority of the Governor. Nineteen of its members had been tried and dismissed for joining a union in violation of police regulations. A strike of the police force was called and a general strike threatened. Two thirds of its members abandoned their posts and left the city without adequate police protection. The situation speedily became one occasioning grave concern. Here was irreconcilable conflict between supposed private interest and unmistakable public duty. Two paths were open to the Governor—the one, that of political expediency, with its temptation to yield to the exigencies of the moment, that a delusive larger good might come; the other, that of adherence to the principle of the supremacy of the law and the principle that the assumption of duty as guardians of the public safety admits of no conflicting allegiance. His choice was unhesitant, but decisive. As he said of it later, "The right thing to do never requires any subterfuge. It is always simple and direct." Unequivocally, he declared to the leader of organized labor, "You can depend on me to support you in every legal action and sound policy. I am equally determined to defend the sovereignty of Massachusetts and to maintain the authority and jurisdiction over her public officers where it has been placed by the constitution and laws of her people." That declaration was translated into action.

The significance of his choice was not that it was made as it was; inheritance, training, and the character of the man made that inevitable. Its significance lay in the fact that the event had revealed the man. His action responded to the popular yearning for the public officer who has the faith and courage to take his political life in his hands that right and duty may prevail over expediency. It made him a national figure. Though he declined to authorize the use of his name as a candidate for the Presidency in the election of 1920, there was, nevertheless, widespread popular discussion of his fitness for the office. It resulted in his spontaneous nomination at the convention as candidate for the Vice-Presidency, which was followed by his election, and upon the death of President Harding on August 2, 1923, by his induction into the Presidency. The dramatic picture of the midnight scene when, in the simple surroundings of his Plymouth home, he took the oath of office, administered by his aged father, will long be vibrant in our memory.

The 6 years of his Presidency, we now know, marked the closing of an epoch. The people of the country, after the struggle on European battlefields, were intent on repairing the ravages of war upon our social and economic structure, and upon restoring the current of American life to its normal channels. Depletion of the world's stock of goods by war, the creation of new industries and new methods of production of goods in the mass, were stimulating an abnormal prosperity, with all its temptations to public and private extravagances. Avoidance of waste in public expenditures, the lightening of the burdens of taxation, the tightening of the ancient restrictions upon every form of improvidence in government, the establishment of friendly relations with all peoples, and the promotion of the cause of peace, were the immediate problems of government.

The talents of the new President and his political philosophy were peculiarly adapted to the times and their problems. He came, bringing no new or untried devices for meeting issues which were as old as government itself. In his philosophy of government, as of life, first things came first. The right thing to do was always simple and direct. Its essentials, written by George Mason, one of our wisest political thinkers, into the Virginia bill of rights, was restated in the constitution of Calvin Coolidge's native State: "Frequent recurrences to first principles", it affirms, "and firm adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality are necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty and keep government free."

His first public speech as President, in New York City, and his first message to Congress outlined the policy of the new administration in plain, simple, and reassuring language. He worked steadily and persistently for the curtailment of public expense. In a single sentence he stated to Congress his unalterable opposition to bonus legislation. Four times during his administration the Internal Revenue System was revised, with the abolition of many taxes and the reduction of others. The national debt was steadily reduced. Every fiber of his being rebelled against governmental extravagance. Both in his public addresses and his practical administration of the National Budget he took infinite pains to give effect to the principle of economy of government. Annually, at a great meeting in Washington, he addressed all the administrative officers of the Government on the importance of the curtailment of Government expenditures. His insistent demand for economy, he said, "is not because I wish to save money, but because I wish to save the people. The men and women of this country who toil are the ones who bear the cost of Government. Every dollar that we carelessly waste means that their life will be so much the more meager. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism in its most practical form." Who, in the crisis of this present hour, viewing this policy in retrospect, can doubt its wisdom or fail to respect his steadfast adherence to it.

Steadily and consistently he promoted the cause of world peace. He favored our entrance to the Permanent Court of International Justice. Our relations with Mexico, for a generation a constant source of irritation and misunderstanding, were established on the firm basis of mutual confidence and good will. The manner in which that surprising change was accomplished, by the selection as Ambassador of his classmate and friend, Dwight Morrow, the man in whose competence for the task he rightly had unbounded confidence, is one of the most interesting chapters in our diplomatic history. It should ever be recalled as an example and reminder of the truth that we cannot hope for permanently peaceful relations with other nations without the mutual concession to each of what is justly its due, the equal recognition of rights, the cultivation of mutual understanding. His every public act, his every utterance concerning our foreign relations, clearly disclosed how thoroughly he understood that for these, the very foundations of any genuine peace, there can be no artificial substitute either by formal convention or by any species of coercion. That spirit inspired his address at the Pan American conference at Habana and animated the negotiations carried on under his direction which led to the ratification of the Paris peace pact by the principal nations of the world.

He had a rare capacity for administration, a talent which his reserve and simplicity of manner have tended to obscure. It was not by chance that the vast stream of public business which flows ceaselessly through the White House offices moved forward during his administration with singular ease, effectiveness, and dispatch. His long experience in public office had prepared him for the far greater administrative tasks of the Presidency, but it was only the training and stimulation of a natural aptitude. His lifelong habit of economy in the expenditure of words, of time, of effort, speeded the public business. A sure instinct for the essential enabled him to disentangle the fundamental from the extraneous and to deal promptly with questions of policy without burdening himself unnecessarily with detail. He had the rare art, indispensable to efficient Executive action, of never permitting himself to be encumbered with burdens which others could bear. Always accessible to the heads of departments and to all others who had public business to transact, he listened willingly and attentively to a statement of their problems. But he never wasted his time or permitted others to waste it. Those who served in his administration found a durable satisfaction in Government service under such conditions. They made for efficient administration, insured loyal cooperation of all Government officials, and prompt dispatch of the public business. The smooth functioning of the governmental machinery during his administration was the result of the constant vigilance and wise action of one of the most competent administrators who has ever held the Presidential office.

Early in his administration the country was alarmed and dismayed at revelations of scandal at the very seat of the Government. High officials of his own party were implicated or under suspicion. There was grave danger that his administration would be wrecked by the sins of others. Only the most implicit confidence in his integrity, in his will and capacity to guide the Government in the paths of right conduct could have triumphed over that danger. Slow to condemn without adequate cause, unwilling to do injustice to others by listening to false accusations or yielding to popular clamor, he did not deviate from the path of duty. Once and for all he declared himself for the even-handed enforcement of the law. Without hesitation he used the powers of his high office and authorized the Attorney General to use the powers of his own to further the prosecutions which had been ordered and in every other respect to uphold the dignity and honor of the United States.

The revelations of the inner workings of his mind and conscience, which came with cumulative force from his public acts and pronouncements, inspired an extraordinary popular confidence in his honesty and wisdom. They speedily established confidence in the integrity of his administration of the Government. The people knew that no breath of scandal could touch his private or public acts, or those to whom he gave his confidence. Elected to a second term of office by great popular majority, there was an insistent and widespread demand that he should be elected to a third. It seemed certain that for the first time since the Presidency of George Washington, a President of the United States could be elected to a third successive term. His innate modesty, his respect for the traditions of our Government, his sane judgment of what was wise for the country and himself, precluded his taking that step, as inexorably as though it were forbidden by some changeless law of nature. "We draw our Presidents from the people", he said. "It is a wholesome thing for them to return to the people. I came from them; I wish to be one of them." And so in 1929, he returned to this community, as he came from it, and took up again, so far as it is possible for one who has been a President of the United States, the simple life which he had led here before he became a national figure.

Perhaps the most striking evidence of Calvin Coolidge's stability of character and practical wisdom is that all the adulation which is lavished upon a President left him unmoved. His coming to the Presidency was but a renewal, on a larger scale, of the experience which had been progressively repeated after he first ran for the Massachusetts Legislature. He who had been faithful unto a few things had been called upon to rule over many. It seems clear that even then he knew and appraised his own capacity far more accurately than did the public or even his friends. But the appraisal was a modest one, without any taint of exaggeration. Commendably ambitious to carry on his life-long career of public service, he put his faith in the principles that had guided his life and remained as he had always been, the plain, unassuming man. After 6 years in the intoxicating atmosphere of the incense which is burned at the feet of a President, surrounded as is every President, by so many who are eager to say "yes" and fearful to say "no", after an administration universally recognized as wise and successful, he left the Presidency as he came to it, with no inflated notions of his own personal worth and achievements, content to be judged by the faith that was in him.

In retirement he did not forget the dignity of the great office he had held. He turned away from opportunities for money-making in business which involved no public service and might restrict his freedom of action. He gave himself freely to useful public activities not inconsistent with the part he had played in our national life. He continued to serve as a trustee of Amherst College; he became a trustee of a great insurance company, moved by the opportunity presented to encourage habits of saving and thrift. He became president of the American Antiquarian Society. From time to time he published in the public prints articles in various form concerning his own biography, noncontroversial problems of government, and current events. In their quaint and homely philosophy, in their simplicity and directness, their appeal to the common sense and worthy aspirations of the great mass of the people, and in their wholesome influence they remind of the similar utterances of Benjamin Franklin, a great American of another day.

One cannot contemplate this unique career without being aware that there was something in the personality of this self-contained, self-effacing, silent man which baffles analysis, which seems at odds with the courageous, clear-thinking, efficient man whom ultimately all the world has come to know. We shall understand that personality only if we remember that devotion to the public service was its energizing force, that its ruling passion was to do worthily the worthy task which lay nearest at hand and to leave it unadvertised. To each task he brought, with unfailing devotion, all the resources of a sterling character and of an orderly and disciplined mind which instinctively made principle rather than expediency the test of action. The principles of government he reduced to their simplest terms and applied them directly without evasion or subterfuge. Government itself, in his estimation, like man's relation to man, rested on a spiritual basis. Yet there was a place in his philosophy for every human activity and interest which contribute to the public well-being. Hence the dignity and worthiness of work and the sanctity of rights of property were essential tenets of his belief. "People are entitled to the rewards of their industry," he said. "What they earn is theirs, no matter how small or how great. But the possession of property carries the obligation to use it in a larger service." Still, in his personal life material things found no place. He neither sought nor cared for wealth or possessions. Spiritual values were what counted with him. Things were important only insofar as they had a spiritual significance. "No person", he said, "was ever honored for what he received. Honor has been the reward for what he gave." "We do not need more of the things that are seen. We need more of the things that are unseen."

His undemonstrative exterior could not conceal the kindness of his disposition and an almost passionate desire in all his dealings with men to keep faith and to avoid injustice to others. Slow to promise, the promise, once given, was a sacred obligation. Any attack directed against one upon whose action, character, or ability he had to pass judgment at once stirred him to come to the defense of the accused. This was no indication of what the final judgment might be. It seemed rather that his own tolerant spirit and sense of justice were roused to bar the way to hasty condemnation; that he was instinctively guarding against the wrong that might be done to others and to himself by any ill-considered or one-sided judgment. Even his political opponents recognized and respected this sense of obligation and the love of justice which unfailingly controlled his action. Enmities played no part in his life. He bore no grudges and inspired none. After more than 30 years of active political life, he left office with the esteem and affection of his countrymen, which knew no party boundaries.

He was a deeply religious man. Although religion was in the daily atmosphere of his boyhood home, his religion was neither an inheritance nor a mere habit. It was the deliberate, considerate choice of a man who ever sought the path of right and truth. It was not worn as a garment for the world to see, but reserved for the guidance of the inner man, regardless of what others might think or say.

He was a scholarly man, widely read in the fields of history and government. Wise in the ways of man by contact and experience, he retained through life the capacity to learn from books.

Sparing of speech, he nevertheless made many public addresses. Uniformly elevated in thought, their simplicity and directness, the poetry of their expression and allusion, gave them a distinguished quality of literary excellence rising at times to the heights of true eloquence. Those were noble lines spoken at the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, Mass.:

"Plymouth Rock does not mark a beginning or an end. It marks a revelation of that which is without beginning and without end—a purpose, shining through eternity with a resplendent light, undimmed even by the imperfections of men; and a response, an answering purpose, from those who, oblivious, disdainful of all else, sailed hither, seeking only for an avenue for the immortal soul."

Touching in their simple eloquence are the words spoken in an address in memory of Theodore Roosevelt:

"No man was ever meanly born. About his cradle is the wondrous miracle of life. He may descend into the depths, he may live in infamy and perish miserably, but he is born great. Men build monuments above the graves of their heroes to mark the end of a great life, but women seek out the birthplace and build their shrine, not where a great life had its ending but where it had its beginning, seeking with a truer instinct the common source of things not in that which is gone forever but in that which they know will again be manifest. Life may depart, but the source of life is constant."

We shall not understand the man or form a correct estimate of his life if we leave out of account the part Mrs. Coolidge played in it. Her unfailing graciousness and tact, her natural charm, her vivacity, her intelligence and intuitive good judgment, were aids of inestimable value in smoothing the pathway of his life, in interpreting him to his countrymen, and in gaining for both the abiding respect and affection of the Nation.

If by some miracle Calvin Coolidge could have been induced to give his own estimate of his character and attainments it is certain that he would have disclaimed any exceptional personal merit. He would have attributed his success to the validity of the principles of action to which he had given his adherence. To remain through life the steadfast seeker for the truth, to follow its light without faltering, patiently, persistently, and courageously, is the very soul of wisdom and the foundation upon which most great careers are built. It was the almost instinctive recognition of this side of his character which inspired the extraordinary public confidence in him. As that and the simplicity of his tastes, his shrewdness, his all-embracing intellectual honesty, his sense of humor, revealed to those about him in quaint and pithy phrase, became known, they won to him the sympathetic understanding of his countrymen. They gave to him a moral power such as no other has wielded in our generation.

Hence it is that, as distinguished as is Calvin Coolidge's public service, it is what he was, typifying the faith and aspirations of the great mass of the people, even more than what he did, which gives his career its true significance and will finally determine its place in history.

It is a comforting thought, inspiring renewed confidence in the future, that in times when mere material values have seemed to outweigh things of the mind and spirit, sheer force of character has made so profound an impression, and that its example is so universally cherished. "Righteousness exalteth the Nation." The Nation exalts itself in doing honor to this man, who, above all else, put his faith in righteousness as the rule of life—as the indispensable principle of government.

INVESTIGATION OF JUDGE JAMES A. LOWELL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 132 from the Committee on Accounts and ask that it be read:

House Resolution 132

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 120, authorizing the Judiciary Committee to investigate the official conduct of James A. Lowell, a district judge for the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, but shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on April 26, 1933, the House passed a resolution authorizing an investigation of the official conduct of Judge James A. Lowell, and attempted at the same time to appropriate $5,000 for that purpose. Under the faulty resolution passed by the House the Committee on Accounts has no authority whatever to approve a single voucher. This invariably happens every time there is an attempt made in the House to overrule the Committee on Accounts, which is properly the auditing committee of the House, and I believe that the House desires that it continue to be the auditing committee for these investigations. I can personally testify that during the last 8 years the Committee on Accounts has saved thousands of dollars because of its close scrutiny of the expenditures of these investigations. This is merely to remedy the defect in the original resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I did not understand how the gentleman is going to remedy that defect.

Mr. WARREN. The House by roll-call vote attempted to appropriate $5,000 for this investigation. The Committee on Accounts has no authority to approve vouchers under the resolution as passed by the House. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has introduced this resolution, which has been referred to the Committee on Accounts in the usual form, and I am now calling that resolution up for passage.

Mr. SNELL. And that leaves the matter entirely up to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This particular $5,000 is to be expended for what investigation?

Mr. WARREN. For investigation into the official conduct of Judge James A. Lowell, of Massachusetts.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the resolution to investigate first go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WARREN. It did not go to any committee. I was unavoidably absent from the House when the resolution came up. That prevented my making a point of order at that time. I am always going to make these points of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that such a resolution as that, before it receives the approval of this House, ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary and receive its approval?

Mr. WARREN. As I understand it, the resolution as presented by the gentleman from Virginia on April 26 was privileged.

Mr. BLANTON. And unless we pass this resolution there will be no money appropriated or spent?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman let the matter remain in status quo until it does go to a proper committee? If there is no danger of spending any money, why worry?

Mr. WARREN. Because the House by a roll-call vote authorized this investigation, and the Committee on Accounts thinks that the fair thing to do is to carry out the purpose and the intent of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, under the gentleman's resolution, the whole matter goes to his committee; and if his committee thinks this ought not to be spent, it will turn it down. Is that the situation?

Mr. WARREN. No; that is not the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. What will be the effect of the gentleman's action?

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Accounts will merely approve the expenditures up to $5,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Blindly, without giving the proposed expenditure due consideration, without even casually thinking about it?

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Accounts would only have authority to audit and scrutinize the expenditures made out of the $5,000 upon approval by the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and this the committee will do.

Mr. BLANTON. I am against wasting money on useless investigations, and from now on I am going to try to stop them. But in view of the fact that the House has determined that this one is wise and necessary, and I have confidence in my friend and his committee, I am willing to vote for this resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 3 minutes?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I opposed the original resolution when it was pending on the floor of the House. I opposed this resolution in the committee last week.

I think the action taken by the House in passing the original resolution was a mistake, and I am not considering the merits of the case which caused this action. I feel that the resolution that was passed is full of TNT. I recall, and the older Members here will recall, that there is a blot upon the record of this House that will never be erased. I refer to the Victor Berger case. Victor Berger, the leader of the school of thought of his political party, was convicted by a United States district court of violating the Espionage Act, and on that account he was denied a seat in this body. His case went to the court of appeals, and the court of appeals unanimously said that he was not guilty.

He went back to his people and was reelected to this House and he was received here with open arms. An innocent man was denied a seat in this House because a lower court had held he was guilty.

Now, what is the situation here? A district judge renders a certain decision and it is proposed to investigate the act of that district judge. The case has now gone to the court of appeals. If the court of appeals affirms the decision, stands by the district judge, are you not in honor bound to investigate the entire membership of the court of appeals? I say the Committee on the Judiciary should wait until this case is finally determined by the courts having jurisdiction. It will be time enough to act after the last court has said the final word. I simply wanted to state for the RECORD why I oppose the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANCHARD) there were yeas 109 and noes 60.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eighteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will stand and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Forty-five Members have arisen, a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 160, answered "present" 8, not voting 77, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. WARREN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H.Res. 131) on the bill, H.R. 5081, for printing under the rules:

House Resolution 131

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, the bill (H.R. 5081) entitled "A bill to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development" be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table to the end that the amendment of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, disagreed to and a conference is requested with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution and move its adoption.

House Resolution 134

Resolved, That the following Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the following standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit:

Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries: JOE H. EAGLE, Texas.

Mines and Mining: ALBERT C. WILLFORD, Iowa.

Elections No. 1: MILTON H. WEST, Texas.

Immigration and Naturalization: MILTON H. WEST, Texas.

Irrigation and Reclamation: MILTON H. WEST, Texas.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE MEMORY OF SHAKESPEARE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BECK.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I take pleasure in inserting an address delivered by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] in the National Cathedral in Washington on April 23, 1933, the anniversary of the birth and also of the death of the "myriad-minded" Shakespeare, the "greatest genius of the human race."

It has been said that three things are necessary for the performance of a great accomplishment: the man, the hour, and the opportunity. These three requisites were happily combined when the able and learned gentleman from Pennsylvania was called upon to speak on this anniversary occasion on the life and works of the man whose writings did more to shape the course of our western civilization than of any other human being who ever lived "in the tides of time."

His address is a masterpiece and one that will be read and enjoyed by the intelligent people of the English-speaking world long after we have all passed away.

The address follows:

This is St. George's Day. The revered, but somewhat mythical, Saint has symbolized for centuries the romance and chivalry of the English race. On the Sunday following the armistice it was my privilege to speak from the pulpit of an Anglican church in England. One half of my audience were wounded English soldiers, and the valor and fortitude they represented seemed to illustrate the flaming line of Shakespeare:

"Our ancient work of courage—fair St. George!"

It is a happy coincidence that on St. George's Day, William Shakespeare was born, and on the same saint's day he died, 52 years later, for no one has ever given nobler expression to the higher ideals and heroic chivalry of the English-speaking race than the Stratford poet. Equally happy is the fact that he was born in the spring, when nature's loveliest poems, the flowers, "do paint the meadows with delight", for he was destined to bring into the world the eternal spring of a beautiful and noble imagination, and his books reveal that he loved nothing more than the beauties of nature.

Shakespeare's medium was the theater, and the theater is the child of the church, for it developed from the mystery and morality plays, with which the medieval church sought to dramatize either the great stories of the Bible or the sublime moralities of Holy Writ. It is an infinite pity that the theater, potentially one of the noblest cultural institutions of mankind, should have wandered so far from its mother's influences. Its debasement through the inordinate spirit of commercialism is an immeasurable waste of a great moral and cultural asset.

Of all the children of men, who have written for the theater, incomparably the greatest is William Shakespeare. This is now the common verdict of mankind.

You can measure the magnitude of his achievement, if you will go to the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington—the noblest memorial to the great poet in all the world—and you will see, in the great reading room, more than 2,000 separate editions of Shakespeare, and that treasure house contains more than 70,000 volumes, relating in some degree to the great poet. Perhaps the most striking tribute to the timeless substance of his reputation is that stated by one of his greatest editors, Dr. Furness, in the introduction of the variorum edition of Hamlet. Speaking of this character of Hamlet, he says:

"No one of mortal mold 'save Him whose blessed feet were nailed for our advantage to the bitter cross' [a quotation from Shakespeare] ever trod this earth commanding such absorbing interest as this Hamlet, this mere creation of a poet's brain. No syllable that he whispered, no word let fall by anyone near him, but is caught and pondered as no words have ever been, except of Holy Writ. Upon no throne built by mortal hands has ever beat so fierce a light as upon that airy fabric reared at Elsinore."

Of Shakespeare's personality, we know little, but that little is favorable. The uniform testimony of those who knew him was that he was a man of an open, frank nature, whose distinguishing quality was his gentleness. His associates felt for him not only unbounded admiration, but a feeling of deep affection. Long after his death, his great rival said that he loved the man "this side of idolatry", and his fellow actors, who piously collected his plays after his death, gave as their excuse that their purpose was not one of self-profit or fame, but simply to keep alive the memory of "so worthy a man as was our Shakespeare." Note the affection of the pronoun.

Of his many-sided greatness there is no time to speak; and even if there were, words would be inadequate. But it seems appropriate in this sacred edifice to dwell briefly upon the relation, if any, which Shakespeare's moral philosophy bears to the eternal truths of revealed religion.

That he was a churchman, at least in the outward observance of the ceremonials of the Anglican Church, is evidenced by the unquestioned records of his family life. In an Anglican Church he was baptized, and within its chancel he is buried.

I like to think of him in the evening of his life, sitting on a Sunday in the lovely church on the sweetly flowing Avon, listening to the noble ritual of the church, and pondering with that great mind of his upon the utterances of the preacher. He died when only 52 years of age; and had he been given his threescore and ten, who can say what profound play he might have written, of a deeply religious character?

His mighty verse contains many references to Biblical events and Scriptural truths. While many of these are casual and perfunctory, yet some contain very tender allusions to the doctrines of Christianity. What nobler gloss is there in all literature upon the beatitude "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy", than Portia's exquisitely beautiful plea for mercy, in which she refers to the Lord's Prayer in the words:

"We all do pray for mercy, and that same prayer should teach us all to render the deeds of mercy."

And was ever the spirit of Christmastide more beautifully expressed than in Hamlet, where Marcellus says:

"Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Savior's birth is celebrated,
This bird of dawning singeth all night long;
And then, they say, no spirit dare walk abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is that time."

We are however more concerned with the answer, if any, which Shakespeare sought to give to the unsolved problems of life. The great tragedies which he largely wrote in the middle period of his life and which superficially seem to suggest his belief in an irresistible and implacable fate—like the ananke of the Greek tragedies—do not themselves indicate that Shakespeare regarded the moral world an unfathomable vacuum. If any deduction can be drawn from the nature of his plots—nearly all of which he borrowed from older sources—then it is significant that in his later plays, written in his last years in the quiet of his Stratford home, the sweeter themes of repentance, kindness, and mercy seem to animate his verse. While I have always distrusted the autobiographical interpretation of Shakespeare's plays, yet it may be true that from the exuberant joy of his youth, when his finest comedies and noblest histories were written, he may have passed, in middle life, into the dark shadow of a moral crisis, from which he emerged in his later years with a larger spirit of kindness, magnanimity, and faith. If so, it was as "light at eventide."

While he did not believe in fate, in the Greek sense of an implacable power which predetermines our existence and determines our destiny beyond any power of volition on our part, yet he did recognize the fateful part that even a trivial accident can play in the life of a man. But he always recognized that it was the conjunction of accident with some fatal defect in character that brought about a tragic result. He believed that man was "master of his soul and captain of his fate", provided that he had the character to cope with adverse circumstance. Man is not a mere pawn to be moved on the chessboard of life by an all-powerful and implacable destiny. As he made his Cassius say: "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings."

The only fatality that Shakespeare recognizes is a fatality that springs from the man himself. In this respect he was a stern moralist, for, as previously suggested, he believed that an otherwise noble nature might be destroyed by a single defect. This was the keynote to Hamlet, for he tells us in one of the most disputed passages that one "dram of evil" can corrupt the noble substance of a man. With Macbeth it was ambition; with Hamlet, lack of faith; with Coriolanus, a spiritual arrogance; with Brutus, a visionary idealism; with Lear, a too impulsive and passionate nature, aggravated by senile decay. Given a well-balanced character a man can overcome adverse circumstance and can see "tongues in trees, books in the running brook, sermons in stones, and good in everything."

Throughout all his plays, there is the finest recognition of all that is noble and great in human nature, and a corresponding dislike of all that is base and trivial, so that one of his greatest critics, Coleridge, could say with truth that Shakespeare "was a writer, of all others, the most calculated to make his readers better as well as wiser."

This may be said with frank recognition, that a relatively small part of his works contains passages which on the ground of propriety could have been profitably omitted. The conventions of his age explain, but cannot justify his rare lapses in good taste.

While he had an inextinguishable hatred of the meaner vices, like hypocrisy and ingratitude, yet, for the common frailties of human nature, he had only a tolerant pity, for he said, "Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all." And, again, in the words of Rosalind:

"I will chide no breather alive except myself, Against whom I know most faults."

A gloss upon the saying, "Judge not and ye shall not be judged."

I do not suggest that Shakespeare was consciously a moral preacher. Primarily, he wrote for the theater, and nothing was further from his purpose than to usurp the function of the church. Yet those who will search diligently his masterful writings, and disregard the incidents of borrowed plots and the utterances of individual characters (which do not always represent Shakespeare's own views), will find that independent of both plot and character there is often a lofty moral purpose in Shakespeare's writing and a devout belief in an overruling Providence.

Let me illustrate this by a reference to a single play, Hamlet, by common consent the greatest of his tragedies, in which Shakespeare depicts a noble mind for a time enveloped in the dark shadow of unbelief, who was finally brought to believe in an overruling Providence. He makes this character say, as the keynote to the tragedy, that it is not enough for a man to be preponderantly good, for one "dram of evil" may bring a noble character to ruin.

In my judgment the two greatest dramatic compositions in all literature are the Book of Job and the tragedy of Hamlet. Of the two, the earlier dramatic poem is the greater, for never in my judgment has the human mind risen on the wings of imagination to such sublime heights as in this dramatic poem, possibly written by some nomad chief, who, with the infinitude of the desert about him and the starry sky as his ceiling, tried to penetrate the greatest of all mysteries of human life, namely, the dark enigma of evil in the world.

Only secondary to the Book of Job is this masterpiece of the English poet, who addresses himself to the same eternal question. The two plays differ in detail, but not in kind: The old patriarch, Job, overwhelmed by his sorrows, curses the day of his birth, longs for death, and challenges the justice of God in imposing unmerited sufferings upon him. Having heard his lamentations, the Almighty answers him out of the whirlwind by the eternal reply:

"Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?
Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?"

And Job, appalled at his own audacity in questioning the design of an overruling Providence, bows in resignation to the eternal will.

The problem is the same in Hamlet. It is true that Hamlet does not suffer, as Job does, in his material possessions or in his physical well-being. From a material standpoint he has everything that a man would wish, but that which appalled him, as the sufferings of Job appalled Job, was the iniquity of the world.

Coming from college, he found the illusions of his youth wholly shattered. The ways of life became "stale, flat, and unprofitable." Life was an "unweeded garden, that grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature possess it merely." The world was a prison and Denmark one of the worst of its dungeons. Losing faith not only in himself, his fellow men, and the work appointed to him to do, but even in his God, Hamlet longs for death, and the purpose of the poet in developing the agnosticism of Hamlet is strikingly shown in a change that he made in the "To be or not to be" soliloquy, between the first version of the play and the second.

He is wondering why men endure the wickedness of the world when a voluntary exit is so easy, and in the first version he says:

"And in the dream of death when we awake
And borne before an everlasting Judge,
From whence no passenger ever returned,
The undiscover'd country at whose sight
The happy smile and the accursed damn,
But for this the joyful hope of this"—

And so forth. In other words, he says that it is the hope of a better life, where all will be made right, that puzzles us here, which deters man from violating the canon against self-slaughter.

But when he revises the play, he gives as a reason for men's willingness to live:

"But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveler returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of?"

The depth of his skepticism is even more strikingly illustrated in one of the noblest, and yet most terrible, passages of Shakespeare. In explaining to his friends the cause of his melancholy, Hamlet says:

"I have of late—but wherefore I know not—lost all my mirth; foregone all custom of exercise; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air—look you!—this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire—why, it appears no other thing to me but a foul and pestilent congregation of vapors."

The dismal teachings of science cannot go further than this picture of the physical universe. Then, curiously enough, he launches into the praise of man by saying:

"What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form, in moving, how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!"

And yet this noblest panegyric upon man he quickly turns into the pessimistic cry:

"And yet to me, what is this quintessence of dust?"

I should not dwell upon this tragic mood of Hamlet, which so strikingly resembles the fiery and passionate protest of Job against the justice of his fate, were it not for the sequel.

Hamlet is sent to England to be assassinated. By a series of extraordinary events, to which neither his volition nor his deeds contributed, he is saved. Impressed by this evidence of an overruling providence, the skeptical Hamlet becomes a believer, even though his faith did not arise above the prayer: "I believe; help Thou my unbelief."

This is clearly indicated in the last act of the tragedy. In explaining his miraculous escape to his friend, Horatio, Hamlet says that "even in that was Heaven ordinaunt", and when he has a presentiment that he is going to his death and Horatio begs him to obey the presentiment, Hamlet says:

"We defy augury: there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow."

Then, speaking of death, he says:

"If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come; the readiness is all."

This is something more than the spirit of fatalism, and it is significant that Hamlet's expression of faith, that "there is a special Providence in the fall of a sparrow" is a paraphrase of Christ's saying:

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father." (St. Matthew 10:29.)

What could be more Christlike than Hamlet's forgiveness of Laertes when, realizing that he had been the victim of the basest treachery at Laertes' hands, yet, when Laertes appeals to him to forgive the foul crime, he says:

"Heaven make thee free of it!
I follow thee."

There is a final parallel. Job veiled his face and submitted himself to the will of the Almighty by saying:

"Behold, I am of small account. What shall I answer Thee? I lay my hands upon my mouth."

Similarly Hamlet, as he succumbs to death, says:

"The rest is silence."

No more questionings or doubts; only submission, for the evidence of an overruling Providence had made him believe that there is a "divinity that shapes our ends, roughhew them as we may." Shakespeare himself, who, because he dealt with that great stage—the world—yet rarely speaks of any hereafter for his characters, yet says of Hamlet:

"Good night, sweet prince;
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!"

There is a lesson for our times in the common theme of the book of Job and the tragedy of Hamlet. The world is in a state of unparalleled wreckage. What will be the effect upon this and future generations of man? I am hopeful that the result may mean a new reformation of the world. The great German, who alone could be compared with Shakespeare, Goethe, said:

"He who has not eaten his bread with tears,
He knows you not, you heavenly powers."

Individuals and nations become soft and flabby with prosperity, but can gain in moral strength by adversity. The ages which have suffered most have been the ages of believers. If the effect of present suffering were only to revive in the hearts of men, soddened with material prosperity, the spirit of compassion toward men, it would mean moral reformation.

In this connection, I cannot forbear, before concluding, by referring to one of the noblest passages in Shakespeare, which has an especial application to our duties in these critical days.

When the aged Lear is driven from his daughter's house in a storm of elemental fury, he, like Job and Hamlet, upbraided the Almighty for permitting such sorrow to come to one who was "more sinned against than sinning"; and then, as the rain drenches the aged Lear to the very skin, it suddenly occurs to him how little, in the days of his prosperity, he had ever thought of the sufferings of others, and he gives utterance to the following self-reproachful words:

"Poor naked wretches, whereso'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? O! I have ta'en
Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
And thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just."

In this there is great truth—that the unfortunates of the earth may too often get their impression of the justice of Heaven from the treatment they get from their fellow men, who have what Lear called the "superflux", or, in other words, the superfluity of material possessions.

I have given you a very slight idea of the sublime morality that can be found in Shakespeare's verse to those who look for it. Shakespeare's mighty soul, the most comprehensive ever given to any of the children of men, saw life as a whole, in all its good and in all its evil; but the great fact remains, which we can gratefully recall on this anniversary of his birth and death, that, next to the Bible itself, no writer of our mother tongue has ever so profoundly quickened the imagination and developed the souls of men as William Shakespeare. As the vicar of the lovely little church on the Avon, in which lie all that is mortal of the great poet, once said on the annual memorial service in that church:

"Wherever men do congregate or wherever they muse in solitude there abides this great cause of thankfulness to Almighty God: that the greatest name in our literature should be also our wisest and profoundest teacher."

FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES SUBMITS TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ITS PLAN TO STABILIZE EMPLOYMENT AND WARD OFF DEPRESSIONS—PROPOSED AS A FEATURE OF THE REORGANIZED PLAN OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of 600,000 members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and 100,000 members of the Eagles' Auxiliary, I have presented to President Roosevelt today a memorandum setting forth the Eagles' plan of economic stabilization through a proposed economic planning board, and have requested the President to consider the wisdom of adopting it in principle and including it as a part of the set-up of the governmental reorganization which the President is authorized to make under the broad powers voted to him by the Congress. With the courteous permission granted to me by the House I will utilize the opportunity to bring this important proposal to the attention of the Congress and the country.

The Eagles' memorandum, prepared by Past Grand Worthy President Frank E. Hering and endorsed by all of the national leaders of the order, outlines for consideration of the President "a program to prevent severe depressions through far-sighted national planning."

A covering letter of my own accompanying the memorandum is as follows:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: This is to ask your attention to the plan of the Fraternal Order of Eagles to stabilize employment and prevent depressions.

As a member and representative of that order, I have been requested to urge you to consider the advisability of welding into the reorganized Government of the United States a mechanism which will embody the principle of a commission or board to stabilize industry, commerce, and agriculture, for which the Fraternal Order of Eagles has long contended. By request of the order, I introduced the bill in the Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses. In the Seventy-second Congress it was reported favorably without a dissenting vote from Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary. In the present extra session no opportunity has been afforded either in committee or in the House to consider the measure, but there are strong and convincing evidences that it is growing rapidly in favor.

The proposal is simply that there shall be created some sort of governmental mechanism, whether it be known as board, commission, or by some other name, composed of qualified experts, who will study both foreign and domestic trends, keep constantly abreast of changing economic conditions, and report to Congress from time to time recommendations for legislation that will keep business and employment on an even keel and ward off the awful cycles of depression such as the one from which the country has so long suffered and from which, happily, through your leadership, we now appear to be emerging.

We who speak for this plan do not really consider that it is necessary to go through the long and tedious process of legislation to effectuate the purpose which this great fraternal order has in mind, as the Congress has wisely clothed you with plenary authority to reorganize the Government. Rather, Mr. President, we are hopefully and prayerfully looking to you to approve the suggestion and by Executive action to provide somewhere in the set-up of the reorganized Government such mechanism as we have in mind, the personnel to be composed of the best and most qualified experts in the Government service, who will undertake to examine and analyze economic trends, to procure, correlate, and present to Congress in systematized form information gathered from every possible source that will have a bearing toward the stabilization of industry, agriculture, commerce, and employment, and which we believe will enable Congress knowingly and advisedly to enact legislation that will tend largely, if not entirely, to prevent such industrial collapses and spreads of unemployment as the one through which we have been passing.

In presenting this matter to you I am authorized to speak for the 600,000 members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the 100,000 women who compose the Eagles' Auxillary. This is the fraternal order that is closest to the poor man, the order that has to its credit a great record of humanitarian achievement along lines of social welfare, such as old-age pensions, mothers' pensions, and workmen's compensation statutes. But you, sir, are a member of the order, so I need not here dwell elaborately on its humanitarian activities. Suffice it to say that in all of its urge to serve humanity the Fraternal Order of Eagles has never been more wholeheartedly consecrated to an idea than it is now consecrated to this plan to make unemployment debacles impossible in the future, thus rendering a real service to the millions who are always tragic sufferers in periods of hard times and unemployment. This, the order believes, is not a chimerical dream but a possibility which can be accomplished by creating such a governmental mechanism as a stabilization of employment board or commission with well-defined duties.

My mission today, Mr. President, is to deliver to you in person a memorandum prepared by Past Grand Worthy President Frank E. Hering and addressed to you which explains with clarity, precision, and, I think, very impressively what is sought to be accomplished by the creation of a stabilization of employment board or commission. Duplicate copies of this memorandum are going forward to the Secretary of Labor, Secretary of Commerce, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of the Interior, and Secretary of State, because the sponsors of the movement believe that the departments presided over by those officials would be most greatly affected.

I take pleasure in presenting this memorandum to you, and I thank you in advance for the careful consideration I know you will give to it.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

The memorandum prepared by Mr. Hering, who first proposed a stabilization of employment plan in 1930 and secured its sponsorship by the National Order of Eagles in that year, outlines a program to prevent severe depressions through far-sighted national planning. Mr. Hering is a distinguished economist and a former professor of Notre Dame University. The program purposes:

1. To stabilize employment, so that workers may obtain a steady wage.
2. To hold business on an even keel, so that the investor may obtain a reasonable dividend.

As a means to those ends we suggest this simple plan: That the President appoint a board continuously to study conditions in industry, agriculture, and commerce that threaten to throw men out of work and thus to bring on business depression. This board would act, in short, as an economic weather bureau to warn of approaching storms. It would do even more. It would formulate and recommend plans for dissipating them.

THE BOARD'S PLACE IN THE GOVERNMENTAL STRUCTURE

It is suggested that the board be established not as an independent body but as a part of the existing governmental structure. Without additional legislation, the board could be made a part of the Government reorganization program now being mapped by the President. Under the plenary power Congress has given him to effect such reorganization, he has the authority to appoint such a board.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE BOARD

Members of the board would include trained economists, chosen for their knowledge of the problems of industry, agriculture, and commerce, not only as they affect a particular group but as they affect all groups in relation to each other.

The nucleus of the board might be drawn from the following departments whose functions pertain so largely to the economic welfare of the Nation:

1. The Department of State, because its representatives in foreign lands are able to secure—from a world-wide field—information of value in planning America's industrial, agricultural, and commercial life, and in arranging reciprocal tariffs.
2. The Department of the Interior, because it is concerned with the preservation of our natural resources, such as coal, iron, copper, oil, etc.

3. The Department of Agriculture, because its duty is to safeguard the welfare of the farmer, upon which the Nation's prosperity so largely depends.

4. The Department of Commerce, because to this Department comes valuable information relative to the state of foreign and domestic trade.

5. The Department of Labor, because the Secretary of Labor "is charged with the duty of fostering, promoting, and developing the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, improving their working conditions, and advancing their opportunities for profitable employment."

There would need to be no expensive secretariat. The board would call upon the various departments of the Government for the use of experienced economists and statisticians whose work brings them into intimate contact with the problems with which the proposed board would deal.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE BOARD

The board would be empowered to—

1. Make surveys, studies, and investigations of all problems relating to the stabilization of employment in industry, agriculture, and commerce because a steadily working population is the basis of prosperity.

2. Formulate such plans and recommend such legislation as will keep production and consumption in balance, and hence enable employees to obtain a steady wage and investors a reasonable dividend.

It will be noted that the board would act in the twofold capacity of investigator and advisor.

True, many governmental and nongovernmental groups already make surveys, studies, and investigations. The board would not duplicate such work. It would make surveys only in fields not already covered.

But information in the hands of existing fact-finding bodies, although intrinsically valuable, has been of little use to those who have needed it most because it has not been properly assembled, analyzed, and distributed. No group exists to act as a clearing house for the information collected. No group exists to correlate and interpret the facts so that our business, industry, labor, and commerce may intelligently meet influences developing throughout the Nation and the world.

The proposed board would first of all, then, act as a clearing house. It would see that new trends and changes revealed by surveys in one industry were reported to related industries that would be affected. It would eliminate investigations that wastefully overlap, as many now do. It would piece together isolated facts and draw up for the guidance of industry, agriculture, and commerce a true and constantly revised picture of economic trends.

The distinguished Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee of the Seventy-second Congress when recommending, without a dissenting vote, that this plan be enacted into law, stated in a very illuminating report submitted by its chairman, Hon. Tom McKeown, of Oklahoma:

"Had such a committee been in existence to anticipate, prior to 1929 and subsequently, economic changes as they have influenced industry, agriculture, and commerce, the grave conditions of certain industries would not now obtain, and in many instances economic tragedies would have been avoided."

For example:

Statistics gathered at some expense show that real wages were going down during the period from 1922 to 1929, whereas it was generally believed they were going up. The truth should have been made known; it was of vital importance to manufacturers and producers in every field. Other investigations, studies, and reports showed that copper from the vast Katanga surface mines in Africa was being laid down in this country for less than the cost of producing American copper; that United States markets had dried up in the Central and South American countries raising coffee and sugar, because of overproduction; that improvements in machines and other mass-production methods were driving men out of industries faster than they were being reabsorbed in others; that the World War had caused a cataclysm in international monetary relations; that wasteful competition was ruining the oil industry; that mass production in agriculture, burdensome farm debts, and foreign competition were combining to cut off the purchasing power of the farmer; that taxes were absorbing so much of income that private enterprise could not continue to prosper; that production was increasing without a corresponding increase in consumption.

Had there been in existence a board of trained observers such as is now respectfully proposed, these facts and others equally important would have been read as a warning that trouble was brewing for the oil industry, the copper industry, the farmer, and eventually the whole Nation.

Industry, agriculture, and commerce, if forewarned, could act to help themselves to a great extent. The board could make helpful suggestions. Certain problems, however, would demand Federal cooperation. But individuals and industries are at present powerless to act to obtain assistance promptly.

It is here that the proposed board would perform its second great service.

THE BOARD AND CONGRESS

From its study of conditions, the board would formulate plans and recommend to the President and Congress such legislation as would minimize the adverse influences at work. The necessity for some unit in our national life that will guard us from our own folly is apparent when we look back over events of the past few years. Our national experience has proved:

1. That information in the possession of the State, the Treasury, and the Commerce Departments did not prevent the sale of foreign bonds which have since defaulted, with great loss to American investors.

2. That knowledge of agricultural conditions (crop forecasts, declining farm values, etc.) did not protect farmers, investors, and bankers in farming regions from losses.

3. That plant capacity was increased, without justification, in anticipation of future sales.

4. That in spite of growing technological unemployment, almost no effort was made to divert surplus workers to other industries.

5. That the relation between the decline in residential building and the purchase of luxuries and semiluxuries on the deferred-payment plan was not realized.

6. That three surveys of the coal industry have resulted in little if any benefit to operators or miners, because no agency existed to effect reforms as a result of the findings.

7. That information collected by the Bureau of Mines and by the United States Tariff Commission was assembled too late to save the copper interests and miners from economic disaster.

8. That the Federal Oil Conservation Board has not been even mildly successful in solving the problems of the petroleum industry, because of lack of authority or because of constitutional inhibitions.

Many of the problems just enumerated were not intelligently met, because, in many instances, they were not recognized as grave problems in time, but more often because they did not come within the scope of any governmental commission or department authorized to act. The proposed board would insist that we take action to avert economic disaster.

It would establish a mutually beneficial relation between business and government. Industry, agriculture, and commerce would have prompt protection. The Congress would have the benefit of the carefully considered opinions of experts who see our economic problems as a related whole. If the board functions within the spirit of the plan here presented this country should never again be plunged into such misery as has prevailed for nearly 4 years.

History: The plan presented in the foregoing memorandum was first presented to Congress in December 1930 as H.R. 13567. The bill was introduced by myself at the request of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, which prepared the measure. The House Judiciary Committee held a hearing on it. I reintroduced the bill in the Seventy-second Congress. The House Judiciary Committee again held a hearing, and subcommittee no. 3, to which the bill was assigned for study, recommended without a dissenting vote that it be passed. I again reintroduced the bill on March 9, 1933.

Since then Congress has vested the President of the United States with full authority to reorganize the Government. Therefore it now becomes possible for an economic planning board, as here outlined, to be created without further legislation.

TO RELIEVE ECONOMIC EMERGENCY BY INCREASING AGRICULTURAL PURCHASING POWER

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (nos. 1 to 84, inclusive) to the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 27, 32, 42, 46, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, and 82, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco, the base period shall be the postwar period, August 1919–July 1929"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5, line 16, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "act" and insert "title"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"Under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture requiring adequate facilities for the storage of any non-perishable agricultural commodity on the farm, inspection and measurement of any such commodity so stored, and the locking and sealing thereof, and such other regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the protection of such commodity and for the marketing thereof, a reasonable percentage of any benefit payment may be advanced on any such commodity so stored. In any such case, such deduction may be made from the amount of the benefit payment as the Secretary of Agriculture determines will reasonably compensate for the cost of inspection and sealing, but no deduction may be made for interest."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"The making of any such agreement shall not be held to be in violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States; and any such agreement shall be deemed to be lawful: Provided, That no such agreement shall remain in force after the termination of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(5) No person engaged in the storage in a public warehouse of any basic agricultural commodity in the current of interstate or foreign commerce, shall deliver any such commodity upon which a warehouse receipt has been issued and is outstanding, without prior surrender and cancellation of such warehouse receipt. Any person violating any of the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. The Secretary of Agriculture may revoke any license issued under subsection (3) of this section, if he finds, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, that the licensee has violated the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Beginning with line 3 on page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out through line 13 on page 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) To obtain revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of the national economic emergency, there shall be levied processing taxes as hereinafter provided. When the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, he shall proclaim such determination, and a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to such commodity from the beginning of the marketing year therefor next following the date of such proclamation. The processing tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of the commodity, whether of domestic production or imported, and shall be paid by the processor. The rate of tax shall conform to the requirements of subsection (b). Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as of the date the tax first takes effect, and the rate so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy, be adjusted by him to conform to such requirements. The processing tax shall terminate at the end of the marketing year current at the time the Secretary proclaims that rental or benefit payments are to be discontinued with respect to such commodity. The marketing year for each commodity shall be ascertained and prescribed by regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That upon any article upon which a manufacturers' sales tax is levied under the authority of the Revenue Act of 1932 and which manufacturers' sales tax is computed on the basis of weight, such manufacturers' sales tax shall be computed on the basis of the weight of said finished article less the weight of the processed cotton contained therein on which a processing tax has been paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 15, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "sums" and insert "sum", and in line 21 strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(b) No tax shall be required to be paid on the processing of any commodity by or for the producer thereof for consumption by his own family, employees, or household; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, by regulations, to exempt from the payment of the processing tax the processing of commodities by or for the producer thereof for sale by him where, in the judgment of the Secretary, the imposition of a processing tax with respect thereto is unnecessary to effectuate the declared policy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 18, line 20, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after "delivery", insert "on or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 24, line 18, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before the word "value", insert "normal."

On page 29, between lines 10 and 11 of the Senate engrossed amendments, insert the following new paragraph:

"The rate of interest on such direct loans made at any time by any Federal land bank shall be one half of 1 percent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged to borrowers on mortgage loans made at such time by the bank through national farm-loan associations."

On page 29, line 22, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

On page 34, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before "value", insert "normal."

On page 35 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 13, strike out all through line 9, page 36.

On page 36 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 12 to 19, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 31. (a) Out of the funds made available to him under section 30, the Farm Loan Commissioner is authorized to make loans, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $25,000,000, at a rate of interest."

On page 39, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before "value", insert "normal."

On page 39, line 16, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after "years", insert "or, in the case of a first or second mortgage secured wholly by real property and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage within an agreed period no greater than that for which loans may be made under the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended."

On page 39, line 19, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before the period, insert "if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage."

On page 41, line 7, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$8,500" and insert "$10,000."

On page 42, line 8, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "(1)."

On page 42 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with the word "including", in line 10, strike out through the word "project", in line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and to political subdivisions of States, which, prior to the date of enactment of this act, have completed projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands for agricultural purposes."

On page 45 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 1, strike out all through the period in line 9 and insert "Sec. 37."

On page 46, line 9, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$325,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

On page 47, line 12, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$8,500" and insert "$10,000."

On page 47 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 13, strike out all through line 20, page 48.

On page 49, line 2, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

On page 46, lines 3, 12, and 24, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "37", "38", and "39" and insert "38", "39", and "40", respectively.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 83.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (nos. 1 to 84, inclusive) to the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The following amendments make clerical changes necessary by reason of the inclusion of new titles in the bill, and the House recedes: 1, 2, 4, 12, 23, 26, 29, 31, 33, 35, 37, 39, 40, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 64, 65, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, and 80.

On amendment no. 3: The House bill fixed the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914, as the base period for all agricultural commodities. The Senate amendment provides that in the case of tobacco and milk and its products the base period shall be the post-war period, September 1919–August 1928. The conference agreement provides that the base period in the case of milk and its products shall be the pre-war period and, in the case of tobacco, the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929.

On amendment no. 5: The House bill directs the Farm Board and all departments and agencies of the Government to sell all cotton owned by them to the Secretary of Agriculture at such price as may be agreed upon. The Senate amendment contains the same requirement except that cotton owned by the Federal intermediate credit banks is not required to be so sold and the price paid shall not be in excess of the market price.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment require that the Government agencies to which the section applies shall take such action and make such settlements as may be necessary for them to acquire full legal title to cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced or which is held as collateral for loans or advances. The Senate amendment includes futures contracts for cotton as well as cotton on which money has been loaned or advanced. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment require the cotton to be sold to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Under the House bill the settlements of loans or advances are to be made on such terms as, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and the department or agency involved, may be deemed advisable. Under the Senate amendment the terms of the settlements are provided for therein in the case of cotton taken over by departments or agencies other than the Secretary of Agriculture. Such cotton is to be taken over at a price equal to the amount of the loan or advance outstanding against it, including loans or advances senior to the Government loan, plus such amount as is required to adjust advances by the borrower to the growers to 90 percent of the value of their cotton on the date of delivery of the cotton as collateral. The sums required to adjust advances to growers are to be computed by subtracting the total amount advanced to growers on account of pools of which the cotton was a part from 90 percent of the value, at the time of delivery as collateral, of the cotton to be taken over, plus charges and operating costs and less existing assets of the borrower derived from net income, earnings, or profits from such cotton or operations to which such cotton is related. The department or agency making the settlement is to determine the amounts specified.

The House bill did not specifically provide for the case of cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture as collateral for loans or advances by him. Under the Senate amendment the Secretary is to make settlements on such terms as he deems advisable, and he is authorized to indemnify or furnish bonds to warehousemen for lost warehouse receipts and to pay the premiums on the bonds.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorize the purchase by the Secretary of Agriculture of the cotton from the other departments or agencies. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 6: The House bill authorized and directed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance money and make loans to the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire cotton under the cotton-option plan and to pay the carrying costs thereon, with warehouse receipts as collateral security. The Senate amendment provides for such advances and loans and includes in addition loans and advances for the purpose of paying classing and merchandising costs, and provides that where it is impossible or impracticable for the Secretary of Agriculture to deliver warehouse receipts as collateral security the Corporation may accept such other security as it may consider acceptable, including assignments of the equity and interest of the Secretary in warehouse receipts pledged to secure other indebtedness. The Senate amendment also increases the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and have outstanding by an amount sufficient to carry out these provisions. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 7: This amendment is a clarifying amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 8: The House bill authorized the Secretary of Agriculture, under the cotton-option plan, to sell to the producer, an amount of cotton equivalent to the amount of reduction in cotton production. The Senate amendment authorizes the sale in such cases of an amount to be agreed upon not in excess of the amount of such reduction. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 9 and 10: These amendments authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into option contracts with respect to cotton not disposed of by him, conditioned upon reduction of production in 1934, and permit the producer to exercise the option up to January 1, 1935, and change the date by which the Secretary must have disposed of cotton acquired by him from March 1, 1935, to March 1, 1936. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to sell unlimited amounts of cotton at any time that a price of not less than 10 cents, basis middling, can be obtained at the ports. The amendment also inserts a provision authorizing the Secretary to enter into additional option contracts for so much of the cotton as is not necessary to comply with the cotton option plan in combination with the utilization of the commodity benefit plan provided for in part 2 of the title. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendment no. 13: The House bill provided for rental or benefit payments to be made only in connection with reductions in acreage or reductions in production for market or both. The Senate amendment provides that rental or benefit payments may also be made irrespective of any reduction in acreage or reduction in production, provided the rental or benefit payments are limited to that portion of the production of the commodity that is required for domestic consumption. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 14: This amendment authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to advance a reasonable percentage of any benefit payment on grains stored on the farm. In any such case he is authorized to make a deduction from the benefit payment of not more than one half cent per bushel for inspection and sealing, but no deduction is to be made for interest. The conference agreement applies the provisions to any nonperishable agricultural commodity and authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the amount of a reasonable deduction from benefit payments to be made to compensate for the cost of inspection and sealing.

On amendments nos. 15, 19, and 22: These amendments are clarifying amendments. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 16: Under the House bill the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to enter into marketing agreements with respect to any agricultural commodity or products thereof. The Senate amendment limits the application of the agreements to basic agricultural commodities and products thereof. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 17: The Senate amendment specifically provides that any legal marketing agreement provided for in the subsection shall not be held in violation of the antitrust laws, and further provides that the agreements shall not remain in force after the termination of the act. The conference agreement provides that the making of the marketing agreements shall not be held to be in violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States, and any such agreement shall be deemed to be lawful, and retains the provision in the Senate amendment that no such agreement shall remain in force after the termination of the act.

On amendment no. 18: Under the House bill loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to parties entering into marketing agreements were to bear interest at a rate not in excess of 3 percent per annum. This amendment strikes out the language with respect to rate of interest, leaving the rate in such cases to be fixed in accordance with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 20: Under the House bill the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to issue licenses permitting the handling in interstate or foreign commerce of any basic agricultural commodity or product thereof or any competing agricultural commodity or product thereof. The Senate amendment permits licenses to be issued with respect to any competing commodity or product thereof whether or not an agricultural commodity. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 21: This amendment makes any order of the Secretary of Agriculture suspending or revoking any license issued under the subsection final if the order is in accordance with law. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 24: This amendment makes it unlawful for any person to remove a basic agricultural commodity upon which a storage certificate is outstanding from a warehouse unless the commodity is moved for continued storage and a warehouse certificate is issued by a public warehouseman guaranteeing redelivery of a like grade, dockage, quality, and quantity. In addition to the criminal penalty, the provision authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to revoke any license of the violator which has been issued to him under subsection (3) for violation of the provisions of the subsection. The provision as agreed to in conference prohibits any person engaged in the storage in a public warehouse of any basic agricultural commodity in the current of interstate or foreign commerce from delivering such commodity upon which a warehouse receipt has been issued or is outstanding without prior surrender and cancellation of the warehouse receipt, and retains the penalties provided in the Senate amendment.

On amendment no. 25: The House bill provided that the processing tax should be levied for the purpose of raising revenue for extraordinary expenditures incurred by reason of the national economic emergency. The purpose of the tax, as stated in the Senate amendment, is to obtain revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred under the agricultural adjustment provisions of the bill. The conference agreement adopts the substance of the House provision.

Under the House bill, whenever rental or benefit payments are made in connection with reductions in acreage or in production of a commodity for market during any marketing period (as determined by the Secretary), the processing tax would be levied during that period. The Senate amendment omits reference to such reductions, in order to conform with amendment no. 13, which authorizes rental or benefit payments, under certain circumstances, irrespective of reduction in acreage or in production. Under the Senate amendment, when the Secretary proclaims that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to a commodity, the tax takes effect with respect to the commodity at the beginning of the next marketing year (as determined by the Secretary) after the date of the proclamation, and terminates at the end of the marketing year in which the Secretary proclaims that such rental or benefit payments are to be discontinued.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment provide that the processing tax shall be at such rate as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value thereof, this maximum rate being subject to reduction under specified circumstances. In the House bill the maximum rate shall be reduced if the Secretary finds that the imposition of the processing tax at that rate has resulted or is likely to result in a substantial reduction in quantity of the commodity or products thereof domestically consumed. In making such finding the Secretary is required to give due consideration to certain specified factors among others. Under the Senate amendment the Secretary of Agriculture is required to fix the tax at a rate lower than the maximum if he finds that the tax at such maximum rate will cause such reduction in domestic consumption of the commodity as to result in the accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity or products thereof or in the depression of the farm price of the commodity. Such lower rate shall be such as will prevent such accumulation of surplus stocks and depression of the farm price of the commodity. The factors specified in the House bill as guides to the Secretary in fixing the lower rate are omitted from the Senate amendment. The language of the Senate amendment also makes it clear that the Secretary may fix the tax at a rate lower than the maximum upon the requisite finding at any time, whether or not a tax at the maximum rate has previously been in effect. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

Under the Senate amendment, the processing tax on cotton would be collected at the time that the processed goods are invoiced for sale by the processor, rather than at the time of processing. The conference agreement omits this provision.

The Senate amendment also provides that in computing any manufacturers' excise tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932 and based on weight, the weight of any processed cotton contained in the article shall first be deducted. The conference agreement makes it clear that this provision is to apply only in cases in which the processing tax has actually been collected and not refunded.

Under the Senate amendment it is provided that premiums paid for protein content of wheat shall not be taken into account in computing the current average farm price for the purpose of calculating the rate of the processing tax. The conference agreement retains this provision.

The Senate amendment defines the term "processing", with respect to various commodities, for the purposes of the provisions of part 2 of title I (commodity benefits). The House bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to define this term with respect to any commodity. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision. See amendment no. 36.

The Senate amendment provides that when a processing tax takes effect, or is increased or decreased, the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to prevent pyramiding and profiteering, shall make public such information as he deems necessary on certain subjects relating to prices to consumers of the commodity taxed and prices paid to producers thereof. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

On amendment no. 27: This amendment reduces the $10,000 maximum fixed in the House bill which could be paid to any officer, employee, or expert under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to $8,500 per annum. The Senate recedes. The effect of the provision as agreed to in conference is that the maximum salary is $10,000, which will be subject to the applicable reduction under the existing economy law, so that, applying the reduction at present in effect under the economy law, the maximum salary is $8,500.

On amendment no. 28: This amendment strikes out the word "emergency" in the title given to the division of the Department of Agriculture vested with the administration of the functions under the title. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 30: This amendment makes inapplicable the provisions contained in the act "To maintain the credit of the United States Government" which require parts of appropriations to be impounded on account of reductions in compensation. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 32: The House bill permitted the Secretary of Agriculture to permit cooperative associations of producers to act as agents of their members and patrons in connection with the distribution of rental and benefit payments. The Senate amendment extends this authority to processors as well as associations of producers. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 34 and 36: Under the House bill the Secretary of the Treasury was given the authority to establish conversion factors for any commodity or article processed therefrom, to determine the amount of the tax imposed, and was authorized to define "processing." Senate amendment no. 36 strikes out this provision. Amendment no. 34 gives the Secretary of Agriculture the authority, with the approval of the President, to establish conversion factors for any commodity or article processed therefrom, to determine the amount of tax imposed and the refunds to be made, and omits the provision authorizing defining of "processing." Under Senate amendment no. 25 processing is defined. The House recedes on amendments nos. 34 and 36.

On amendment no. 38: This amendment excludes the Canal Zone from the application of the agricultural adjustment provisions, and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 41: This amendment makes applicable in the administration of this title the provisions of sections 8, 9, and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. These sections provide for the furnishing of records, papers, and information by the departments and bureaus of the Government, for requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and for the taking of depositions. Penalties are provided for disobeying subpoenas and other requirements, for making false records, and (in the case of officers or employees administering the law) for unauthorized publication of information officially obtained.

The Senate amendment also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to designate officers and employees of the Department to hold hearings. Violations of any agreement are to be reported by the Secretary to the Attorney General and the Attorney General is required to cause appropriate proceedings to enforce the agreement to be conducted in courts. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 42: This amendment provides that the officers, agents, inspectors, and employees authorized under the act shall, so far as possible, be practical farmers and that their field of employment shall be limited to the congressional districts in which they reside. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 44: This amendment modifies the definition of basic agricultural commodity in the case of corn so that only field corn will be within such definition. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 45: This amendment eliminates from the definition of basic agricultural commodity cattle and sheep. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 46: This amendment includes sugar beets and sugarcane within the definition of basic agricultural commodity. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 49: The House bill appropriated the proceeds derived from taxes for rental and benefit payments and for administrative expenses under the cotton option plan and the commodity benefits provisions. The Senate amendment appropriates the proceeds of the taxes imposed and makes them available for the expansion of markets and removal of surplus agricultural products, for administrative expenses, and for rental and benefit payments under part 2 (the commodity benefits provision). The Senate amendment in addition appropriates $100,000,000 to defray administrative expenses in connection with the agricultural adjustment program, and for the purpose of making rental and benefit payments with respect to reduction in acreage or production. The House recedes with clerical changes.

On amendment no. 54: The House bill provided that no processing tax should be required to be paid on the processing by the producer thereof on his own premises of any commodity for consumption by his own family, employees, or household, and authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to exempt from the processing tax with respect to hogs, cattle, sheep, or milk and its products in cases where the producer's sales of the products did not exceed $100 per annum. The Senate amendment substitutes therefor a provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for the exemption of commodities from the tax when processed by or for the producer.

The House recedes with an amendment which exempts from the processing tax any commodity processed by or for the producer thereof for consumption by his own family, employees, or household and which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to exempt from the payment of the processing tax the processing of commodities by or for the producer thereof for sale by him where, in the judgment of the Secretary, the imposition of a processing tax with respect thereto is unnecessary to effectuate the declared policy of the title.

On amendments nos. 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, and 62: The House bill authorized the imposition of compensating taxes on the processing of agricultural commodities that compete with basic agricultural commodities on which there is a processing tax and defined competing agricultural commodities. The Senate amendments authorize the imposition of a tax in such cases on the processing of any commodity, whether or not agricultural in character, which competes with a basic agricultural commodity. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 63: The House bill authorized the imposition of compensating taxes equal to the amount of processing tax upon the importation of any article processed or manufactured wholly or in chief value from the commodity with respect to which the processing tax is in effect. The Senate amendment applies to an article processed or manufactured "wholly or in substantial part" from such commodity or commodities. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 66: This amendment provides that the compensating taxes collected upon importation, in the case of articles coming from the possessions of the United States to which the title does not apply, shall be paid into the treasury of the possession of origin and used for the benefit of agriculture. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 67 and 68: Under both the House bill and the Senate amendments a tax is imposed on floor stocks held for sale or other disposition on the date when a processing tax first takes effect. The House bill exempted from this tax persons engaged solely in the retail trade, but only to the extent of stocks sold or otherwise disposed of for consumption within 1 month after that date. The Senate amendment exempts retail stocks of persons engaged in retail trade, whether or not they are engaged solely in that trade, but provides that such stocks do not include stocks in warehouses. Further, the Senate amendment, like the House bill, exempts only such portion of retail stocks as are sold or otherwise disposed of within 30 days.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendments provide for the refund or abatement of taxes paid on the processing of articles which are held for sale or other disposition at the time that the tax wholly terminates. Under the House bill this refund or abatement does not apply to persons engaged solely in retail trade. Under the Senate amendment the refund or abatement does not apply to the retail stocks of persons engaged in retail trade whether or not they are engaged solely in that trade. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 73: The House bill provided that in the case of contracts made prior to the date of approval of the act for delivery of a commodity after such date the tax should, subject to certain exceptions, be paid by the vendee instead of the vendor. The Senate amendment applies a similar rule with respect to contracts made prior to the date the processing tax first takes effect with respect to the commodity, for delivery of the commodity after such date. The House recedes with an amendment which applies the rule in the Senate amendment as well when delivery takes place on the day of the effective date of the tax.

On amendment no. 78: The House bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the postponement of the payment of taxes for a period not exceeding 60 days. The Senate amendment extends this period to 90 days. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 81 and 82: The House bill made processors subject to taxes eligible for loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in cases where the immediate payment of the taxes from the processor's own funds would impose an undue financial burden. The Senate amendment extends this privilege to distributors as well as processors of commodities subject to tax. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 83: This amendment contains the so-called "cost-of-production plan." The committee of conference have come to no agreement on this amendment.

On amendment no. 84: This amendment (secs. 21 to 42, inclusive) contains the provisions relating to agricultural credits. It is similar in many respects to H.R. 4795, which passed the House on April 13.

Section 21 authorizes the Federal land banks to issue not exceeding $2,000,000,000 of farm-loan bonds, at a rate of interest of not more than 4 percent, which shall be guaranteed as to interest by the United States. The authority to issue such guaranteed bonds is to cease whenever in the judgment of the Farm Loan Commissioner farm-loan bonds of the Federal land banks not so guaranteed are readily salable in the open market at a yield not in excess of 4 percent and in any event at the expiration of 2 years.

These bonds may be used in three ways: First, to exchange for or purchase outstanding farm mortgages on the best terms possible; second, to make new loans on farm mortgages; third, after the expiration of 1 year, if the bonds are not required for the first two purposes in the judgment of the Farm Loan Commissioner, to refinance at lower interest any outstanding issues of Federal farm-loan bonds.

Any Federal land-bank borrower who obtains a loan hereafter may, after 5 years after the loan is made, tender interest-guaranteed bonds to the bank, which shall accept them at par in payment of the unpaid principal of the loan.

The conference agreement retains this section of the Senate amendment.

Section 22 authorizes the Federal land banks to buy or to exchange bonds for outstanding farm mortgages. The savings thus effected must be passed on to the farmer borrower. This is accomplished by issuing to him a new mortgage under the Farm Loan Act and by his subscribing for stock and otherwise complying with that act as in the case of other borrowers who secure land-bank loans. The price paid by a Federal land bank for any mortgage must not exceed the amount of unpaid principal of the mortgage, or 50 percent of the value of the land mortgaged plus 20 percent of the value of the permanent insured improvements, whichever is the smaller.

The conference agreement retains this section of the Senate amendment but provides that the purchase price of any such mortgage should not exceed 50 percent of the "normal" value of the land mortgaged.

Section 23 authorizes the Federal land banks for 5 years to grant extensions to farm borrowers who, after investigation, are shown to be deserving. In order to enable the Federal land banks to grant such extensions and to defer payment of principal as authorized under section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed, upon request of the Federal land bank and with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner, to subscribe to the paid-in surplus of the Federal land bank an amount equal to the amount of the extensions and deferments. Fifty million dollars is authorized to be appropriated for the purpose. Repayment of these subscriptions may be made at any time by the bank with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner and must be made when he believes the bank has resources available for the purpose.

The conference agreement retains this section of the Senate amendment.

Section 24 reduces for a period of 5 years the interest rate on all outstanding and new loans made through national farm-loan associations or agents, or purchased from joint-stock land banks, by the Federal land banks, to 4½ percent per annum, and suspends the payment of principal during the same period in cases where the borrowers are not in default. The rate on loans made through branches is not to exceed 5 percent. In order to compensate the Federal land banks for the loss of interest incurred by reason of the reduction in interest the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay to each Federal land bank the amount of such loss less any savings effected through the refinancing of Federal farm-loan bonds. Fifteen million dollars is authorized to be appropriated for this purpose for the fiscal year 1934 and such additional amounts during subsequent fiscal years as may be necessary.

The conference agreement retains this section of the Senate amendment.

Section 25 raises the maximum limit of Federal land bank mortgage loans from $25,000 to $50,000, but in each case where a loan is in excess of $25,000 it must be approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner. The conference agreement retains this provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 26 authorizes the Federal land banks to make direct loans on first mortgages to farmers in localities where national farm-loan associations have not been organized or in localities where, although such associations have been organized, the farmers are unable to apply for loans because of the inability of the land banks to accept applications from the associations. The borrower is required to covenant to join a farm-loan association when formed in his locality. The charges made by the banks to applicants for such direct loans are not to exceed the charges made to borrowers through national farm-loan associations.

The conference agreement provides for interest on such direct loans at a rate one half of 1 percent higher than the rate on loans made through national farm-loan associations, but the rate is to be reduced when the borrowers join an association. Joining such an association is also made permissive rather than mandatory as under the Senate amendment.

Section 27 authorizes receivers appointed under section 29 of the Federal Farm Loan Act to borrow, with the approval of the Farm Loan Commissioner, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the security of receivers' certificates for the purposes of paying taxes on real estate owned by the bank or securing its mortgages. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Section 28 authorizes the Federal Reserve banks to make advances on promissory notes for a period not exceeding 15 days if such advances are secured by the deposit or pledge of interest-guaranteed bonds authorized to be issued under section 21 of this amendment. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Section 29 prohibits joint-stock land banks from issuing tax-exempt bonds and from making any farm loans except such as are incidental to the refinancing of existing loans or bond issues or to the liquidation of their real-estate holdings. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Section 30 directs the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make $100,000,000 available to the Farm Loan Commissioner to be used for 2 years in making loans to joint-stock land banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, upon the security of first or purchase-money mortgages on farm property, or such other collateral as may be available to the banks. The maximum amount which may be loaned to any such bank is to be determined on the basis of the unpaid principal of its mortgages as compared with the total amount of the unpaid principal of the mortgages held by all such banks on the date of enactment of the act. Loans must not exceed 60 percent of the value of the real estate securing the collateral deposited with the Commissioner, as determined upon an appraisal made by appraisers appointed under the Federal Farm Loan Act. Loans are to be made to aid orderly liquidation in accordance with a plan submitted by the borrowing bank and approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner. The Commissioner, before he approves the plan, must be satisfied that it carries out the purposes of the section and that money borrowed which is to be devoted to settlements with bondholders will be used only in effecting an equitable settlement with all bondholders.

No loan to a joint-stock land bank may be made under such section 30 until it agrees—

1. To reduce the interest rate to all its first-mortgage borrowers to 5 percent per annum.
2. Not to proceed against the mortgagor for 2 years from the date of the enactment of the act on account of default in interest or principle, nor to foreclose its mortgage during the same period except for abandonment of the mortgaged property or unless, in the opinion of the Farm Loan Commissioner, such foreclosure is necessary for other reasons.
3. That the bank will pay in purchasing its outstanding farm-loan bonds out of the proceeds of the loan an amount not exceeding 100 percent of the amount which the holders may have paid for their bonds prior to April 17, 1933, plus interest on that amount at 5 percent from the date of purchase by the holders less any interest received by them, but in no case more than the face value of the bonds plus accrued and unpaid interest, and that whenever any such bonds are purchased by the bank at a price less than the face value plus accrued and unpaid interest the difference between the face value and interest and the amount paid by the bank for the bonds shall be credited pro rata to the bank's borrowers in reduction of their loans, but that no such credit shall be made until the profits on the bonds so purchased by the bank are sufficient to replace the amount by which its capital has been impaired.

The conference agreement eliminates the provisions of clause 3 above and provides that loans shall not exceed 60 percent of the "normal" value of the real estate securing the collateral deposited with the Commissioner.

Section 31 provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make available to the Farm Loan Commissioner $25,000,000 to enable him to make loans to joint-stock land banks. Such loans are to be in addition to the loans authorized in section 29 of the amendment and in addition to loans made to such bank under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. Such loans are to be made at a rate of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum for the purpose of securing the postponement for 2 years of the foreclosure of first mortgages held by such banks on account of default in payment of interest and principal and delinquent taxes. During the period of postponement the bank is to charge the mortgagor interest at a rate not to exceed 4 percent per annum on the aggregate amount of such delinquent taxes and defaulted interest and principal.

The amount so loaned to any bank is to be made without reappraisal, but the amount loaned with respect to any mortgage on account of unpaid principal is not to exceed 5 percent of the total unpaid principal of the mortgage, and the maximum which may be loaned with respect to any mortgage shall not exceed 25 percent of the total unpaid principal.

No such loan is to be made unless the Farm Loan Commissioner is satisfied that, after exercising ordinary diligence, the mortgagor is in default and unless the bank agrees to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that during the 2-year period the bank will not foreclose its mortgage unless the mortgaged property is abandoned or such foreclosure is necessary, in the opinion of the Commissioner, for other reasons. Each such loan is to be secured by an assignment to the Commissioner of the lien of the taxes and/or the bank's mortgage, but the amount of the lien so assigned representing the unpaid principal and interest is to be subordinated to the existing lien of the bank for the balance of the indebtedness due under the terms of the bank's mortgage. The Commissioner may also require the bank to furnish additional collateral as security for any such loan if such collateral is available.

The conference agreement provides that such loans are to be made out of the funds made available to the Commissioner under section 30 of the Senate amendment, but the maximum limit of $25,000,000 is retained.

Section 32 authorizes and directs the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make $200,000,000 available to the Farm Loan Commissioner to be used in making direct loans to farmers upon first or second mortgage. The maximum loan to any one farmer is to be $5,000, and the amount of the mortgage given as security plus all prior mortgages on the same farm property must not exceed 75 percent of the value of such property. The interest is not to exceed 5 percent per annum. The principal is made repayable in 10 installments, beginning during the fourth year after the loan is made. The proceeds of these loans are to be used:

1. To enable the farmer to refinance on better terms any secured or unsecured indebtedness.
2. To provide the farmer with working capital.
3. To enable the farmer to redeem or repurchase farm property lost by him through foreclosure between July 1, 1931, and the date of enactment of the act or hereafter.

No loan is to be made under this section unless the holder of any prior lien "arranges to the satisfaction of the Farm Loan Commissioner to limit his right to proceed against the farmer and such farm property for default in payment of principal."

The conference agreement provides that in the case of a first or second mortgage secured wholly by real estate and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage the loan may be repaid within an agreed period no greater than that for which loans may be made under the Federal Farm Loan Act. It is also provided that the "normal" value of the property is to be used in determining the maximum amount of the mortgage given as security for a loan and that the 3-year extension for the payment of principal is to apply only where the borrower is not in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage.

Section 33 authorizes the Farm Loan Commissioner to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary; and to appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, etc., as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the amendment, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, but with the limitation that no salary or compensation in excess of $8,500 per annum shall be paid to any such person.

The conference agreement fixes the maximum salary limit at $10,000, since such salaries will be subject to the reductions under existing economy laws. This corresponds to the action under amendment numbered 27.

Section 34 provides for making the facilities of the Federal land banks and the national farm-loan associations available to the Farm Loan Commissioner to aid in administering the provisions of the amendment. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provisions.

Section 35 imposes a penalty of $1,000 fine or 6 months' imprisonment, or both, for fraud in securing a loan under section 32 of the amendment. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provisions.

Section 36 authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans in an aggregate amount not exceeding $50,000,000 to drainage, levee, levee and drainage, irrigation, and similar districts, to private corporations organized for similar purposes, and to political subdivisions of States which, prior to the date of enactment of the act, have projects substantially advanced toward completion which are devoted chiefly to the improvement of land for agricultural purposes (including, in the case of irrigation systems, dams, reservoirs, and electric-power projects used in connection with such systems). Such loans are to be made for the purpose of enabling such districts or political subdivisions to reduce and refinance their outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with such projects, and, in the case of irrigation districts operating under contract with the United States, to aid in the payment of their operation and maintenance charges and to provide funds for installation of necessary works. The loans are to be made under the same terms and conditions as loans made under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, except that they may be made for a period not exceeding 40 years and are to be secured by refunding bonds issued to the Corporation which are secured by real property within the project, or assessments thereon, or such other collateral as may be acceptable to the Corporation. Other provisions are included requiring the borrowers from the Corporation to reduce the indebtedness to them of landowners within their projects by an amount corresponding to the reduction of the borrowers' own indebtedness by reason of the refinancing made possible under the section.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is also authorized to accept from such districts the pledge of their outstanding evidences of indebtedness as security for loans bearing interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum.

Upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized to make available not to exceed $5,000,000 to the Federal reclamation fund for the completion of projects under reclamation or approved and authorized. The funds so advanced are to be repaid within 5 years with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum, out of receipts accruing to the reclamation fund.

The conference agreement eliminates the provisions relating to loans to private corporations and to irrigation districts operating under contracts with the United States to aid in the payment of their operating and maintenance charges and the installation of necessary works. The provisions relating to the inclusion of dams, reservoirs, and electric power projects in the case of irrigation systems are also eliminated and the projects of borrowers which are eligible for loans are limited to those projects which have been completed prior to the date of enactment of the act.

The provision authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to accept from such districts the pledge of their outstanding evidences of indebtedness as security for loans is also omitted under the conference agreement and the provision relating to loans to the Federal reclamation fund is made a new section.

Section 37 increases the borrowing power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by $325,000,000.

The conference agreement reduces this amount to $300,000,000, since the additional $25,000,000 is to be taken from the funds provided for in section 30 of the Senate amendment under the conference agreement.

Section 38 provides that when any Executive order heretofore transmitted to Congress under the recent reorganization law becomes effective, the functions and powers vested in the Farm Loan Commissioner by this amendment shall be exercised by him subject to the terms of that order. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Section 39 authorizes the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, in carrying out the powers and duties vested in him or the Farm Credit Administration under Executive orders made under the recent departmental reorganization law, to establish and fix the duties of such organizations within the Administration as are necessary. The section also prohibits the payment of compensation to persons employed under the section at a rate in excess of $8,500 per annum.

The conference agreement retains this section of the Senate amendment, but fixes the maximum salary limit at $10,000 for the same reason that the change was made in section 33. See also amendment no. 27.

Section 40 authorizes the President to establish a national board of conciliation charged with the administration of the section and authorizes the appointment of State boards of conciliation in each State. The State board in turn is to appoint or designate local boards. The State and local boards are given the duty of bringing about between farm mortgagors and mortgagees and other parties interested in farm mortgage indebtedness adjustments in farm indebtedness by reduction of principal and interest, by increasing the time of the loans, by providing for amortization payments, and by agreements under which payments can be made in farm products and their proceeds at prices more nearly equal the price thereof when the mortgage was executed. The conference agreement omits this section of the Senate amendment.

Section 41: This section provides that the Federal land banks and all Government agencies making loans to owners of groves and orchards shall give a reasonable and fair value to growing fruit trees constituting a substantial part of the value of the property. The conference agreement makes this provision permissive rather than mandatory.

Section 42 contains the short title of this amendment which forms title II of the bill. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

The Senate amended the title of the bill to conform to new matter inserted by the Senate amendments. The House recedes.

MARVIN JONES,
JOHN D. CLARKE,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
WALL DOXEY,
H. P. FULMER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the conference report that the conferees have exceeded their authority in several instances. I call attention to page 10 of the bill, under Senate amendment 14, which reads:

Under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior requiring adequate facilities for the storage of grain on the farm, inspection—

And so forth.

That is the amendment as it passed the Senate, and the conferees recommend in their report the following language:

Under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture requiring adequate facilities for the storage of any nonperishable agricultural commodity on the farm.

I respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the great difference between grain on the farm and any nonperishable agricultural commodity.

Likewise, on the same page, in Senate amendment 17, the Senate amendment reads:

The making of any such legal agreement shall not be held to be a violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States—

While in the conference report it reads:

The making of any such agreement shall not be held to be in violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States.

In other words, the conferees have brought another amendment into their report upon which neither the House nor the Senate have passed.

I would respectfully call the Chair's attention to the precedents. Speaker Cannon once held:

It is for the House and the Senate to determine upon the wisdom of it, and, as the House and the Senate never have considered that proposition, the Chair is of opinion that the conferees exceeded their power, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Similarly, as shown in Hinds' Precedents, volume V, section 6417, Speaker Cannon again followed this ruling. When Speaker Crisp was in the chair the question arose of the germaneness of an amendment brought in by conferees. The question was whether the amendment was germane either to the original bill in the House or to the Senate amendment. He held the same way, as shown by Hinds' Precedents, volume V, section 6408. Just because items are related is no test of their germaneness.

I call attention again, therefore, to the phrase "storage of grain on the farm", which was passed upon by the Senate, but as reported by the conferees the phrase reads, "any nonperishable agricultural commodity", all-embracing as compared to the simple word "grain."

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I do not understand the gentleman to contend that by striking out the word "legal", as suggested in the seventeenth amendment, the conferees have exceeded their authority.

Mr. GOSS. Yes. This is another matter. Yes; I may say to the gentleman, the conferees exceeded their authority there.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. How?

Mr. GOSS. Because neither House had passed upon the phraseology of this amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. How have they exceeded their authority?

Mr. GOSS. Because they have changed the language of the Senate amendment. May I also call attention to the fact that there may be a vast difference between a legal agreement and simply an agreement? An agreement may be a gentleman's agreement. The conferees have taken out the word "legal."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Might there not be an agreement that is in complete conflict with the bill?

Mr. GOSS. There might be; absolutely.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Then it is not an agreement.

Mr. GOSS. I call attention to the fact that certain language that has been agreed upon by either the House or the Senate has been so changed by the conferees as to give it an entirely different meaning.

Mr. DOWELL. As long as it does not change the meaning it would not be subject to the point of order.

Mr. GOSS. I would say the meaning had been changed very materially when you strike out the word "legal" and leave only the word "agreement" in the bill, because there are many kinds of agreements that might not be legal.

Especially do I wish to insist upon my first point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's first point of order is that we strike out the word "grain" and make it thus applicable to any agricultural commodities in the matter of the payment of benefits.

This same thing could be done under the general terms of the House bill. I call attention to page 9, subdivision 1 of section 8:

(1) To provide for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market, or both, of any basic agricultural commodity, through agreements with producers or by other voluntary methods, and to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection therewith—

And so forth. Then later it says:

In such amounts as the Secretary deems proper and reasonable.

This would cover the same feature. This is still another method of expressing the same sort of privilege that is granted.

The Senate amendment provides for rules and regulations. Rules and regulations, generally speaking, are authorized throughout the bill. This, clearly, is but another method of expressing the same thing that is provided for in other features of the House bill. Further, the Senate amendment provides that it shall apply to the different types of grain involved in the bill, and this simply makes it applicable to all commodities as provided in section 8 of the House bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think the language "any nonperishable agricultural commodity" is the same as the word "grain"?

Mr. JONES. Any nonperishable commodity is included in the House bill. The theory of section 8 is also included in some of the other sections of the House bill. So the amendment is simply another way of applying the same provisions provided in the general terms of the bill. Therefore I do not think there is any question that this change of the Senate amendment covers matters already in the bill.

As to the other portion of the gentleman's point of order, he complains of the conferees striking out the word "legal." I call special attention to the fact that under the terms of the House bill any agreement could be made and it would not be subject to these laws. Under the terms of the House bill, there was not any exception at all. Agreements of any character could be made; and this, being a later act, would supersede all existing law. The Senate by inserting the word "legal" limited the agreements. By striking out the word "legal" we simply restore, practically, the provisions of the House bill. Really, striking out "legal" merely removes any contradiction in the language of the Senate amendment itself, because, as the Speaker will notice, the language is "the making of any such legal agreement shall not be held to be a violation of antitrust laws of the United States." The word "legal" is surplusage and would be contradictory as used here. Of course, if it is an agreement that is authorized, it would be a legal agreement; the term "legal" is tautological and pure surplusage.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think there is any difference between a legal agreement and simply an agreement?

Mr. JONES. If an agreement is authorized by law, it becomes a legal agreement.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair inquire whether cotton would be included among the nonperishable commodities?

Mr. JONES. Cotton would be a nonperishable commodity. The SPEAKER. Did the Senate amendment take in cotton?

Mr. JONES. No. But the House bill takes in cotton, and that is what I am calling to the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. We are now discussing the Senate amendment.

Mr. JONES. The Senate amendment, as such, does not take in cotton. However, cotton is covered in the bill as it passed the House, and the Senate amendment simply takes in grain in another method of treatment or another way of accomplishing the same purpose.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair inquire what is the purpose of putting in the word "nonperishable" rather than confining it to grain?

Mr. JONES. The word "nonperishable" was put in so that the storage facilities on the farm might be used in carrying out the general terms of the bill on any nonperishable commodities as well as on wheat. The other features of the bill provide for methods of payment of benefits. The effect of the Senate amendment was to make specific the language that was couched in general terms in carrying out the other provisions of the bill. The naming of the one makes it advisable to name the others.

The Senate amendment adds no power at all. They had the same power under the terms of section 8, and this is simply a specific method of carrying it out. They thought they could avoid the expense and make it simpler by keeping grains on the farm, and then it was thought if they were going to do that, the same privilege might be extended to all nonperishable commodities contained in the bill; but even without this amendment the same purposes are included in the general terms of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In section 8, where is there provision for storage?

Mr. JONES. It provides for reduction in acreage and it provides for rental or benefit payments in connection with the reduction of acreage or production for market, or both.

Mr. SNELL. But there is not a single thing there relative to storage.

Mr. JONES. And that is followed by rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes, which would necessarily include storage.

Mr. SNELL. And the reason the Senate amendment was put in the bill was because there was no arrangement made for storage and the Senate amendment takes in only the storage of grain.

Mr. JONES. The only reason for putting in the Senate amendment was that they might make advance payments in these rental benefits without the necessity of these commodities being carried over and storage being paid. It is not for the purpose of having storage as such. Storage is merely an incident. The purpose is to have a method by which they can make advance payments on these commodities without carrying them over into final warehousing, and so forth, which would be expensive. If this amendment were not included, the same powers could be used.

Mr. SNELL. I may admit that your purpose is all right, but there is nothing in your original bill that speaks about the storage of grain on the farm, and that is the reason the Senate amendment was put in, and now you have gone beyond that.

Mr. JONES. There is nothing specifically said about storing on the farms, and yet—

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman said that section 8 provided for it.

Mr. JONES. And yet provision is made for the payment of rental and other benefits, and general powers are given for carrying out these purposes.

Mr. SNELL. But that is not storage of grain on the farm.

Mr. JONES. And provision is made for general authority to make rules and regulations in carrying out these purposes. I think this is a detail that would probably be provided without the Senate amendment by reason of the fact that provision is made for paying rental benefits and other benefits. It seems to me they would have the authority without this language, but as you have specified one of them, under the general terms of the bill, you might exclude the others by not mentioning them. I believe if the amendment were not there, under the general terms of the bill providing for the making of rental and benefit payments and the making and promulgating of regulations for the purpose of carrying them out, the Secretary of Agriculture could provide for storage on the farms, but the Chair is familiar with the old, old rule that if you have a general provision and then you specify certain things, by that very specification, by implication, you exclude those which are not included in the specification. So the insertion of this amendment makes it necessary, for the orderly carrying out of the general terms of the bill, that the other nonperishable commodities be included. If the amendment had not been included at all, I believe the same purpose would be accomplished under the general terms of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. It is very evident the Senate did not have in mind the same interpretation of the bill that the gentleman has or they would not have put in this amendment.

Mr. JONES. They evidently wanted to make certain in their own minds or—

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly correct—they want to make it certain.

Mr. JONES. Or at least some Senator did and it was probably acted upon on the spur of the moment. I think the argument was made in opposition to it that it was not necessary and then they said, "If it will not hurt anything, why not put it in?" They apparently did not consider the fact that putting it in the bill probably operated to exclude the others. If it had been left out altogether, it would have been all right.

Mr. SNELL. But as long as it is in the bill, the conferees must confine their efforts to what is in the bill, and for that reason I am thoroughly convinced it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JONES. I assert that it is in the general terms of the bill and that the same authority granted in this amendment is granted in the general terms of the bill, and that therefore the conferees did not go beyond the range of their jurisdiction.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. GOSS. I notice on page 9, subsections 1 of section 8, the following language:

To provide for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market, or both, on any basic agricultural commodity through agreements with producers or by other voluntary methods—

And so forth.

The word "basic" is specifically used and the Senate amendment 14 made a basic item when it referred to grain on the farm. The conference committee comes in and says that any nonperishable article or commodity, whether it be basic or not.

Mr. JONES. It has to be a nonperishable agricultural commodity. Agricultural commodities are defined in the bill. It must be a nonperishable basic commodity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. Senate amendment 17 has reference to making legal agreements. The conference committee leaves out the word "legal" and inserts that agreements shall be deemed to be lawful. The Chair does not see any difference, and the Chair overrules the second point of order.

A more serious question arises as to the point of order made against the conference agreement on Senate amendment 14. It seems to the Chair that the striking out of the word "grain" and the substitution thereof of the words "nonperishable agricultural commodities" by the conferees broadens the scope of the Senate amendment. The Chair thinks that the conferees did not confine themselves to the matter in disagreement but attempted to incorporate new matter into Senate amendment 14. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order against the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 48. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.;

H.R. 1596. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C.;

H.R. 4127. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Waccamaw River near Conway, S.C.; and

H.R. 4491. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of an overhead viaduct across the Mahoning River at Struthers, Mahoning County, Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4606) entitled "An act to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes."

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 128, a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 5389, a bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber], the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. No amendments shall be in order to sections 4 to 17, inclusive, except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations; and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time is desired on that side on the rule?

Mr. RANSLEY. The usual time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule making in order the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill which is now before us by reason of the fact that it was vetoed by President Hoover during the last session of Congress.

The rule waives all points of order against the bill, grants 6 hours' general debate, provides for the reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule, with the usual amendments to those sections of the bill making appropriations, except that the rule provides that no amendment shall be in order to sections 4 to 17, inclusive, except amendments offered by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Appropriations Committee advised the Rules Committee that these sections 4 to 17 contained important matters of legislation covering the granting of authority to the President to cancel contracts under certain conditions, to order furloughs, to reduce "flying pay", and to carry out other economies. That committee stated it desired that no amendment be permissible to those sections except those amendments which might be offered by the committee.

The Rules Committee was informed that the measures had the endorsement of the administration and were desired by the administration. For that reason the Rules Committee brought in this rule, which is a closed rule so far as those sections of the bill are concerned.

I want to say in behalf of the Rules Committee—and I think I express the sentiments of most of the Members—that it is not a pleasure to bring into the House rules which may appear to some Members to be too drastic. We only do it at the instance of the legislative committee. I assure you it is our desire to bring in as liberal rules as will meet the situation.

When this particular situation was presented to us, as it has been in other instances, we had only our duty to perform and follow out the wishes of the leadership of the House, and, so far as we could, the wishes of the administration.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I am very glad that the gentleman stated that this is more drastic than the usual rule along this line.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not say that exactly. I admit that the rule is drastic.

Mr. SNELL. It is more so than usual. The gentleman says that this is at the request of the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SNELL. Did he take into consideration the 8 or 10 other committees of the House whose prerogatives are taken away from them by the bringing in of this rule?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not follow the gentleman's question.

Mr. SNELL. The legislation that is made in order on this appropriation bill, if it had come through the regular committees of the House, would probably come from 6 or 8 different committees.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I imagine so, but I am not familiar enough with the details to state just how many committees would be involved.

Mr. SNELL. Did the gentleman take into consideration the rights of those committees in granting the rule to give this committee the right of legislation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I might say to the gentleman that we did not specifically take into consideration the rights of those committees, because their rights were not brought to our attention. There was, for instance, no protest from the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs as to any of these sections dealing with legislation that might come within the jurisdiction of those committees, so far as I recall.

Mr. SNELL. Were they informed in regard to the matter?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I imagine that they have had knowledge during all this session of what was going to happen in this particular bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When these legislative propositions came to me I wrote a letter to each committee from which it would come, setting forth the legislation in detail and advised them fully of the facts. I told them that we would be very glad to confer with them or hear from them or anything else that they wanted.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York remembers very well when we set up the present Committee on Appropriations, taking the appropriating powers away from the other standing committees of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know the history of it, but I was only a little bit of a tot at that time.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I was grown up, and was a Member of the House at that time, and I know the conditions. It was definitely understood that the Committee on Appropriations was only going to make appropriations; that it was not going to absorb all of the rights of the legislative committees. Of course, occasionally we have brought in rules making in order matters of legislation when something was necessary at the time; but never in the history of this House, so far as I know, have we deliberately made 14 sections of a bill in order, all containing legislation and having to do with the rights of some 6 or 8 independent committees of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman overlooks the fact that while they be legislation, yet they do involve the appropriation of money and the expenditure of money by the Government.

Mr. SNELL. I would expect that to be true to a certain extent, but it violates every principle and precedent of the House in all these years.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am not so sure of that. I believe you will find precedents.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman in his remarks a moment ago indicated that the request for this rule came from the legislative committee. Of course, he meant by that the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. In that connection the gentleman has stated that 14 sections of the bill embody legislation desired by the administration, which means the White House. I agree with the gentlemen on that side of the aisle that if the White House desires certain legislation and desires that that legislation be not changed one iota in 14 sections of this bill, it is perfectly proper for that side to bring in a gag rule, because that is the only way they have passed legislation up to the present moment. They are but following in their usual footsteps. I think the gentleman's attitude is entirely in keeping with all previous procedure of the present Congress. This is just another gag rule. The Members of Congress are not permitted to think for themselves. The administration does the thinking for Congress, and then sends legislation up here and requests the Congress to pass it, and gentlemen on the Democratic side swallow it, hook, bait, and sinker, and pass the legislation without change in the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t", simply because that is the way the administration wants it. It is perfectly natural that great metropolitan newspapers are referring to the present Congress as a "rubber-stamp" one.

Mr. BYRNS. I wonder if the gentleman ever did anything of that kind himself?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not yet. I may 2 years from now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this rule was represented to us as being necessary. I hope it is the last one that we will be compelled to bring in unless most extraordinary circumstances call for it. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule because it prevents amendment to sections 4 to 17, inclusive. This is a tight and fast rule, similar to those that we have been having for the last two or more months.

I am opposed to the bill because it legalizes the breaking of contracts. In that respect I call attention to page 15 of the report, where, in a concise and argumentative manner, that part of the bill is opposed by the minority views and signed by 12 members of the Committee on Appropriations.

I am opposed to the bill because in section 10 we find it is impossible to amend or strike this section from the bill. That section provides:

That the President is authorized to place on furlough such officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps as he deems desirable.

In the furloughing of officers no one knows how many are to be furloughed. We do not know whether it is to be 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, or 4,000 officers.

In that connection permit me to state that a high officer of the United States Army appeared before the Military Affairs Committee some 10 days ago and, when questioned along these lines, stated that he had not been consulted; he knew nothing about it, but if a severe cut like one of 2,000 or more officers was made by furlough, it would be utterly impossible for the Army to function under the National Defense Act.

I am opposed to the rule because it will be impossible to change in any way section 11 of the bill, where the President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend the extra pay allowed the officers and men of the Army and Navy while on flying duty. The same officer, when questioned with reference to the cut in the pay of the Flying Corps, stated that it would undoubtedly affect the morale not only of the officers but of the men as well.

I am opposed to the rule and will not only vote against the rule but will vote against the bill, because I find under the heading "Veterans' Administration" there is to be a cut of over $34,000,000. This cut is made possible by closing what is known as the "regional offices." These offices were originally established so as to save not only the time but the money of the defenders of our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have given I will not only vote against the rule but will vote against the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. I only have one further speaker on this side. Will the gentleman use some more of his time?

Mr. RANSLEY. I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic leadership of this House is steadily and progressively becoming more reactionary every time we consider legislation. The only ray of light that those of us who have been seeking liberal consideration of legislation have had was the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] when he said he hoped this would be the last gag rule that would be reported to the House.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman expect that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] will be allowed to have his own way along that line?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, I cannot say as to that; but I would say the gentleman is a very valuable member of the committee, and his views ought to be considered. [Laughter and applause.]

We have been so accustomed to gag rules I do not know whether we would be able to legislate if they were removed. Certainly they are always in evidence when we consider legislation.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said this rule only applies to sections 4 to 17, but I want to call attention to the fact that these sections are the controversial part of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] has explained some of the controversial features of this bill, and you will observe no Member of the House will be able to register an opinion upon those sections. Only through opposition to the rule can you express your convictions.

The demand for gagging the House has carried us to unusual efforts.

Last week the able Member from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], a Democrat and a distinguished parliamentarian, pointed out when we removed the divisibility rule we changed a rule that Thomas Jefferson first brought into effect in the Continental Congress; we changed a rule that was good enough for every Congress from Muhlenberg down through John Garner; but it is not good enough or tight enough for this House. We insisted in eliminating the old Jeffersonian landmark.

Now, today we have gone even further as a reactionary House in the consideration of legislation because we have wiped out the prerogatives and are destroying the committees of this House. Twelve years ago when the House decided to establish the Appropriations Committee, in the interest of economy, it was specifically understood that the committee would not infringe upon the jurisdiction of the several committees of the House; yet here many committees are being waived aside. It is in effect being maintained that one committee is best able to determine what shall be the decision upon these items which are coming before us. This withstanding the fact that many of the members of the other committees have made a life study of the subject.

I want to read a statement from a distinguished Democrat—from a Democrat who today holds a high place in the Democratic councils. Vice President Garner took part in the debate at the time of the establishment of the Committee on Appropriations, and this is what Mr. Garner said on May 27, 1921:

I said then, and I repeat now, that if the committee will do its duty it can be of great service to the country in the matter of economy. But if it undertakes to usurp the power of the other committees its life will be limited and its services at an end. You cannot let one committee of 35 members absorb the powers of the entire Congress. There will be a revolt sometime, led by somebody, that will bring about a different system. And I hope in the future the Appropriations Committee will keep within the rules of the House of Representatives and thereby continue its life. [Applause.]

These words were uttered by Mr. Garner and we should hesitate today and ponder over them. How prophetic they appear and what irony of fate that his own party is working to bring about the situation he feared.

At the last session of Congress we almost destroyed our national defense by putting into the hands of the Appropriations Committee power with reference to legislative matters that should have been handled by the Military Affairs Committee. Today we go further and in many directions. Unless we soon stop we will regret our new policy.

I am not making an appeal in a partisan sense. I am asking the House to consider this, not as a Republican but as a Member of this House who wants fair and full consideration of all the subjects that come before us. In this spirit I ask the House to vote down this rule. Let us consider the whole bill in an orderly way and open to amendments. If we do so, I believe we will get a good bill; one that will most fairly reflect the views of the House; and, above all, we will protect the integrity of the House.

The issue before us is a simple one. In voting you are asked to express your views in one of two ways. Either you are going to protect the rights of the Members of the House, you are going to protect the powers of the several committees, or you are going to vote to destroy the committees. If you vote for this gag rule, it will be an expression of the belief we should have an oligarchy in this House—that a few men should rule. This is the simple question before us, and I leave it for you thinking Members of Congress to decide in the interest of justice and in the interest of orderly procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, while I am not very friendly toward gag rules, I have been forced to endure them over a period of 12 years under Republican leadership; and by reason of being subject to such discipline, I find myself now in the position where I can at least tolerate them even though they do come from the Democratic side of the House. [Applause.]

The minority report on this bill lays particular stress on Federal contracts. If it evidenced little more interest in the welfare of our Federal employees it would merit greater sympathy and consideration from me.

I want to explain very briefly what particular contracts may be included in the legislation contained in this bill. Star route, mail messenger, air mail, and ocean mail contracts as they apply to the Post Office Department, of course, will come within the purview of this measure.

Under the able direction of the present Postmaster General, Mr. Farley, and his able corps of assistants, star-route contracts and mail messenger contracts are being reduced, and the Government will save millions of dollars due to this enlightened policy. However, a different problem confronts them with respect to air mail and ocean mail contracts. While I am not a lawyer and cannot delve deeply into the legality of these contracts, I can say to you that at least a number of these contracts are rather shady; and I could say without exaggeration that the air mail situation is a bad mess as a result of the improper administration of the Watres Act by the last Postmaster General.

Authority should be given someone to exercise drastic control over this situation. We have been spending millions on our subsidies with a lavish hand, while attempting to balance the Budget by reducing the wages of our workers.

A few years ago we passed the Watres Act, in which we specified that a certain limited sum of money could be paid as a subsidy to passenger-carrying lines. I am ready to make the statement here and now that the Postmaster General disregarded that legislative mandate and increased the subsidies far beyond that limitation which was contained in the Watres Act.

What else did he do to make necessary legislation such as contained in this bill? Just before he left office he issued many new contracts. Perhaps they were legally right, but morally they were wrong and unjustifiable. I will cite a few of the instances for the information of the House.

Although the Department eliminated some of the air-mail mileage which was flown at that time, still, as a result of these new services given out during the closing hours of the last administration, drastic action is now necessary. If those contracts are continued at the rates specified, the Appropriations Committee will have to provide for the deficiency.

Now, what is the practical situation with regard to the Air Mail Service? The present administration has an air mail set-up authorized by the former Postmaster General that will cost the Government $20,000,000 a year. Inasmuch as Congress has provided only $15,000,000 for the Air Mail Service for the next fiscal year, something must be done. Contracts will have to be canceled, air-mail mileage will have to be reduced, branch lines will have to be eliminated, subsidy pay will have to be cut down. Any or all of these steps may have to be taken. No new extension should have been approved until Congress had decided upon the amount to be appropriated.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Some of these extensions were given out as late as March 2 last. In view of the impending deficit and the administration then in its closing hours this action was unwarranted. I remonstrated with the Postmaster General; I urged him to leave the situation for his successor. But he could not be stopped. The present administration is certainly in a most embarrassing situation; they require our support and cooperation. I do not believe a Cabinet officer ever went out of office before with so little regard for his successor or the condition of the service.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. No; I am sorry, I only have a minute or two.

So I repeat the air mail situation needs correction, and it will be corrected by the present administration. It is perhaps too early for the administration to have secured the proper background and the knowledge necessary to press for intelligent, sound legislation, but I can tell you they are giving this question their earnest and sincere thought, and at an early date they will recommend legislation to reduce this subsidy and to place the air mail on a sound and permanent basis.

Now, what is the situation with regard to ocean mail contracts? The Postmaster General just before he left office tried to put two new contracts into operation. They were called "route 57" and "route 58." He failed only because he did not have time to fully complete the deal. These two contracts ought to be investigated, and I simply want to explain to the House that these are just a few of the contracts that might be covered by this bill. They need some attention. [Applause.]

The Post Office Department's contracts do not always contain a cancellation clause unless after a specified term of years. I will insert with my remarks a portion of an ocean mail contract which explains the manner by which it may be terminated:

(a) That the term of this contract shall be 10 years beginning at a date optional with the contractor, but not later than 18 months from February 21, 1933.

(b) That this contract, upon agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, may be terminated 5 years from February 21, 1933, or at any time after the expiration of said 5 years.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have executed this contract as of the day and year opposite their names appearing.
Signed February 25, 1933.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, considering the statement that my friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] made when he presented this resolution to the House, when he practically apologized before the Rules Committee for bringing in any such rule, and said it was done by the direct order of the President himself or the administration, which means the President, I think I ought to call the attention of the House to a statement made by the distinguished President when he was a candidate, criticizing a Republican legislature in Albany for voting as a party on measures. Here is what the President said before election:

There are three ways of defeating proposed legislation. One is the method followed in the early days of our Republic, and which most truly conforms to the correct practice of a democracy.

This is consideration of each proposal in open session and serious debate, in an open-minded and nonpartisan spirit and with a sincere desire to weigh its merits. If it is found inadvisable or unwise, it is then slain, after a fair and open battle, and the reasons for such action are open for all the voters to examine and judge for themselves. This is the way in which all bills of real importance which have been shown any considerable approval and support by the voters of the State should be treated.

This is the way your own President says you should consider all important legislation, and notwithstanding this fact, and notwithstanding the fact that you have a majority of 200 in this House, you have not had the courage to bring one single important measure in here and consider it as your own President says it should be considered. Still you say you are following his orders. Was he right when he made this statement, or when he gave the orders my friend O'Connor refers to?

Now, just one further suggestion from your own President:

The second method is by the lash of the party whip, the demand on the legislators by their party leaders that they divide according to their political affiliations and leave to the master minds of their organizations the responsibility as to whether such action is justified or not.

He says you should not leave it to the master minds of the organization to make these decisions. As a matter of fact, the way you are going now you do not even leave it to the master minds of your own organization, but you leave it entirely up to the brain trust in the White House and you simply pass it under the lash of the party whip. [Applause.]

Further quoting the President:

In this procedure the bill, when brought up for discussion, is foredoomed to failure, and all debates thereon are of a purely perfunctory nature; nor can any argument or reasoning change the final vote. There is no possible justification for the adoption of this course on bills which are avowedly nonpartisan in character.

Notwithstanding your President's own statement, the gentleman from New York justifies his procedure here today by saying these are the direct orders from the White House. I leave the decision with you. Where is the independent part of the Democratic Party you have always bragged about so much? You are the most docile legislators I have ever seen. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute just to deny that I said we are proceeding under "orders of the White House" or "from the President." The word I used was the "administration."

The Rules Committee was advised that these 14 sections of the bill represented the legislative desires of the administration to accomplish its purpose of economy and efficiency. This was the whole intent of anything I may have said on the floor today. If, after what the country has gone through during the last 3 years, all we have done so far in this session to save the country is attributed to a "brain trust", let me say, please God, continue the brains! [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the legislative rider on this bill comprises nine important substantive provisions of legislation. Heretofore, when riders in the House were carried on an appropriation bill they were incidental to provisions relating to the subject matter for which the appropriation was being made. But these nine legislative provisions have nothing to do with the appropriations for the independent offices of the Government.

Not only is the rule and the procedure of our House grossly violated by putting in nine substantive provisions in the bill but those provisions are not subjects of deliberation. Further than that, they are not permitted to be read here. We are not allowed in the committee to read these nine provisions and deliberate upon them. And yet, we heard over the radio last night that Congress determines the policies and empowers the President to carry them into effect—when, as a matter of fact, Congress is not even allowed to know what the provisions are, much less determine them.

These provisions are fraught with the greatest importance. In section 4 we have a provision that any person who has been reallocated since June 1932 must go back to the pay he was receiving before such reallocation.

What does that carry with it? It has been held time and time again that such a provision was retroactive, and men in the employ of the Government since June 1932, to this date, will have to pay back into the Treasury the increase in salaries they have lawfully been receiving during this period.

We have in section 6 the right absolutely to cancel contracts—not to negotiate for their reformation, but absolutely to cancel them. Under that provision it is possible absolutely to destroy the merchant marine. Everybody knows that the ocean-mail pay has no relation to the mail-carrying service. It is frankly a subsidy and was so understood when it was enacted into law in 1928.

Contracts have been entered into by the steamship companies with shipyards to use the mail money for new construction, and commitments of millions of dollars out of the treasuries of the various ship companies have been made. When the mail contracts are canceled the obligation to carry on shipbuilding continues. In other words, you will bankrupt everyone who has a contract canceled.

There are provisions here with respect to personnel which are not well thought out, and which in some instances are unworkable and unnecessary hardships and injustice will ensue. I have not the time to go into the details.

Section 10 provides that our national defense so far as the Army is concerned may absolutely be crippled. There is no limitation on furloughs with half pay, but complete power is vested in the President. It is exactly like retiring on half pay.

LXXVII—192

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, of course, there is not time to discuss adequately this rule and the merits of the legislation in the time allotted, but I do want to call attention to the unfairness of this particular rule as applied to this bill. It is more indefensible, if anything, as applied to this bill and the situation which confronts the House today than the other gag rules which have been passed during this session of Congress. This is true because it proposes to make in order such important legislation on an appropriation bill, and if the rule is adopted the House will be obliged to pass the legislation or defeat the appropriations for the independent establishments of the Government. The rule proposes to make in order sections 4 to 17, inclusive, 14 sections of legislation in this appropriation bill in violation of the regular rules of the House. After the passage of the Budget law the rules of the House were amended concentrating all appropriations in the hands of the one Committee on Appropriations. At the same time it was contemplated that the Committee on Appropriations would confine itself to reporting bills making appropriations in accordance with existing law, and the power to report legislation such as is proposed in this bill was expressly taken away from the committee. Accordingly, rule XXI, subsection 2, was adopted, which provides in substance, among other things, that no provision in an appropriation bill changing existing law shall be in order unless it shows on its face that it will reduce expenditures. It was the purpose of that rule to have the regular standing legislative committees report the legislative bills, but here is a supply bill carrying an appropriation of $530,000,000 to keep the independent establishments of the Government in operation, and by this rule the House is asked to make in order sections 4 to 17, inclusive, which are new legislative proposals entirely and have nothing to do with appropriations. Each one of the 14 sections treats of important and distinct legislative matter. Amendments to them, except committee amendments, not only are not in order under the rule but it will not be in order to strike out any one of the sections or to get a vote on the motion to strike out if this rule is adopted.

How does that affect my constituents, for example? They have been trying for a long time to obtain an air mail contract for the carrying of mail from Grand Rapids to Milwaukee across Lake Michigan, thereby saving several hours. Air mail can be carried across Lake Michigan in something like an hour, but to go by train it must go from Grand Rapids to Chicago, and then to Milwaukee, which takes several hours, I do not know just how many, but enough so that the mail cannot go from one city to the other and be delivered on the same day as it can if it goes by air mail. According to the hearings before the committee, the Second Assistant Postmaster General testified that if this legislation passed he proposed to look into this contract with a view of abolishing it. I should like to have an opportunity to consider this proposition on its individual merits, and to get the expression of the House on a motion to strike out the section carrying this authorization, but under this rule there will be no opportunity to do that.

I am opposed to other provisions in the bill, especially those relating to the retirement of civil-service employees of the Government after 30 years' service, to the reduction or suspension of flying pay in the military service, to the retirement of officers and men in the Regular Army, to mention only a few. The House ought to have a chance to vote upon these separate propositions, but there will be no opportunity to do so under this rule. We must either refuse to vote for this supply bill entirely, or vote for all of this legislation. As for me, as long as we have until the 1st of July to pass the appropriations if need be, I shall vote against the entire bill rather than vote for the legislation which it contains. I think the House should vote down the entire bill, return it to the Committee on Appropriations, and let that committee report an appropriation bill not loaded down with legislation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMOVICH). The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order 14 or 15 separate legislative propositions which would normally come from at least seven committees, and I do not know but more, and the provisions are very drastic. The object of the rule is this: None of these propositions would stand alone. They are thrown together so that the majority in the House will feel hog-tied enough to vote for the whole thing. They think that you folks on the Democratic side are prepared to swallow the sucker, whole. I am not going to discuss the details of the legislative provisions at this time, but I say to you as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I hate to see such a string of legislation tied to an appropriation bill. It is vicious. I am afraid it is destructive of the real service and the real good that an appropriations committee can do.

I hope the rule will be voted down and that we can have these items of legislation, if they have to be considered, considered under the general rules of the House, so that they may stand or fall according to the merits of each one. If they had solid merit, it would not be necessary to hog-tie them together. If they were really in the interest of the people, we would not have to go at the matter in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, it is utterly impossible to discuss the merits or demerits of the legislation in this bill in 14 minutes. I shall only ask my colleagues on the Democratic side at least to take my word for it that every piece of legislation included within the scope of the rule has for its purpose efficiency in administration or economy in the saving of the taxpayers' money. Every piece of it is one link in the well-mapped-out program of the great President of the United States, to establish this Government on an economical basis. My friend from New York [Mr. TABER] says that we ought to let these things come on the floor of the House for open discussion. They claim that they did that. They had 12 long years to relieve this country, and they did nothing but plunge into financial despair; and now when we have a man who is trying to do something about it, we hear a howl from that side of the House.

I am going to pass over all of these amendments except one, and that is the one that the Republican members of the Committee on Appropriations filed minority views against. Twelve of them signed those minority views, because they say we ought not to vest in the President the right and power to modify or cancel transportation contracts, when it appears to him that the interests of the United States demand it and he could make a substantial saving by doing so. That is what the provision is. What contracts come within the purview of that provision? Principally domestic air mail and foreign air mail and merchant marine contracts. There are 46 merchant marine contracts on which we make a yearly expenditure of $29,700,000. There are 9 foreign air mail contracts on which we spend $7,000,000. There are 23 domestic air mail contracts on which we expend $20,000,000, making a total of approximately $57,000,000. How much of that is for subsidy and how much for service? Over $42,000,000 is essentially and purely a subsidy, money given, donated to encourage air navigation and steamboat lines.

The minority report says the authorities have a right to cancel or modify these contracts. I tell you there is no authority vested anywhere to cancel any of these contracts, except a foreign air mail contract. The merchant marine contracts are subject to cancellation only by mutual agreement. Foreign air mail contracts are subject to cancellation by Congress or by the Postmaster General, by giving 1 month's pay. For them, this legislation would not be needed. Domestic air mail contracts can be canceled only for willful neglect on the part of the contractor to perform his duty under that contract.

We made an appropriation of $19,460,000 for domestic air mail contracts for this year. It was apparent at the commencement of this fiscal year that, unless something was done, there would be a deficiency in that appropriation.

The law provides that if the head of any department permits a deficiency to occur in his department, he is subject to summary dismissal from office, $100 fine, or 30 days in jail. What are the facts? On December 19 the Republican Postmaster General ascertained there was a deficiency in this appropriation. He called in his contractors and he said, "We have to make reductions in the amount the Government pays you." He made the reductions, but he failed to realize the saving he expected on the conversion of routes 33 and 34 from a contract to a certificate basis. So that it left the air mail appropriation with a deficit, contrary to law. What did he do from the 19th of December to the end of his term to avoid that deficit and obey the law? Nothing to avoid the deficit. What did he do to increase it? On February 10 he established a new line, contrary to the plain provisions of two statutes enacted by Congress. One of them reads:

After July 1, 1931, the Postmaster General shall not enter into any contract for the transportation of air mail between points which have not theretofore had such service, unless the contract air mail appropriation proposed to be obligated therewith is sufficient to care for such contract and all other obligations against such appropriation without incurring a deficiency.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. For a question and nothing else.

Mr. TABER. Would not that provision of law make such a contract as the gentleman is referring to invalid, and not require any such thing as this legislation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is very doubtful. That provision of law makes the act of the Postmaster General in entering into all new air mail contracts since January 1, 1933, unlawful and criminal, and the provision in this bill vests in the President the authority and right to cancel or modify such contract; and all other contracts that would never become self-sustaining or that are unconscionable.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. After I have finished my statement I will yield if I have time.

On February 10, less than 25 days before his term expired, the Postmaster General entered into a contract to establish a new air mail route from Los Angeles to San Francisco, actually duplicating a route already in existence. What do you think of that? There was already a route in existence and in operation, and he establishes another between the same cities. Is there anything rotten there? Was he paying political debts or was somebody's pocket being lined with gold out of the Public Treasury? The time has come when the light of intelligent Democratic administration should be shed on all contracts made under circumstances like this.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. If I have time when I get through assembling these facts I will yield, but not unless I do.

Now, what else? The Postmaster General obligated the Government to pay $145,000 a year until 1936 for that contract, duplicating an existing one and increasing the deficit in that appropriation, in the face of the statute.

Is that all? On March 2, just 2 days before his term of office expired, he entered into another contract to establish another new route from Mandan, N.Dak., to Billings, Mont., for which he obligated the Government to pay $105,000 a year from the time it was entered into until 1936.

Oh, gentlemen, what was the necessity to establish these routes? There was no emergency; no great employment of labor by those contractors. The Postmaster General only had 2 days more in office. What powerful motive was working in his breast to make him violate all precedents heretofore established by those going out of office? To make him violate the express provisions of the law so plain a way-faring man, though fool he be, can understand; yet he enters into the contracts under those circumstances, 2 days before his term expires.

Is that all? Again, on March 2, he established another new route and enters into another contract, from Milwaukee, Wis., over Lake Michigan to Detroit, Mich., by Grand Rapids, and for that he obligated the Government in the sum of $145,000 a year from March 2, 1933, until March 2, 1936.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does the gentleman know that the route from Milwaukee to Detroit, the extension of which was granted on March 2, had been promised by the Post Office Department for 3 years and at the last minute they finally lived up to their promise and gave us the route?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If it was justified, why was it not established before? Three years having elapsed while they were considering it, why could they not have left its merits to be passed upon by the new administration which would be charged with the administration of the contract?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the gentleman to say that the contracts he has been talking about are, in his opinion, illegal?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Unlawfully entered into by the Postmaster General, and should be reviewed, modified, or canceled as facts justify.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the gentleman's contention that it is necessary for Congress to pass an act to empower the Government to cancel an illegal contract?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not necessary, but it is expeditious. It is businesslike, because the Executive can have the contracts looked into and modify or cancel them by Executive order; whereas if the matter is allowed to go through the courts it may drag along for years, until the term of the contracts expire.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is not the reason it is expeditious because if this provision of law is enacted the contractor can collect damages from the Government whereas he could not if the contract were voided under existing law?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, the gentleman is raising sand about this, yet at the very last session of Congress his side voted for congressional repudiation of one of these contracts, voted against including in the Post Office Department appropriation bill money to carry out the contract subjecting the Government to damages which he now seems to fear so much.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHANNON) there were—ayes 139, noes 70.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the rule.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 156, not voting 73, as follows:

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I was out of the Chamber telephoning the headquarters of the Red Cross. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I was in the corridor outside the door.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. LAMNECK. If permitted, I would vote "yea."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. KENNEDY, is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object to this practice of stating how a Member would vote if he were present.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from New Jersey, Mrs. NORTON, is unavoidably absent. She has requested me to state that if she were present she would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I regret having to do so, but I make a point of order against these statements as to how Members would have voted if present.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, but the statements have already been made and it does not avail the gentleman anything under the circumstances.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

NAVY BUILDING URGENT

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Public Record, of Philadelphia, Sunday, April 30, on the Navy Building, by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger of Apr. 30, 1933]

DARROW CITES DECADENCE OF FLEET AND REAL OBJECTIVES TO BE ATTAINED BY BIG PROGRAM

By Representative George P. Darrow

The necessity of building up our Navy to treaty strength has never been more apparent than it is today. During the last 12 years we have allowed our Navy to decline to such a point that we are now a poor third, and unless a building program is begun immediately we shall find ourselves at the expiration of the London Treaty, December 31, 1936, the fifth ranking naval power.

Today we are faced with the need for stringent governmental economy. Simultaneously there is a demand that the Government take action to improve the distressing unemployment situation with which we are faced and give push to industry and commerce which will, it is hoped, start the car of prosperity rolling again. For this purpose there could be devised no method superior to a reasonable program of ship construction.

A shipbuilding program should be included in the President's proposed Federal construction program. Such a program for construction of new ships would greatly stimulate the shipbuilding industry, which has been allowed to stagnate in recent years, and a revival of this industry means an increase in employment.

We need ships, for, due to the dropping off in our naval construction, we are falling behind in the up-to-dateness of our fleet.

LABOR REAPS BENEFITS

Over 85 percent of the cost of a warship's construction goes finally to labor, only the remaining 15 percent or less is a drain against the national wealth. By employing labor on such work, instead of supporting the men on a dole or other form of paternalism, use is being made of something that otherwise would be wasted.

In this country we are, strangely enough, at present suffering from an excess of all things normally regarded as good. We have a surplus of farm products for which no consumers can be found. We have stocks of raw materials far beyond the present capacity of our manufacturing industry to utilize. We have well-equipped factories of every sort, capable of producing more than they sell. We have a transportation and distribution system more than ample to deal with our requirements.

And, finally, we have a mass of skilled and unskilled labor which cannot find employment. The situation cannot be met by raising more food or manufacturing more goods to add to our present surplus and to further decrease prices; not by building more factories or improving our present transportation and distribution system, which are already more than adequate.

What is required is a form of useful activity which will not further increase the ills from which we are suffering. If such an activity can be found, it will be reasonable that the present cost of putting these men to work shall to a moderate extent be made a charge against the future prosperity which such a policy is designed to produce.

PENNSYLVANIA WOULD BENEFIT

A building program has been suggested by Representative VINSON, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, to cover 30 vessels, including 2 airplane carriers, 4 light cruisers, 20 destroyers, and 4 submarines to be completed in 3 years. Such a program would cost roughly $230,000,000, and it is obvious the number of men such a program would put back into the ranks of employed.

Pennsylvania is a shipbuilding State, and if such a program were begun the State would benefit materially and immediately. The plans of the ships desired are already drawn. As soon as their construction may be authorized orders for material will commence to flow and the money spent will find its way through the many channels of commerce and industry in every part of the United States.

The ore mines of Michigan, the forests of Oregon, the oil fields of Texas, the copper smelters of Utah, and the manufacturing interests of all the Eastern and Midwest States would alike feel the stimulating impetus of this program.

And when the ships are manned and launched it will be realized that a mighty good bargain was made in providing naval replacements at depression prices.

Philadelphia is the center of the Nation's shipbuilding area. In addition to its navy yard, the New York Shipbuilding Co. is located across the Delaware River in Camden; at Chester is the Sun Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.; and another smaller yard is located at Wilmington. The construction of several new ships in this area would be of inestimable value to Philadelphia and its neighboring cities.

NAVY YARD FULLY EQUIPPED

The Philadelphia Navy Yard is fully equipped for work of this character. It has many advantages which cannot be disregarded. Its distance from the sea and the ease with which the channel can be closed renders it immune from raids from the sea, at the same time but slightly reducing its accessibility. It is located in fresh water, which causes much less deterioration of vessels than salt water. It has a climate which, while permitting all-year-round work, is not debilitating. It is in the heart of the great industrial center and the greatest shipbuilding section of the United States.

Since it is readily apparent that the upbuilding and maintenance of our Navy is a matter of utmost importance and in the present emergency it is so necessary to maintain as well as increase the opportunities for employment of American labor, it should be evident that a shipbuilding program of the nature proposed by Congressman VINSON is of utmost importance.

Such a program would stimulate business in the city and State, aid the employment situation at our navy yard and shipyards, and be a great step toward building our Navy up to its allowed treaty strength.

PROTEST AGAINST THE APPOINTMENT OF FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE STIMSON AS A DELEGATE TO THE FORTHCOMING WORLD MONETARY AND ECONOMIC CONFERENCE AS AN AFFRONT TO THE REPUBLICANS OF THE COUNTRY

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having published a statement which I released to the press this morning in relation to Henry L. Stimson.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it an article written by the gentleman?

Mr. TINKHAM. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, during the last several weeks the press has indicated, apparently with some official sanction, that Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of State, may be appointed by the present administration as one of the delegates to the World Monetary and Economic Conference soon to be held in London.

Mr. Stimson is an extreme internationalist and is opposed to all American traditional policies in foreign affairs. This may recommend him to the present administration. His appointment as a delegate to the World Monetary and Economic Conference, however, would be an affront to the Republicans of this country.

Mr. Stimson has never represented the views of the Republicans in relation to foreign affairs. The Republicans have always stood and stand today against the participation or interference of the United States in the political affairs of other countries, particularly of Europe, and the maintenance of strict American neutrality.

During Mr. Stimson's administration of the Department of State American interests were subordinated to European interests and American foreign policies were dominated by the British Foreign Office.

The objectives of the British Foreign Office and of European interests have been to bring about the abolition of American neutrality, the reduction of American naval strength, and the involvement of the United States in the political affairs of other countries. Mr. Stimson has served all these objectives.

In 1930 Mr. Stimson negotiated a naval treaty which made the strength of the American Navy contingent upon the strength of the British Navy in order that Great Britain might control the Mediterranean, thereby advancing British navalism and Britain's control of the seas.

During the Naval Conference of 1930 Mr. Stimson led in the surrender to British demands for a reduction in the number of American 8-inch-gun cruisers.

During this conference Mr. Stimson attempted to entangle the United States in the political affairs and in the conflicts of Europe by advocating a consultative pact, which was bitterly denounced, even by Mr. Hoover. Notwithstanding, Mr. Stimson later forced a plank in the Republican platform providing for a consultative pact, which plank provoked much hostility and alienated much support from the Republican Party.

While Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson converted a mere declaration of policy known as the "Kellogg-Briand Pact" into a doctrine dangerous to the peace of the United States, a doctrine never contemplated by those who signed the pact, one which threatens to entangle the United States in the political affairs of practically every country in the world. This doctrine was declared in connection with the Sino-Japanese situation, in which the League of Nations was taking action under its covenant. Mr. Stimson announced that the United States did not intend to recognize "any situation, treaty, or agreement" brought about by means contrary to the obligations of that pact. Such action was highly provocative and hostile to Japan, with whom the United States should remain at peace.

The League of Nations and Great Britain immediately hailed this declaration as an abandonment by the United States of its policy of neutrality and as the adoption by the United States of the policy of the League and Great Britain to maintain peace by coercion and force, by sanctions, boycotts, embargoes, and war.

In order that this declaration might be enforced against Japan, just before leaving office Mr. Stimson called upon Congress to give the President unlimited authority to impose an embargo on the exportation of arms and munitions of war to any nation or nations which the President might select. Such authority was not granted to the President during the last Congress. When this proposal was resubmitted recently to Congress by the present administration, only too ready to adopt the extreme internationalism of Mr. Stimson, the proposal was unanimously denounced by the entire Republican membership of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and later on the floor of the House by the Republican leaders, supported by practically the entire Republican membership of the House, chiefly on the ground that its exercise would violate our neutrality and would be in international law a cause of war.

There is nothing that the present administration could do to disaffect in a greater degree the support of the Republican membership of Congress from the conclusions and recommendations arrived at by the World Monetary and Economic Conference than to appoint Mr. Stimson as one of its delegates.

THE SALES TAX

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I ask unanimous consent to include a radio address delivered by me over station WJAY at Cleveland, Ohio, Sunday, May 7, 1933, on the proposed sales tax for the State of Ohio. There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Tonight, at 9:45 o'clock, the Chief Executive of this Nation will report to you and to the entire country the progress being made by the Federal Government to bring back prosperity to our Republic and its people. For 60 days the President and the Congress have labored at this task.

The Ohio congressional delegation in the House of Representatives, of which I am a Member, has in every instance and unanimously backed President Roosevelt in every measure designed to increase the buying power in our country, to stimulate trade and commerce in the Nation, and to set the heels of industry in motion once more.

Instead of backing President Roosevelt here in Ohio and synchronizing with the national program, the Governor of this State is proposing to the legislature the enactment of a sales tax which will slow up commerce and levy such a tremendous tribute upon it that the work that President Roosevelt and the Congress have done so far will be greatly hampered in Ohio. It is to prevent such a frustration of the national program by adoption of the proposed sales tax that I returned from Washington this week end to make this appeal to you.

A sales tax or a consumers tax, or any other tax of a similar nature, is the most vicious and drastic form of taxation that can be adopted by a governmental agency to raise revenue. It is the creation of selfish, vested, special interest minority groups devised for the purpose of shifting a just share of taxation from their shoulders to the shoulders of the unorganized mass majority.

The coupon sales tax proposed by Governor White, and now being drafted by a special taxation committee of the Ohio Legislature, is the result of the tremendous pressure applied to the Governor by the special interests lobbies now operating in Columbus.

Never in the history of this State has there been assembled such a tremendous lobby of special privilege seeking to influence the course of legislation as there is assembled in Columbus, our State capitol, today. This group of subservient manipulators has banded together to load upon each and every one of you, farmer and city dweller alike, the burden of taxation that should be upon the shoulders of their masters.

Just consider for a moment the groups that have made common cause against you and have coerced our Governor into adopting their program.

First, and most active, are the highway contractors, road-material men, and their allied industries who wax fat on public contracts to build new roads.

Then comes the lobby of the school supply and textbook companies seeking to maintain a highly extravagant school program, not for the benefit of the children but to create a market for their expensive products.

Following them are the gasoline and oil interests, who are fighting further taxes, and hope to gain a reduction in the tax now on their product, which necessarily is paid by the consumer.

And then trailing along behind these are various lobbies of groups who fear the imposition of nuisance taxes on their products.

And allied with these groups are the lobbies of still other groups who have been cajoled and coaxed into the movement by the specious promises made by the other special groups that the sales-tax program will reduce the tax burdens likely to or now resting upon them.

But behind this group, manipulating and maneuvering with Machiavellian cunning is the well-seasoned, long-experienced, diabolical public-utilities lobby, that remains in the background and hides its grasping fingers in a glove that it has fashioned out of the self-interest of the other groups. The utilities lobby knows that during this entire depression, when the price of every other commodity and service has been substantially cut, their companies have selfishly and ruthlessly maintained their rates, and have even, in some instances, had the audacity to ask for increase in those rates.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has maintained its outrageous dividend rate of 9 percent. The dividend rate of other public utilities has been maintained at a high level and their stockholders have waxed fat upon the misery of the rest of the Nation. They know that social justice demands that a substantial part of their income should be diverted from their coffers to the Public Treasury. But being imbued with the greed and selfishness that marks the ultraconservative capitalist, they exercise their machinations at the State's capitol to load upon the backs of the consumers of this State practically the entire burden of the government and seek to raise by this sales tax almost one half of the revenue to be raised in this State.

The proposed bill has a snare in it. The snare is the coupon feature that has aroused so much furor.

The coupon feature has been added to the measure solely and alone for the purpose of centering the indignation and righteous wrath of the masses against that feature of the proposed sales-tax bill. Then if that storm of protest that is now rising from every corner of this State becomes so overwhelming that it cannot be withstood, these special interests intend to simulate a surrender by eliminating the coupon feature from it.

But remember this and never forget it: The elimination of the coupon still leaves what each and every special interest wants—a consumers' tax, whereby each and every person who spends a single solitary 5-cent piece pays a portion of that consumers' tax and relieves the special interests and minority groups of that much of their just share of the burden.

The supposed exemption of farm products and staple foodstuffs from the schedule is a mere sham and pretense. The sacks in which the wheat is transported from the farm to the mill and the flour from the mill to the consumer are taxed. The boxes and crates in which such products are conveyed to market are taxed. The cans that contain the food product are taxed; even the labels that embellish the cans are taxed. Every bit of clothing that is purchased; every lead pencil that every school child buys; every necessity other than the small group of foodstuffs is taxed.

The tremendous sum of $40,000,000 is sought to be levied upon commerce of this State.

Before the Governor of this State surrendered to the special-interest groups that infest the capitol like prowling creatures of prey, I addressed a letter to the Governor indicating the social justice of imposing a tax increase upon public utilities of this State which would raise a $45,000,000 fund—more than equal to the amount the Governor thinks he can raise from the sales tax.

This can be very conveniently and simply done by amending section 4 of amended senate bill No. 4, passed by the general assembly on March 21 of last year and approved by the Governor on April 5 of last year, so that the tax imposed by that measure be increased from 1 percent, as is now provided by that act, to 10 percent, and to add to the act a provision that the right of public utilities to file schedules increasing their rates with the public utilities commission be suspended during the period the act is in force.

Under the 1-percent provision of the present act the State received last year  $4\frac{1}{2}$  million dollars from the public utilities. An increase of this tax to 10 percent will produce 10 times that revenue or \$45,000,000.

The public utilities of this State, persisting in their oppressive demands that their inflation-period rates be maintained, can well afford to pay this tax and not shift it to the backs of their employees by cutting their employees' wages. In many instances in order to increase their profits they have already unwarrantedly cut the wages of their employees or dismissed them from service entirely.

The one thing that keeps public utilities in the almost invincible position they enjoy in Ohio today is the public utility law of this State which gives three men in Columbus, Ohio, known as the "utility commission", the right to fix utility rates; and it has so burdened these three men with such an innumerable number of rate controversies that those rate controversies remain for year after year and almost decades without determination, while the public utility continues to charge its exorbitant prices.

The time is coming now when the public utilities act, insofar as fixing rates for municipalities is concerned, will be repealed by a justly outraged citizenry of the State and the powers to fix the utility rates in the cities and villages of this State will be torn out of the hands of the triumvirate in Columbus and returned to the people of the municipalities which the utility serves. Then if a dispute arises between a municipality and the utility as to a proper charge or rate, these matters will be determined by the court of common pleas of the county in which the municipality is situated. There the litigation can be speedily tried and speedily determined, and the burden of showing the unreasonableness of the rate will rest upon the utility rather than upon the municipality.

And now just a few words on the fundamentals of this form of taxation.

Neither of the major political parties have ever endorsed a sales tax. On the contrary, the Democratic Party, in its convention platform of 1924 declared against the sales tax, using the following language: "We oppose the so-called 'nuisance taxes', sales taxes, and all other forms of taxation that unfairly shift to the consumer the burden of taxation."

In the Seventy-second Congress of the United States the general manufacturers' sales tax went down to defeat by a vote of 236 to 168. I was in that fight and voted against the measure. The same lobby that now holds forth at Columbus urging a sales tax there, was in evidence at Washington last year. So bitter was the sentiment against this form of taxation in the Senate of the United States that 55 United States Senators signed a round robin declaring their opposition to the sales tax. President Franklin D. Roosevelt has more than once opposed the sales tax and expressed his contempt for this vicious means of raising revenue, by taxing consumption.

In a letter to Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE, dated May 26, 1932, William R. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, registered in behalf of that group of organized workers of the Nation, whom he represents, his protest against the sales tax in the following language: "Labor is opposed to the sales tax because it is wrong in principle. It tends to impose the burden of taxation on those least able to pay and enables the richest of our citizens to escape their just share of taxation." I might say in passing that the Cleveland Federation of Labor and the Ohio Federation of Labor are on record in opposition to this form of taxation.

During the debate in Congress on the sales tax this startling information was presented:

Thirteen percent of the people of the United States own 90 percent of the total wealth of the country. If this class was taxed according to ability to pay, the 13 percent of the people should pay 90 percent of the taxes. Under the operation of the proposed sales tax the reverse would be the case, for, basing the tax exclusively on consumption, as a sales tax would do, 87 percent of the people would bear the burden of this tax while owning only 10 percent of the wealth of the Nation.

Once you saddle a sales tax on the backs of the people of Ohio, you will never get rid of it. The big interests will see to that.

The great army of consumers are not organized; hence, the reason for this and other appeals that are being made by newspapers and civic groups in Ohio at the present time. The depression and destruction of our banking systems have aroused the people from their state of apathy. It took men like the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin and others to turn the spotlight upon the crooked international bankers and create a sentiment of protest that caused the Congress of the United States to enact legislation permitting this country to go off the gold standard and place the power of inflation of the currency in the hands of the President of the United States.

Let me tell you that in response to Father Coughlin's appeal to write to your Congressman, I received over 10,000 letters from my constituents, advocating a revaluation of the gold ounce. The people who take time to write a letter on a subject of this kind are taking an interest in the affairs of their Government, and that to me is a very healthy sign.

Do you think that this tax should be collected by your paying a tax on every pair of shoes you buy, every shirt you wear, every article you purchase, or should the East Ohio Gas Co., the Ohio Bell Telephone Co., the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co., the only companies which have not been compelled to lower their prices, be required to disgorge some of the unconscionable profits that have swelled their coffers and are still causing their bank accounts to bulge over all others?

The injustice of the sales tax is so apparent and flagrant that the persistence of the Governor in contending for it and endeavoring to force it into law will do more to create communists in the State of Ohio than any other single act that can be conceived.

It is time that the unorganized majority in this State express themselves. Write to the Governor. Get a penny post card if you cannot afford more and write a single line on it, "Ohio wants no sales tax", and sign your name and address to it. If your newspapers publish a coupon on the subject sign it and send it to them. They will see that the Governor gets it. Every listener can afford 1 cent for a post card and he can get his neighbor to spend a penny for one. If everyone of you voice your protest in that form there will be such a blizzard of post cards whirl into Columbus that the sales tax will be buried so deeply that it can never be dug out by all the special interests in the State. Simply address your post card to Gov. George White, Statehouse, Columbus, Ohio. Send in your protest at once and save Ohio from the curse of a sales tax.

MINUTES AND RESOLUTIONS, CONTINENTAL CONGRESS FOR ECONOMIC RECONSTRUCTION, WASHINGTON, D.C., MAY 6-7, 1933

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include the minutes and resolutions of the Continental Congress held in Washington, D.C., May 6-7.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, under leave to extend my remarks I wish to congratulate the delegates of the continental congress, and I also wish to express my appreciation for their interest in public affairs and the welfare of the country at large.

Many of these delegates came here at great self-sacrifice. Their ambition to serve their countrymen well outweighed any personal considerations. Men and women, more than 4,000, assembled in a great congress in the Washington Auditorium on Saturday and Sunday, May 6 and 7, in response to a call signed by 250 leading representatives of labor organizations, farm groups, cooperative societies, educational, youth, and peace bodies, and the Socialist Party—a continental congress on economic reconstruction—meeting for the purpose of uniting the progressive forces of our country on a comprehensive program that would bring about not only economic recovery but economic reconstruction.

These delegates in attendance, represented between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 organized farmers and industrial workers—labor organizations identified with the American Federation of Labor, farmers representing the more militant sections of the farm population, representatives of several hundred unemployed leagues, cooperative societies and student bodies, peace groups, labor, fraternal, and socialist clubs from 46 States. The delegates of these and other organizations participated in the deliberations, served on committees on which they were selected, and after 2 days of deliberation reached an agreement on all major questions that came before them, and also set up a national committee to continue the work of unifying and mobilizing the workers and farmers of our Nation.

Once before in our national history a Continental Congress started the machinery that culminated in making us a politically independent Nation. The purpose of the continental congress of 1933 was to provide a program that will insure economic independence, without which political independence is not likely to be of much moment.

A series of reports and a declaration of independence were adopted during these sessions. Because they present a program radically different from the one which is receiving the consideration of the two major parties, I wish to call the country's attention to these reports and declarations.

Here is a report submitted by the committee on public ownership:

The suffering and agony of the last 3 years in the United States proves conclusively that our present economic order has broken down. It is imperative that a new economic order be established which will eliminate the planlessness, the waste, the exploitation, the inequalities of income, the dictatorship of finance, and the wars and imperialism of the present capitalist order, and will assure to every human being in the country a standard of living and happiness far higher than has ever yet been realized.

Industrial workers and agriculturalists alike suffer from the same fundamental evil. In order to deliver both groups from the greed of corporate owners we demand the public ownership and operation of all the means of public transportation and communication, of all public utilities, of all natural resources, and of all basic industries.

These publicly owned industries should be operated by boards of administration on which the workers, the consumers, and the technicians are adequately represented. Each industry must recognize the principles of collective bargaining and civil service.

I am greatly interested in a report of the committee on unemployment and economic insecurity—

About 17,000,000 American workers are jobless. Half of the Nation's industrial machinery is silent. Farmers are bankrupt. For more than 3 years economic paralysis has crept unceasingly from factory to factory until today stagnation, uncertainty, and insecurity are universal.

In the face of this colossal disaster, for which the workers are in no way responsible, public relief has been so meager and halting that multitudes of children go hungry while desperate parents are driven to suicide. In a land whose warehouses are bursting with food, misery and starvation stalk through the streets.

The capitalists and their political representatives have fully demonstrated that they have no remedy for this desperate state of affairs. In the past the Nation emerged from depressions because new lands were opened up in the West, new industries were developed, and new world markets conquered. The West is now settled, American industry is overdeveloped, and there is little chance to win new world markets. The only way out this time is a fundamental reorganization of our economic system so that production will be carried on, under the control of the workers, for use instead of for private profit. On the road to this new social order we propose the following concrete measure to meet the immediate needs of the workers and farmers:

First, we demand an immediate initial Federal appropriation of $3,000,000,000 for direct unemployment relief, to be distributed in cash without humiliating red tape so as to provide amply for all necessities of life to those who are in need, including sufficient allowance to prevent evictions. Heretofore relief has been grossly inadequate as evidenced by the fact that only one third of the unemployed have received assistance while those getting help generally average less than $20 a month for an entire family. The $500,000,000 Federal relief appropriation now before Congress will not substantially increase the pitifully inadequate allowance provided by the Hoover administration. The failure of the Roosevelt administration at this critical time is all the more glaring because of the increasing inability of local governments to carry the relief load. As part of a general unemployment-relief program, we demand the immediate payment of the bonus to all veterans who are unemployed or facing difficulties on the farm.

Secondly, we demand national and State legislation establishing the 5-day week and the 6-hour day, without a reduction in wages. The march of the machines has displaced millions of workers from industry who can never regain their jobs unless the work week is permanently shortened. We condemn, however, all "share-the-work" proposals of the employers which are designed to shift the burden of unemployment relief to the workers who still have jobs.

Third, we demand a $6,000,000,000 appropriation by the Federal Government for public works. Special emphasis in this program should be placed upon rehousing the 40,000,000 Americans now living in indecent, insanitary, and disease-breeding slums, the provision of electric facilities for one third of the American people dwelling principally in rural areas who do not today enjoy the benefits of electricity, and the building of modern schools and hospitals in those communities where they are needed. All public construction work shall be carried on under trade-union conditions and with the payment of trade-union wages. In this connection we condemn the present policy of employing 250,000 men in the Nation's forests at the meager wage of $1 a day, under a semimilitary system of administration and control. We demand that no relief committee shall have jurisdiction over any public-works project. A $6,000,000,000 expenditure annually on public works would bring construction back to 1928 levels and would reemploy a minimum of 8,000,000 men and women both directly and indirectly. Despite vicious propaganda to the contrary, public works in the United States have not been tried, as evidenced by the fact that public construction in 1933 will be only one half and private construction barely one seventh of what it was in 1928.

Fourth, we demand a complete system of Government insurance to provide for unemployment, sickness, accidents, maternity, and old age. Even in the best of times millions of workers go without jobs while illnesses and accidents deprive others of their livelihood and old age cuts off the earnings of hundreds of thousands of men and women. Experience over all the world has demonstrated that a system of compulsory social insurance is the only bulwark under the present system against these risks of modern economic life for the workers.

Fifth, we demand legislation which will take all children under 16 years of age out of industry and put them in school. Hundreds of thousands of children at the present time are holding jobs which should be filled by adult workers.

Sixth, we demand national emergency legislation reducing the interest and principal on working class home mortgages in proportion to the decreased ability of the people to pay and that a moratorium on foreclosures for unemployed and part-time working class home owners be declared. The President's proposal for refinancing home mortgages will provide a very meager relief for only 10 percent of the home owners in the United States. The chief beneficiaries will be the mortgage companies because under the administration's program the Government will hold the bag for the bad mortgages while the great bulk of hard-working home owners who have denied themselves and their families of life's necessities to meet their mortgage obligations will get no relief. Without these readjustments millions of workers in the United States will have their homes confiscated. Unless this legislation is promptly enacted or the necessary reductions agreed to by their creditors, we urge home owners to strike against the payment of interest and principal.

We call upon the workers and farmers assembled at this continental congress to wage a vigorous determined struggle for these measures.

We are all interested in this report of the committee on agriculture:

The working farmers of the United States, like the workers in industry and trade, are victims of the profit-making system of capitalism. Whether tenants or mortgaged owners, they are exploited for the benefit of landlords and bankers, of the transportation companies, of speculators and commission houses, and other capitalistic interests which stand between them and the consumers of their produce. In the present crisis millions of them are being brought to misery and despair.

American agriculture as now constituted faces a new menace in the giant farms, equipped with costly machinery and operated like factories, whose competition threatens more and more to drive the individual farmer to the wall. If the producers of the people's food are not to be reduced either to peonage or to wage slavery, this technical revolution must be socially controlled so that its benefits shall go to the workers on the land and not to agricultural capitalists; and meanwhile the individual farmers must be protected from the sufferings which unbridled competition brings upon them.

The only hope for the farmers is in the intelligent use of their own organized power, on both the economic and the political field, and in harmonious cooperation with the workers in industry and trade similarly organized.

As the main features in a great program for farm relief and reconstruction, this continental congress urges the following demands:

1. We demand prompt and adequate relief for the men, women, and children still on the farms or already driven from the land, as well as for the unemployed wage workers, who through no fault of their own are today suffering for lack of food, clothing, and shelter; such relief not to carry with it the stigmas of so-called "charity", but to be given as a measure of social justice and decency, and to be economically and humanely administered through committees of farmers and industrial workers.

2. We demand that evictions, foreclosures, and forced sales on workers' homes and on farms worked by their occupants be stopped during the continuance of the depression.

3. We demand the reorganization of the system of taxation in the States, cities, and counties, so as to exempt homes and farms up to the amount of $5,000 assessed valuation, and so as to increase the revenue from graduated taxes on incomes and inheritances.

4. We demand the encouragement by suitable legislation, by educational service, and when needful by public credit of bona fide farmers for marketing produce and for buying farm supplies and other commodities and of cooperative purchasing societies among the urban consumers, eliminating the economic waste involved in the profit system of distribution and thereby benefiting both producers and consumers.

5. We demand the national ownership and operation under democratic control of services utilized by the farming population, such as electric power plants, railroads, warehouses and storage plants, packing houses, establishments for the manufacture of farm machinery, to the end that the farmers may get such services at cost, instead of providing profits for capitalists.

The interests of the two great producing and exploited elements of our population, the wage workers and the working farmers, if not identical at every point, are in any broad view interdependent. Injury to either one injures the other. The poverty of the farmers is driving vast numbers of men and women from the field to the factory to compete in an already over-crowded labor market; and at the same time it compels the farmers to limit their purchases of industrial products, thus increasing unemployment in industry. On the other hand, disemployment of wage workers and the lowering of wages of workers for those who still have jobs is cutting down the market for foodstuffs and other farm produce. The two elements must learn to work whole-heartedly together for their common interests.

The continental congress calls upon the workers on the land and the workers in trade and industry through their various organizations to concentrate all their forces at this critical moment in an irresistible drive for two immediate aims—for the stoppage of evictions and foreclosures and the liberation of the farmers from their killing burdens of interest-bearing debt, as set forth above; and

For the Nation-wide establishment of this 30-hour workweek in trade and industry, to the end that millions of the unemployed may be given jobs and that the workingman may be able, through organized effort, to increase his weekly wages and thus enable him to buy the goods which the farmers produce.

Wage earners, come to the farmers' aid; working farmers, help the wage earners in their struggle for a decent existence.

Let no one sow the seeds of discord between us. Divided, both of our classes go down to defeat. United, no power can resist our just demands.

The committee on organization and continuation submitted the following resolution as a partial report from the committee:

Whereas, in brutal disregard of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence, the Governor of Iowa has placed a portion of that State under martial law; and

Whereas, as a result of this flagrant abuse of authority, hundreds of farmers are at the present time being hounded by the military forces and are being denied the right of trial in civil courts; and, further,

Whereas the events which led up to this reign of terror can in no sense be blamed upon the farmers themselves but rather upon recent economic conditions,

Now, therefore, we, the workers and farmers of America in continental congress, assembled at Washington, May 6 and 7, 1933, do hereby Resolve: 1. That, in view of the overwhelming emergency, this congress shall immediately set up a continuing committee of five, accountable to the national committee on correspondence and action, to cooperate with militant farmers now subjected to martial law by offering them legal and financial aid.

2. That this congress recommends support of the work of this committee to all of its constituent bodies.

3. That the continuing committee of five shall consist of David Feliz, Philadelphia; Carl Whitehead, Denver; Clarence Senior, Chicago; Joseph Schlossberg, New York; and Robert Miller, Underwood, Minn.

The following are a few of the resolutions presented by the committee on foreign relations and adopted

RECOGNITION OF THE SOVIET UNION

We demand immediate recognition by our Government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. We warn the people of the United States against the continuous propaganda campaign being waged on the Soviet Government of Russia.

REPEAL DISCRIMINATORY IMMIGRATION ACTS

We demand immediate repeal of all legislation restricting immigration which is aimed to discriminate against particular races or nationalities.

The committee on civil liberties and race prejudice presented several resolutions

TOM MOONEY

Whereas Tom Mooney and Warren Billings have already served 17 years in prison on charges proven false; and

Whereas two Federal investigations have further proven their innocence: Be it

Resolved, That this continental congress demand the immediate and unconditional release of these victims of the miscarriage of justice imposed by the ruling class of California, and we demand the publication of the Wickersham Report; and be it further

Resolved, That this continental congress goes on record in affirming our faith in the innocence of Tom Mooney and Warren Billings, and that the following message be sent to Mooney and Billings:

"The continental congress on Economic Reconstruction reiterates a strong belief in your innocence and your loyalty to the workers of America, and will continue the struggle for your liberation and restoration of your civil rights."

SCOTTSBORO

Whereas eight Negro boys in Alabama face the death penalty for crimes of which all the evidence submitted has proven their unmistakable innocence; and further

Whereas the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the United States Constitution were flagrantly violated by the exclusion of Negroes from the jury before which these boys were tried: Be it

Resolved, That the continental congress demand that these eight boys be released, or if they are again tried that the jury include qualified members of the Negro race and be given those rights and privileges guaranteed by the United States Constitution.

NEGRO RIGHTS

Whereas the Negro worker is still especially the victim of untold injustice, social, political and economic, and after 70-odd years of so-called "freedom", Negroes are still being lynched and segregated, denied equal educational facilities, and in the South especially, they are being taxed and governed without the right to participate in government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this congress places itself on record as demanding for the Negro complete equality of opportunity with all other citizens. We demand also the education and enfranchisement of the Negro in the South; the abolition of "Jimcrowism" and segregation in Federal departments at Washington, D.C., in schools and in all public conveyances under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and the right of Negro citizens to sit upon juries. We demand also the enactment of a Federal anti-lynching bill.

This congress condemns any and all forms of discrimination practiced against Negro workers by units of the organized labor movement and we call upon all workers irrespective of creed or racial differences to unite on the basis of their economic interests to free themselves.

MINERS

Whereas the coal miners in Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, and other States have in many cases been reduced to a state of slavery. Whereas, every known instrument of the ruling class has been used to destroy the rights of miners and maintain the power of the coal companies to exploit and enslave them. Therefore, the alliance of the State and the coal companies must be brought to an immediate end. We condemn the use of the State militia and the private police in the suppression of civil liberties, and we petition the people to fight for the abolition of these agencies which are used in the interests of the owning classes.

FASCISM

As the capitalist system lumbers onward to its final destruction the tendency on the part of the capitalist state is to turn its back upon democratic institutions. We note in this respect the appearance of fascism in every county where the workers are definitely reaching out for power. The dictatorship as seen in the coal and iron police, the postponement of elections in Indiana, the militarization of the reforestation camps, and martial law as declared by the Governor of Iowa tend toward a fascist dictatorship. Fascism is also evidenced in the manner of the distribution of unemployed-relief funds by various States, as—

1. The jailing of men in South Bend, Ind., who refused to work for a basket of groceries and who held out for cash payment instead.

2. The ultimatum delivered the unemployed of Greensboro, N.C., by the Governor's committee of relief that unless they ceased their agitation for an investigation of relief distribution, "no more relief would be forthcoming."

Here follows a report of the committee on taxation, money, and banking:

RESOLUTION ON TAXATION

Whereas the economic program of the Continental Congress will require large sums of money;

Whereas the rich of the United States have never been adequately taxed through progressive income and inheritance and gift taxation;

Whereas the United States by applying higher rates for such taxes would be able to raise several additional billion dollars in revenues, provided tax evasion by the rich is ended through more rigorous and honest administration coupled with legal changes abolishing tax-exempt securities and other devices such as deducting security losses from income;

Whereas all income over $25,000 a year shall be taken by the Government at a time when millions of Americans have no income at all: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the continental congress demands greatly increased income, inheritance, and gift taxation in the United States, and that in addition all income above $25,000 a year be recaptured by the Government; furthermore be it

Resolved, That the continental congress opposes all sales taxes, which places the burden upon the poor, as contrasted with our taxation program, which secures needed revenue from the wealthy; and be it further

Resolved, That we demand that under no circumstances shall any worker or working farmer be deprived of the right to the use of his necessary tools or the home which he occupies because of nonpayment of property taxes since the beginning of this depression, or as long as this depression shall last; and be it further

Resolved, That this continental congress endorse the principle of the capital levy on wealth.

RESOLUTION ON BANKING

Whereas the private banking system of the United States has failed in its fundamental functions of providing safety for the people's money and adequate credit for industry;

Whereas 9,000 banks have closed during the depression, with a loss of many billion dollars to depositors;

Whereas the big banks of the Nation have become dictators of industry, agriculture, and Government and have forced wage cuts and lay-offs as the price for credit; and

Whereas they have even dictated the amount of wages that our cities and States shall pay to their employees, the amount of relief for the unemployed, and whether or not farmers or workers shall have a place to sleep and grow food: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the continental congress demands that the Government take over all of the banks and operate them as a national banking system with separate divisions for savings accounts and commercial accounts, so that we can use the people's credit to control and socialize industry, commerce, and transportation, to finance farmers and small-home owners instead of stock-exchange gamblers and gamblers in commodities.

And whereas the safest bank in the United States has been the Postal Savings System, in which the people have implicit confidence as evidenced by the fact that Postal Savings deposits have increased more than 600 percent in the past 3 years: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That pending socialization of the banking system we favor legislation to empower the Postal Savings System to receive unlimited deposits and to provide a checking-account service and to invest its funds without limit in Government bonds.

RESOLUTION ON INFLATION

Whereas the first result of the inflation of money was to benefit middlemen, speculators, and gamblers in farm and other products and to reduce the purchasing power of wages; and

Whereas the only reason for inflating the currency should be to improve the standard of living of the producing masses;

We therefore demand that any scheme of inflation should start by inflating wages and the prices received by the farmers for farm products; and

We therefore condemn as unsound and unjust any attempts to inflate prices to the consumers first, while merely hoping that wages will go up afterward, and that the farmers will be able to get higher prices from the middlemen and the gamblers in farm commodities.

A RESOLUTION WAS PASSED FAVORING THE 30-HOUR WEEK AND A MINIMUM WAGE

The present depression is but one link in a long chain of panics, crises, and depressions which began at the beginning of this Republic. It is clear that such panics, crises, and depressions are no accidents, but are inherent in the economic system which is based on exploitation of man by man, wage-workers by the employers of labor. We therefore express our gratitude to this Congress for having declared itself in favor of the nationalization of industries. That alone will put an end to the industrial misrule which is responsible for low wages, child labor, and mass unemployment.

Among the measures vitally needed for the immediate relief of the many millions of unemployed and underemployed workers is legislation for the 30-hour working week and a minimum wage; the former in order to absorb as many as possible of the totally unemployed workers; the latter in order to set the limit for the arbitrariness of the employers in forcing down wage levels. The continental congress therefore goes on record as urging the United States Congress to promptly enact such legislation.

The continental congress hereby directs its chairman to communicate this demand for legislation to the President of the United States by telegram, letter, or in person; also to the Presiding Officers of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives.

The continental congress calls upon all affiliated bodies, as well as other labor and farmer organizations throughout the Nation, to urge the Representatives and Senators from the various districts and States, preferably by telegram, to vote for such legislation, and also to carry on vigorous propaganda until such legislation is obtained.

I wish to call especial attention to the declaration of independence adopted by the delegates:

Declaration of Independence

More than 150 years ago our forefathers proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence that the supreme function of government is to make secure for men their inalienable right to life, to liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Moreover, the fathers declared that "Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

Such are the two basic principles of human liberty and genuine Americanism laid down by the founders of this Republic.

It has now come to pass that there has grown up in this Nation a system of business, industry, and finance which has enthroned economic kings and financial barons over our lives vastly more powerful, more irresponsible, and more dangerous to human rights than the political kings whom the fathers overthrew in our American Revolution of 1776. These economic rulers now have such absolute control over the economic life of the people as to threaten the very foundation of this Republic.

Under this system of production for private profit these rulers have created conditions that are intolerable.

They have drawn billions in profit, rent, and interest; and they have slashed our wages and the prices of our farm products.

They have used the marvels of the machine age not to lift the burden of toil from our shoulders, but to speed us up beyond human endurance, and to throw us jobless upon the streets.

They have taken the products of our labor, and not paid us enough to buy back the goods we have produced.

They have wasted our natural, technical, and human resources, and led us into ever more tragic periods of industrial chaos.

They have mortgaged our farms, and then sold them from under us.

They have lived in mansions, and evicted us from our homes.

They have led us to trust in their banks, and then have stolen our savings.

They have invaded our civil liberties, and thrown our leaders into jail.

They have intrenched themselves in power by controlling the schools, the press, and the Government.

They have spent millions on bombs and battleships while we have gone cold and hungry.

They have forced us to bleed and die in defense of their loans and markets abroad and to kill our fellow workers in other countries.

They have done these things as part and parcel of a profit system which places the few in control of gigantic monopolies and puts profit above human life.

Since the first Declaration of Independence the American people have discovered and created the means for unheard-of wealth. Wide rivers have been tamed to provide electric power; huge mountains have been tunneled to give ore for the creation of new and marvelous machines; and the prairies have been made to yield rich crops. Man's power to produce wealth has been increased a hundredfold until now a life of security and abundance is possible for all.

But today the Nation starves in the midst of plenty. The gigantic machines stand idle; the crops lie in warehouses or rot in fields.

The system is collapsing before our very eyes. It is destroying itself with a destruction that threatens the historic gains of human rights and the achievements of human civilization. It is for us, workers and farmers of America, to build now a new economic system of justice and freedom. Only through our organized power can mankind be freed from the crushing and needless bonds of poverty and insecurity.

We, the representatives of workers' and farmers' organizations, in continental congress assembled, call upon all those who toil to organize to achieve one supreme aim, a new economic system based upon the principles of cooperation, public ownership, and democratic management, in which the planlessness, the waste, and the exploitation of our present order shall be eliminated and in which the natural resources and the basic industries of the country shall be planned and operated for the common good.

Farmers and workers of America, the wealth and knowledge of 150 years of achievement are at our command if we will organize for power. We shall not starve in the midst of plenty. We are the majority. Workers and farmers everywhere unite. Agitate, educate, organize. We have a world to win.

The Members of the Seventy-third Congress are not all in accord with these principles set forth. No congress or convention ever assembled that could satisfy us all. The progressives, laborers, and farmers of this Congress were in dead earnest. I had the pleasure to meet some 35 delegates from Minnesota who did me the honor to come to my office. They presented their views to seven Minnesota Congressmen there, in an all-morning session, and while there was some discussion and some disagreement, all went away refreshed in mind and inspired in spirit to fight a better fight for America and all her children.

The principles involved in these resolutions and the declaration of independence adopted by the continental congress of 1933 are in the main in keeping with the platform of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota upon which I was elected to Congress. I cannot speak for my colleagues. They are able and distinguished gentlemen and can speak for themselves. They must chart their own course. As for myself, I will fight the good fight. I will keep the faith.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on the proposal to federalize business, that has been before the House Committee on Labor for several days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS AND HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object and I shall not, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question on the order of procedure. As I understand, it is the purpose of the leadership to call up tomorrow the rule, if a rule is granted, on the farm bill conference report and on the Muscle Shoals bill. If this be true, the Appropriations Committee would have very much to take up the independent offices appropriation bill and have other matters which will naturally consume considerable time, come right in the middle of the consideration of this bill. It is a very important piece of legislation in which the Membership of the House generally is interested. So I was hoping we might have an understanding that following these two rules tomorrow, if the rules are granted, we might proceed with the consideration of the independent offices bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say in addition to what the gentleman has stated that there is a conference report on the unemployment bill on the Speaker's table. I do not see the gentleman from Alabama present at the moment, but I think it is the purpose to call that up and have it disposed of.

Mr. SNELL. When is the gentleman going to call up that report?

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman is ready, I should like for him to have the opportunity to call it up at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], and dispose of it today.

Mr. SNELL. And that will be all that will come before the House today?

Mr. BYRNS. If the request of the gentleman from Georgia is granted, and I hope it will be, I should think that would be all.

Mr. SNELL. There would be nothing else this afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. But I hope the House will consent to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning so we can get rid of some of these rules and get as far along as we can with the consideration of the appropriation bill, with a view to recessing over the week-end if something else does not intervene.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I am concerned, I would not want to raise any objection to meeting at any time the gentleman desires, provided it is absolutely necessary in the transaction of the business of the House; but if we have no business to keep us going all the time, I do not see any need of it.

Mr. BYRNS. I could not say to the gentleman it is absolutely necessary to meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. SNELL. Whenever the gentleman thinks it is necessary, we will agree to it.

Mr. BYRNS. My only idea was that having all this business before us, there is a possibility we might conclude the business of the week in time to take an adjournment over Saturday. However, I do not want to be in the attitude of promising this now, because the railroad bill or something else may come in to prevent it.

Mr. SNELL. When we adjourn this afternoon, if the gentleman announces his program and shows what he wants to do, I do not believe there will be any special objection to meeting any time the gentleman desires.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee may have until 12 o'clock tonight to file such reports as it may have ready.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, can it be understood, subject, of course, to emergencies, that following the special matters that may be ready for consideration tomorrow the Appropriations Committee may have the right of way to complete this bill?

Mr. BYRNS. I know of nothing to the contrary.

Mr. SNELL. And there will be nothing else, outside of the speech of the gentleman from Georgia, this afternoon.

Mr. BYRNS. Not unless this conference report is taken up.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Alabama may want to call up the conference report today.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject referred to?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to discuss the proposed Federal wage, hour, and industry control legislation now pending before the House Committee on Labor. While there has never been a time when I approached the discussion of any question with greater confidence in the correctness of the position I take, I proceed in this instance with full knowledge of the fact that I am probably running counter to the trend of present-day thought as to what constitutes proper legislative treatment of our social and economic problems.

The pending measure, however, is so far reacting in its effect upon the lives of the people, and upon our entire system of government that I feel justified in giving warning of the dangers to both that I believe to be involved in our rushing upon the shoals which I see ahead.

The first section of the bill provides:

That no article or commodity, except whole milk or cream, shall be shipped, transported, or delivered in interstate commerce which was produced or manufactured in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which any worker (which term is hereby defined to exclude executive and managerial officials) was employed or permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week or more than 6 hours in any one day, or was employed or permitted to work after he had been working there and elsewhere in such production or manufacture in the aggregate of 30 hours in any one week or more than 6 hours in any one day, except as hereafter provided.

The exception referred to is stated in the following language:

A worker may be employed for not more than 40 hours in any one week or more than 8 hours in any one day for aggregate of more than 10 weeks in any one calendar year, if an extraordinary need in any plant or industry can only be met by utilizing a longer workday or workweek, and if the existence of such an extraordinary need has been determined and permission to utilize a longer workday or workweek has been granted by an hours-of-work board established as hereinafter provided.

Section 2 sets up machinery for carrying out the provision of the act and provides that the Secretary at his discretion shall have authority to appoint an hours-of-work board or boards for designated enterprises or industries which such board shall have authority to determine the need and to permit the utilization of a longer workday as provided in clause (a) of the first section of the act.

Section 3 contains the most astounding proposal for the delegation of unlimited power to an individual ever heard of in the history of any free government, and is as follows:

SEC. 3. If it shall be found by the Secretary of Labor after due investigation that the operation of any plant or plants or enterprise of the character described in section 1 of this act is disturbing and preventing a fair balance of production or unfair competition in interstate commerce by reason of excessively long periods of operation, and thereby causing extraordinary hardship to other plants or enterprises in said industry with consequent substantial injury to the general welfare, then and in that event the Secretary of Labor, upon publication of such a finding, shall be authorized to specify a limitation that should be imposed upon the total hours of operation of said plant or plants or enterprises so as to bring about a more equitable adjustment of production within said industry; and if, after due notice of such specified limitation has been served upon those affected, further operations are carried on contrary to and in excess of the specified limitation, no articles or commodities produced or manufactured in said operations shall be shipped, transported, or delivered in interstate commerce.

Section 4 is likewise an astounding and revolutionary proposal and extends the power of control beyond the point fixed by the first section of the bill and embraces all goods held for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce wherever produced or manufactured, and is as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Labor shall have full power and authority to investigate and to ascertain the wages and hours of work of workers employed in any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, or any other place in which goods are produced, manufactured, or held for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, and if the Secretary shall ascertain and publish a finding that because of the limitation of hours of work herein or otherwise provided, or for any other reason, a substantial number of the workers in any occupation in any such enterprise are not receiving a wage fairly and reasonably commensurate with the value of the services rendered or sufficient for the maintenance of a reasonable standard of living, the Secretary shall be authorized, and it shall be his duty, to appoint a wage board to determine and to recommend minimum fair wage rates for such workers. Such a wage board shall be composed of an equal number of representatives of (1) the employers and (2) the employees respectively interested and (3) the disinterested public.

Section 5 empowers a wage board to summon witnesses to administer oaths and compel the production of evidence.

Section 6 makes provision for the making of recommendations by a wage board as to minimum fair wage rates, and empowers the Secretary of Labor to publish such recommendations as a directory order establishing minimum fair wage rates for the workers in the occupation covered by such recommendations.

Section 7 provides that the Secretary of Labor upon finding that employers are not observing the requirements of a directory order issued under section 6 of the act, and shall find that such nonobservance constitutes unfair competition with other employers who are observing such directory order, and that such employers by such nonobservance are nullifying the purpose and intention of Congress to prevent unfair competition in interstate commerce, to relieve unemployment and destitution and to protect and promote the general welfare, shall be authorized to give notice of his intention to make such directory order a mandatory order, in which order the names of noncomplying employers may be published. Immunity from liability from suit for damages is provided for.

Section 8 makes final the determination of all questions of fact as may be made by the Secretary of Labor but does make subject to judicial review all findings on questions of law.

Section 9 gives to the Secretary of Labor or to anyone authorized to act for him, broad inquisitorial powers—the power to enter and inspect any place at any time where goods are produced or held for interstate or foreign commerce, to examine any and all books, records, pay rolls, to require the posting of the hours of work, and the keeping of such time, wage, and other records as may, in his judgment, be necessary, and section 9 (c) empowers the Secretary to require all persons engaged in the production or manufacture of all articles or commodities described in section 1 of the act to certify to their compliance with the requirement of the act as a condition precedent to making such articles or commodities eligible for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce.

Section 10 provides for the imposing of penalty upon any person not complying with the act.

Mr. CARTER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER of California. Is the gentleman a member of the Labor Committee?

Mr. COX. No; I am not.

Mr. CARTER of California. Are the sections to which the gentleman refers sections which have been prepared by the Labor Committee and the bill introduced?

Mr. COX. No; this is the proposal that the Labor Committee had before it upon which testimony was taken. I do not know what action the Labor Committee has taken or what action it proposes to take. I happen to know that the measure is before the Labor Committee, but I do not know what the committee will bring in in the way of legislation.

Mr. CARTER of California. Does the gentleman know whose proposal this was?

Mr. COX. I do not; except that the Secretary of Labor testified upon proposals embodied in the bill.

This measure has a threefold purpose—the control of production, the federalization of all business, and the fixing of wages, and as a means of accomplishing this purpose the commerce powers of the Constitution are invoked.

The Black bill that recently passed the Senate is virtually the same as the first section of this bill, and when Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who is a profound student of our economic, industrial, and social problems and a gentleman of great charm and culture, was testifying before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in January on the Black bill, he said:

The purpose of this proposed law is not to regulate interstate traffic. It is purely to limit the hours of labor.

If this view be accepted generally, and it is, then we start out with the admission that Congress is invited to do something which it has not the power to do; that is, limit the hours of labor, which is in no wise connected with traffic, and to do this under its power to regulate traffic.

The proposal brings up anew the question as to whether the Federal Government has general police powers over all matters both of a general and local nature that may be in the remotest degree related to interstate commerce. In recognition of the fact that this is not in law an open question, the distressful condition of business and the social ills of the people are set forth as constituting an emergency and therefore justification for the doing of an illegal thing in order to bring about, in part, a desirable result.

Congress is here urged to decree that constitutional government is incapable of serving the needs of the people and that our dual system is a failure. If it were within the power of Congress to adopt this measure and it should be sustained by the courts then that well-balanced division of powers between the States and the United States would be completely destroyed. All State sovereignty would have been swallowed up by the Federal power, and local self-government would be a thing of the past.

It has been through the strained construction of the commerce clause of the Constitution that the Federal Government has gone farthest in incroaching upon the reserved powers of the States, but the bar to this further advance is such as not to be passed at a cost of less than the destruction of the States.

Article 1, section 8, clause 3 of the Constitution is as follows:

The Congress shall have power—to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution reads:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

It is well to keep in mind those two provisions of the Constitution for both have a direct bearing upon the questions raised.

Commerce within the Federal Constitution and as applies to the questions we are discussing has been judicially defined as traffic and intercourse, embracing all commercial intercourse between the States, and all component parts of such intercourse.

That production and manufacture constitute no part of commerce has been held by all the courts in a long and unbroken line of decisions and admits of no doubt.

The production of sugar beets and the manufacture of sugar, the mining of coal, and the manufacture of cloth, all intended for interstate shipment, have been held to be no part of interstate commerce and therefore not subject to the control of Congress.

In the case of United Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co. (259 U.S. 344) the court held: Coal mining is not interstate commerce, and the power of Congress does not extend to its regulation as such.

And again, in Oliver Iron Mining Co. v. Lord (262 U.S. 172): Mining is not interstate commerce, but, like manufacturing, is a local business, subject to local regulation and taxation * * *. Its character in that regard is intrinsic, is not affected by the intended use or disposal of the product, is not controlled by contractual engagements, and persists even though the business be conducted in close connection with interstate commerce.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It would be interesting to know whether or not the court, in passing upon the question which the gentleman has quoted, rendered a unanimous decision or were divided.

Mr. COX. In some of the cases I have quoted the opinions were unanimous. I will discuss where the court divided on the question of authority for the action which it is urged that Congress should take.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. I have many protests coming to me from various States. They say that if this bill is passed, a farmer having a bale of cotton, where he employed laborers more than 30 hours, that that bale of cotton could not be shipped in interstate commerce.

The measure as drawn and upon which testimony was taken would operate in just such a case as the gentleman has stated, provided there was a holding for shipment involved.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Oh, I do not think the gentleman wants to misstate the purpose of the bill. It could not affect the cotton gin, because the cotton gin does not produce anything.

Mr. COX. The cotton gin processes the cotton. Here is where the bill is broadened in section 4 to include "any other place in which goods are produced, manufactured, or held for shipment in interstate commerce." It is this language of the bill that might be under certain conditions made to apply to the case stated by the gentleman from Arkansas.

In Anderson v. Ship Owners' Association (273 U.S. 359) the Court said:

Neither the making of goods nor the mining of coal is commerce, and the fact that the things produced are afterward shipped or used in interstate commerce does not make their production a part of it.

In the case of Champlin Refining Co. v. Corporation Commission (286 U.S. 235) the effort was made to enjoin the Oklahoma Corporation Commission from putting into effect an order to prorate the production of oil in the State on the ground that it interfered with commerce, and deciding the case, the Court said:

Plaintiff contends that the act and proration order operate to burden interstate commerce in crude oil and its products in violation of the commerce clause. It is clear that the regulation prescribed and authorized by the act and the proration established by the commission apply only to production and not to sales or transportation of crude oil or its products. Such production is essentially a mining operation, and therefore is not a part of interstate commerce, even though the product obtained is intended to be and in fact is immediately shipped in such commerce.

A thing is not a part of interstate commerce because of its being made for shipment across State lines. It only becomes a part of commerce when introduced into transportation.

A case in point is that of Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. v. Yurkonns (278 U.S. 439), where a workman was injured in the shifting of a coal car which was being received for shipment out of the State. The Court held that the workman was a miner engaged in the preparation of this coal for shipment, that he was not engaged in interstate commerce, that the State laws attached, and could not be defeated by the contention that the man was engaged in interstate commerce because he was fixing the coal on that car.

What is here proposed is to extend the Federal power of control over any article or thing entering or intended to enter interstate commerce back to the beginning of its origin, and if to its origin then ultimately to its final consumption. This means that the Government steps in and takes control with the dumping of the first bucket of coal in the furnace of the miller or cotton spinner and it attaches until the product, if food, is in the stomachs of the consumers, or, if cloth, is upon the backs of the people.

To limit the application of the principle in first instance to mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment is not sufficient. It, of course, means that it shall be broadened to include every form of human endeavor. The growers of wheat, cotton, corn, potatoes, or anything else will fall under this despotic power of government that comes down from Washington the minute he sticks his plow into the ground. The hog raiser, the sheep and cattle grower, hand over to Washington the management of their business with the first feeding of their stock. The farm woman with her back-porch cannery becomes subject to the control of the law the minute she permits the house boy to work more than 6 hours per day or 5 days per week.

The advocates of this measure contend that it is within the power of Congress to do these things and that it is a proper and necessary exercise of such power. They base their contention upon the minority opinion of the Court in the case of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U.S. 277), decided January 3, 1918. The Court was here testing the constitutional validity of the act of Congress adopted September 1, 1916, which prohibited the shipment or delivery for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of any article or commodity the product of any mill, mine, quarry, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in which, within 30 days prior to the removal of such product, children under the age of 14 years had been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 years and 16 years had been employed or permitted to work more than 8 hours in any one day.

The effort of Congress was to extend its power under the commerce clause to the point of preventing interstate traffic in articles or things produced or manufactured by anyone employing children under certain ages, and the purpose was to prevent child labor.

Mr. Justice Holmes, delivering the minority opinion in this case, in which Mr. Justice McKenna, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and Mr. Justice Clarke concurred, starts out with the broad proposition that the power to regulate includes the power to prohibit; but I respectfully submit that upon the authority of numerous decisions of the Court, including the majority opinion of the Court in this case, and as applied to commerce as a whole, this is not good law. The right to prohibit does apply in the sense that it may be used to protect and prevent commerce from being made an instrument of evil. The power of Congress to regulate foreign commerce is not the same as its power to regulate commerce between the States. The distinction lies in the extent of that power growing out of the difference in the relation of the United States to the two kinds of commerce, and the difference in the right of the citizen and the foreigner to engage therein. As to foreign commerce, complete sovereignty is in the General Government, whereas, as relates to interstate commerce, it exercises only that portion of sovereignty as is specially delegated. The citizen has a right, while the foreigner enjoys a privilege.

The famous Lottery case (Champion v. Ames, 188 U.S. 321), cited by Mr. Justice Holmes as affording an instance where the court upheld an act of Congress shutting out of commerce altogether lottery tickets, purely harmless within themselves, had certain characteristics that gave them an exception to the general rule.

The court divided in this case, yet in upholding the act the court based its finding upon the inherent quality of illegality in the lottery tickets themselves. The same thing applies in every other instance where the right to regulate has been construed to include the right to prohibit.

While this minority decision concedes that the States may regulate their internal affairs and their domestic commerce as they like, yet it asserts that when they seek to send their products across the State line, they are no longer within their rights. But is this true? While the States cannot impress their will upon interstate commerce, they have the right to the use of its instrumentalities, subject to regulatory conditions that attach after the article has entered commerce, and not before. If their rights to traffic in State products were limited to the exercise of their police powers, the management and control of only that part of production and manufacture that is consumed domestically, then but little power would be left to them, for each State, by the nature of its location, soil, climate, natural resources, and the like, is compelled to specialize along certain lines. For instance, Texas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and others with their cotton; Florida and California with citrus fruit; North Carolina, Virginia, and Kentucky with tobacco; Kansas and others with their wheat; Iowa and Illinois with their corn; the New England States with their textiles; Pennsylvania and others with their coal and steel; and so on, including all the States. All produce for sale and use in other States, which make up interstate commerce, which Congress has the power to regulate.

If production and manufacture in all these things are to be brought under Federal control, then the States had as well surrender all sovereignty to the United States for Congress and the courts will have construed the delegation of a special power to mean the right in Congress to seize all power, and the tenth amendment will have become deadwood in the Constitution and might as well be thrown out.

Does anyone believe that such was the intent and purpose of the framers of the Constitution? If the planting of a seed in the ground, the sticking of an ax in a tree, the lifting of a stone from the ground, the working of more than 6 hours in any 1 day are to be prohibited, except done in accordance with the dictates of Washington, then liberty is dead in America and the people are but food for the ravenous man of government.

See the majority opinion of the Court in this Dagenhart case, delivered by Mr. Justice Day, in which the Court sustains the proposition that the States are sovereign in the exercise of all powers except those delegated to the United States; that the powers the people have delegated the General Government are named in the Constitution, and all not there named, either expressly or by necessary implication, are reserved to the people and can be exercised only by them, or upon further grant from them; that the powers of the States to regulate matters of internal police within their limits applies not only to the health, morals, and safety of the public but also to whatever promotes the public peace, comfort, and convenience; that production and manufacture is no part of interstate commerce and, therefore, not subject to Federal control; that the employment of labor is purely a matter for control of the States; that Congress has no power to compel, either directly or indirectly, uniformity of legislation or legislation at all on the part of the States, and that to attempt to do so is to assume the exercise of a power which it does not have. In the majority opinion, and referring to the minority opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes and the cases cited by him, the Court said:

But it is insisted that adjudged cases in this Court establish the doctrine that the power to regulate given to Congress, incidentally the authority to prohibit the movement of ordinary commodities, and, therefore, the subject is not open for discussion. The cases demonstrate the contrary. They rest upon the character of governmental authority, State or National, possessed over them is such that the authority to prohibit as to them is but the assertion of the power to regulate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 or 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What would the gentleman do to remedy the situation of the 12,000,000 men who are out of employment?

Mr. COX. Oh, surely there is within the genius of the people of this country some suggestion to make possible a proper dealing with those conditions rather than a destruction of the substantive law, the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. Did I infer from the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia that he is against Congress fixing the minimum wage scale?

Mr. COX. Oh, of course. I submit it is not within the power of Congress to do anything of the kind.

Mr. BOLAND. Is the gentleman from Georgia aware of the fact that at the present in the State of Pennsylvania we have girls working for $1 a week in factories and mills?

Mr. COX. That is a matter over which the State of Pennsylvania has control, and it is within the competency of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania to deal with that situation.

Mr. BOLAND. Does not the gentleman think that Congress should have the right to fix that?

Mr. COX. Not at all.

Mr. BOLAND. I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman recognize the need for this legislation, provided Congress has the power under the Constitution to enact it?

Mr. COX. I approve of the divide-the-work movement that is going on. I believe that employment which is now being given should be spread out as far as possible with corresponding improvement in wages, but I would never concede that to be within the power or that it ought to be within the power of the General Government to do any such thing.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The reason I asked the gentleman that question is this: He has very ably raised the question of the constitutionality of this legislation. Substantially the same objection has been raised to the entire legislative program at this session of Congress. That being the case, I want to ask the gentleman if these objections do not fairly raise the question as to the flexibility of the Federal Constitution and its responsiveness to the needs of modern civilization?

Mr. COX. The courts have already dealt with situations created by legislation of a type similar to that to which I am directing my remarks, and in each and every instance the Court has held that it is not within the power of Congress to deal with it.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I have not yet made up my mind how I shall view this 30-hour-a-week matter myself, but I have listened very carefully to the gentleman's argument and want now to ask him a question. Does the gentleman not find that those cases he cites have drawn a sufficient distinction so that the Supreme Court could sustain this 30-hour a week law?

Mr. COX. No, they have not; but just to the contrary.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Very well. That brings up another query. The gentleman's argument has been based almost entirely upon the Federal Government trying to go into the States and saying to an enterprise that it must not do this or that, but the Federal Government is only saying to the enterprise, If you do thus and so, you cannot ship that material or the fabricated goods across the line.

Mr. COX. The Federal Government has no right to lay down any such conditions to a sovereign State, compliance with which on the part of the States must be made before the States may use the instrumentalities of commerce.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I am very much interested in the argument. Being a lawyer myself, I like to revel in such distinctions, but I have been more or less convinced by those same cases the gentleman cites, which I have read, that this law will be a good law.

Mr. COX. What case has the gentleman in mind?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The child labor law.

Mr. COX. I shall deal with that a little later, if I may have the time.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. And the Lottery case.

Mr. COX. I have that.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. All those cases the gentleman cites lead me to the belief that this would be a good law.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is not this a time when States have been unable to cope with situations with which they have been confronted, as is witnessed by the farm bill, farmers' mortgage bill, and home owners' loan bill, which were recently passed?

Mr. COX. That may be true; and if so, it is to be regretted; but it is no justification for the States or the people coming here and asking Congress to trespass upon the sovereign rights of the people to the extent that they seize and exercise powers which are not granted under the Constitution.

Mr. LANZETTA. There is this justification: If Congress has been asked to step in and help the farmers and home owners, the people who are out of employment have a right to come to Congress and ask Congress to help them.

Mr. COX. There is no Member of this House who is more in sympathy with the people out of employment than myself. Provision must be made to take care of their needs, and I am willing to exercise the Federal power within the limitations fixed by the Constitution.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I should like to say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA], who said that the working people were coming here and asking for this, I attended the hearings of the Committee on Labor recently, and Mr. Matthew Woll made a very serious attack on this bill. He said it would make serfs out of the American workman; so I am not so sure that labor is asking for this.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Not the 30-hour week.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The bill which the committee is considering right now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But his objection did not go to the 30-hour feature.

Mr. COX. It was to the minimum-wage provision.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It was to the minimum-wage provision and the power given the Secretary of Labor. That is all included in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The 30-hour provision was the important thing.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The hearings will disclose that Mr. Woll specifically stated he was in agreement with the position of President Green of the American Federation of Labor, and Mr. Green only opposed one provision of the Perkins' suggestion, which was the minimum-wage provision.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Well, if the gentleman will yield, I listened to Mr. Woll, and he made a bitter attack upon the bill from a half dozen angles.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will see that I asked that question, and in answer to me he said he agreed with President Green.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Gladly.

Mr. BECK. The gentleman is making a most useful and illuminating address, if he will permit me to say so, and I only want, if I may, to supplement one of the gentleman's arguments. The point is made in the case of Hammer against Dagenhart that the Court was almost equally divided. The gentleman probably has in mind the case of Bailey against Drexel Furniture Co.

Mr. COX. That is right. There is the North Carolina case.

Mr. BECK. Where a much broader and sweeping governmental power than that covering commerce was used to regulate conditions in respect to child labor; and the Supreme Court, as I recall it, unanimously held there could be no such perversion of the taxing power.

Mr. COX. No. Mr. Justice Clark dissented, without opinion. However, two of the dissenting judges in the Dagenhart case did concur.

Mr. BECK. Is it not a fact that the taxing power is a far more sweeping and far more unregulated power, more fundamental to the Government, than the incidental power of regulation under the commerce clause?

Mr. COX. That is unquestionably true.

Mr. BECK. Is it not a fact that the taxing power was given with only two exceptions, and otherwise was apparently an unrestricted grant to the Federal Government, and is it not a fact that the Supreme Court, with only a justice dissenting, said that the taxing power could not be perverted to regulate conditions of industry or manufacture?

Mr. COX. The gentleman is correct in his statement, and I thank him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. It seems to be generally assumed by those interested in the passage of this proposed legislation that its enactment would relieve unemployment. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not in his opinion it might not have exactly the contrary result in many sections of the country and in many industries, and bring about conditions under which industries that are now operating successfully and keeping their employees employed would have to stop their operations entirely?

Mr. COX. This wage board which the act proposes to set up would have the power to shut down indefinitely the operations of any plant that produced for interstate shipment, and there are possibilities where the exercise of the power would mean a reduction of employment rather than its increase.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield once further for a short question?

Mr. COX. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has given any consideration to making the provisions of this bill apply to foreign corporations; and if it is a good thing to pass the 30-hour week bill for labor in private industry, why should not Congress take the first step along that line by putting all Government employees under the 30-hour week and the 6-hour day? I read in the newspaper a day or so ago where a chauffeur for the Secretary of Labor left his job because she was working him 18 hours a day at the present time.

Mr. COX. Following the reading of the excerpt from Mr. Justice Day's decision in the Dagenhart case, referring to the dissent of Mr. Justice Holmes, the Court then proceeds to analyze the cases referred to and to illustrate the character of the particular subjects dealt with bringing them within the scope of the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States. This case is so completely in point and controlling on the questions raised that I feel justified in quoting further.

Referring to the fact that the employment of child labor in one State may result in unfair competition to another State not permitting such labor, the Court said:

There is no power vested in Congress to require the States to exercise their police power so as to prevent possible unfair competition. Many causes may cooperate to give one State, by reason of local laws or conditions, an economic advantage over others. The commerce clause was not intended to give to Congress a general authority to equalize such conditions. In some of the States laws have been passed fixing minimum wages for women; in others the local law regulates the hours of women in various employments. Business done in such States may be at an economic disadvantage when compared with States that have no regulations; surely, this fact does not give Congress the power to deny transportation in interstate commerce to those who carry on business where the hours of labor and the rate of compensation for women have not been fixed by a standard in use in other States and approved by Congress.

The grant of power to Congress over the subject of interstate commerce was to enable it to regulate such commerce and not give it authority to control States in their exercise of the police power over local trade and manufacture.

The grant of authority over a purely Federal matter was not intended to destroy the local power always existing and carefully reserved to the States in the tenth amendment to the Constitution.

Police regulations of the internal trade and affairs of the States have been uniformly recognized as within such control.

And again the Court says:

That there should be limitations upon the right to employ children in mines and factories in the interest of their own and public welfare, all will admit. * * * It may be desirable that such laws be uniform, but our Federal Government is one of enumerated powers. "This principle," declared Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316), is universally admitted. * * * In interpreting the Constitution it must never be forgotten that the Nation is made up of States to which are intrusted the powers of local government. And to them and to the people the powers not expressly delegated to the National Government are reserved. Lane County v. Oregon (7 Wall. 71). The power of the States to regulate their purely internal affairs by such laws as seem wise to the local authority is inherent and has never been surrendered to the General Government. * * * To sustain this statute would not, in our judgment, be the lawful exertion of congressional authority over interstate commerce but would sanction an invasion by the Federal power of the control of a matter purely local in its character, and over which no authority has been delegated to Congress in conferring the power to regulate commerce among the States.

Following the decision of the Supreme Court in Hammer against Dagenhart, holding unconstitutional the act of Congress of 1916 regulating child labor through denying the right of any product of any producer named in the act in whose plants child labor had been employed to enter interstate commerce, Congress in February 1919 adopted another measure in which the same thing was sought to be accomplished, but in a different manner.

In this act Congress sought to impose a tax on the employment of child labor and provided that any mine or quarry—any mill, cannery, workshop, or factory in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work—shall pay for such taxable year an excise equivalent to 10 percent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the products of his mine or other establishment.

In 1921, Bailey, United States collector of internal revenue for North Carolina, under authority of this act, made demand upon the Drexel Furniture Co. for a tax alleged to have accrued for 1919 for having employed a boy in its factory under 14 years of age. The company admitted the employment of the boy, paid the tax under protest, and brought suit to recover it, alleging that the tax was illegal because collected under a statute that was unconstitutional. The case was decided by the Supreme Court May 15, 1922 (Bailey, Collector, etc., v. Drexel Furniture Co., 259 U.S. 20), and the decision of the Court was announced by Mr. Chief Justice Taft.

Between 1916, when the Dagenhart case was decided and 1922 when this case came up, Chief Justice White had passed on and Mr. Taft had taken his place. The decision in this case was put squarely upon the majority opinion in the Dagenhart case, and was concurred in by three of the judges dissented in the Dagenhart case, only Mr. Justice Clarke having dissented without opinion.

The attempt by Congress in this instance was the same as in the previous case; that is, regulate the use of child labor, a purely State function, and to do so through the use of the taxing power. In both cases Congress sought to do by indirect means that which it had no power to do directly, the use of a power to accomplish one purpose that was granted for an entirely different purpose; and here, as before, the attempt was to cure an evil which only the States can treat. In this case the Court said:

It is the high duty of this Court in cases regularly brought to its bar to decline to recognize or enforce seeming laws of Congress dealing with subjects not intrusted to Congress, but left or committed by the supreme law of the land to the control of the States. We cannot avoid the duty, even though it require us to refuse to give effect to legislation designed to promote the highest good. The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature, because it leads citizens and legislators of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious breach it will make in the ark of our covenant or the harm which will come from breaking down recognized standards. In the maintenance of local self-government, on the one hand, and the national power, on the other, our country has been able to endure and prosper for near a century and a half.

The Court further said:

Grant the validity of this law and all that Congress would need to do hereafter, in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the States have never parted with and which are reserved to them by the tenth amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called "tax" upon departure from it. To give such magic to the word "tax" would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the States.

And again the Court said:

The case before us cannot be distinguished from that of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U.S. 251). Congress there enacted a law to prohibit transportation in interstate commerce of goods made at a factory in which there was employment of children within the same ages and for the same number of hours per day and days in a week as are penalized by the act in this case. In the case at bar, Congress—in the name of a tax which on the face of the act is a penalty—seeks to do the same thing, and the effort must be equally futile. The authority of the Dagenhart case is clear. The congressional power over interstate commerce is, within its proper scope, just as complete and unlimited as the congressional power to tax, and the legislative motive in its exercise is just as free from judicial suspicion and inquiry. Yet when Congress threatens to stop interstate commerce in ordinary and necessary commodities, unobjectionable as subjects of transportation, and to deny the same to the people of a State in order to coerce them into compliance with Congress' regulation of State concerns, the Court said that this was not in fact a regulation of interstate commerce, but rather that of State concerns, and was invalid. So here the so-called "tax" is a penalty to coerce people of a State to act as Congress wishes them to act in respect of a matter completely the business of the State government under the Federal Constitution.

Then the Court proceeds to discuss cases sustaining taxing measures pressed as having the effect or tendency of accomplishing purpose not directly within congressional power.

The minimum-wage feature of the proposal I will be compelled to omit from this discussion, but it will be gone into at a later date.

If I do not weary you, I should like to take up and discuss very briefly a few of the cases relied upon as sustaining the minority opinion in the Dagenhart case; that is, that regulation may take the form of prohibition.

In the case of In re Rahrer (140 U.S. 545), there arose the question of the validity of the prohibition law of the State of Kansas as applied to liquor in original packages shipped in from another State and the constitutionality of the act of Congress exempting such liquors of immunity because of their interstate character upon being introduced into a State that had adopted such laws in the exercise of their police powers.

The Court held that State jurisdiction attached not by virtue of the law of Congress but because of its effect in placing the liquor where State jurisdiction could attach. In other words, Congress conferred no power upon the States not already possessed, "but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction." Distinction was drawn between State police powers and Federal commercial powers, the Court saying:

Though quite distinguishable when they do not approach each other, may yet, like the intervening colors between white and black, approach so nearly as to perplex the understanding, as colors perplex the vision in marking the distinction between them.

The effect of the decision was to hold that because the article was prohibited in the State of Kansas and by virtue of the act of Congress withdrawing Federal protection, it no longer belonged to commerce after coming to rest in the State in which it was an outlaw.

The case is so full of good State-rights doctrine and fine reasoning that I commend its study to those interested in the subject.

In the Lottery case (188 U.S. 321), the Court simply held that lottery tickets are things of value; they represent the chance for large prizes; that they are subjects of traffic and therefore are subjects of commerce; and that the regulation of their carriage is a regulation of commerce among the several States.

The question was, Can regulation be carried to the point of prohibition? The Court again said that the character of the article and the nature of the traffic could not be overlooked; that the common forms of gambling are comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the wide-spread pestilence of lotteries that prey upon the hard earnings of the poor and plunders the ignorant and simple; that Congress had the power to keep the channels of commerce from becoming polluted by things determined to be injurious to the health or morals of the people, or as constituting a burden upon commerce. But let it again be said that Congress has not the power to close the channels of commerce to property of a lawful character, harmless in its nature, useful and necessary and subjects of barter and sale.

The feature of the "bad egg case", Hipolite Co. v. United States (220 U.S. 45), that gives it value as authority for the advocates of this measure was the holding of the Court as to the extent that an article can be pursued as still being in commerce after it has come to rest. This was a libel proceeding brought by the United States under the Pure Food Act against 50 cans of adulterated eggs shipped from the State of Missouri into the State of Illinois and brought while the eggs were still in original packages and in the hands of consignee. Section 10 of the act provides that if—any article of food that is adulterated and is being transported from one State to another for sale, or, having been transported, remains unloaded, unsold, or in original unbroken packages, shall be liable to be proceeded against and seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation.

The libel was resisted upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the thing sought to be condemned, and cited Warning v. The Mayor (8 Wall. 110), in which the Court said:

When the importer sells the imported articles or otherwise mixes them with the general property of the States by breaking up the packages, the state of things changes, as was said by this court in the leading case, as the tax then finds the articles already incorporated with the mass of property by the act of the importer. Importers selling the imported articles in the original packages are shielded from any such State tax, but the privilege of exemption is not extended to the purchaser, as the merchandise, by the sale and delivery, loses its distinctive character as an import.

Hoke v. United States (227 U.S. 308) is the first case that arose under the White Slave Act, which outlawed the transportation of women and girls for immoral purposes.

The court held that—

While women are not articles of merchandise, the power of Congress to regulate their transportation in interstate commerce is the same, and it may prohibit such transportation if for immoral purposes.

That—

The right to be transported in interstate commerce is not a right to employ interstate transportation as a facility to do wrong, and Congress may prohibit such transportation to the extent of the White Slave Traffic Act of 1910.

I would like to deal more fully with this case and to analyze the other white-slave cases, the Clark Distilling Co., the Seven Cases of Eckman's Alternative case, and others, but the time necessary for this is not at my disposal. Suffice it to say that in every instance it was because of the nature of the traffic that the power of Congress to deal therewith was upheld.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I may suggest that my reading of the bill which the gentleman is discussing has convinced me that the vicious element of it is the fact that it undertakes by indirection to prohibit business, that is, by limiting the number of hours, by penalizing, by refusing shipment in interstate commerce; and secondly, by putting everybody who violates an order of the Secretary of Labor on a black list.

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, we must not lose sight of the fact that the Federal Union was built upon the States and that it is a government of delegated powers, that all powers not specially delegated are reserved to the States or the people, which fact is given emphasis in the tenth article of the amendment. If the powers delegated are not sufficient for Federal purposes, then the question of granting more should be submitted to the people in the form of amendments. To argue that our chief concern is in the doing of things without regard to how they are done is to rebel against the law and to seize powers that belong alone to the people.

The Federal Government is alone supreme in the exercise of the powers delegated to it. In all other respects and to the same degree the States are supreme, but back of all government is the sovereignty of the people, and into this field Congress cannot go without trespassing upon the sovereign rights of the people.

What becomes of the guaranties of the Constitution to the people to protect them in the enjoyment and use of their faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where they will, to earn a livelihood by any lawful calling, and to enjoy in peace and security the fruits of their labor if Congress is to harness them up with all sorts of alleged legal restrictions and make them subject to the dictates of a single agent of the Government?

Mr. Speaker, what does this measure mean to the American people? If it alone operates to divide work without added costs to business and without slowing down operations, then the effect will be that those now employed will be required to provide support for the unemployed. This will lighten the load that charity is carrying, but it will not increase the purchasing power.

If it means that for 30 hours of work the laborer is to receive pay for 48 hours, and if production and manufacture is not to slow down the effect will be to increase manufacturing costs, which will be passed on to the consumer and reflected back on the producers of raw commodities. Those industries that enjoy monopolies and high-tariff subsidies may carry on without difficulty, except that involved in higher consumer costs. But how will this work with those industries that enjoy no such advantage? How will it affect agriculture?

Take the cotton spinners, for illustration. They have no monopoly and can have none. They have no effective tariff subsidy. When their business is taken over by the Government, who sets up for them a wage scale, regulates hours of labor, stops operations to hold down production in the interest of price, operating costs are bound to rise, which must be made up in some way, and since they cannot be passed on to the buying public, due to the like of consumer demand, they can only be reflected back to the farmer in lower price for his already underpriced commodity. The same thing applies to the growers of wheat, corn, potatoes, peanuts, hogs, cattle, and all other farm commodities. This means a further disparity of price between what the farmer has to sell and that which he is compelled to buy. It means his eternal ruin.

The farmer who produces all these commodities for interstate shipment is made subject to the law under section 4 of the bill. He is not to be permitted to work his labor more than 30 hours per week, and the wage that he shall pay is to be fixed not by him but by the Government. He will be made to keep books and submit to examination, and if he fails to obey the orders that descend upon him from Washington he will be thrown in jail and made to do penal servitude.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Would the gentleman be in favor of a 6-hour day and a 5-day week if it would give employment to at least 5,000,000 men and women?

Mr. COX. Oh, not through having it fixed by the Federal Government; of course not.

Mr. DUNN. The question is, would the gentleman favor it if he were assured it would give that much additional employment?

Mr. COX. As a citizen of my State, if conditions demanded it, as they probably do, I, of course, might take that position in a case where the State sought to treat the problem as one within its own responsibility.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. If instead of the specific bill the gentleman is discussing, discretionary power were granted to the President to fix the hours of labor and to fix minimum wages, would the gentleman favor it?

Mr. COX. If the grant carried with it the implication of the use of powers not delegated to Congress, I would resist it; but no one questions but that the President will use only in a constitutional manner such powers as have been and will be delegated to him. I am not afraid of the President, and therefore am not afraid to grant him broad powers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if work hours and price of labor are to be fixed for one industry, then it must be fixed for all; and if price be fixed for all, then the price of the things that labor produces must be fixed, and price fixing means high prices. It is a form of guaranty of profit and is intended to defeat the law of supply and demand.

The measure takes no account of the difference in the conditions of men. One may have no obligations, no dependent, owe no debts, and be the owner of property, with money in the bank, and therefore under no compulsion to work more than 6 hours per day; while another may be penniless and homeless, with many dependents, and therefore driven by necessity to earn all that he can. As between the necessities of the two, the proposal makes no distinction.

What is to become of the lower-paid employee? What is to be the effect upon his life and that of his family when he is denied the right to work more than 6 hours per day and 5 days per week? What could be more intolerable to them, the farmer, the miller, and other small operator, indeed, for all, than for the Government to take charge of their business and their lives?

It may be insisted that this Federal control is not to be applied directly to the farmer; but how will it affect him? Let me illustrate: If it be expected that the earning power of the laborer is not to be cut down, that under the proposed law he will draw the same pay for a short day's work that he now draws for a long day's work, it will mean that the operating costs of the railroads will be increased three quarters of a billion dollars, which must be paid by the users of the services that the railroads render—and the farmer is a large user of these services. It means that rail transportation costs will go up, whereas they are already too high. A hundred or more such illustrations could be given. It means higher-priced farm implements and lower-priced cotton and all other crops.

Mr. Speaker, the measure does not come forth as a temporary remedy to take care of an emergency, but is proposed as a permanent policy of government. It proceeds upon the assumption that the depression is to continue as a permanent condition, whereas we must believe that the future holds for the people the promise of something better than penury and want.

Is this proposed law what the people want? Are they not entitled to something better than despotism? Must we destroy what it has taken more than a century and a half to build? Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is some saner and juster way of accomplishing that which must be done.

Mr. Speaker, nothing that Russia has done is worse than what is here proposed. This measure is the death warrant of all human liberty in America. It is to the people a denial of the right to live their lives in a fashion agreeable to their own will. It is madness without tuition or restraint. It is the jailhouse of reason, a snare and a delusion. In its every word and every line there is a dagger thrust at the best part of life, and if it should be enacted into law and be upheld by the courts it will prove to be the executioner of the liberties of the people. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that such a measure will ever become law with the sanction of our great President. [Applause.]

FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 135

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution, the House shall proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill, H.R. 4606, and all points of order against said conference report shall be waived.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF INDUSTRY

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes, on the subject of the 30-hour week.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, since there is no real business before the House this afternoon I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his point of no quorum? My colleague from Connecticut would like to discuss the 30-hour week bill a few minutes. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not insist upon his point of no quorum.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut.

There was no objection.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that in the closing hour of this day I feel compelled to intrude upon your time by asking you to hear something more on this very important subject, but my conscience compels me, after hearing the very eloquent speech of the gentleman from Georgia, to burn just a little incense for the 15,000,000 people who are out of work. I am sorry I have not his gift of eloquence, that I cannot weave words into beautiful language as he did, and that I am not fully prepared to make a speech at this time on this particular subject; but I think it is fitting and proper on behalf of those who look to us for relief that there be in the RECORD at this particular place something in defense of this all-important measure.

I am not a lawyer and I am not qualified to discuss the constitutional features of this particular bill, but I believe we have arrived at the time in the history of this country when we must give thought to the security of the Nation. I thought, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] spoke about the destruction of sovereign rights, that perhaps we would have no pure food law on the statute books now if the same sovereign rights of the States did apply. I am satisfied that if, in an earlier day, we needed the pure food law to protect the health and welfare of the people of this country then we need such a law a thousandfold now. While I would like to believe, as he does, that we should be permitted to work this thing out by the process of evolution rather than revolution, I think it is much less serious to tell a man how long he may work than to tell him he may not work at all. [Applause.]

I think most of the Members of this House have long since concluded that there can be no return of good times until the buying power of the Nation is restored. I think we have heard so much on the subject that the membership of this House fully appreciates that more than half of the buying power of this Nation at this moment is completely destroyed. If it is true—and I believe it is—that there are 15,000,000 people out of work, I doubt that anyone will disagree when I say that this represents half of the Nation's population. Half of the buying power of the population is completely destroyed, and the buying power of the other half, the half to which you gentlemen belong, has been very seriously impaired. People who are working, and professional men who are attending to the wants of those in misery, are not being paid. This buying power is steadily going downhill, and we know we cannot reconstruct this buying power until people return to work.

There are so many features to this all-important subject, so many things worthy of consideration, that they cannot be discussed in the brief time of 15 minutes, and I do not want to trespass upon your time too long now. If I had the time, and you had the time, I would like to discuss at great length the result of the inventive genius of the past 15 years.

Oh, I would like to see this thing work out as the distinguished gentleman from Georgia would have it work out. He said he did favor the shorter work plan. That is all this bill asks be done. The manufacturers of this country have staggered in the wilderness for the last 4 years. They have pursued a floundering philosophy. They have asked for and have agreed to share the work; but it fails to work, and as a last resort, Members of Congress who are concerned with the plight of these people have exerted their efforts and the kind of inventive genius they have, in an attempt to spread the rewards of the inventive genius that the manufacturing interests of this country have denied to the people who work.

Oh, there can be no return to good times until this inventive genius is divided. It does not belong to the manufacturers alone. It belongs to the people who work for them, to the farmers of this country, to the merchants, and others who make up the national structure, and until it is divided we cannot have good times.

Patiently, the people have waited, and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, no man in this House has been more closely face to face with the problems of unemployment than I have. I have been mayor of an industrial city since the beginning of this depression. I have heard the cries of misery and the moanings of hungry and anxious mothers and the appeals of weary and worried fathers, and I know we cannot delay too long the return of better times.

I know the staggering load being borne by the communities of this Nation because people cannot pay their taxes, and just so long as we delay a measure that would get people back to work, just so long do we threaten this entire structure that we are praying here to preserve.

Oh, I wish I had proper time for the preparation of a speech at this point on this particular subject. I hope you will not be swayed by these appeals to your constitutional thought, by these emotional appeals about destroying the Constitution. There can be naught but destruction unless we get these people back to work, and whether they did it by accident or design the founders of this Nation so wrote the Constitution that it could be flexible, and, in my humble opinion, if this law does become effective and it goes to the Supreme Court of the United States, there will be a great surprise in store for those lawyers who say at this time that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. KVALE. Does not the gentleman believe that applies also to the child labor law which was declared unconstitutional some years ago?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I certainly do. I think there would be an entirely different decision on the part of the Supreme Court if they were called upon to decide that question at this time.

Mr. COX. What has happened to make the gentleman entertain that thought?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. There has been a change in the membership for one thing, and conditions are considerably different now from what they were at that time. I think the Supreme Court would have a great concern for the situation of the Nation, because of the fact there are 15,000,000 people out of work now.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit, I am very much impressed with the splendid statement the gentleman from Connecticut is making and I know he is honest and sincere in this movement. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. I favor the principle of the shorter work week, and always have. Does not the gentleman believe that any legislation that is brought in here for a 30-hour week should apply to foreign imports?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I certainly do.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And does not the gentleman believe that if it is a good thing for private industry we ought to establish it in the Government institutions?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I certainly do.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am very much in accord with what the gentleman has said pertaining to reducing the hours of labor, but why is it necessary to bog down that simple proposition with all of this control of industry which is being brought into this bill? Why would it not be better to just bring in a bill providing for shortening the hours of labor without all this socialistic and Government control and domination of industry?

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. I am making an appeal for the principle of the regulation of working hours and not the bill in question.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman and I are in full accord then.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank you. [Applause.]

FARM RELIEF

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules for printing.

The report was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The following is the resolution:

House Resolution 136

Resolved, That notwithstanding the previous action of the House relative to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 3835, immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall consider said conference report without the intervention of points of order against the same.

Mr. NESBIT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NESBIT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am not a lawyer, and therefore I have no legal mind. I have mind enough to know, however, and I feel that I am practical minded enough to know that you cannot feed hungry mouths with court decisions.

I also desire to state that if I understand the question being discussed here now we are merely talking on the subject. There is no bill before the House at this time and there was no necessity for quoting all the different court decisions. The Labor Committee, of which I am a member, has not yet submitted a bill. We are working on that now and expect the bill to be reported later.

It must be evident to every Member of Congress that prompt and definite action on the part of this Congress is necessary to relieve our existing and serious situation regarding unemployment.

There are more people unemployed now than when this session convened, and according to the figures of the American Federation of Labor this idle army has risen to the enormous figure of 15,000,000. What a tragedy in a land of wealth and a land of plenty!

Our whole commercial, industrial, and economic structure seems to be hung up on a hook—a big, fat, strong hook. Manufacturers and industrialists are making no attempt to lift it off and put it back in working order. No one seems to be able to do anything about it except talk and hope and whine and scold.

In face of conditions as they are—with conditions getting worse—it surely behooves this body to act, and in a way that will be effective, constructive, and definite. Some constructive legislation has already been passed but more is needed, and needed now.

The people of this Nation are in the dumps. They are up a blind alley and are looking eagerly and with interest to this Congress to lead the way out. I speak of the great masses and not those referred to as the privileged few.

If someone had suggested a few years ago legislation for the banks of this country they would have resented it and rose in horror and protested against governmental interference with their affairs, but recently they came to the Government at Washington and asked Congress to save them from themselves. What is true about them is about to take place with the railroads, and what is true of the banks and the railroads is true of industry. They are lying prostrate and unable to straighten out the situation.

The latter have had their day in court and have failed. It is they who, in the main, are responsible for the distress and suffering which now stalk the land. So far as I am concerned the exploiters of labor and of the country's resources are going to get in line and cooperate with the Government in an honest endeavor to bring about some necessary adjustments. They continue to see the universe through a gimlet hole and blind themselves to the ever-growing unrest that is prevalent everywhere.

The pangs of hunger and want is a dangerous element in society. When it affects too many and lasts too long it usually causes trouble. The pages of history of this old world contain sufficient evidence for me (and should for every thinking American who stands for right and justice and a square deal) that to temporize longer with the conditions affecting the happiness and comforts and lives of millions of men, women, and children is, to say the least, bad business.

Anyone who cannot see the handwriting on the wall must be blind. Fifteen million unemployed—millions more working only part-time with wages on the downward trend is a gloomy picture. With their dependents added this brings us to a total number of approximately 40,000,000 of our citizens thus affected and without the bare necessities of life.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a depression. It is a catastrophe—horrible to depict and terrible indeed to mention. But it is here! What are we going to do about it? Vote for this bill when it comes to this House. It will help. It will go a long way toward relieving unemployment and distress.

We will have to either feed, fight, or get jobs for these people. I will not fight them. I know their wants and desires. I am for spreading the work and creating more jobs. That is what they need, that is what they want, and that is what they are entitled to. That is what this bill proposes to do.

We need not refer to radical writing to find clear and pronounced expression that our economic system is breaking down. Outstanding business men, economists, and statesmen of vision and understanding are becoming anxious and alarmed about the affairs and safety of our country. Not Trotskys and Lenins and Stalins, but American citizens in high places are sounding the warning.

Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, told the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce some years ago that a system which permitted five or six million men to be out of work in a country bursting with wealth "can be said to have failed in at least one very important detail." Now we have millions more. It was Willard again, and no member of a proscribed order, who said that if he were one of the jobless in those circumstances he would steal before he would starve.

Robert S. Brookings, wealthy retired manufacturer, president emeritus of Washington University, of St. Louis, wrote in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, in advocating a modified form of capitalism, that—

Our western civilization must vindicate its worth, if it is to endure.

And he added that it could vindicate its worth—only by demonstrating its ability to correct its own defects and its consequent capacity for constructive development.

Prof. F. W. Taussig, of Harvard, sees—control and power concentrated in a few hands to an ominous degree.

And Henry W. Anderson, conservative Virginia lawyer and a member of the Wickersham Commission, finds in his survey of the causes of crime that the American people, as an incident to the exploitation for private gain of one of the most fruitful areas of the world, have—created the widest spread between the extremes of wealth and poverty existing in the western world.

Senator JAMES COUZENS, of Michigan, who helped to create the Ford Motor Co. and made a fortune out of it, sounds the warning:

People will not suffer indefinitely in the midst of plenty.

And Dr. L. D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota, declares that—communism in its various forms will not be held at bay by negative actions.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, asserts that we are passing through no ordinary depression but through a revolutionary period brought on by long-accumulating forces.

What the country needs—

He says—

is personalities who are not anxious, like the jockey, to keep their seat in politics, but who are willing to tell the people the truth and to guide them toward a constructive, a liberal, and a progressive solution of those vast problems.

Dean Wallace B. Donham, of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, author of Business Adrift, said to a meeting of the Industrial Chamber of Commerce in Washington—that if there were not sufficient brains and good will in the world to solve the problems of the depression, then our mass production, our scientific progress, our control over nature, may actually destroy civilization.

Charles G. Ross, political writer for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, says:

Our general depression is home-made and fundamentally due to the maldistribution of wealth.

He goes on to say:

The 504 supermillionaires at the top of the heap in 1929 had an aggregate net income, for taxation purposes, of $1,185,000,000. These 504 persons could have purchased with this income virtually the entire wheat and cotton crops of 1930—the two chief cash crops of the Nation, representing the labor of 1,300,000 wheat farmers and 1,032,000 cotton farmers.

Dr. George Knapp, of the railway men's newspaper, Labor, shows, from official statistics, that in comparison with the $538,664,187 net income of the 85 wealthiest taxpayers in 1929, the 421,000 workers in the clothing industry received in wages $475,318,677. In other words—

These 85 men could have paid the entire wage bill of the clothing industry and still have left for themselves about three quarters of a million apiece.

Federal legislation establishing the 6-hour day and the 5-day week in American industry is the new emancipation proclamation of American labor. Other adjustments to carry forward the high social purposes behind this legislation must come just as reconstruction and adjustment followed the freeing of the slaves.

Economic quackery, blind and prejudiced propaganda have aroused phantom fears in a few of our industrial leaders. In the midst of ruined lives, ruined business, and abundant wealth they would avert the avalanche of crucial events by blind devotion to the economic ritual of outworn Troy dogmas.

There are 15,000,000 willing American workers idle. Unemployment is increasing faster than the means of relief. We must face this situation constructively and fearlessly. We must do the thing that is needed. The alternative is to sit down and wait until the rising distress of the vast army of unemployed overwhelms our domestic tranquillity. We must take up the slack of unemployment.

Those who maintain that a reduced working day and a reduced working week will further decrease the individual's weekly total wage speak without knowledge of the history of the movement for increased leisure to workers.

The president of the American Federation of Labor, William Green, spoke with the authority of past accomplishments behind him when he told the House Committee on Labor that the establishment of the 5-day week and the 6-hour day would tend to increase wages rather than to diminish them. The movement for wage reduction during the current depression has proceeded regardless of the working hours in various industries. Many short-sighted manufacturers have mercilessly slashed wages, despite their pledges not to do so. The vast reservoir of the unemployed who are undernourished and desperate does more to depress wages than any other thing.

America awaits increased spending power. In the face of the abdication of private business, the Government must care for the collective wants of its people or else fail to justify its existence. "America has not lost its wealth", we are told in Al Smith's New Outlook for April. It has lost control over its wealth. How will that control be re-established? Not by a return to sweated labor; not by destroying labor's collective bargaining power. We must take the forward path, create the leisure which consumers need for the enjoyment of twentieth-century products, and create the purchasing power with which those products can be obtained. We live in the richest single community ever built and inhabited by man. Why should we stand helpless before this peril of plenty? Shall we bow down to the machine and fear to eat the manna which it provides? Shall we remain slaves of the things we have created, or shall we act as intelligent men?

Wage standards under the 8-hour day are far above the standards under the old 12-hour and 10-hour day. Both employers and employees have profited by the shorter working time; and even if temporarily this should fail to check the downward course of wages in its disastrous plunge, it will solidify labor and give it the backlog of security to support its demand for what has already been conceded by far-sighted employers who have already established the working conditions required in this new legislation. The 5-day week has been adopted by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., the Standard Oil Co., and the great cereal manufacturers. They report that the workers have increased their efficiency and their total output and are earning the wages which others receive for longer working hours.

Special hardships which this might bring to farmers and certain industries dealing with perishables are eliminated in the exemption clauses of the bill. This legislation is part of the "new deal." Those who oppose it most blindly today will benefit by its far-visioned philosophy. This is progress.

[Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NESBIT. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I am in accord with everything the gentleman has said. I am for the bill, but I have heard some very distressing things in connection with it. I have heard it is not a part of the administration program, and that the administration is not in favor of it; that when the committee reports the bill into the House, the Democratic leadership will not allow it to be considered. Can the gentleman, as a member of the committee, give us some information on any of those three things?

Mr. NESBIT. I cannot give the gentleman any definite information on that matter.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRUNNER, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. AUF DER HEIDE, on account of death in family.

Mr. REED of New York, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina, for 2 days, on account of important official business.

To Mr. KENNEDY of New York, for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p.m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 9, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

(Tuesday, May 9, 1933, 10 a.m.)

Hearing in the old Office Building, room 483, on House bill 3842 (the deportation of alien seamen) and other business.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

59. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill for the relief of the D. F. Tyler Corporation and the Norfolk Dredging Co., both of Norfolk, Va., was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WARREN: Committee on Accounts. House Resolution 132. Resolution authorizing the payment of the expenses of the Judiciary Committee in investigating the official conduct of James A. Lowell (Rept. No. 103). Ordered to be printed.

Mr. POU: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 131. Resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 5081; without amendment (Rept. No. 104). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Committee on Mines and Mining. S. 7. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska; without amendment (Rept. No. 105). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DRIVER: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 135. Resolution providing for the consideration of conference report on H.R. 4606. An act to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 106). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McFARLANE: Committee on Naval Affairs. S. 753. An act to confer the degree of bachelor of science upon graduates of the Naval Academy; without amendment (Rept. No. 107). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GREENWOOD: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 136. Resolution providing for the consideration of conference report on H.R. 3835. An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power; without amendment (Rept. No. 108). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 4870. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.; with amendment (Rept. No. 109). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BULWINKLE: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 5152. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to replace and maintain a bridge across Northwest River in Norfolk County, Va., on State Highway Route No. 27; with amendment (Rept. No. 110). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BULWINKLE: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 5173. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to maintain a bridge already constructed to replace a weak structure in the same location, across the Staunton and Dan Rivers, in Mecklenburg County, Va., on United States Route No. 15; without amendment (Rept. No. 111). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 5476. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.; without amendment (Rept. No. 112). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LEA of California: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 1278. An act to amend an act (Public, No. 431, 72d Cong.) to identify The Dalles Bridge Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 113). Referred to the House Calendar.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5567) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at certain navy yards certified by the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5568) for the relief of A. W. Duckett & Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

928. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Civil Service Forum, at a meeting in New York City, declaring that it is unalterably opposed to the recommendation of the Budget Director, which must surely result in men who have devoted their lives to the service of the Government at modest salaries with no chance to accumulate wealth, hurriedly and almost without any opportunity to adjust their lives or living conditions, being subjected to such drastic curtailment of income; to the Committee on Appropriations.

929. By Mr. DONDERO: Petition of the Cook Nelson Post, No. 20, American Legion, Pontiac, Mich., recognizing the need for economy, has supported the President to the extent of a $450,000,000 cut from veterans, but urge individually and as a post that no further reduction be made in the national defense by the abandoning of training of the National Guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, citizens' military training camps, reserve officers' training, and Naval Militia, and, further, that our national defenses be built up to the full limits of our 5-5-3 Treaty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

930. Also, House Concurrent Resolution No. 63 of the Michigan State Legislature, adopted by both the house and senate, protesting against the elimination of the National Guard of Michigan's field training and armory training period to be cut to 24 drills instead of 48 per year, and maintaining that this act would mean the ultimate dispersion of the National Guard in the State of Michigan, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

931. By Mr. ELTSE of California: Assembly Joint Resolution No. 9, adopted March 16, 1933, by California Assembly, relative to memorializing Congress to adopt legislation with reference to manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

932. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 24, adopted March 24, 1933, by California Assembly, relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a moratorium on foreclosures of real property mortgages and on sales under deeds of trust on real property; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

933. By Mr. KENNEY: Petition of the Progress Club of Englewood, N.J., in a regular meeting assembled the 24th day of April 1933, protesting against the injustice being done to the Jews of Germany on the ground that it is contrary to the conduct of civilized nations of the world, in which the rights of minorities to an equal economic existence with the majorities is a bulwark of endurance; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

934. By Mr. LESINSKI: Concurrent resolution of the Michigan State Legislature, protesting against a change in the status of the National Guard of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on Appropriations.

935. Also, resolution passed by the Detroit City Council, urging passage of a bill permitting that cities be granted a moratorium on debts through Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

936. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Seaboard-Great Lakes Corporation, New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

937. Also, petition of John J. Ott, chairman Kings County Home Mortgage Relief Committee, Brooklyn, N.Y., concerning the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

938. Also, petition of Civil Service Forum, New York City, opposing the 30-year retirement bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

939. Also, petition of Atlantic Lighterage Corporation, New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

940. Also, petition of Charles W. Schroeder, Jamaica, N.Y., urging support of House bill 5206, the Post Office substitutes bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

941. Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, New York City, opposing any further reduction in the armed forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

942. Also, petition of Chamber of Commerce of the United States, New York City, recommending Federal securities bill to establish Federal supervision of interstate traffic in investment securities be modified to relieve officers and directors of liability when they act upon expert opinion and advice and in good faith; that separate consideration be given in the bill to temporary borrowings of corporations in order that its requirements will not hamper or prevent short-term financing; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

943. By Mr. LUDLOW: Petition of the Beth-El Men's Club of Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against the treatment accorded Jews in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

944. Also, petition of Ruth Caplan and Morris Caplan, of Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against treatment of Jews in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

945. Also, petition of the Retail and Wholesale Meat Dealers of Indiana, favoring the immediate consideration of legislation placing adequate duties on all imports of animal, marine, and vegetable oils and fats, as well as the oil content of all raw materials from which such oils and fats are processed, and on hides and skins; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

946. By Mr. PATMAN: Petition of Louis Kaufman and 183 other ex-service men and taxpayers of Pittsburgh, Pa., urging the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

947. By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., memorializing Congress to enact House Joint Resolution 191 and Senate Joint Resolution 105 to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen in 1783 and appointment of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, a hero of the Revolutionary War, by issuing special series of postage stamps in honor of Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko sesquicentennial anniversary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

948. Also, petition of the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., condemning all acts of persecution reported to be committed against the members of the Jewish faith in Germany, and urging the President and Congress to present these sentiments to the German Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

949. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, opposing any further reduction in the armed forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

950. Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring modification of Federal securities bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

951. Also, petition of the Civil Service Forum, New York City, declaring that it is unalterably opposed to the recommendation as presented by the Director of the Budget, with reference to the retirement of Federal employees after 30 years' service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

952. Also, petition of the Seaboard-Great Lakes Corporation, Coast, Canal and Great Lakes Transportation, 21 West Street, New York City, opposing the passage of House bill 3739; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

953. Also, petition of John J. Ott, chairman, the Kings County Home Mortgage Relief Committee, a group of 41 organizations of Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring certain amendments to the home owners loan bill, Senate bill 1317; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

954. Also, petition of board of managers of the Queensboro Tuberculosis and Health Association, Jamaica, N.Y., favoring amendment to the postage rate bill, now before the Senate, so that 2-cent rate will cover entire greater city of New York, now under the jurisdiction of four postmasters; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

955. Also, petition of New York Women's Trade Union League, 247 Lexington Avenue, New York City, favoring the passage of the Black bill, S. 153, 30-hour workweek; to the Committee on Labor.

956. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress to pass an act permitting cities, counties, and States to deposit their bonds with the Federal Government in exchange for currency; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

957. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to an increase in the currency of the United States through calling in all Liberty and Victory bonds; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

958. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, favoring a law eliminating the abuses and denials of elementary democratic rights for the Negro people; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 9, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Thou whose name is "Wonderful Counselor", crown us with emancipated minds and aspiring hearts. With firm, abiding faith in Thee, give us the temper, the virtue, and the understanding to do the right. Order all our ways; and may we hope in Thee, whatever may betide. O satisfy us early with inward peace and inward light, and may we wait for the Lord more than we wait for the morning. Forgive our sins and bridge our weakness, and may we be made more noble through discipline and through Thy redeeming grace. Heavenly Father, increase our sense of the divine until Thy excellence, purity, and love appear in everything. In the name of Jesus, our Savior, we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JURISDICTION OF REVENUE BILLS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on April 3 I introduced a resolution asking that a bill that had been passed by the Senate be returned to that body. The resolution which I introduced was explained at the time, and at the request of the majority leader it was referred, by unanimous consent the next day, to the Committee on the Judiciary for inquiry. During the discussion of its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary the importance of the resolution was made very apparent, and I quote from memory the majority floor leader when he said that, irrespective of the introduction of the Lewis bill, the question of the constitutional provision that I brought up should be decided by the Committee on the Judiciary before that legislation was considered.

The Lewis bill was introduced and is now known as the "Wagner-Lewis bill", and I suppose it is to be enacted today. In the meantime the resolution which I introduced has lain dormant in the Committee on the Judiciary or in the files of that committee. It is well known that a subcommittee was appointed to inquire into the merits of the case, and I understand that subcommittee agrees that the resolution should be adopted. I have inquired of different members of the Committee on the Judiciary why the delay of over a month in reporting to the House on such an important matter as that, and I can get no satisfaction. It seems to be a question of pigeonholing absolutely, because the members of the committee appear favorable to the adoption of the resolution; and, irrespective of whether there is pending today legislation with reference to the subject matter, the question of the constitutional provision such as is covered by Resolution 91 should be answered.

It certainly was the intention of the membership of the House that the Committee on the Judiciary should bring in a prompt report. Therefore I feel justified in offering a resolution of inquiry, which is privileged, and which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 137

Whereas on April 3, 1933, House Resolution 91 was submitted to this House for the return of the bill S. 812 to the Senate on the ground that the said bill contravened the constitutional prerogative of this House to originate revenue bills; and

Whereas on April 4, 1933, the said resolution was, by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for report; and

Whereas the said Committee on the Judiciary has had the said resolution under consideration since the aforesaid date without having reported on the same; and

Whereas the said resolution raises a question involving a constitutional prerogative of the House of Representatives; and

Whereas it is of the greatest importance that the question raised by the said resolution be settled at the earliest possible moment in order to set at rest the particular question involved, which only the House itself can decide: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to make a report to this House upon the issue raised by House Resolution 91 within 5 legislative days from the date of the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving a point of order, I want to make a statement under the reservation. I think our good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], has raised what is purely a moot question. We have entirely too much business before the House today to be spending our time considering something that has no bearing and will have no bearing even if that resolution is reported. My recollection of that resolution is that it was intended to apply to the Wagner bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. The question was involved in the Wagner bill, but not that alone.

Mr. BYRNS. But it referred to the Wagner bill and was intended to apply only to that bill, although it did raise, as the gentleman says, the constitutional question, necessarily; but the House has already passed the House bill. The conferees on several bills have presented conference reports, which are pending, and which I hope will be considered and adopted today. I submit that to pass that resolution now and to ask the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report upon a matter that is wholly a moot question is simply taking up the time of the House.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman that, of course, there is a way whereby he can get consideration of the constitutional question, so as to secure the attitude of the House with respect to these matters, but I do not think it should be brought up in this way, and that the House should be required to spend its time, or that a committee, which is engaged upon very important matters of pressing moment, should be asked to delay those matters while they consider something that has passed beyond the House and beyond the Congress.

I do not see the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary on the floor at the moment. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN], a member of that committee, is present, but I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should have notified the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that he was going to bring this matter up today; but in justice to that committee I wish to say that that committee was at the time busily engaged in considering matters growing out of the impeachment of a judge in California. It had other important matters before it. A subcommittee was appointed upon this resolution. The full committee never got to its consideration until the House had taken formal action upon the House bill, which, of course, was clearly in order.

We have three rules for consideration today. We have 6 hours' general debate upon an appropriation bill, and I am fearful we will not be able to pass that before Thursday, even if we proceed with the utmost dispatch. Now, to meet at 11 o'clock and have this time taken up by a moot question is asking too much of the House, and I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has done that before. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNS. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. TREADWAY. This is a very important question; it is too serious to be disposed of by laying it on the table. The decision of the House on a constitutional provision certainly is always applicable and proper and is not a moot question. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BYRNS. I will change my statement. It is a moot resolution.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; it is not a moot resolution. I do not admit any part of the gentleman's statement. I may say that it seemed to me the gentleman in all fairness suggested that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for prompt action at the time it was so referred. What I am trying to get now is some explanation why it has not been reported upon. And, further than this—

Mr. BYRNS. Now, if the gentleman will permit—

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not interrupt the gentleman while he was making his statement. I did not yield the floor. I do not know how the gentleman took me off my feet.

Mr. BYRNS. I was speaking under my reservation of a point of order, so I am not impinging on the gentleman's time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Very good. Let us act hastily, if the gentleman wants to. Will the gentleman not say that in the course of the 5 days this resolution provides for that a decision on as important a question as this can be rendered by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot say that because I do not know what other pressing matters are pending before the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. Members of the Committee on the Judiciary are here. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] is present. He is a member of the subcommittee to which the resolution was reported. He knows how busy the committee is. I would like for the gentleman from Michigan to tell us whether that committee can consider it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. We have the corporate reorganization bill pending before us at the present time. This is a bill in which there is widespread interest and which is being asked for all over the country at this time. The gentleman well knows that the question is one upon which the House will never agree, nor will the lawyers on this committee ever agree upon it.

Mr. TREADWAY. On what question?

Mr. McKEOWN. The question the gentleman has proposed.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why, they will agree on it, the gentleman from Oklahoma and everybody else; but at least you should carry out the wishes of the House and report to it so action can be taken promptly.

Mr. McKEOWN. They will not agree on it.

Mr. BYRNS. I can understand how it is important in the eyes of the gentleman from Massachusetts, for he comes from a State where it is the practice of the court to render advisory opinions without any issues before it. We have another issue here.

Mr. TREADWAY. We have before us an issue of very great seriousness.

Mr. BYRNS. It seems to me a useless waste of time under all the circumstances.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield so the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER] may make a statement on the situation as he knows it?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not going to yield for anyone to make a long statement, because we must get along.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is not privileged and that it is out of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that when by vote of the House the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary the only way to take it away from that committee is by a discharge rule.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that the quickest way to dispose of this matter is for him to withdraw his point of order and allow the House to vote on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, if such is the wish of the majority leader, I withdraw the point of order so that we may vote to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman withdrew the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TREADWAY) there were—ayes 173, noes 47.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not raise the point of no quorum. I can, but I will not out of courtesy to the majority party; but I do ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Under unanimous consent to extend my remarks I add the following:

Possibly the purpose of my resolution, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report to this House upon the issue raised by House Resolution 91 within 5 legislative days from the date of the adoption of my resolution, has been accomplished even though the majority leader saw fit to again use his authority to table the proposition. His discussion of the merits of the resolution and his reference to it as a moot question were undoubtedly made hastily, because I am sure the able gentleman would not hold that a decision on as important a resolution as one having to do with the constitutional rights of the House falls within the definition of the word "moot." I also am certain that with the majority leader's thorough knowledge of parliamentary procedure and the effect of precedents on future action, either of the presiding officer or of the House itself, he would not want it to appear that any effort was being made to prevent action on the constitutional question involved.

There need be no mystery regarding the failure of the Judiciary Committee to report on Resolution 91. It is very apparent that the favorable findings of the subcommittee are not agreeable to some members of the full committee, and that in some unknown manner the report of the committee is being delayed.

When this question was referred to the Judiciary Committee at the request of the gentleman from Tennessee both sides were acting in good faith. In view of the importance of the question, it was proper that the legal opinion of the House as determined by the Judiciary Committee should be obtained.

Inasmuch as the Senate will continue to send to the House bills containing revenue items, time will be saved by prompt action on the part of the Judiciary Committee in making its report. The gentleman from Tennessee argued about the amount of business before the House today. The adoption of the resolution of instruction to the Judiciary Committee would have taken a great deal less time than was consumed in the debate. I feel very confident that in the near future the original resolution will be reported back by the Judiciary Committee. While I will gladly await the committee's action, its failure to act will not be countenanced. Therefore I expect very soon a vote on the merits of the question rather than yielding to the attempt of the majority leader to prevent the matter coming up by moving to lay resolutions on the table.

I am as anxious to expedite the business of the House as any member of the majority, but I stand upon my constitutional rights as a Member, and as this is the third occasion on which I have brought up this subject it may be understood that dilatory tactics will not be permitted indefinitely.

Let me further refer to remarks of the majority leader, quoting from page 1208 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 4:

Mr. BYRNS. * * * It seemed to me that it would be infinitely better, as I have said, for the Judiciary Committee, since it involves a question of constitutional law, to make an investigation and report tomorrow or as soon as may be their conclusions as to whether or not the action of the Senate violated the spirit of the Constitution.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] endeavored to raise a point of order which, if it had not been withdrawn, I would have been glad to discuss.

In order that the matter may be before the House when the resolution is called up, I desire to invite attention to a ruling by former Speaker John G. Carlisle, whose ability as a parliamentarian has always been recognized. I quote from Hinds Precedents, volume 3, section 2558, page 1057. Speaker Carlisle said:

The Chair thinks whenever it is asserted on the floor of the House that the rights or privileges of the House have been invaded or violated by any other body or by an individual a question of privilege is presented, at least to the extent that the Chair is obliged to submit it to the House for its decision. Of course the Chair itself will decide all questions of order arising during legislative proceedings of the House, but when the allegation is made that the rights or privileges of the House collectively have been invaded that is a question which does not come within the province of the Chair to decide. The House is the custodian and guardian of its own rights and privileges as a body, and must always possess the power and have the opportunity to determine what those rights and privileges are and whether or not they have been improperly interfered with.

In this decision Speaker Carlisle took the position that "the House must always possess the power and have the opportunity to determine what its rights and privileges are."

This could not be so, however, if a committee of the House, one of its creatures, should, after a reasonable length of time, see fit to withhold its conclusions on a question of constitutional privilege and ignore the implied if not definite instructions of the House to report thereon.

The Committee on the Judiciary, by the mere reference to it of House Resolution 91, in the light of the discussion at that time, and especially the remarks of the majority leader which I have quoted, is in duty bound and under moral obligation to the House to report on the subject matter. Failure to report to the House justifies action by the House to enforce its rights, and it would be competent, as a question of privilege, to instruct the Committee on the Judiciary to submit a report.

The importance of the issue raised by the resolution cannot be overemphasized. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] in his remarks on the resolution on April 4 recalled that in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 the question of the "power over the purse" came near splitting the convention, and that only the compromise proposal giving the States equal representation in the Senate and proportional representation in the House, with the exclusive right in the House to initiate money bills, enabled this Nation to be created. In closing his remarks, the gentleman said:

This issue ought now to be settled once and for all, in spite of exigency, in order that we may know whether the bargain by which this Nation was created shall still be kept.

In a sense, any further action on the resolution may be said to be unnecessary, since a House bill identical to S. 812 has now been acted upon by both branches of the Congress. However, the Senate bill still lies upon the Speaker's table, and it should either be returned to the Senate or its consideration should be indefinitely postponed. If the Committee on the Judiciary finds that the bill did not properly originate in the Senate, that body should be so informed for its future guidance.

A comprehensive report by the Judiciary Committee upon the whole question of the power to originate revenue bills would be doubly useful. In the first place, it would enable the House to determine more clearly when its rights are being encroached upon; and secondly, it would serve as a guide to the other body in initiating legislation in the nature of a revenue measure. I do not say that the Senate deliberately passes legislation which it knows should originate in the House of Representatives; but oftentimes, without any consideration of the constitutional aspects, it passes bills which clearly should have originated in this body. On the other hand, the House sometimes sleeps upon its rights and allows legislation to be enacted which does not have the proper origin. I have already pointed out an instance where the House disregarded its rights in order to secure the more speedy enactment of certain legislation.

The most dangerous invasion of the rights of the House comes when revenue matters are added by amendment to House bills which are not in the nature of revenue measures. For example, consider the inflation amendment to the farm relief bill. This matter is one of the most important ever to come before the Congress, and its consequences are so far-reaching as to affect every man, woman, and child in the United States. Yet, under the parliamentary procedure, no committee of the House held hearings on this provision, no committee of the House considered the advisability of changes in the measure, and the House had no opportunity to amend it. Only its representatives on the conference committee will have any hand in the final shaping of the amendment before it is enacted into law, and these conferees are not members of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter covered by the amendment. Thus we have a revenue amendment which, in effect, is written into law by the Senate of the United States with no real consideration of the matter by the House of Representatives.

If the "power over the purse" was of such importance as to be the chief item of contention in the Constitutional Convention of 1787, certainly it is worthy of being upheld by the House of Representatives at this time. This power has frequently been challenged by the Senate, but in clear cases that body has always acquiesced in the rights of the House when its attention has been directed to bills or amendments which have not properly originated there. Where it has not been clear whether the rights of the House have been invaded, the Senate has from time to time engaged in controversy with the House; but in the last analysis this body is the final arbiter. The House can always refuse to consider a Senate bill or amendment which in its opinion should not have originated in that body.

This House should jealously preserve its high privilege of initiating money bills, but to do so it must constantly be on guard against encroachments from the other body. I apprehend that no Member wishes to abdicate this power in favor of the Senate. We have all sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and it is our duty, as much as it is our right, to insist that revenue bills should originate in the House of Representatives.

The difficulty, of course, comes in determining what is a revenue bill. This is a matter which has never been clearly defined. The Committee on the Judiciary, being the law committee of the House, is the proper body to lay down some rule which may serve to guide us in determining whether our rights are being transgressed upon. The House is entitled to know, with some degree of certainty, how far it can go in insisting upon its prerogative, and it is the duty of the Judiciary Committee to inform the House without further delay. With so many bills having revenue provisions originating in the Senate, it is important that the House should be prepared to ascertain intelligently whether they were properly initiated in that body.

Before concluding, I should like to bring out a point in connection with this matter which is seldom considered, but which is of great importance. I refer to the fact that the constitutional provision requiring revenue bills to originate in the House of Representatives is mandatory. Hence, any person may challenge the legality of any revenue measure which did not have its origin in this body. Numerous cases have been before the courts on this point.

In the past, it has generally been the practice of the leaders of the majority party to raise the question of origin when revenue bills came to this body from the Senate. In the absence of any move on the part of the leaders of the present majority to challenge the two measures which I have sought to return to the Senate during the present session, I have felt it my duty, as a Member of this body, to do so. My purpose has not been to delay or hinder legislation, but only to preserve the integrity of this House and to uphold the mandate of the Constitution.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may have 10 minutes in which to address the House relative to the soldiers' convention that is to take place here within the next few days.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I am not disposed to object to any reasonable request that comes from the distinguished gentleman from New York, but the gentleman knows the calendar is pretty heavy today. We are anxious to get rid of these three rules which will come up for action and then to get into the general debate upon the appropriation bill. Six hours of general debate have been provided for.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the situation, and I may say to the gentleman that when I notified him I was going to make this request, I did not know the other matter was coming up; but 10 minutes will not mean very much delay, and we will try to make it up for him during the day.

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot object, with the understanding that the gentleman from Washington, who was cut off from addressing the House yesterday by the point of no quorum, may be allowed to address the House for 5 minutes, and with the further understanding that no additional requests for time for discussion will be submitted; for if any are submitted, I shall be compelled to object to them, and I shall also be compelled to object to any extension of time.

Mr. SNELL. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BYRNS. So, with the understanding that the gentleman from Washington may have 5 minutes in which to address the House, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in all his fights against communism, but it would be out of place at this time for him even to intimate that the patriotic soldiers of this country would be communistic if they came to Washington. So, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman can let the gentleman from New York take his own position in regard to that.

Mr. BLANTON. These soldiers, if they are real soldiers, have the right to come to their Nation's capital whenever they want to do so, and I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 136.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 136

Resolved, That notwithstanding the previous action of the House relative to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H.R. 3835, immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall consider said conference report without the intervention of points of order against the same.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Does the other side desire time on this resolution?

Mr. RANSLEY. There is no desire for time on this side of the House.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule to make in order amendment 14 of the conference report on the farm relief bill, in which there is a slight variation from both the Senate and the House bills.

Section 8 of the House bill contains the general powers, and the bill reads:

To provide for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market, or both, of any basic agricultural commodity, through agreements with producers or by other voluntary methods, and to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection therewith.

The Senate had a similar provision which provided that the Secretary of Agriculture could make advance payments on grain stored on the farm to carry out rental or benefit agreements, and the conferees adopted an amendment which varies the language but slightly, as follows:

Under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture requiring adequate facilities for the storage of any nonperishable agricultural commodity on the farm—

And so forth.

There was some question raised as to the word "non-perishable" being of broader scope than the words "basic commodities", and therefore went beyond their authority under the language of either the House or the Senate bill, and this resolution from the Committee on Rules simply waives all points of order on this amendment with respect to two very similar provisions in the two bills.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the report was read on yesterday, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the conference report be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this report covers some 84 amendments. The conference reports an agreement on 83 of the 84 amendments.

Amendment no. 83, which covers the so-called "Simpson-Norris features", sometimes referred to as "the cost-of-production amendment", is a distinct amendment on which the conferees have not been able to agree. After action on the conference report, if the report is adopted, the question of disposition of this amendment will be taken up in the House as a separate matter. I make this statement so that those who are interested in the amendment may understand that it will be taken up after the adoption of the conference report, should the report be adopted.

A number of these amendments are clerical. One of the amendments was discussed yesterday, and I shall not take time to go into it. I shall simply undertake to discuss the main features of the conference report embodying changes in the bill as it passed the House.

Amendment no. 4 has what is called "a warehouse-agreement provision"; and if you will turn to page 2 of the report, I think you will get a thorough understanding from just a reading of this amendment, which I shall not undertake to read now.

The other features of the so-called "farm bill" are largely the same, with some minor changes as to administration. There are some minor changes in the method of collecting the processing fee.

There were some changes in the trade-agreement section. The Senate put in the word "basic" in the trade-agreement section, and this term is stricken out wherever it occurred.

In the following section, which is the licensing section, the terms were changed so as to broaden its scope and make it harmonize with the trade-agreement section.

However, there was one place where the word "basic" occurred in which the word "basic" was included in both the Senate and the House bills and could not be excluded because it was not within the range of the activities of the conference. A special resolution has been prepared for presentation—House Concurrent Resolution No. 18—which we hope to take up a little later, providing for striking out the word "basic" in this section. If we had known a point of order was going to be made and that we were going to be put to the necessity of getting a rule, we might have included that change also in the conference report. However, in order to conform to the wishes of those who will have to administer the act, this word will be excluded if the concurrent resolution is passed.

In the mortgage feature of the bill, the conferees, in view of the discussion, inserted the word "normal" before the word "value", so that they may have discretion in adjusting these loans or in making new loans, and so there may be no question of the fact that they are not limited strictly to present-day values. I understand this has been their custom anyway, but this provision removes any doubt about their ability to do this.

On the question of winding up the joint-stock land banks, the Senate bill provided for $125,000,000, and the conferees have reduced this to $100,000,000.

If they are able to furnish adequate security, they will be permitted to borrow not to exceed $100,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of orderly liquidation. There is a provision in both sections that the agreements shall be supervised and approved by the Farm Loan Commissioner, so that they may be fair to the borrower, the bondholder, and to the stockholders.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that it is the intention of the Department or Congress that the joint-stock land banks be liquidated?

Mr. JONES. Yes. Provision is made for their liquidation. They are forbidden to make any more new loans, except to refinance, and forbidden to issue any more bonds of the type heretofore issued.

Mr. McFADDEN. In case of losses, who is to stand the loss?

Mr. JONES. The losses incurred in the course of liquidation?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. There would be no choice except for the bondholders and the stockholders to stand the loss.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is there any provision or understanding that the Government shall assume the losses?

Mr. JONES. No; there is no provision and no such understanding.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the act provide for relief for the joint-stock land banks already in the hands of a receiver?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Again, the Senate bill had a provision requiring that all borrowers should join the Farm Loan Association—making it mandatory. The conferees changed that provision so that while the direct loan calls for one-half-percent interest higher rate, the question of joining the association will be permissive. I feel that that provision of law will do away with a good deal of irritation. It will make the joining of the association voluntary, and the Government will not be in the attitude of forcing such action.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The only difference is that the interest will be one half percent higher.

Mr. JONES. It also provides that the joining of local associations shall not be mandatory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The borrower has the option.

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is optional although there may be another one in that community.

Mr. JONES. That is my understanding.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. There are some cotton growers in my State who are under the impression that a tentative contract has been entered into between the chairman of the Farm Board and the American Cooperative Cotton Association by which the cotton held by the association as security for loans shall be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture for the amount of the loans, not to exceed 90 percent of the market price at the time of the delivery. Now, the amount loaned on it in some instances was only 50 or 60 percent of the market value for cotton at that time. Does the gentleman understand that by Senate amendment no. 5 the Secretary of Agriculture may acquire title to cotton held by A.C.C.A.

without paying the 90 percent of its market value at the time of delivery by the grower as security for loan?

Mr. JONES. He will pay 90 percent of the market value at the time the borrowing was made.

Mr. TARVER. I understand the fact that the contract must be voluntary, but I wanted the gentleman's impression as to whether or not, under this provision of the bill, the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Farm Board acting for him, could make a contract for the delivery of cotton at less than 90 percent of the market price at the time of its original delivery to the American Cooperative Cotton Association as collateral.

Mr. JONES. I think if the gentleman will turn to subdivision 1, on page 4, lines 20, 21, and 22, he will find that he is required, if he makes adjustments, to make such adjustments as will give them the amount they were advanced plus enough to make it up to 90 percent of the then market price.

Mr. TARVER. Then the Cooperative Association could not make a contract for less than 90 percent of the then market price?

Mr. JONES. That is my impression.

Mr. TARVER. One other question. I am informed that at the time of the original delivery to the American Cooperative Cotton Association a contract was entered into by which the cotton was to be held for a period of 3 years. Is the gentleman familiar with that contract?

Mr. JONES. I understand there is some sort of an agreement. I do not know exactly the terms of the agreement, but I understand there was some such an agreement that they would agree to hold it for as long as 3 years, and that period will expire July 31. I am not quite sure as to the exact date. I think there was some such agreement. However, the holders of that cotton and the organization will have the advantage of having these loans canceled, if this agreement is entered into. I take it that there was some such agreement as the gentleman refers to. I would rather not undertake to state specifically what it was, but the gentleman can secure a copy of that and interpret the terms.

Mr. TARVER. It is not the gentleman's impression that the American Cooperative Cotton Association could sell the cotton of those farmers to the Secretary of Agriculture, even at the price stated in the bill, without their consent?

Mr. JONES. I should not want to pass on that legal question. That is a legal question that would require the interpretation of documents. It would require the interpretation of three or four different types of documents. I do not think that is my province. I think if the gentleman will call up the Farm Credit Administration he can secure that information. They have good attorneys and they will be glad to give the gentleman their interpretation.

Mr. TARVER. But that will be after the adoption of this report. I am trying to get information which will aid me as a Member of this House in voting on this report.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I do not want to pass on that. I have not before me the agreements nor the constitution and bylaws of the State and National organizations nor the agreements between the individuals and the State cotton cooperatives, nor the agreement between the State cotton cooperatives and the A.C.C.A. Not being familiar with the terms of those contracts and agreements, it would not be proper for me to state what their legal rights are. The gentleman is a lawyer, and he knows it would depend upon the wording of those contracts.

Mr. TARVER. But I think we should have the information before we vote on this conference report.

Mr. JONES. Insofar as the bill is concerned, they are given the option to make this sort of a settlement with the Secretary of Agriculture, and he, in turn, is authorized to make settlements. Of course, if they have contracts dating behind that, which would forbid certain types of settlements, they could not make them. If they did not have, they could make them.

Mr. TARVER. Let me state to the gentleman there is now pending in my State an injunction suit, instituted by the cooperatives, seeking to restrain the American Cooperative Cotton Association from the execution of a contract which they claim has already been entered into for delivery of this cotton without the consent of the owners of the cotton, and at less than 90 percent of the market price at the time of its original delivery.

Mr. JONES. I do not understand such a contract could be entered into prior to the enactment of the law.

Mr. TARVER. I am trying to secure information as to what is being attempted. I think the House should know that, and the gentleman should know it, before acting on this bill.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If I understood the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture correctly, he mentioned the American Cooperative Cotton Association, an organization set up by the Farm Board. Most of the Members of this House are acquainted with the high salaries paid by this particular set-up, including some that reached enormous figures.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Some of them were entirely too high.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I should like the gentleman to tell us whether or not that organization is still functioning to the extent that they are paying those salaries that run as high as $50,000 or more?

Mr. JONES. I do not have full information. I understand they have very materially reduced their salaries, although I have no definite information. I am sure the gentleman could get that by making inquiry. I do not know to what extent they are functioning. These organizations are still in existence if my information is correct.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Yesterday the gentleman introduced House Concurrent Resolution 18, which makes an important amendment to this bill. Has the gentleman taken up with the leadership on his side as to whether or not we will have consideration of that changed wording, so that that may be put into the enrolled bill? Is the House to understand the gentleman will use all pressure possible to have that amendment put in?

Mr. JONES. We are going to try to secure the passage of the amendment.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what were the impelling reasons which induced the conferees to eliminate from the bill the provisions of section 36, on page 55, providing facilities for refinancing through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the debts of levee districts, drainage districts, and irrigation districts? Why that discrimination against the agriculture of the western section?

Mr. BYRNS. How about the amendment excluding the sweepings of tobacco? I fail to find it in the bill.

Mr. JONES. That is amendment no. 36.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY]. He has studied this matter. It is his intention to make an explanation of it and to answer such questions as the Members wish to ask.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I realize full well that most of the Members are deeply interested and concerned in this piece of legislation. I feel also that some of them are very much more familiar and more interested with some of the amendments and proposed provisions than with others; but permit me to say that this piece of legislation is a combined program of farm relief known as the omnibus farm bill and consists of about four great sections as you know. As one of the conferees I feel some facts and circumstances should be explained to this House in order to give the Members the background of the conditions with which we were faced when we met in conference with the Senate, and also to let the Members of the House know we did the best we could under the circumstances.

The first great provision of this bill is the emergency farm-relief program, which includes the Smith plan and the so-called "domestic-allotment plan."

The second great provision of the bill is the farm-refinancing program, or the farm-mortgage provision. This includes, may I say to the gentlemen from Colorado, Washington, and Oregon, who just asked the Chairman a question with reference to the deleting of Senate amendment on page 55 with reference to irrigation and drainage districts, the agricultural-refinancing program of the levee, drainage, irrigation and similar districts throughout the United States.

Then we have in this bill the inflation program which your conferees were not concerned with, because this House has heretofore voted and expressed its approval of that measure.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if he will permit some questions with reference to certain features of the bill?

Mr. DOXEY. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado that I feel it is my duty, as well as my privilege, to yield to any Member just as many times as I can within the limited time allowed me.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. DOXEY. It will not interrupt me, because I am here to answer any question I am able to. I may say to my distinguished friend that I mean to do what I say. We will discuss this bill. We will not discuss at this time amendment no. 83, the price-fixing amendment. Under the rule this amendment will be considered after we take a vote on the combined amendments en bloc, the 82 amendments as to which the House conferees and the Senate conferees have reached an agreement. After we vote upon them we will take up the price-fixing amendment, have an hour's discussion, as I understand, and then vote upon it. So let us start with the inflation feature.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say to the gentleman at this point that to my interruption with reference to the changes made by the conference committee in section 36 to the Senate amendments is in entire good faith, and it is almost imperative on me to make the interruption, for the reason that we western Members of the House, few in number from the different States, feel somewhat restive owing to the fact that we have to look to our Senators for anything concerning our States, for our representation in the Senate is much more powerful?

Then, when our Senators succeed in getting anything done for our States, as was done in section 36 by the amendment authorizing loans to private irrigation corporations, and so forth, we find the House conferees insist on cutting those things out; and we have to swallow the conference report as a whole and vote against practically everything we have got in this bill through the intervention of our Senators. As I understand, the conferees have taken out of the Senate amendment all the private irrigation projects.

I may say to the gentleman that part 4 of the Jones bill, H.R. 4795, relating to refinancing of agricultural improvement district indebtedness, was of the utmost interest to the Western irrigation States. The Jones bill, as it passed the House, did not contain the provision for loans to private irrigation and drainage companies. At numerous meetings held by Members from those States it was agreed that it was highly desirable to amend the bill as it was amended in the Senate and which could not be done in the House under the procedure, and the amendment was inserted at the instance of a western Senator, Mr. COSTIGAN, of Colorado.

I may add that I have in mind private irrigation companies, which are engaged in irrigation only and which were organized and completed many years ago by farmers and public-spirited business men, and which under the adverse conditions in their localities are sorely in need of the aid afforded under section 36 of the bill. They look to us for this relief and will no doubt feel that, our Senators having succeeded in putting it in the bill, we in the House should have been able to keep it in. That is what we are up against.

Mr. DOXEY. I can appreciate the gentleman's position and I am going to change my plan of procedure and the method I had hoped to employ in the discussion of these amendments and the conferees' agreements in view of what he has said. I am going to tell the House a little something about section 36 and what was in the minds of the conferees.

I say without fear of successful contradiction that what the gentleman says with reference to his distinguished Senators is, in some measure, true; but it is in no sense a reflection on the Members of the House from the Western States.

This amendment was placed in section 36 in the last hours of the debate in the Senate. I will not state what is and was in the minds of the Senate conferees as they expressed themselves in conference, but I want to reason with you, if I may, why this amendment should be deleted and not included in this bill.

I may say to my good friend that title IV, section 36, to which he refers, was not in the original farm refinancing program. It was put in there on a Sunday and it was cut out by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Title IV, section 36, relating to drainage, irrigation, and levee districts and similar districts, was in this bill and was kept in it by the House Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.] The bill came up on the floor with this provision in it. It passed the House and we kept the original House provision in it, and when it went to conference there was not—I say it with all due deference—a friend of the Senate's added provision among the House conferees for the proposition that loans to private enterprises and projects, including reservoirs, dams, and electric-power projects, and other private enterprises of this kind, should have been included and be permitted to participate in obtaining aid from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the $50,000,000, which amount we could not raise in conference.

Why? I believe the gentleman will agree with me and appreciate the fact that there are friends of these projects in this House on this conference committee, but we only had $50,000,000. How far would $50,000,000 go throughout the United States if you are going to include every private corporation or every little district where any kind of ditch or irrigation project is concerned, especially when you consider the great projects which are public in their nature and are entirely different from the projects that the gentleman has in mind, both as to levee, drainage, irrigation, and other similar districts, which would not be benefited to any great extent because the base of the amount in this provision available for loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is limited to $50,000,000.

I want to ask the gentleman to consider a minute the language of part 4 of section 36, on page 56, and go with me to line 17, the language of the amendment the gentleman is complaining about, which says:

Including private corporations organized for levee and drainage and irrigation purposes—

And so forth. I shall not take the time to read all of it, but it takes in all kinds of irrigation districts, dams, reservoirs, and electric projects developed by and incident to all the irrigation projects that one could imagine.

The gentleman has in his own State, as well as do other gentlemen from the western section, projects of this kind; and I may say to the gentleman that the House has tried to help them in every way possible, and will continue to do it, but if this language goes in here I say that in my humble judgment there will be very little benefit to any kind of district, because the spread will not permit it and $50,000,000 will be but a drop in the bucket.

I think this will answer any argument made back home by your constituents. Why? Because your constituents and your districts have an additional $5,000,000 in this bill, in section 36, carried under the Newlands Act, where, if the fund is a reclamation fund, they are permitted to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation an additional $5,000,000, outside of participating in the $50,000,000, just as any other public, legal entity can, where it is in financial distress, where it is shown that it is economically sound and is organized under the laws of some State; but, my friends from the West, do not say by your vote that they can participate just because they are private individuals organizing companies of their own, selling stock to the public, and therefore should be able to come in under the provisions of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman from Texas yield the gentleman from Mississippi 1 more minute so that I may ask a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield the gentleman 1 more minute.

Mr. DOXEY. I want to say to my distinguished chairman that he is very kind, but I do not want to impose on him. I know he has more demands for time than he has time at his disposal, but I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I just want to understand a little more clearly what the gentleman from Mississippi has said with respect to the rights of these corporations, districts, and so forth, to avail themselves of the credit of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation without this particular provision.

Mr. DOXEY. They cannot avail themselves of it if they are purely and simply a private corporation organized for private gain. The gentleman knows that in Colorado and in his own State they have organized corporations out there that sell the water to the landowner, and when the landowner buys the land he does not get the water; and do you expect to help those people pay dividends on their bonds and stock to the exclusion of others? No one denies there is a vast difference between public and quasipublic districts and private districts and that the public districts should be taken care of first.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am just trying to find out what the gentleman from Mississippi said.

Mr. DOXEY. I shall be glad to talk to the gentleman in private, but I do not think I have much time to talk to him right now on the floor of this House, for I certainly do not want to take up any other Member's time.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. How about the reclamation districts; can they borrow money?

Mr. DOXEY. If they come within the Newlands Act as to their reclamation funds, they have $5,000,000 extra or in addition to the $50,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the adoption of this conference report.

In the State of Nevada there is the Newlands irrigation project operating under the laws of the State of Nevada and under contract with the Federal Government. It is an irrigation district that has been in existence for 25 years.

The Senate provided in its amendment for the right for them to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for operation and maintenance expenses. The conference committee, without any consideration, apparently, of the facts involved, has stricken this needed provision from the bill.

The conference agreement eliminates the provisions of the bill relating to authorization of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to private corporations and to irrigation districts operating under contracts with the United States to aid in payment of their operating and maintenance charges and the installation of necessary works.

The conference agreement also eliminates the provision authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to accept from such districts the pledge of their outstanding evidences of indebtedness as security for loans.

In the practice of agriculture in the arid lands, there is the additional burden to be carried of a charge for operation and maintenance of irrigation works, which is not imposed upon the man who wrests his livelihood from the soil in regions favored with ample rainfall. In the intermountain regions of the far West there are thousands in the same dire distress as are the farmers of the Middle West, the South, and the East.

The principle of extending relief to those operating in irrigation districts was sanctioned by the White House, after a favorable report from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

This conference report unfairly and unjustly eliminates the only provisions in the bill which are of material benefit to the majority of those struggling to maintain their existence on the irrigation projects in the intermountain area.

Authorization for their relief was placed in the amended bill by vote of the United States Senate after a careful investigation into the obvious merits of the proposal.

To the best of my knowledge and belief the House conference committee eliminated the authorization without hearing from a single representative from the area affected. Their action constitutes a gross discrimination against the farmers of every arid-land State. Under the rules adopted by the House to govern the consideration of this bill, we are not permitted to vote on the merits of the individual amendments or eliminations. We, therefore, have no other recourse except to ask all interested in fair play for the arid-land States of the West to vote against adoption of the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the conference report on this bill the agreement eliminates the provisions relating to loans to private corporations and to irrigation districts operating under contracts with the United States to aid in the payment of their operating and maintenance charges and the installation of necessary works. The provisions relating to the inclusion of dams, reservoirs, and electric-power projects in the case of irrigation systems are also eliminated and the projects of borrowers which are eligible for loans are limited to those projects which have been completed prior to the date of enactment of the act.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out the injustice of this discrimination in excluding from the provisions of this bill the opportunity of borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation this class of citizens who have pioneered in the West and by their own initiative have reclaimed vast tracts of arid lands. These citizens who have pioneered in these irrigation districts, developed them with their own capital, and by their own initiative, have organized private corporations, have issued bonds to finance the development of these projects. They now need refinancing and they are prohibited under the operation of this report from securing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that no finer and more substantial farming communities can be found anywhere than those in the districts which come under the classification excluded from the provisions of this bill. What must these people who are about to lose their farms think, when they see the Reconstruction Finance Corporation money used to pull weeds along the road and bury rocks along the western highways, as I have seen, using hand work?

Mr. Speaker, why in Spokane, in the State of Washington, they are using the Reconstruction Finance Corporation money to construct golf links. We are here denying these people, who are pioneers, who cooperated to develop some of the best farming districts in the State of Idaho, from an opportunity to borrow money to protect their farms in these the darkest hours of distress.

Mr. Speaker, we should reimburse the provision that was put in the bill in the Senate making the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation available to these people who have established their homes there.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Are not the funds to the extent of $50,000,000 available to all irrigation districts organized under the laws of the State?

Mr. WHITE. To Government-owned districts.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Under the conference report your State has the same right to borrow money for irrigation districts organized under the law of the State as every other State has for drainage, and so forth.

Mr. WHITE. A good many districts are organized under the Cary Act and would not come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements made by the preceding speaker and others as to the changes made in section 36, I think it might be well to point out that this is not primarily a bill to enlarge the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This is a bill for the relief of farm-mortgage indebtedness. The only reason for including any provision for refinancing the indebtedness of drainage and irrigation districts is to enable landowners in those districts to take advantage of the provisions relating to the refinancing of farm mortgages.

These landowners in many cases are not in a position to refinance their farm-mortgage indebtedness because of the fact that the drainage-district indebtedness and assessments made thereunder are prior liens on the land. Consequently, unless some relief is to be afforded by refinancing the drainage- and irrigation-district indebtedness, there is no opportunity for farmers owning land to get the benefit of the mortgage provisions of the act.

Now, that is the only reason, as I understand it, and the only justification for putting these provisions in the measure, which was designed primarily to relieve farm-mortgage indebtedness.

The amount is limited to $50,000,000. I am told by those acquainted with the facts that this will not be sufficient to entirely take care of the situation which it is sought to remedy. In view of this fact, it would seem to me improper and unfair to extend the provisions of the section to include private irrigation corporations and to provide for the financing of irrigation enterprises not yet completed.

If these are meritorious cases, let us in some other proper legislation enlarge the loaning power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of them. But I do not believe they properly come within the provisions of an act of this kind.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true the conference report retains the provision in the House bill for refunding the distressed districts, and is it not true that the Senate amendment would extend it and bring in other loans?

Mr. HOPE. That is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And would defeat the purpose of the original provision?

Mr. HOPE. I think it would at least very materially affect the matter and probably defeat the original purpose of the act. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I requested the chairman of the committee to yield for a moment to a statement and a question. I come from a district which raises cigar leaf tobacco. We have been gradually but surely losing our entire industry, primarily due to the fact that in this country we do not protect the cigar leaf tobacco grower from the invasion of some 6,000,000 pounds per year of tobacco from Java and Sumatra that are raised by conscript labor at from 12 cents to 15 cents a day. Under this measure before us we have no relief from that kind of competition. Besides, the tobacco raised in Sumatra and Java will wrap three times as many cigars as that raised in my district and in other districts throughout the country. I should like to know from the chairman what this bill offers to my people and to others who grow this kind of tobacco.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the circumstances which the gentleman details, but as a matter of fact to do what he suggests would require our invading the province of another committee, the Committee on Ways and Means. The effort in this bill is simply to levy sufficient tax on the competing product to leave the basic products on the same comparative and competitive level that they are today. In other words, we endeavor to avoid placing the foreign product in a favored position. To do more than this is a question within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee. The conferees felt that would open up a wide tariff field.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, title II of the present conference bill covers the same ground as the House bill 4795, which was passed by the House substantially as introduced by the Chairman of the Agriculture Committee on April 10.

I think it is fair to say that the Agriculture Committee considered this legislation with some degree of honesty and intelligence. Among other things, when it passed the House, the bill provided, and it now provides, that loans shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to drainage and irrigation and similar districts for the purpose of enabling them to refinance outstanding indebtedness. Capitalists had invested in these districts and many people thought that such districts should be enabled to refinance their outstanding bonds and debts so as to take care of the investors. So the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to make loans to these drainage and irrigation districts and refunding bonds are to be issued by them. Now, the payment of these refunding bonds is by this bill made a lien on all of the property within the circumference of the whole district. It was pointed out in the committee that this provision might work great injustice in certain cases. For example, a farmer may have paid his assessment in full, but his neighbor may not have paid it. I did not think it was equitable to impose the obligation of paying these refunding bonds as a lien upon the land of the farmer who had actually paid his assessment. That might make the investment safer to the bondholder, but it would do wrong to the farmer. Again, Farmer A might have a piece of land which had a small assessment against it, while the land of Farmer B might have a large assessment against it because B's land was benefited by the improvement in a much greater degree. It seems unfair to impose a lien upon A's land for the payment of the refunding obligation in the same degree and to the same extent as B's land.

I pointed out that the land of Farmer A should be protected by proper language, so that a lien would not be imposed against it in the same degree and to the same extent as Farmer B's land had. Therefore, when the bill left the House it contained provisions that this act should not be construed so as to make any land subject to a lien for the payment of a greater proportion of the indebtedness of the district than such land is subject to under existing law. These provisions were enacted by the House. Assessments and liens upon any particular lands for refinancing the bonds of these districts should always be in the same proportion as they are under the present law.

This matter was put into the bill in the House committee by specific and certain amendments, and the idea should have been preserved in conference. Under the changes now sent over here by the Senate and agreed to by the conference committee, the additional money that is to be borrowed in order to pay the old bondholders is made a lien on the whole district, notwithstanding that an individual farmer may have paid his assessment in full. It seems to me that anyone who believes in the virtue of the commandment "Thou shalt not steal" ought not to consent, except under compulsion, to a condition which will make such a farmer pay new and increased and additional sums of money, and sums wholly out of proportion to his benefits. If he has already paid his assessment, he ought to go free. Or, in the case of one whose assessments are small in proportion to the assessments of other landholders, it is again true that the owner of the land having the small assessments should not be burdened with a lien for the payment of the big assessments imposed on other land in the district. This change should not have been made by the Senate, and it should never have been consented to by the conferees.

Mr. DOXEY. The gentleman must realize that on the doctrine of the "last faithful acre", in the case now before the Supreme Court, this language means nothing, and that we could not possibly pass a law that would affect contracts heretofore entered into.

Mr. GILCHRIST. There is not a thing in the House bill that would do away with the doctrine of the "last faithful acre," provided the Supreme Court upholds it, which it may never do. If it upholds it, then it is the present law, and the amendment put in by the House committee simply said that these assessments should be in proportion to those existing under the present law. We did not try, as the gentlemen well know, to affect existing contracts in the least particular. Our amendment carefully preserved every obligation contained in any existing contract.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, on that subject the Senate took the position that this would be accomplished anyway, and that the amendment was surplusage, as is shown by their discussion, and that no act could require a greater burden than that provided by the State law.

Mr. GILCHRIST. As a matter of fact, the language of the House bill is necessary. The present conference bill provides that the payment of the new refunding bonds shall constitute a lien and a charge upon the lands in the whole district without regard to the equities existing in favor of particular lands and those existing as between and among particular lands. If the agents of any drainage or irrigation district have any power whatsoever to act under our law, then they will be bound by the provisions of our law. If the statute of the State enables them to proceed, or clothes them with authority to proceed, under this new Federal law, in order to gain the benefits conferred by it, then they will be bound by the provisions and terms of that same new Federal law however unjust they may be.

If the Senate's position is that the language is not necessary, then what harm can be done by incorporating this language in the bill just as the House Agricultural Committee did? What harm can be done by making it clear? Every statute should be clear and perspicuous. What reason can anyone offer against making this language certain and definite? Has anybody any reason against clearing up an ambiguity, granting that it is ambiguity only, except the reason that the authors or framers might have flowing out of the pride which they may have in their own language and in their own sense of infallibility?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that any great harm could be done except that it would require this to go back to conference, and it would take several days. If this is important, a correction can be made later. I am sure that from what various people have told me that the gentleman need have no fear on the subject. I do not think it is of sufficient importance to go back to conference and throw this whole bill into a further conference.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I certainly do have fear on the subject, especially as applied to the Iowa situation, with which I am somewhat familiar. I still am of the opinion that those who believe in the doctrine of "Thou shalt not steal" ought not to force that kind of liens and assessments on lands in Iowa, even though they do own bonds that they desire to collect.

Here again we are not allowed to amend or divide the question. It is another instance of voting either "yes" or "no" upon this whole report. I want to see the bill enacted. I am for the bill, but I am against all gag rules and against regulations which prevent us from offering amendments and thereby preventing injustice.

Mr. JONES. If any injustice is done in the gentleman's State, as far as it is within the possibilities for me to do so, I shall assist him in an effort to have it corrected.

I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have just been able in the last few minutes to see a copy of the conference report, but if I understand it correctly, private corporations organized for drainage, levee, and irrigation purposes are going to find that they are discriminated against, or perhaps given no relief at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We are cut out altogether. We are not discriminated against.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. You are cut down to $5,000,000. I have a large Government project in my district that will not suffer, but there are many private districts that are just as eligible for getting loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as Government projects. If they are eligible, they ought not be put over into the $5,000,000 class, because $5,000,000, spread out to every levee, irrigation, and drainage district now in need would amount to nothing.

Mr. DOXEY. What is the gentleman's idea about a private district? There are districts here that are classed as private. Anything of a public nature, organized under the law, is public. Anything organized by a stock company is a private corporation.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. All I know is that this section of the bill refers only to private corporations and is not broad enough. If a private irrigation project can furnish adequate security, I take the position it is as much entitled to its pro-rata share of that $50,000,000 as of the $5,000,000 if it is meant to relieve conditions in certain districts of the country. I think, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] said, that is not only a discrimination but it is practically ruination to private projects. We ought to concur in the Senate amendment and take care of deserving private irrigation districts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I want to say with reference to this irrigation section, there was some question in the committees of both the House and Senate, as to whether any such project should come in at all, and the only theory on which it is included at all is that it enables some of the actual farmers who reside in those districts to take advantage of the other features of the bill.

If you went further and permitted, as the Senate amendment does, the work of using the funds to complete the projects, to install machinery, and so forth, you would have the peculiar condition of a bill with one feature of it trying to solve the surplus problem and another feature of it aggravating that surplus problem. The only theory on which the $55,000,000 was included was so that the actual farmers who live within the confines of those districts might be able, by refinancing that feature of it, to secure direct loans or direct refinancing of their loans.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Is the $50,000,000 still in the bill?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. And the $5,000,000 additional?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I think the gentleman from Washington and his colleagues have done a great deal and accomplished much in being able to secure the inclusion of such an item in a mortgage bill. That money is not for the purpose of directly refinancing mortgages, and I congratulate them on their accomplishments.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. Is the $5,000,000 to be loaned to the reclamation fund intact as it left our committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that if the number of beneficiaries under this provision is increased, as proposed in the Senate amendment, the fund would be spread out to such an extent as to render ineffective the aid intended for hundreds of drainage districts where investments have already been made and where many millions of dollars have been expended? The House measure and the conference report protects the districts heretofore established.

Mr. JONES. I understand that is a correct statement, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 83: Page 33 of the bill, insert:

"PART 3—COST OF PRODUCTION

"Sec. 20. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture, in addition to the powers granted by parts 1 and 2 of this title is hereby authorized, with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, to estimate as nearly as practicable and proclaim from time to time—

"(1) The percentage of the domestic production of the commodity, including carry-over stocks, for market during the next marketing period for the commodity, that will be needed for domestic consumption; and

"(2) The average domestic cost of production, including therein a reasonable profit, for the commodity.

"(b) After such date as shall be specified in the proclamation, it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the business of buying and selling a commodity or commodities as a dealer therein to purchase any amount of the commodity from the producer or any association of producers at a price, for the domestic consumption percentage thereof, that is less than the proclaimed cost of production for the commodity. The remainder may be purchased at such price as is agreed to by the parties; and shall be segregated for export, or for processing for export, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture in his proclamation may make such limitations and exceptions as to sales of the basic product as he may deem advisable in order to properly carry out the provisions of this section.

"(c) Any person violating the provisions of subsection (b) shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each violation, which may be collected by appropriate action in a court of competent jurisdiction brought in the name of the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(d) The provisions of section 15 (d) and (e) shall apply with respect to commodities or products thereof competing with, and imported articles processed or manufactured wholly or in chief value from, any basic agricultural commodity for which the cost of production has been proclaimed under this section, to the same extent as such provisions apply with respect to commodities or products thereof competing with, or imported articles processed or manufactured wholly or in chief value from, any commodity for which a processing tax is in effect.

"(e) In order to carry out the provisions of this section the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to license persons engaged in the business of purchasing from producers or associations of producers any basic agricultural commodity with respect to which the Secretary has proclaimed the cost of production. Such licenses shall be subject to such terms and conditions as may be necessary effectively to execute the provisions of this section. Any person so engaged without a license as required by the Secretary under this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for each day the violation continues. The Secretary may suspend or revoke any such license, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, for any violation of this section or of the terms or conditions of the license."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes in order to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Reserving the right to object, let us proceed and get this cleaned up.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendment no. 83.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to concur, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McKEOWN moves to concur in Senate amendment no. 83 with the following amendment: "Strike out clause 2 of paragraph (a) and insert the following: 'the price to be paid for the commodity fixed at the fair exchange value of the commodity.'"

"In paragraph (b), line 19, strike out the words 'cost of production' and insert 'price to be paid.'"

"In paragraph (d), line 13, strike out 'cost of production' and insert 'price to be paid.'"

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Which is the preferential motion that may be made, of the two that have been offered?

The SPEAKER. The motion to recede and concur takes precedence over the other.

Mr. JONES. And unless I yield for the other motion, it cannot be made?

The SPEAKER. It cannot.

Mr. JONES. I think there should only be one motion, and I wish the gentlemen would agree on which motion they will present.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the preferential motion should have the floor in any event without preference.

Mr. JONES. No; it would not have the floor. A preferential motion can be made and be pending, but, as I understand, the maker of the original motion has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is correct.

Mr. DOWELL. But a preferential motion has been made, and it has preference.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion which I made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE], with the privilege to him of reyielding to other Members on that side.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the administration is opposed to this amendment. They regard it as impractical and unworkable. I wish to read a statement by the Department of Agriculture, the Department which will have charge of the administration of this act. The statement reads as follows:

The Department of Agriculture is vigorously opposed to the amendment. It believes that the amendment is economically unsound and would, if placed in effect, depress rather than increase farm prices. In the absence of any legislative standard for determining costs of production it would be impossible to arrive at such cost on any definite basis.

The cost of production figures of the Department are now less than the parity prices or fair exchange value provided in the bill.

If any attempt were made to fix prices by enforcing a cost-of-production price that did not have due regard for the purchasing power of the consumer and other economic considerations, the commodity would back up on the farm, extensive bootlegging would result, and innumerable fines be imposed if any real attempt at enforcement were made.

It is believed that the operation of the amendment would seriously impair the farm-relief program. The presence of the amendment in the bill would raise expectation for higher farm prices than can possibly be obtained in view of the unworkable and unsound character of the amendment, and will endanger the securing of cooperation in certain farm regions for other features of the bill which hold promise of effective and sound relief.

The measure, which will be administered by the Department of Agriculture, is important and far-reaching. It will involve difficulties. The ones who will administer it will have a very great task to work it out properly. We all hope that they may work it out with good effect. I do not think they should be hampered in any way, and they regard this amendment as having that effect.

Inasmuch as they are so vigorously opposed to it, I believe it would be better if we permitted them to have the legislation for the present at least in the form in which they desire it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Can the gentleman state whether it is purely optional with the Department to put this into effect?

Mr. BOILEAU. It is.

Mr. Speaker, I want to urge favorable consideration of this so-called "cost-of-production amendment", because, in my opinion, it is the most satisfactory method that could possibly be conceived for the purpose of raising farm-commodity prices to a decent level.

The so-called "domestic-allotment plan" imposes a tax upon the processing of the commodity, and then, with a great many administrative technicalities, this processing tax is paid back to the farmer. So in this way he gets a fair price for his commodity.

The so-called "Simpson-Norris plan" of cost and production is very simple in its operation. It merely provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what is the average cost of production of the various commodities, including reasonable profit; that after this declaration has been made it shall be unlawful for anybody to pay the producer of farm commodities a price lower than the established average cost of production. It does away with all the technical administrative provisions. It gets right down to the bottom of the problem and says that the farmer shall be paid by the buyer of the commodity a price that is equivalent to the average cost of production plus a reasonable profit. I do not believe there is a man or woman in this House who believes the farmer is not entitled to the cost of production and a reasonable profit for his produce.

Part 2 of title I of this bill, which is the commodity-benefits provision, provides for the domestic-allotment plan including the processing tax, and has as its purpose the raising of prices of farm commodities. The distinguished chairman of the Agricultural Committee read a letter from the Department of Agriculture, in which the Department of Agriculture stated that it did not know the cost of production, yet they assert in the same letter that the cost of production is lower than the parity price that is provided for in the bill. I submit that it is just as easy to establish the average cost of production as it is to determine the parity price of farm commodities today with what they were in the pre-war period. [Applause.]

Let us get down to brass tacks. Let us not try to fool the farmers of this country. If we are willing to give them cost of production plus a reasonable profit, then let us vote to recede in our position and concur in the Senate amendment which will give them cost of production and a fair profit. The farmers are entitled to that much and no less.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is not the cost of production a variable quantity which varies according to the section of the country, the quality of the soil and the efficiency of cultivation methods used by farmers?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes, it will vary; and I may say to you that the parity price is going to vary, because in figuring the parity price you will have to figure the present value of commodities and the value of commodities in 1909 to 1914, and we must also consider the value of the farmer's dollar at that time and the value of his dollar now which will also vary; and just as soon as we start expanding the currency, that price is going to vary and the cost of production is going to vary.

It is just as easy to determine what is the cost of production as it is to determine the parity price. The farmers want this provision, so let us for once give them something they want and something they can benefit from.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will not the cost of production vary in the same neighborhood and on adjoining farms?

Mr. BOILEAU. Just the same as the parity price. The average cost of production is going to be determined on a commodity over a certain wide locality which can be established very easily, and I submit that it is the fair way of determining at what figure we should fix the prices of farm commodities.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman state whether the cost-of-production amendment is optional or mandatory?

Mr. BOILEAU. It is optional, the same as the other provisions of the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture does not have to use it unless he wants to; but I want to predict now that if we vote to retain this provision, it will not be more than 60 or 90 days before the Secretary of Agriculture will be mighty glad that he has a chance to use the cost-of-production plan, and that he will use it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did we not use this same plan in this same bill in working out our inflation provision, which provided for 3 or 4 different alternatives?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then why not use the same plan for the benefit of the farmers?

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman's statement is exactly correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any question but what this amendment, if put in operation, will raise the price of farm commodities?

Mr. BOILEAU. It certainly will; and the Secretary of Agriculture will have to ascertain what is the average cost of production, including a reasonable profit, and from that time on it will be unlawful for any purchaser to pay less than the established cost of production on that part of the produce that is used in the domestic market. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DICKSTEIN). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to my good friend Mr. BOILEAU, of Wisconsin, who has just preceded me and who advocates this price-fixing proposal, I want to say to you that in this brief time let us consider in a cool, calm, deliberate way the provisions of this price-fixing feature. When I was selected as one of the five conferees to represent this branch of the greatest law making body in the world in the consideration with the six Senate conferees of a combined piece of legislation as far-reaching and important as any ever considered by any Congress in the history of our great country, I was deeply grateful for the honor and felt most keenly the grave responsibility resting upon me.

We were appointed Wednesday afternoon and went to work in conference Thursday morning, and today there is before this House the results of our labors evidenced by this conference report accompanying H.R. 3835, upon which you are to vote within the hour.

It goes without saying that all of you are interested, and many are more concerned with our conclusions respecting some of these amendments than with others. Some are of more general and vital importance than others, but to say the least of it your conferees did the best they could, and in the many instances where we receded and agreed it was with amendments adopted by the conference that substantially strengthened the bill in our judgment. You know in order to complete this stupendous task it was a proposition of give and take. Permit me to say that all the gentlemen composing the conference freely and fully gave of their time and talents to the questions involved and certainly had their hearts as well as heads in the work. The results accomplished are before you for your approval or disapproval.

As one of the managers on the part of the House at this conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate—nos. 1 to 84—to the bill H.R. 3835, to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, I, in each and every instance, tried to represent you and the will of this House as best I could under the existing circumstances. You are now to pass judgment for our acts as evidenced by this submitted conference report.

This report shows the committee of conference agreed upon 82 amendments but were unable to agree on the amendment designated as no. 83, known in the bill as part 3, cost of production, generally referred to as the Norris proposal.

Your conferees were and are against this amendment. The Senate conferees are for it. We were unable to reach any compromise, so the conference report shows the committee of conference have not agreed on this amendment no. 83, which is the "price-fixing amendment."

In the limited time that we have for discussion of this report, it is my purpose not to discuss any other amendment here, as I discussed on the floor of this House a short time ago some of the agreements and conclusions reached in conference, but to briefly consider with you this particular amendment, no. 83, and give you at least some of my reasons for being against it in its present form.

In the first place this House has never had an opportunity to express itself concerning it. I know personally some of you are for it and some are against it. I assure you here and now that regardless of my personal views, as one of your conferees, if it is the will of this House expressed by a majority vote that this amendment be agreed to, as your representative I will vote to permit it to be retained in the bill. This cost-of-production section, 20, was not a part of the measure as it passed this body. It was added to the bill in the Senate, so when the measure as passed by the Senate was referred to conference, your conferees, as far as any vote of this House is concerned, had no instructions.

In taking the position I have on this "price-fixing" proposal as passed by the Senate, I have expressed my personal views and not until this body votes will I know the wishes of the majority of this House on this proposition.

Permit me to give you some of the provisions of this amendment and discuss with you some of its consequences, as I view it, if it is enacted into law as a part of this measure as it is now written.

This amendment simply means that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized with respect to the basic agricultural commodities to estimate and proclaim from time to time (1) the percentage of the production of the commodity that will be needed for domestic consumption; (2) the average domestic cost of production, including therein a reasonable profit, for the commodity.

After the cost-of-production feature it is further provided in the price-fixing proposal that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the business of buying and selling any commodity or commodities as a dealer to purchase or sell any amount of the commodity or commodities so purchased from the producer at a price for the domestic-consumption percentage thereof that is less than the cost-of-production price for the commodity estimated and proclaimed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That portion of the commodity not used for domestic consumption is not regulated by this price-fixing amendment.

The remaining sections of the amendment referred to provide penalties first for the people violating the provisions of this amendment who are engaged in the business of buying and selling the commodities as dealers who purchase the commodities from the producers. There is also a penalty for anyone purchasing commodities, regardless from whom they are purchased, at a price less than the cost-of-production price plus a reasonable profit on the investment as determined and proclaimed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The other provisions of the amendment are of no great consequence with the exception that they do apply with respect to commodities or products thereof competing with any of the basic agricultural commodities for which a cost-of-production has been proclaimed under this section, with limitations as therein set out.

This cost-of-production proposal, known as amendment no. 83, just simply means that the Secretary of Agriculture, on all domestic-consumption basic agricultural products, has the right to fix the cost-of-production price for same and add a reasonable profit, all of which will necessarily have to be an estimate, because, on account of the very nature of things, we all know that you cannot get a result that is mathematically correct in perhaps any individual case; the cost of production in one case is different from the cost of production in another and very greatly depends on many intervening circumstances and conditions. Yet the consuming public will have to pay the price so arbitrarily fixed or violate the law and subject themselves to be punished under the terms thereof.

The Members of this House, every one of you, have given to some extent more or less thought and consideration to this subject. Many of you are personally and vitally interested and have firm and fixed convictions after due deliberation and careful consideration of the questions involved in this amendment.

Those of you who from actual knowledge and practical experience can and are able to visualize the workings of this amendment, should it be put into operation, I feel will agree with me that it would bring about complications and complexities that would be so far-reaching that none of us would dare prophesy at this time the extent thereof. It would create administrative difficulties that would be almost impossible to meet; it would necessarily require the fixing of prices for different grades, types, and character of the same commodity. We all agree that this is so with reference to cotton, tobacco, wheat, and, in fact, every commodity that is listed as a basic agricultural commodity.

What we are endeavoring to do by this omnibus farm bill is to help the producer and endeavor to raise farm values and commodity prices in an effort to put agriculture on a basis that will enable the farmer to buy the manufacturer's goods and pay off his financial obligations, as you know this omnibus farm bill includes what is known as "the Smith plan" and the so-called "domestic-allotment plan", both of which are designed to help distressed agriculture in this emergency.

We know that the Secretary of Agriculture has expressed himself as being ready, able, anxious, and willing to set the administrative machinery in motion with respect to these plans just as soon as this measure is enacted into law. The success or failure of this measure is going to largely depend upon how this law is administered.

In addition to the farm-mortgage refinancing plan and the inflation amendment as carried in this bill, if the House recedes and concurs in this price-fixing Senate amendment, you will place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture not only powers, the ultimate results of which stagger you to contemplate, but the administration of which will require machinery entirely different and apart from that necessary to operate the other emergency features of this bill.

I know the Secretary of Agriculture, who has a firm and comprehensive grasp of the questions involved and the theories advanced, as well as a thorough working knowledge of the practical effects that will result not only to the producer but also to the consumer, is opposed to this price-fixing amendment. He realizes that the amendment is economically unsound and would, if placed in effect, depress rather than increase farm prices. In the absence of any legislative standard for determining cost-of-production, it would be impossible to arrive at such costs on any definite basis. The cost-of-production figures of the Department are now less than the parity price or fair-exchange value provided in the bill. If any attempt were made to fix prices by enforcing a cost-of-production price that did not have due regard for purchasing power of the consumer and other economic considerations, the commodity would back up on the farm. Extensive bootlegging would result and innumerable fines be imposed if any real attempt at enforcement were made. I believe that he feels the operation of the amendment would seriously impair the farm-relief program. The presence of the amendment in the bill will raise expectations for higher farm prices than can possibly be obtained in view of the unworkable and unsound character of the amendment, and will endanger the securing of co-operation in certain farm regions for other features of the bill which hold promise of effective and sound relief.

Of course, I realize that there is in the minds of some of you the question that this cost-of-production plan is optional and that the Secretary of Agriculture does not have to put it into operation unless he wants to. To my mind, the fact that it is put into the bill merely as an alternative for the Secretary of Agriculture to use at his discretion is sufficient argument against it here. Many things could and would be charged if he did not use it and if he did endeavor to put it into operation, here are just some of the practical situations that would result, as I see it. Let me give you a practical case by way of illustration. Take for instance that I am a producer of cotton and the Secretary of Agriculture, through the medium provided as to the amount of cotton domestically consumed, proclaims that it cost me to produce it, plus a fair profit on my investment, 10 cents per pound. That is the only cash crop I produce and I find myself with 20 bales of cotton but no money. It is necessary that I have cash either as an emergency to pay hospital bills or to pay taxes or what not. The cotton market is stagnant. No cotton is moving at the 10-cent figure, and hence I cannot sell it but one of your men come to me and you say, I will give you 9 cents a pound for your cotton. I want to sell at that price. You want to buy at that price, but under the law we cannot trade without violating the law and subjecting you to a penalty of a thousand dollars for each violation.

If you are a cotton dealer or buyer operating without a license you are subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for each day the violation continues.

Pursue the illustration further: Suppose you as a buyer paid me, the producer, the price for my cotton fixed by this law, and that then you got into serious financial difficulties and through necessity have to sell some of the cotton at a sacrifice price so as to raise some ready cash to meet a pressing emergency, and you find another cotton buyer or mill that will buy your cotton but at 1 cent per pound less than the fixed price, and you cannot find another purchaser for a better price and decide under the circumstances to sell even a part of the cotton you have on hand which will bring a sum even at the reduced price that will tide you over the emergency; you cannot sell and he cannot buy the cotton at the agreed reduced price without you both being subject to be penalized.

Will not this create a situation that will work untold hardships and encourage law violations? Will this not operate against the producer of the commodity as well as others, and disastrously affect the normal values of the commodity and restrain trade between parties? Will not the farmer's crop that he raises remain unsold and back up in the hands of the producer? What incentive or inducement is proposed by this amendment for the purchase of the farmer's crops he produces? Will not this operate as a hindrance rather than a help where the one wants to sell, the other wants to buy, but they cannot trade except at the fixed price unless they suffer the penalty imposed by this law?

To ask these questions are but to answer them. In my judgment, the difficulties and disasters incident to the passage of this law in its present form are manifold and far outweigh its advantages, especially as we have other emergency-relief measures already agreed upon in this bill by both the House and the Senate conferees and approved by this administration designed to bring immediate relief to distressed agriculture.

So, my friends, do not delay the passage of this bill any longer and kill its good effects and provisions by insisting on this one amendment which is laden and fraught with so many, many disastrous possibilities and destructive features.

During this limited debate here I have not referred to my views relating to the constitutionality of this price-fixing amendment, for I knew it would be impossible to discuss it here on the floor of this House, within the limited time allotted me, fully and logically. Suffice it to say that in the event this amendment was enacted into a law and a test case was made of it, I have grave doubts as to its constitutionality as it is here written.

So the question here presented to this House is, Will you or will you not include this price-fixing provision in this omnibus farm bill?

I believe and hope the majority will vote against it and approve the position taken by your conferees as you have heretofore done in regard to their acts concerning the balance of the conference report already submitted and approved.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON.]

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am for concurring in the amendment and keeping this cost-of-production provision in the bill. This is not opposition to Secretary Wallace. I am strong for him, and I think he is doing everything in his power to bring about better conditions.

I have a great deal of confidence in Mr. Peek. Seven years ago, on my first trip to Washington, I came as a member of the Committee of Twenty-two, sponsoring the McNary-Haugen bill, and he was chairman of the committee. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] was also another member. I have confidence in Mr. Wilson, the probable administrator for wheat.

I am a member of the National Farmers' Union board, and if there is anything our organization ever stood for through these years it has been the cost of production. It was John Simpson who sold the idea to the Senate, where it was adopted.

When a group of us met with Secretary Wallace on the 10th of March, I advocated this plan and represented the farmers' union, but it was not agreed to.

It was later put in by the Senate. It was sold to the Senate on its merits. Nobody ordered the members of the Senate committee to vote for this thing. It was sold to them, and every farm-minded Member of that body voted for this cost-of-production amendment when presented on the floor of the Senate.

If it had not been put in in the Senate bill, it might receive different consideration.

It is only optional. What is the harm of leaving it in? The people have been sold on this thing. They were sold on the Frazier bill, but the Frazier bill is out. This is the only thing left. Let us leave it in. Let us leave something additional in that could be used if needed. We have granted wide powers to the President in many lines. If the other things do not work, they will need it, and if they do work, then they will have no use for it. I am appealing to you on both sides, you farm-minded Members, to leave this in the bill.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Was not this what the farmers had in mind when they voted at the last election?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It was guaranteed in the Democratic platform.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Would not all of the difficulties suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture about arriving at the cost of production have equally as much force in ascertaining the processor's tax? What would the difference be?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. To my mind it would be the same thing. He could use all the arguments against the cost of processing that he used against the cost of production.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The gentleman says that this bill was practically declared for in the Democratic platform.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. If the Democrats repudiate this amendment, then they repudiate their platform.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Absolutely. Now, you have a chance to stand by your platform. Do not desert it. I appeal to my new friends, Members on the Democratic side, to let this stay in the bill and stand by your platform. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, we are told that the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to this amendment—the Norris-Simpson amendment—giving to the farmer the cost of production and a reasonable profit for that part of his products that is used for domestic consumption. Let me ask, Who is making the laws of the United States of America? The Congress or the Secretary of Agriculture? Who is responsible to the farmers of this Nation for the enactment of real and not make-believe legislation? The farmers have been asking for justice, for equality, at the hands of Congress for years, but so far their demands have been ignored. So far Congress has done nothing real for the betterment of agriculture. We have raised high hopes and expectations, but have failed utterly to take steps to meet these hopes or expectations.

I am aware that the great majority of newly elected Members of both political parties are sincere and honestly wish to fulfill their campaign and platform pledges, but they are dominated by the conservative leadership of both political parties. These leaders can be depended upon to fight shoulder to shoulder on all occasions where real issues are at stake. I am conscious of the sham battles that have been put up on this floor on nonessentials for public consumption; but on every test that has been made on real issues the conservative Members of both parties have worked shoulder to shoulder.

There is not a Member in this House but knows that the vast majority of the people of this Nation favor the Norris-Simpson amendment—that the farmers almost unanimously demand it, and yet, in the face of that demand, this Congress is asked to take its orders from the new Secretary of Agriculture, who has been in office but 2 months and who is not a farmer but a newspaperman.

I gladly concede that the conservative Members of both parties are equally sincere and honest, but they forget that we are living in the twentieth century and that we have made great progress since the eleventh century, and that our whole system of government will be made responsive to the will of the people—and they forget that we are on our way.

This bill contains all of the agricultural relief before this Congress so far. It is all that some Members of Congress think is necessary to do. The farmers, however, think very little of this bill, and, in fact, are not satisfied with its provisions, save and except the Norris-Simpson amendment—the amendment that proposes to give them the cost of production for that part of their products consumed within the United States.

No intelligent or honest man or woman should expect to eat or use the farmer's commodities for less than it costs to produce them. No intelligent or honest man or woman does object—save and except the Secretary of Agriculture. He does not object to paying the cost of production but says he will be unable to figure out what the cost of production is.

I am very much afraid that the Secretary of Agriculture has not had time to become acquainted with all the subdivisions in the Department of Agriculture. If he had, he surely would have known that there is a division or bureau within the Department of Agriculture that has for years figured out and given out to the public the cost of production of the principal farm commodities.

As late as last January the Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor of the State of North Dakota, at Bismarck, asked and received from the then Secretary of Agriculture the average cost of production per bushel of wheat within the United States for the year 1932. That cost was $1.01 per bushel for spring wheat and $1.14 per bushel for winter wheat. That is what it cost to produce the average bushel of wheat for the year 1932, according to the then Secretary. The Secretary appointed by Mr. Hoover apparently knew that there was a bureau within the Department of Agriculture that knew how to figure out the cost of production. Surely our present Secretary, from whom so much is expected, will discover that there is a bureau within his Department that can figure out the average cost of production of the principal farm commodities. That has been done for years.

It has been stated here that the Democratic platform contained a plank guaranteeing to the farmers the cost of production. It makes very little difference to me whether some of your Democrats go back on your platform, or whether some of the Republicans do—that is all the same to me. We are not here legislating as Republicans, Democrats, or any other partisans; but we are here legislating for the good of the people of the United States, and I am talking to you as a nonpartisan—I am not concerned with either Democrats, Republicans, or any other partisans.

I am sure we all want to do something for the good of the people of this Nation—especially for the good of agriculture. The farmers of this Nation want this amendment. Why not give it to them? It is their amendment, put in by the Senate through the persuasive powers of John A. Simpson, the greatest farm leader of them all—a leader to whom over 85 percent of the farmers of this Nation are looking for guidance in this, their hour of distress. A leader with vision, courage, and determination, who is unafraid and never yet lost a battle. You may beat him in this skirmish because of the party lash, but I am afraid you will regret the day, because he is right and you are wrong—you know that the farmer is entitled to the cost of production for the things that you and I and others eat and wear.

When we pass laws for the railroads we listen to the railroadmen. When we pass laws concerning industry we listen to the industrialists. When we pass laws for banks we listen to bankers, but when we pass laws for agriculture we are asked to listen to a newspaperman and to follow his advice. Why not listen to the farmers? This legislation is intended to benefit them. They were promised farm relief, and they were promised that they would have something to say about it. Surely common decency, after all these years of waiting, would impel us to give to them this simple amendment, which makes it possible for them to get the cost of production for that part of their commodities consumed within the United States. Why should the Secretary of Agriculture object to this—anyway, whether he objects or not, the Congress is charged with the responsibility of making laws, not he.

The law of self-preservation—the law of last resort—is in operation. The Farmers Holiday Association has ordered a strike for the 13th of May. They have invited the unemployed to join them. If we will give to the farmers this amendment, we may avoid that strike. Let us not underestimate that strike. People who are losing their homes, whose families are in want, who feel that they have for years been shortchanged and fooled at the hands of the politicians in Congress, may do desperate things—they are in no mood to be trifled with. They expected much, and still expect much, from this new administration. Let us not disappoint them now, because if we do, we may find that this strike, called for the 13th of May, may shock this Nation from end to end.

Let us heed the danger signals. Let us avoid this strike if possible. The temper of the farmers has been shown, not only in the State of Iowa but in such other States as Minnesota, Montana, North Dakota, Wisconsin, and Nebraska. The truth is, that in some of these States serious trouble was avoided only because the Governors of those States had the courage and foresight to declare a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures. If the Governor of Iowa had used the same intelligence, courage, and determination, the judge in his State would not have been mobbed and taken out for a holiday ride. Only patience and wisdom on our part can stop the repetition of similar instances. Let us, at least in a small way, fulfill our campaign pledges to these people in desperation and want.

I campaigned for the national Democratic ticket in several States. I did it without consulting the Democratic Party leaders. I know that most of the Democratic speakers gave the promise to the farmers of this Nation that their party would give to them at least the cost of production. That is how the Democratic platform was interpreted in my State. That is why I supported the national Democratic ticket—I supported it because I had great faith and confidence in the great human soul that was then Governor of the State of New York, and I still have that confidence now that he is President. I am confident that he will do something real for agriculture, which means something real for all the people.

Congress is charged with the responsibilities of making the laws of this Nation, and not the Secretary of Agriculture. If we permit him to write the laws in regard to agriculture, then the Secretary of the Navy will want to write them in regard to the Navy—the Secretary of War in regard to war—the Secretary of Commerce in regard to commerce. If we are willing that these secretaries should make these laws, then let us go home, because we are useless here. I am fully aware of the fact that the Chief Executive of this Nation should have something to say, and should direct the legislation that is passed, but I object to calling in all the little secretaries and have them tell Congress what laws it should pass for this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Does the gentleman feel that if we adopt this amendment and the cost of production is included in this bill, it will go far toward averting the farmers' strike?

Mr. LEMKE. I agree with the gentleman. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, the argument against putting this provision in the bill has not a leg to stand on. In the first place, it is optional. In the second place, it is the most sensible way to deal with this question. It will cost less than any other provision. All the Secretary of Agriculture need do is find the cost of production and fix the price, and the amount or percentage of the product to be used domestically that will be sold for that price. In other words, if he finds that the cost of production and a reasonable profit on wheat is $1.10 a bushel and he finds that five sixths of the wheat of the United States is used in domestic consumption, then what will happen? The farmer will haul 1,200 bushels of wheat to the elevator and the elevator-owner must, under this provision, pay the farmer $1.10 for 1,000 bushels, and he can pay the farmer whatever they agree on for the 200 bushels. The farmer gets his money at the elevator and goes on home happy.

The other provision provides that we must levy taxes. Not only that, it must be paid back to the farmer, and it goes all the way around. This is a simple and straightforward measure. If you put this provision into effect it will open the doors of the banks for $6,000,000,000 of credit in this country. All you have to do is to give us a chance with this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, this amendment does not provide that the farmers shall receive only the cost of production, but it provides that they shall receive a price not less than the cost of production. If the market price is more, then they will receive that price for their products.

Some time ago we heard much about the Democratic platform, in which I believe. The national Democratic platform provides that "we favor the enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmers to receive for their basic farm commodities prices in excess of cost." This provision of the platform does not say cost of production but "prices in excess of cost." Speaking of platforms, why not comply with that provision now?

I have seen nothing to indicate that the President of the United States is opposed to this amendment. I know the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to it. They say that he is a Republican. [Laughter.] I am opposed to a Republican telling a Democratic House how it shall legislate. [Laughter and applause.]

The three great national farm organizations in January 1932 endorsed the provisions of this amendment. The National Grange, the National Farmers Union, and the American Farm Bureau Federation all endorsed it. They said, with other recommendations, "nothing less is a remedy for the agricultural-marketing problem." These representatives should know the farm problem as well as any Secretary of Agriculture.

Every time a farm bill is before this House somebody raises the question that either it is unconstitutional or unworkable; but nobody who has argued against this amendment has stated why it would not work. It will require no more money. The Department of Agriculture every year makes an estimate of the cost of production of the leading farm crops and also the amount of the surplus. They already have that information. Regardless of whether the Secretary of Agriculture says they do it by statute or not, they do it. He says the cost of production is now less than shown in the bill, but it was not less in 1931. If this provision had been the law during that year, the farmer, instead of getting 20 cents a bushel for his wheat, would have gotten $1.09; he would have gotten 16 cents a pound for his cotton, 89 cents a bushel for his corn, and 54 cents a bushel for his oats. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK] has expired.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in entire sympathy with what has been said by the proponents of this amendment as to their desire to increase prices and give the farmer his cost of production. There cannot be any difference of opinion among any of us on that. The farmer is entitled to a price above his cost of production, but I do not see anything in this amendment which will insure any farmer in this country that he will get his cost of production.

In the first place, the amendment is entirely optional. The Secretary of Agriculture is vigorously opposed to it. He believes that it is economically unsound, and that if placed in effect it will depress rather than increase prices. Therefore we know that the Secretary will not use it if this power is granted to him. Now, no matter how strongly the proponents of this amendment may feel that it will give the farmer his cost of production if placed in effect, even they must agree nothing can be accomplished if the power is not used. In the second place, I do not believe there is any lawyer on the floor of this House or elsewhere who would contend for a moment that this provision is constitutional. I do not have time to discuss the constitutional phases of the matter, but as far as I have been able to learn, it has never been contended by any of the proponents of this amendment that there is any power in the Constitution, either express or implied, which would give Congress authority to pass legislation of this kind. Why waste our time passing legislation which admittedly would be declared invalid the first time it is questioned in the courts. Are we helping the farmer any in doing so?

In the third place, if we were to assume that the amendment is constitutional and that it would be put into effect by the Secretary of Agriculture, there is nothing in it to give the individual farmer his cost of production. This amendment says that the price shall be fixed upon the average cost of production.

Now, assuming there are as many farmers whose cost is above the average as there are farmers whose cost is below the average, you could not possibly give more than half the farmers cost of production, and to this extent you are, of course, merely trying to fool the farmer when you say to him you have passed legislation which will give him his cost of production. We all know the great variance in production costs even in the same locality and in the same crop season. We know the wide difference in the cost of producing wheat in Kansas and, say, in Michigan, and the difference in production costs on cotton between various States and even in different sections of the same State. This all makes it very obvious that there is no way under this amendment or anything similar that all farmers can be assured their cost of production.

In the fourth place, let us not forget that the figures of the Department, and these are the figures that would have to be used if this amendment were adopted and put into effect, show that the present cost of production of the principal agricultural commodities is less than the parity price.

For instance, the figures of the Department of Agriculture show the average cost of production for cotton to be 8 cents a pound, yet today cotton is selling at 8 cents a pound. The Department's figures show that the average cost of production for wheat is 60 cents a bushel, and today out in Kansas at country elevators wheat is being bought at 60 cents per bushel.

So if this amendment were adopted and the Secretary should use it, these two crops will derive no benefit. While I do not have definite figures, I understand the same is true as to at least some other crops, and in practically every case the parity price which the Secretary wishes to put into effect is considerably higher than the Department's figures as to cost of production.

Let me call attention to another thing, and this is of especial interest to those interested in cotton. We have on hand in the country today 13,000,000 bales of cotton, more than a year's supply. Is the spinner, the warehouseman, or the broker who owns this cotton going to buy the farmer's new crop of cotton at some price to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture when they have all this cotton on hand in the warehouses? Why, certainly not. So this year, at least, the cotton farmer will not have any market if you put into effect a proposition of this kind.

The same situation is true with respect to wheat, because there are now in the mills and elevators, in storage, and out of the farmers' hands in this country 190,000,000 bushels of wheat. There is estimated to be 178,000,000 bushels of wheat still in the farmers' hands. The domestic consumption of wheat for food purposes in this country is about 500,000,000 bushels annually. Therefore this means that this year we will have a market for only a little over 300,000,000 bushels of wheat if this amendment is adopted and put into effect. The farmer already has 178,000,000 bushels on hand, so of his new crop he could sell less than 150,000,000 bushels at the fixed price. What he will do with the rest I leave for the proponents of this legislation to figure out.

I have not yet seen a person who could tell me how this amendment would apply to the hog-producer. How are you going to fix a price for hogs based on cost of production when there are a dozen different classes of hogs, so far as marketing is concerned? What is the difference in the production cost of a packer sow as compared with fancy butcher stock?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I think all of us are in agreement that we want this farm bill to work; we want the Secretary of Agriculture to succeed under its provisions in bringing about higher prices for agricultural products; and we know he has a hard job ahead of him. If he succeeds, he is going to need the cooperation and support of all the farmers in the country. If we include too many different plans in the measure, there is more likely to be a difference of opinion among the farmers as to which method should be used. It is true that under the original bill the Secretary has the option of using different methods, but they are all part of one general plan and theory. All can be worked together harmoniously. This plan is entirely foreign to the other proposals contained in the bill. If it is included in the measure, its proponents will naturally insist on its being tried. This difference of opinion will certainly not be conducive to a fair trial of the proposals which the Secretary has in mind. Let us not do anything at this time to handicap the administration of this act in any way. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this amendment.

In this bill we are making provision for refinancing the farmer. Why? Because he has been unable to sell his products at the cost of production. Why are we devoting time to preparing and passing this legislation? It is because we are trying to give the farmer an opportunity to sell his products on the market for what is reasonable and fair, and this includes a reasonable profit. There is no business in the world that will succeed unless it is able to sell its products for the cost of production with a reasonable profit, and this applies to the farmer just the same as it applies to any other business or industry.

This is the first time, I believe, there has been before this House an opportunity for a straight vote on the question of furnishing the farmer what he is entitled to receive—the actual cost of the things he produces on the farm. [Applause.]

If you are trying to help the farmer, here is the one vote you can cast that will give him an opportunity to get what he is entitled to receive—the cost of production with a reasonable profit—and everyone who has spoken acknowledges he is entitled to this. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I judge by now you know that Oklahoma is for this amendment to guarantee the farmer the cost of production. I have not time to discuss this proposition in 1 minute, but I just want to say that if we are looking at the constitutionality of questions, we have waited a long time to begin.

The second objection is that it will not work. There is only one reason why this measure will not work and it is that you will not try it. Of course, it will not work if you do not give it the opportunity. If I read history correctly, practically every great invention and also every new proposal has always met the same criticism—it will not work—but when it was tried, it did work.

There are three things that you must consider with respect to any law. First, what is in the law; second, how will it be administered; and third, what cooperation will it receive? As we examine this law I see nothing in it that is not workable. It can be administered, if not by the present Secretary of Agriculture, then we can get a new Secretary that will make it work. And it will receive the right kind of cooperation because the farmers are for it. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. TERRELL].

Mr. TERRELL. Mr. Speaker, I opposed the farm relief bill on its passage in the House. I was opposed to the McNary-Haugen bill, the Farm Marketing Act, and the Farm Board, because I am opposed to the Government's controlling farming operations or business operations except to prevent fraud and monopolies.

The Government has never ventured into the field of private industry without losing money and making matters worse. The Farm Board, with its stabilization corporations and gambling on the futures market, lost millions of the people's money. The exorbitant salaries, as high as $75,000, paid by the Farm Board and cotton cooperatives, are an example of the abuses of unlimited power and should warn us never to grant such power again. It seems that they thought that the higher the salaries they paid, the higher prices they would receive for the products. We ought to learn some sense with such flagrant failures before us.

This bill contains two distinct provisions for the purpose of fixing prices of farm products. They are the processing fee to be collected from dealers and processors to constitute a fund to cover the cost of operation and to pay the difference between the present prices of farm products and the average prices between the years of 1909 and 1914, to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture. No one can deny that this is price fixing, and no one can say how much money it will take to administer the law and to pay farmers the difference between the present prices and the average price between 1909 and 1914.

The processing fees may be so high as to bankrupt all dealers and processors of agricultural products, and yet this law does not place any limit on the amount of the fees to be charged but turns all the farmers, dealers, and processors over to the tender mercies of one man whose word is law, with penalties imposing heavy fines and imprisonment. The Senate amendments have greatly improved this law.

The other provision for price fixing provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall estimate the average cost of producing the products named in the bill and fix the price for that portion of the production used in domestic consumption that will cover the cost of production and will allow a reasonable profit to the producers. The Secretary of Agriculture can estimate this cost from the figures in his office and from crop reports filed from time to time, and the Government has estimated the average cost of producing farm products many times, and such average cost is fairly accurate. While commissioner of agriculture of my State, I estimated the cost of producing cotton for several years by cost reports from thousands of farmers. This cost varied greatly with individuals, some running very high and some running very low, but I found the average cost to be applicable to 75 percent of the farmers, and this is close enough for all practical purposes.

Why should not the farmer have the cost of production and a profit? It is the universal principle upon which all businesses are conducted or should be conducted. The steel producers, the copper producers, the automobile producers, and every other organized group of producers do business upon the cost-profit plan, and they are frequently assisted by the strong arm of the Government in levying a prohibitive tariff against imports by which they can raise their prices to the extent of the tariff rate and make the American consumers pay increased prices for the sole benefit of certain industries.

While I am opposed to the Government fixing prices or attempting to fix prices, it is already doing these things for certain industries and is attempting to aid the farmers to get better prices through the operation of this law. I shall support the one provision in this bill that seems to offer any relief to the farmer, and that is the Simpson amendment, supported by the real farmers of the country, which proposes to give them cost of production and a reasonable profit.

This is the principle upon which all successful industries are operated, and we certainly should make an honest effort to place agriculture on a sound business basis, while we are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars to bolster up industry, which will be lost and the industries will fail, unless agriculture, upon which industry finally rests, is made profitable. We must not forget that agriculture is languishing and that the farmers are desperate, as shown by recent events in Iowa; and we must relieve this situation at all hazards or face a revolution.

I realize that the Secretary of Agriculture will experience difficulties in applying either of these alternatives to raise prices, but I submit that the cost of production and a reasonable profit on farm products is the soundest in principle and the most practicable in application.

Farmers do not ask any favors at the hands of the Government; they only ask a square deal, and they have not had this. If the Government will establish a sound and equitable money system, with the dollar stabilized at a fair exchange value between the price of farm products and the dollar, stop the exchange gamblers from robbing the farmers by manipulation of prices of farm products through which the natural laws of supply and demand are nullified, and take the burdensome taxes off the farmers and take the tax eaters off their backs, the farmers will take care of themselves without any Government interference. I could quote figures and statistics in unlimited numbers to support my contention and to show the tremendous losses of the farmers, but they are dry and uninteresting, so I am merely stating facts known to everyone who exercises ordinary common sense.

There has been no effort made to stop the outrageous manipulations in prices of farm products through operation on the exchanges. Everybody knows that the vast dealings on the produce exchanges interfere with the natural law of supply and demand, and that the farmers have been robbed and plundered through these gambling agencies and through an unjust and unfair tariff, so that all their earnings have been taken from them and they are no longer able to pay taxes and purchase the products of industry.

Industry cannot employ labor or sell its products, and the whole economic structure has broken down and many people refuse to acknowledge the cause. The whole cause in a nutshell is an inadequate, unfair, and unwise financial system and an overcapitalized, maladjusted, industrial system, combined with an overorganized, inefficient, extravagant government—municipal, State, and National.

Whether you believe it or not, there can be no economic recovery without agricultural recovery. No nation has ever remained prosperous when agriculture languished. It is the pillow of prosperity in this country, and unless that pillow is sustained other industries must fall. If I were going to experiment in price fixing, I would take only two products, cotton and wheat. Agriculture is so fundamental and so vital to the welfare of the country that this Government would be justified in setting a fair price on cotton and wheat—the two great export products—and taking them over at that price, if such price could not be obtained in the open market, and making a direct appropriation to pay the difference between the market price and the price fixed by the Government. I know this statement will be combated; but I say it can safely be done and the Government can control production by voluntary agreement when profitable prices are guaranteed, but not otherwise; and with controlled production the guaranteed prices would be sustained in the markets and the Government would not lose a penny.

It would be no greater violation of sound principles, or of the rights of the people, to tax all the people to make agriculture prosperous than it is to tax all the people through tariff taxes to make industry prosperous, which practice has been in operation many years. It is safer and better for all the people to help sustain agriculture than it is to lend the banks the credit of the Government and permit them to control the credit of all the people. These practices have caused the collapse of business and loss of confidence of the people.

I am supporting this bill because it was amended by the Senate to give authority to expand the currency and to recognize the right of the farmers to receive cost of production and a reasonable profit. Let us give the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to use either of these means to raise the price of products. If one plan succeeds, he does not have to use the other; but if one fails, he can then use the other. The price of farm products has advanced recently because of the prospect of expanding the currency; and when expansion becomes a fact instead of a theory the price of products will rise to a point where it will not be necessary to experiment with questionable methods.

Just as soon as the Government resumes its constitutional authority to coin money and regulate its value and takes the control of the money system away from the "financial highjackers" who have brought honorable banking into disrepute and wrecked the entire industrial system, commodity prices will rise, purchasing power will be restored to the farmers and they will need products of the forest and factories to supply their needs. Orders will pour into the various industries for goods, and the industries will have to employ labor to fill the orders, and the wheels of progress will begin to turn, and the depression will be ended. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER].

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, every time anyone tries to make an argument or show cause why the farmer should be given cost of production, somebody yells something about the constitutionality of it. I wonder if these same fellows did all their yelling about constitutionality when the Esch-Cummings bill was passed, guaranteeing certain profits to railroads, or the laws which allowed the light, heat, and power companies to collect from the people on a basis of cost of production plus a reasonable amount of income, and so forth. We never heard this cry then, but when you talk for the farmer, then it is an unconstitutional provision.

For about 15 or 16 years we have been "kidding" the farmers along in this country, politically, by promising them cost of production in every campaign, and then when we come to the very heart of the entire farm bill—and I want to say here and now that the rest of the farm bill is the most assinine, unworkable monstrosity that ever went through the minds of men and is not going to work—there is only one thing in that entire bill, and that is not a mandatory proposition but a chance to give the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary an opportunity to use cost of production if he wants to, and we are going to take the very heart out of the farm bill or the only part of the bill that really amounts to anything.

If you give the farmer cost of production you can do away with all the rest of the bill. We do not need any of it. If you will give the farmer cost of production, plus a reasonable profit, he can pay his bills. You will not have to refinance him and lend him money to pay his debts. This is the cause of his being in the condition he is in today. This is due to the fact he has not received cost of production and I want you to know that so far as the farmer is concerned he has never in the history of the United States received cost of production. The only money that has ever been made by the farmers of this country has been made through an increased price of farm land which they have been able to sell as they retired from the farm, and now this last little semblance of a chance to make a few dollars has disappeared and farm values have fallen to nothing or less. This is the situation the farmer is in today. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, if I had sufficient time I should like to go into the details and tell you why I favor the cost-of-production amendment now before us. I believe that it is the heart of this bill, that it offers the Department of Agriculture an opportunity to be a real help to the farmers of this country who are suffering from long neglect.

I trust that we can get a record vote on this amendment. [Applause.] I believe the people of the country are interested to know who are the friends of the farmer, and a record vote will tell the story.

The Department of Agriculture says that it does not want this amendment because it is too hard to administer. I should like to know how they can explain their position when they take the position they do on the matter of processors. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Leave being granted to extend my remarks, the following is inserted:

Briefly stated the cost-of-production amendment will be easy of application and will, if used by the Department, employ as small a number of men as under any other plan in the bill. For instance, take wheat, for example. The elevator man would take the cost of production fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture in his proclamation for that part of the product brought to him that would be for home consumption. The balance would be sold just as it is now, controlled and handled in the same way it is now.

Assume the Secretary, in his estimate, found the total production of wheat for the year to be 800,000,000 bushels and that domestic consumption and that kept for seed to be 600,000,000. That would mean 200,000,000 would have to be exported. Thus, if a man brought 1,000 bushels of wheat to the elevator, they would be required to pay him cost of production for 750 bushels, and the balance they would settle among themselves. The price would probably be fixed by the world market price, just as it is now. The whole plan is optional with the Secretary. The mechanics are in the amendment permitting him ample authority. The Senate adopted this amendment by a vote of 46 to 41. Let us give the farmer a chance. Leave this optional provision in the bill, so that if the other plans fail the Secretary may try this plan.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I can say very much in the few minutes allotted me, but what I have to say will bear home because it reflects the true situation of the farmer today. I believe that there is no one in this body that knows the condition of the farmer as well as I do; and when I make the statement that what they need today above everything is assistance, and that they have focused their eyes upon Congress to give them that necessary aid, I have only briefed what the farmer wants.

We need help; we have begged assistance from Congress; we have submitted plan after plan for relief and aid; but what has been the result? I need not tell you the picture of repeated failure of true proponents of agriculture on this floor. Today this body has before it an amendment to provide the cost of production for the farmer; and simply what does it mean? My friends, cost of production spells salvation and rescue for the farmer, it spells prosperity for agriculture and the Nation, and I serve warning that the failure of Congress to pass this amendment will bring loud voice of disapproval from the great majority of people of this country.

Failure of this cost-of-production proposal will be just another stumbling block in the Nation-wide efforts of the people to recover from this web of panic and depression that has engulfed the Nation during these past few years. I tell you it is a far cry from the right wing of reaction, that has done nothing but give us promises, and the determined and stubborn farmers of the Middle West who are watching keenly every move that Congress makes; and I tell you that reaction and standpatters will take notice that men of the caliber of John Simpson, that great leader of one of the largest organizations of farmers, will call the roll of those that oppose this worthy measure of relief for the American farmer. I tell you we need more men of the type of Simpson. His patriotic loyalty to the farmer and his indefatigable efforts to aid agriculture and again restore a measure of prosperity to the farmer has been one of the rays of sunshine for the farmer.

This cost-of-production amendment is not an idle and worthless theory of farm practice. It is workable, feasible, and practical. It embodies a price fixing by the Department of Agriculture; and, if I may digress for a moment, may I say that I supported the Democratic Party nationally during the last 5 years and aided Mr. Smith and the present President, Mr. Roosevelt, and I have confidence that our Chief Executive intends the right thing. I had hoped that his appointment of Mr. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture would spell a part of that "new deal" that was promised American agriculture, but I am sorry to say that my confidence in him and the secretaries under him has faded and dimmed during the past few weeks. His opposition to this proposed measure now before us has disappointed me keenly, and I can only say that I am indeed sorry that Mr. Wallace and those who work with him lack the fullness of the situation of the present plight of our farmer, of which I am a part.

I want to say to you Democrats that it would have been better for you by far if you did not come in here with this great majority. It has worked a great handicap upon the people of this Nation. By the use of the floor whip you have been rough shod in your tactics. You have applied the pressure of the conquerer, and why, when in a time of an emergency surely there is no one on this floor that would oppose any measure that will aid the Nation in restoration of its industries and its farmers. But yet, regardless of this fact, you have in a determined machinelike process applied the "gag rule" and in so doing you have invited the same criticism upon your shoulders for which you burned on the stump the party that was in power before you. I am a Farmer-Laborite. What your party does here can only serve to strengthen the only progressive party in Minnesota, and that party is the one of which I am a member.

I opposed the economy measure because of its many unfair and drastic clauses, and by the same token I am supporting this cost-of-production amendment today because of the fairness and justice that it will provide for the hundreds of thousands of farmers who are pleading with you for support. They come to you not in humble fashion but with the great pride and reserve that is so true of the American, and they say to you, "Do not fail us." I hope that the majority of the Members of Congress vote "aye" for the cost of production for the greatest and most important member of society, the American farmer.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am for the Simpson amendment 100 percent. [Applause.] The amendment contains the feature of the only farmer's bill that ever really worked in this country.

We fixed the price of wheat during the war, and we robbed the farmers of $1,000,000,000. Correct that mistake now by voting for this Simpson amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. If this plan will not work, none of the plans proposed in the bill will work. If the bill as written does not guarantee cost of production to the farmer, then it is not worth the paper it is written on. The Simpson amendment is the first bill ever written and sponsored by farmers themselves. We do not expect the theorists and farm quacks to be able to determine cost of production. Farmers themselves know what it costs to produce the various crops. I know what it costs and can tell how much the fiddling and straddling and betrayal by those parasites who farm the farmers has cost during the past 12 years. I am not so much interested in saving the Secretary of Agriculture as I am interested in saving the farmers and the country. It is unsound or unconstitutional to fix the price of money, taxes, farm machinery, gas, oil, electricity, and all the other commodities and services the farmer buys. You say that legislation of this kind enacted for the plutocrats, money kings, superindustrialists, and Wall Street bankers is sound and constitutional. When it comes to giving the farmer a square deal you hide behind that sacred old white ox—the so-called "law of supply and demand." By your vote on this amendment you designate whether you are a real friend of the farmer or only a lukewarm one.

No Democrat need fear evil effects from any measure sponsored and supported by John Simpson, president of the Farmers' National Union. This sterling Jacksonian Democrat was a delegate to the Chicago Democratic National Convention and helped to draft the farm plank in the platform which pledged "excess of cost of production to farmers." Our Republican friends on the minority need not fear him since the major portion of members in his organization live in normally strong Republican States. Farmers everywhere acclaim him as the most aggressive and fighting leader of all.

The farm plant has been going down in value and at the same moment the mortgage indebtedness in that plant has been increasing. The farm asset has been growing less valuable and the debt on it larger, increasing from four and a half billion dollars in 1915 to $12,000,000,000 in 1933.

In analyzing this problem, first let me point out a few respects in which agriculture is at a profound and fundamental disadvantage as compared to other industries, respects as to which the farmer can do nothing practically himself. The manufacturer can determine in advance upon his production program and carry it out to the ton or the piece, or the Ford car, or the suit of clothes, pair of shoes, or what not. The farmer cannot do that. He may plant 100,000,000 acres of corn and get a  $2\frac{1}{4}$ -billion-bushel crop, or he may plant 101,000,000 acres of corn and get a 3,000,000-bushel crop, and he cannot do anything about it except suffer after he has done it. The manufacturer can determine his costs in advance within a few cents per unit of production. The farmer cannot determine his in advance because the season determines his yield and the yield determines his cost. The manufacturer can determine his selling price in advance, and if he sells a good service and a good line of goods, he can maintain that selling price.

The farmer can decide on all the selling prices he pleases, and someone else will finally make the price at which he sells. The manufacturer can speed up his production program any time he pleases to meet additional market demand or increases in price or any other condition in the market. The farmer can do nothing of the kind. Once his seed is in the ground, he waits another year before he can plant another crop, and it takes a dairy cow several years to be profitable, from 2 to 3 years to produce a fat steer, and an apple tree from 7 to 10 years to come into good production, depending on the variety.

The manufacturer can slow down his production just as well as he can speed it up. Any time the price does not suit him, he can close his factory, lay off his hands, and be presented with a bill for overhead. The farmer cannot slow down his production. It will be what it will be, despite his efforts, once the seed is in the ground. People in thinking of agriculture give too little weight to these inherent difficulties; so when anyone makes the statement that the agricultural problem can be solved by regulated production, better business methods, loaning the farmer more money, diversification, or an extension of cooperative selling, one of two things is true—either he does not know what he is talking about or, for reasons best known to himself, he is deliberately trying to deceive the public.

It would be possible by universal agreement to so regulate output as to advance prices to the point where they are profitable, but everybody knows that is not feasible. And again, the American farmers do not want to take the responsibility of great curtailment of production, because a crop failure might ensue, which would be followed by extremely high prices and disaster to the cities, and possibly even bread riots such as were witnessed in the European countries during the war.

It is possible theoretically to bring about higher prices by curtailment of production, but industry does not wish to pursue such a method. Industry uses the tariff to charge higher prices, for the domestic consumption, and dumps the surplus abroad without a profit or a loss. This is precisely the plan which the American farmers want the Government to sanction, and we can give assurances that the American farmers are not going to be greedy in getting their share. They will be less greedy than capital or finance or industry.

After all, all that the American farmers ask is a fair exchange of products—justice for all.

The American farmers do not wish to tear down the protection for other favored classes and groups. They simply ask to be taken into the circle; that, as Abraham Lincoln, said—

Will be continued when this poor tongue of my own shall be silent.

We have summed it up in our slogan—"Cost of production for all or cost of production for none."

First. Part 3 of H.R. 3835, to be put into operation, would require the following steps:

(a) The Secretary of Agriculture would ascertain and promulgate the cost of production on any crop upon which he intended to operate under the cost-of-production plan. It is wholly optional with the Secretary whether or not to use this plan on any one or more crops during any marketing period.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture would ascertain and promulgate the percentage of the crop upon which this plan is to operate, which will be needed for domestic consumption during the next marketing period.

(c) In ascertaining and maintaining the cost of production and the percentage of domestic consumption mentioned in (a) and (b) above the Secretary is left free, according to the terms of part 3, H.R. 3835, in regard to rules and regulations governing these matters. He might use the cost of production of the year before, or of the 5-year period prior, or of any other designated period which occurred to him as being the proper one to use. He could ascertain and promulgate a national cost of production—this would be the most likely procedure—or he could ascertain and promulgate costs of production regionally. He could, in ascertaining and promulgating the percentage of domestic consumption, use data from any year or group of years prior to the period upon which he desired to operate under the cost-of-production plan.

Second. After ascertaining and promulgating the cost of production of any crop for any marketing period, the Secretary further has the power, in part 3 of H.R. 3835, to license all dealers, whether cooperative or otherwise, which handled the particular commodity. In this the rules and regulations are not specified in the bill but are left free to be used by the Secretary. It is reasonable to expect that the Secretary, among the others, would have two iron-clad rules which all licensees must obey: First, to observe the cost of production on the particular commodity as a minimum price and play above it rather than below it; second, to pay all farmers who deliver the commodity at least the cost-of-production price on the portion to be consumed domestically, letting the balance take whatever price the world market would justify.

Third. Precedents for this enlargement of the Federal licensing power is had in the war and early post-war period, where the Government pursued almost identically this plan of licensing all dealers and requiring them to observe a price which then was guaranteed by the Government, but which did not cost the Government any money so to guarantee, because the dealers had to pay a price which was equal to or above the guaranteed price or else their license would have been forfeited and no amount of the commodity whatsoever could then have been handled by them. So it would seem to be in this case if a dealer, cooperative or otherwise, should not obey the requirement of his license to pay the cost-of-production price or to exceed it and to pay such price only on the portion to be consumed domestically, then the penalty for such disobedience would be forfeiture of his license privileges.

Fourth. In operation, in the case of wheat, the cost-of-production plan would work something like this: Farmer A drives up to a dealer with 100 bushels. The Secretary, hypothetically, has promulgated that 80 percent of the crop will be consumed domestically, so Farmer A will get the cost-of-production price or any amount in excess of it which is being paid on 80 bushels. The remaining 20 bushels will be sold to the same dealer at the same time at whatever price is agreed upon by the two interested parties, which price will be approximately that which is prevailing in world markets. This plan does not prevent the farmer selling all of his crop at any time he selects, nor does it contain a direct mandate on him from the Government that he shall or shall not raise more than a certain amount or plant in excess of a certain acreage. It seeks to employ the indirect but effective method of controlling production by visibly demonstrating to the farmer that if he raises the 20 bushels extra beyond what the Nation can consume he will get a much lower price for it than for the major portion of his crop. It is reasonable to expect that, with this visible demonstration, the farmer, in his own self-interest and quite automatically and without any Government interference, will control his own production.

Fifth. In H.R. 13310, Seventy-second Congress, second session, the three national farm organizations—the Grange, Farmers Union, and the Farm Bureau—supported a so-called "three-way bill", which included, first, the equalization fee; second, the debenture; and third, the allotment plan. This allotment plan as named in title III of the Norton bill, H.R. 13319, was misnamed as it really should have been named "the cost of production plan", there having been no feature of allotment in it. A reading of title III of this measure alongside of part 3 of H.R. 3835, now pending before the House, shows that the measure then supported by the three national farm groups contained a cost of production plan almost identical to that in the pending bill before the House of Representatives. In the Norton bill the enforcement was sought to be lodged in the Federal Farm Board rather than, as in the pending measure, with the Secretary of Agriculture. That is practically the only difference in the two measures.

Sixth. Hearings before the House Committee on Agriculture on May 4, 1932, serial E, part II, disclose that the three farm organizations had chosen one spokesman to appear and explain the measure in behalf of the three national farm organizations. This spokesman said, among other things:

I am speaking for the National Grange, the National Farmers Union, and the American Farm Bureau Federation in relation to a bill which the three organizations have agreed upon to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act.

The same measure, S. 5027, introduced by Senator McNARY, had been explained by the same spokesman to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in behalf of the same three national farm organizations. In explaining the misnamed "allotment plan" of the Norton and McNary bills of the Seventy-second Congress before the House committee it was stated:

I might make it a little more lucid to the members of the committee. The allotment plan, as I understand it, is based on the licensing power of the Federal Government in relation to farm commodities. We have the Warehousing Act; we have the Farm Board Act, under which the farm cooperatives work; and we have the Cooperative Marketing Act. Those acts give to Federal authorities certain powers and duties and warehouse activities.

Under the allotment plan the power of the Federal Government in warehousing would be extended so that all dealers in wheat, for instance, who are handling that commodity would be licensed by the Federal Government.

Then the next step in the allotment plan is that the Federal Government, under the terms of this bill, the amendment which we have determined upon in our program, would get the cost of production of that portion of the crop which is sold in the domestic market. The Federal Government would license the dealers to handle the crop, and they could not handle it at less than the cost of production.

The third step in the allotment plan is that the American farmer who produces that crop can produce what he cares to, just as much as he could in the equalization and in the debenture plans; and he can sell in the domestic market a certain portion of it, that portion bearing the same relation to his total crop as the total domestic consumption bears to the total crop promulgated by the Federal Farm Board. The other portion of his crop he sells through warehouse means or through the cooperatives or those who are licensed to deal in it, handling the part for which he is to get the cost of production. This second portion is to move at what the world price gives. Both portions are to be sold by the licensees under the power of the Federal Government at different prices; and if they violate that regulation, then their licenses will be revoked, and they are no longer privileged to deal in that commodity.

Under this plan the man may produce just as much as he can under the equalization or the debenture plans, and that part which is shipped to the foreign markets will move freely into world trade regardless of the cost of production.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I favor the Simpson-Norris amendment because it is in accordance with the letter and spirit of the Democratic platform. Let me read the exact language of the Democratic platform:

We favor the enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmers to receive for their basic farm commodities prices in excess of cost.

This cost-of-production plan is, therefore, no new or novel idea. It has been favored and demanded by the great farming and agricultural interests and their organizations for years, and has been the subject of thorough study and consideration by committees in both the House and the Senate. It was discussed extensively in the campaign last year; and our party, by the declaration in our platform and its frequent reiteration from one end of the country to the other, is committed to the experiment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I stress the fact that the amendment merely grants an authorization of power to the Secretary of Agriculture. It is not a mandatory provision, but, on the contrary, is permissive and optional only; and he may exercise the power if conditions and circumstances require it. In that respect it is very similar in its nature to much of the legislation which we have enacted during this extraordinary session of Congress granting alternative measures of relief. The amendment was adopted by an overwhelming vote in the Senate after long deliberation and debate and should be adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that there is a man on the floor of the House who has given more serious thought and special study to the agricultural situation for the past 12 years than I have. We have heard much about voting for this Simpson amendment, and about cost of production, but no one has heard a single word about what is contained in the Simpson amendment. Mr. Speaker, if we are unable to get anything beyond the cost of production out of this farm-relief bill which was introduced by me, then we will not have done much for the farmer. Under the allotment plan and the rental plan as carried in the bill we propose to give to the farmers the pre-war price for basic commodities. Under the cost-of-production plan you would give him a price considerably below the pre-war price. How do you propose to get the cost of production under the Simpson amendment? There is not a word in the amendment setting up a yardstick, so to speak, that would govern the Secretary in finding and determining the cost of production.

In Texas you may be able to produce cotton at 8 cents per pound, while in South Carolina, Georgia, and other Southern States it may cost 10 cents per pound. If you take the average cost, as provided in the amendment, it would be 9 cents in this instance. That would mean the farmers in Texas would receive a 1-cent profit per pound, while the farmers in the South would be losing 1 cent per pound. The same thing applies to every other farm product.

I want to call your attention to what is actually contained in this amendment, and I wish I had the time to go over the allotment plan and the rental-basis plan to show you the difference between these and the Simpson amendment. Under section 20 of the Simpson amendment the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to find and proclaim the percentage of the domestic production of commodities—cotton, for instance—for market during the next marketing period for the commodity that will be needed for domestic consumption. This will be easy, for the reason that he has all the statistics covering production in the past available in the Department of Agriculture. In the next place, the Secretary is authorized to ascertain the average domestic costs of production for the commodity. The Secretary also has these figures in the Department of Agriculture; however, as stated, you will find that these figures would produce a price for all major farm products below the pre-war price.

Listen to this—subsection (b) of the amendment:

(b) After such date as shall be specified in the proclamation, it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the business of buying and selling a commodity or commodities as a dealer therein to purchase any amount of the commodity from the producer or any association of producers at a price, for the domestic consumption percentage thereof, that is less than the proclaimed cost of production for the commodity.

This is the most ridiculous thing in the bill. This means that every man that buys a bushel of wheat or a bale of cotton would have to take into consideration in doing business the buying for domestic consumption and for export. This would be impossible. Yet you will notice in subsection (c) the following:

(c) Any person violating the provisions of subsection (b) shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each violation, which may be collected by appropriate action in a court of competent jurisdiction brought in the name of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Those of you who are voting for this amendment which has not been explained to you, I want you to listen to me as I read subsection (e), which is found on page 34 of the bill:

(e) In order to carry out the provisions of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to license persons engaged in the business of purchasing from producers or associations of producers any basic agricultural commodity with respect to which the Secretary has proclaimed the cost of production. Such licenses shall be subject to such terms and conditions as may be necessary effectively to execute the provisions of this section.

This means, my friends, as stated, every merchant, commission merchant, or anyone else buying and selling farm products at every crossroad, every town, and city would have to be licensed.

Listen to this:

Any person so engaged without a license, as required by the Secretary under this section, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for each day the violation continues.

I am wondering if those of you who are supporting this amendment and you who expect to vote for same realize just what it will cost to carry out this scheme of licensing and the army of policemen and detectives that it would take to enforce the same. Suppose the Secretary finds in the case of cotton that we consume in the United States 50 percent of the production and export the other 50 percent. How in the world will the buyers of cotton be able to keep track of just how many bales of cotton any one farmer may sell so as to be able to differentiate between that portion which is to be consumed in the United States and exported?

In other words, when a farmer comes to town with 10 bales of cotton, under the operation of the amendment the local cotton buyers, who in many instances are local merchants or cotton ginner, would have to under the regulations of the Secretary pay the cost of production, whatever that might be, for 5 bales of the cotton, and he would be permitted to buy the other 5 bales of cotton at any price that might be agreed upon between him and the farmer. There is nothing in the amendment that would bring about the planning of production or the restriction of production so as to be able to bring about a production in line with the demand for farm products, which would mean a better world basis price.

Under the allotment plan it is proposed to bring about a planned production; in the meantime we do not interfere in the least with the regular and well-established rules of doing business; that is, in buying and selling farm products. In other words, the farmer will continue to sell to whom he pleases, where he pleases on the world basis market without any restrictions of bookkeeping or licensing on the part of the buyer. However, when the farm product, cotton for instance, passes into the hands of the manufacturer, who buys cotton under the operation of the allotment plan just as he is doing today, the operation of the farm relief bill begins. In all of these transactions, under the allotment plan, there are no licenses or restrictions, except the manufacturer is required to add to the cost of his cotton the adjustment charge; that is, the difference between the world basis price as paid by him and the pre-war price, and he is permitted to pass same on to the consumer. The manufacturer then will be called upon by the Treasurer of the United States for this adjustment charge, which will be paid to the farmer so as to make up the difference between the world basis price and the pre-war price. In other words, if this bill was in operation today farmers would be receiving 13 cents per pound for that portion of cotton that is consumed in the United States, whereas he is only receiving about 8 or 9 cents. Two or three weeks ago he was receiving only 6 cents per pound.

Even Mr. Simpson in his statements before the Senate committee was unable to outline any workable scheme in connection with his proposition. It is my belief that it is the intention of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the advice and under the direction of the President of the United States, to put into operation the domestic-allotment plan referred to by the President in his campaign speeches, as well as the rental plan, with the determination of giving to the farmers of this country a fair price in line with industrial prices.

I want to call your attention to the fact that the administration opposes this amendment. I quote from a statement issued by the Secretary of Agriculture:

Amendment no. 83: This is the cost-of-production amendment. The Department of Agriculture is vigorously opposed to the amendment. It believes that the amendment is economically unsound and would, if placed in effect, depress rather than increase farm prices. In the absence of any legislative standard for determining cost of production it would be impossible to arrive at such costs on any definite basis. The cost-of-production figures of the Department are now less than the parity price or fair-exchange value provided in the bill. If any attempt were made to fix prices by enforcing a cost-of-production price that did not have due regard for purchasing power of the consumer and other economic considerations, the commodity would back up on the farm. Extensive bootlegging would result and innumerable fines be imposed if any real attempt at enforcement were made. It is believed that the operation of the amendment would seriously impair the farm-relief program. The presence of the amendment in the bill will raise expectations for higher farm prices than can possibly be obtained in view of the unworkable and unsound character of the amendment, and will endanger the securing of cooperation in certain farm regions for other features of the bill which hold promise of effective and sound relief.

Today, my friends, we have an opportunity to give to the President and to the Secretary of Agriculture a workable bill, one that will mean a "square deal" and a "new deal" to agriculture, and I am hoping that this amendment will be voted out by the largest majority possible on the part of the House. If this is done, I can assure you that you conferees on the part of the House will not have any trouble in making the Senate see the light and join with us in promptly sending to the President, to my mind, the greatest piece of legislation that has ever passed the Congress of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to discuss the merits of this amendment in the short space of 3 minutes. I do not yield to any man in my desire to see the farmer secure the best price possible for his products, because I believe we are never going to have a return to prosperity, which we all so much desire, unless something is done to increase the price of commodities in the hands of the producer. I speak to you gentlemen on this side of the aisle, and I speak with some authority when I say to you that the administration is opposed to this Simpson amendment. The Secretary of Agriculture is on record as opposed to it, and the gentleman who it is generally understood is going to be charged with the responsibility of administering the law is very much opposed to it. The reason why they are opposed to it is the fact that they know it is impracticable and absolutely unworkable and will possibly destroy the very purpose of the bill, which was framed to give to the farmer a reasonable price for his product, and which it is hoped and believed will do it if this bill is passed and placed on the statute books.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I have not the time, I am sorry. There is no reason for grafting this sort of an amendment on the bill. People talk about fooling the farmer. As the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] said, no man who has favored this amendment has yet talked about what is in the amendment. Gentlemen say, "Do not fool the farmer"; and I say to you gentlemen, "Do not try to fool the farmer by passing something which those who are to administer the law say is unworkable and cannot operate for the benefit of the farmer." Everyone knows that the price of farm products is a variable one. It costs more to produce wheat in some States than it does, for instance, in the State of Kansas.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I have not the time. It costs more to produce other products in some sections than in other sections. In your own counties you know there are sections in which the cost of production varies very materially from the cost in other sections, for one reason or another. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] has pointed out to you in addition to other objections that under the terms of this amendment you will have to issue a license to every man who seeks to buy a bushel of wheat, a bushel of corn, or a pound of cotton or tobacco.

Gentlemen, it will take more employees than you ever dreamed of to enforce this amendment. I say to you gentlemen on the Democratic side of the Chamber who have made a record, and also to you gentlemen on the Republican side, to whom we give full credit, you who have made a record of standing by the administration in its efforts to promote prosperity and to carry out the promises made to relieve the farmers and to relieve all classes of people, let us not abandon that record by undertaking to vote for a motion to concur in an amendment which was inserted in another body without very full consideration. If you want this amendment adopted, then propose it in an independent bill where it can be well considered, and some of the objections which the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Doxey] have pointed out may be eliminated.

I hope the House will vote down the motion to recede and concur, and send this back to conference, because I believe, and the administration hopes and believes, that we will finally work out a bill which will bring to the farmer the cost of production plus a reasonable profit, to which he is entitled and which we all favor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 83.

Mr. BOILEAU. On that I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 283, not voting 40, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. RAINEY, and he answered "no."

So the motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 83 was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Crowe (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. Zioncheck (for) with Mr. Auf der Heide (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Ragon with Mr. Buckbee.
Mr. Huddleston with Mr. Gifford.
Mr. Church with Mr. Stalker.
Mr. Lea of California with Mr. Romjue.
Mr. Brand of Georgia with Mr. Foulkes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, the lady from New Jersey, Mrs. NORTON, is necessarily detained by official business. If she were present, she would vote "no."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the following Members, who are unavoidably absent, to state that if they were present they would vote "no": Mr. SABATH, Mr. BETTER, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. KENNEDY of New York, Mr. FERNANDEZ, Mr. SADOWSKI, Mr. ADAIR, Mr. FLANNAGAN, Mr. CELLER, Mr. McDUFFIE, Mr. MONTAGUE, Mr. SULLIVAN, Mr. SOMERS of New York, Mr. HORNOR, Mr. PALMISANO, and Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to announce that my colleagues, Mr. BECK, Mr. WALDRON, and Mr. DITTER are unavoidably absent; and if present, they would vote

"no." Also the following Members are unavoidably absent; and if present, would vote "no": MESSRS. GODWIN, TRAEGER, REID of Illinois, HIGGINS, REED of New York, and MOYNIHAN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. JONES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion to recede and concur was rejected was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, the bill (H.R. 5480) entitled "An act to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to said bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. GLASS, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 555. An act to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located;

S. 727. An act for the relief of Francis N. Dominick;

S. 1256. An act granting the consent of Congress to compact or agreements between the States of Kansas and Missouri for the acquisition, maintenance, and operation of a toll bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Kans., for the construction and maintenance of connections with established highways, for the incorporation of such bridge in the highway systems of said States, and for other purposes; and

S. 1425. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—CONFERENCE REPORT, H.R. 3835

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, since the people of the district I have the honor to represent are so vitally interested in the provisions of the Farm Relief Act of 1933, which has just been signed by the President, and finding it impossible to respond in detail by correspondence to the numerous requests I am receiving for information in regard thereto, I am taking advantage of this opportunity to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

It cannot be foretold what construction will be placed upon the act by those whose duty it becomes to administer it, and it is attempted here to give only a general analysis according to my own interpretation of what has been characterized as the most important legislation in 6,000 years. Let me add that this, and much of the other legislation of the extra session of Congress, is not just as I would have it, but I know that we are facing a new era and are dealing with conditions which threaten to overwhelm us. Realizing that under such circumstances legislators and executives cannot always come to complete agreement as to remedies, I have waived objections that might have been insisted upon and have supported and voted for every proposal submitted to Congress by our great President, with the exception only of the beer bill and the so-called "economy act", my reasons for voting against each of which have already been stated.

In submitting his farm-relief legislation to Congress the President stated frankly that the proposals were new and untried, but that the situation is such as to demand action of some kind; and that if these proposals should not produce results he would be the first to admit that fact and try something else. The legislation consists of what is known as the Smith cotton plan, the domestic allotment plan, the rental benefit plan, the farm mortgage relief plan, and inflation of the currency, which subjects will be mentioned here in the order stated. Let it be said at once that all the plans here mentioned are purely voluntary. No farmer can be forced to enter any of them. He can try them or he can leave them alone as he sees fit. It may as well be stated here also that both the Smith cotton plan and the domestic allotment plan were passed by the last Congress, but Mr. Hoover refused to sign either of them. They were both passed again by the House early in the extra session, but final passage of the bill has been greatly delayed because it became desirable to add the farm mortgage relief plan and inflation of the currency, the consideration of which two most important subjects consumed much time.

But all limitations in the act as to the times within which things must be done have been pushed forward, and the law, while not fully applicable to the crop of 1933, will be to the crop of 1934. The further general statement should be made here that the Smith cotton plan, the domestic allotment plan, and the rental benefit plan are all based upon the principle that the prices of farm commodities can and will be raised if a substantial reduction in production can be accomplished, and this principle should be kept clearly in mind in considering the value of the legislation.

SMITH COTTON PLAN

Under this plan the Secretary of Agriculture purchases at the market price all of the cotton owned by the Federal Farm Board or any other Government agency heretofore acquired in an effort to stabilize prices, as collateral to crop-production loans, or otherwise. This amounts to about 1,500,000 bales, as of May 6, 1933. This cotton is in sight, and has the same or worse effect in depressing the market than if it were owned in small quantities by various parties. If production continues upon the present basis, or increases, the price will likely remain low, or go lower, with loss both to the Government and the farmer. If production can be greatly decreased, prices will rise to the benefit of both the Government and the farmer. Why, then, produce more cotton when the Government owns so much already? The Smith cotton plan seeks to use this Government-owned cotton as a means by which to reduce production, and in this way:

The act provides that any farmer who will (1) reduce his production by not less than 30 percent below the previous year and (2) will not use the land taken out of cotton for the production, for sale, of any nationally produced commodity may have an option on the same number of bales of cotton in the possession of the Secretary of Agriculture as that by which the farmer has reduced his production below the previous year. For instance, if the farmer produced 60 bales the previous year, he would have to reduce that by 30 percent, which would be by 18 bales. He could then produce 42 bales on his farm and have an option on 18 bales of that held by the Secretary. As soon as the act is law the Secretary has to buy all the cotton from all Government agencies at the market price. The option to the farmer would be based on the same price, and the farmer can close it out at any time up to the first day of the succeeding January. If cotton goes up, the farmer gets the profit; if it goes down, the Government simply sustains the loss it would have had anyway. The act expressly exempts the farmer from any loss on account of the option. All he has to do is reduce production by not less than 30 percent below the previous year and refrain from using the land taken out of cotton for the production, for sale, of any nationally produced commodity. The farmer simply produces 70 percent of the previous year's crop and takes, free of cost and without liability, a perfectly good option on cotton already produced, graded, insured, and stored to the amount of 30 percent of his crop of the previous year.

THE DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT PLAN

The purpose of the domestic allotment plan is simply to restore the prices of agricultural commodities to their proper relative position with respect to the prices of other commodities—to put the buying power of farm commodities more in line with the buying power of other commodities. As matters stand now the price of what the farmer has to sell is entirely too low when measured against the price of the things he has to buy. For instance, since the period just prior to the World War the buying power of cotton has declined 53 percent, tobacco 19 percent, hogs 53 percent, and so forth. But the buying power of practically all the commodities the farmer has to have has declined but little. When a farmer sells cotton for cash and uses the money to buy a mowing machine, the transaction amounts to nothing more than exchanging the cotton for the machine. Under present conditions he has to give too much cotton in order to get the machine, because the buying power of the two commodities is entirely out of line. The same is true as to practically every farm commodity when compared to other commodities. In the pre-war period from 1909 to 1914 the average price of all commodities was comparatively low, but the buying power of farm commodities was nearer in line during that period with the buying power of other commodities. The purpose of this plan is to restore, as far as it can, the parity that then existed, not by boosting the price of farm commodities to the injury of other commodities, but by lifting the price of farm commodities to a fair position with respect to the prices of other commodities.

As suggested, the average price of farm commodities from August 1909 to August 1914, while low, was more in line with the prices of other commodities. As to cotton, wheat, rice, corn, and hogs the act adopts this 5-year period as a basis. During this period the average price of cotton was about 12 cents. The price of tobacco during this period was abnormally low, and on this account the act adopts as the basis for tobacco the period from September 1919 to August 1928. During this period the average price of flue-cured tobacco was 16 to 18 cents.

In order to try to bring the prices of these commodities back to or near the prices therefor during the respective periods just mentioned, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to fix a processing fee thereon equal to the difference between the present average price and the average price of the same commodity during the periods mentioned above. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to fix the marketing year of any commodity, and from statistics in his department determine the average price of such commodity during the basis periods mentioned, and fix the amount of processing fee necessary to bring the buying power of such commodity back in line with what it was in the basis period. This processing fee is to be paid by the first processor or manufacturer of such commodity, whether produced in or imported into this country, but in the case of cotton the mills do not have to pay such fee until the manufactured goods are invoiced for sale. The Secretary of Agriculture can raise or lower, for any marketing year, the processing fee in such manner as seems best to promote prices of the commodities involved, and if and when prices rise to such a level as to restore the buying power of any or all of these commodities to the level of the basis period, the processing fee will disappear altogether. The funds arising from these fees will be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in making benefit payments to the farmers who have complied with the regulations of the Secretary, which undoubtedly will include a reduction in production. That is really the heart of the plan, and it is contended that a sufficient reduction in production can be obtained to drive prices back up without any processing tax.

The Secretary of Agriculture is also given authority to make payment of certain rental benefits to those who will withdraw land from the production of those commodities now so greatly overproduced.

The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized by the act to enter into marketing agreements with producers, and associations of producers, for the purpose of assisting in the orderly and best marketing of farm commodities. But more important than this is the fact that he is given authority under the bill to require any person dealing in farm commodities to secure a license from the Secretary of Agriculture; he can make regulations in regard to the manner of handling and dealing in farm commodities; can examine into the books of persons so engaged; is authorized, upon proper notice and hearing, to revoke the license of any person who is handling and dealing in agricultural commodities in a manner detrimental to the producers thereof. The purpose of this part of the act is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to deal in a drastic and effective manner with those who have been standing between the producer and consumer of farm commodities and exacting a highly unreasonable and unjustifiable profit. Much power and discretion is vested by the law in the Secretary of Agriculture, but he is required to proceed upon the basis of statistics compiled in his office, from actual transactions throughout many years, and all such power conferred upon him expires by limitation of the law itself at the end of 2 years and cannot thereafter be exercised by him unless Congress should renew its grant of power to him.

FARM MORTGAGE RELIEF PLAN

This legislation seeks to accomplish relief for farm mortgages generally. It provides that Federal land banks may issue bonds to the amount of $2,000,000,000, payment of which shall be guaranteed by the Government as to interest only. These bonds may be exchanged for, or the proceeds thereof used in purchasing, first mortgages on farm lands, but in either case the amount paid by the bank for such first mortgage shall not exceed the amount of the unpaid principal of the mortgage or 50 percent of the value of the land mortgaged plus 20 percent of the value of permanent insured improvements, whichever is the smaller. If the balance due upon the principal is smaller than 50 percent plus 20 percent of the values just stated, then the bank cannot purchase the mortgage at more than such unpaid principal. But if 50 percent plus 20 percent of value is smaller than the unpaid principal of the mortgage, then the bank cannot pay more than 50 percent plus 20 percent of the values, regardless of the balance due upon the principal of the debt. It is thought that the Federal land banks will be able in this way to acquire first mortgages on farming land at great reductions. Such reductions are to be passed on to the borrower. The amount of his debt is reduced accordingly and he becomes entitled to have his debt, after deducting anything the bank has been able to save for him, refinanced through the Federal land bank upon the regular terms.

THOSE WHO OWE FEDERAL LAND BANKS

There are two provisions of the act which benefit these borrowers. A former act provided for an extension of time during 5 years when in the judgment of the directors conditions justified it, and $25,000,000 was appropriated to make the act effective. The present act continues this provision and provides $50,000,000 with which to make it effective; but it provides that such extension will not be made where, upon investigation, it is found to be within the capacity of the borrower to meet the payments.

But the most important provision affecting those who have borrowed from Federal land banks is that any person who has borrowed from a Federal land bank through a national farm-loan association will have his rate of interest reduced to 4½ percent for a period of 5 years, commencing 60 days after the law takes effect, which means after the President signs it; and during such period of 5 years no mortgage to a Federal land bank can be foreclosed because of the non-payment of the principal coming due during such time, if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage, such as interest, insurance, taxes, waste, and so forth. In return for the concession thus required of the banks, and in order to keep faith with those who have invested their funds in the bonds of these banks, the Government guarantees the payment of the interest upon the banks' bonds during the 5-year period mentioned above. The principal relief in this act for borrowers in our district from Federal land banks is the reduction of interest to 4½ percent during the period of 5 years, and the moratorium against foreclosure during that time for nonpayment of principal.

JOINT-STOCK LAND BANKS

As to these banks, an appropriation of $100,000,000 is made available to the Farm Loan Commissioner to be loaned to joint-stock land banks in the same proportion as the unpaid principal of the mortgages held by any such bank bears to the total amount of unpaid principal of all the mortgages held by all such banks; which simply means that if there should not be enough of the $100,000,000 to fully accommodate all these banks they shall each be entitled to a fair proportion thereof. Any bank that borrows any part of this fund cannot be granted more than 60 percent of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security, must pay the expenses thereof, must agree to reduce to 5 percent the rate of interest upon all mortgages owed to it, and must agree that for a period of 2 years it will not proceed against the mortgagor on account of default in the payment of interest or principal, and will not foreclose its mortgage unless the property covered thereby is abandoned, or unless the Loan Commissioner deems the foreclosure necessary. The effect of this is that the borrower from a joint-stock land bank gets his interest rate reduced to 5 percent and has a moratorium against foreclosure for a period of 2 years as to both principal and interest.

It is a well-known fact that for sometime joint-stock land banks have been buying their own bonds at a discount and thus recouping the losses sustained by them upon the foreclosure of farms which have not brought the full amount of the indebtedness against them. It is also a fact that large amounts of these joint-stock land bank bonds have gotten into the hands of people who have paid very little for them, and which might now be purchased at a very low figure by the banks themselves. The act provides that any one of these banks that borrows any of the fund referred to above will hereafter, in purchasing any of its own bonds, pay not more than the price paid for such bonds by the present holder prior to April 17, 1933; and that whenever a bank has bought its bonds at less than their face value, the difference between the face value of the bonds and the price paid therefor by the bank shall be prorated among the borrowers from such bank and the amount of their debt to the bank reduced accordingly, after any impairment in the capital of the bank has been made good.

It will be noted that the provisions providing for rate of interest of 5 percent and the moratorium for 2 years include mortgages upon which there has been no default in payment of either principal or interest. Another section of the bill makes available to the Farm Loan Commissioner $25,000,000 to be loaned to the joint-stock land banks in cases where there has been default in payment of interest and principal and unpaid taxes, to obtain any of which the bank has to agree to postpone foreclosure for 2 years, and to charge the borrower not in excess of 4 percent upon the unpaid principal and interest and delinquent taxes. But no loan will be made under this provision of the bill except in cases where the Farm Loan Commissioner is satisfied that the borrower, after exercising ordinary diligence, is not able to meet such payments.

Another section of the act, available only to those bona fide engaged in farming operations, including the personal representative of a deceased farmer, appropriates $200,000,000 to be loaned by the Farm Loan Commissioner directly to such farmers in amounts not to exceed 75 percent of the value of the property given as security, and in no case to exceed $5,000, and to be used only for the purpose of refinancing an existing indebtedness, providing working capital for farming operations, and enabling farmers to redeem or repurchase farm property lost by them under foreclosure since July 1, 1931.

NATIONAL BOARD OF CONCILIATION

Such a board is established by the act, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, and such other officer of the Government as may be charged with the administration of any law or laws relating to rural credit or farm mortgage indebtedness. A State board of conciliation is also authorized for each State, and directed to designate a suitable number of local boards within the State. The purpose of this is to lend the good offices of the Government and its influence, both National and State, in the equitable and fair adjustment of the many controversies that already exist and will continue to arise between the mortgagors and mortgagees. These boards do not have the power to say what one shall take or another shall pay, but they should undoubtedly be of great help in bringing about those kinds of adjustments which are so necessary and helpful under present conditions.

INFLATION OF THE CURRENCY

The last title of the farm-relief act deals with this momentous subject. Briefly stated, it authorizes an increase in the circulating medium of $6,000,000,000 and authorizes the President to reduce the weight of the gold dollar by 50 percent or less and fix such definite ratio of the silver dollar to the gold dollar as he may find necessary to stabilize domestic prices or to protect foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or to fix such ratio and weight of the gold dollar in accordance with any agreement that may be entered into with foreign governments with reference thereto. This section is highly technical, and I can do no better than to say it is so drawn as to place this entire matter in the sound discretion of the President and to quote in this connection from his magnificent address delivered on the night of May 7, 1933, as follows:

The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

We do not seek to let them get such a cheap dollar that they will be able to pay back a great deal less than they borrowed.

In other words, we seek to correct a wrong and not to create another wrong in the opposite direction. That is why powers are being given to the administration to provide, if necessary, for an enlargement of credit, in order to correct the existing wrong. These powers will be used when, as, and if it may be necessary.

Hand in hand with the domestic situation, which, of course, is our first concern, is the world situation, and I want to emphasize to you that the domestic situation is inevitably and deeply tied in with the conditions in all of the other nations of the world. In other words, we can get, in all probability, a fair measure of prosperity return in the United States, but it will not be permanent unless we get a return to prosperity all over the world.

IN CONCLUSION

During the last 6 months I have heard so much discussion of farm relief and the proposal of so many and such varied forms of relief as to remind me forcibly of the days on the farm when a mule would have the colic. Invariably everybody would quit work and gather at the place where poor old Balaam was struggling with his internal disturbances. Frequently, too, many of the neighbors would drop in to swap chewing tobacco and pass an opinion on the situation. Everybody had a different idea about what ought to be done and the method of doing it. As the struggle grew desperate all remedies were applied. The result was that if the mule got well no one knew what cured him. Sometimes he died and no one knew what killed him. The Farm Relief Act of 1933 contains almost every remedy known to mankind, but certainly the situation is desperate enough to justify the application of remedies that will either cure or kill. The principle of the legislation is to stay foreclosures upon farm property just as far as it is possible within constitutional limitations to do so, until by use of the Smith cotton plan, the domestic allotment plan, the rental benefit plan, and the inflation of the currency, one or all, the price of farm commodities can be brought back to such a point as will insure the farmers a reasonable profit. If that can be accomplished America will be well on the way to a return of prosperity. Until it is accomplished there will be, in my judgment, no return of prosperity.

As already suggested, this legislation does not go as far as I had hoped it would, particularly that part of it dealing with farm-mortgage indebtedness. But I recognize the fact that in legislation of this kind the condition of the Treasury and constitutional limitations must be taken into consideration. Undoubtedly our great President has in mind a broad and well-rounded economic program in which a rise in price of farm commodities holds a prominent place. If this succeeds, all will be well. If it does not, then, as he has suggested, something else will be tried. In the meantime this legislation will at least afford a breathing spell.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, while we are considering the agricultural bill, we should have before us the conclusions of the farm leaders of this country. We should hesitate to reject the recommendations of John Simpson, president of the Farmers' Union and legislative representative of both the Farmers' Union and the Farmers' Holiday Association, the two leading farmers' organizations in America.

STATEMENT OF JOHN A. SIMPSON

I have a letter from John A. Simpson stating that both of these organizations have, in national convention, repeatedly and unanimously endorsed the Frazier bill, known as the "Lemke bill" in this session of Congress in the House. Mr. Simpson has come to the conclusion that the farm-mortgage refinancing provisions of H.R. 3835 do not even approach a remedy for the situation that faces the farmers with mortgages on their farms. He says the farmers know this, and the Members of Congress will know it soon if they do not know it now. He informs us that many farmers already are financed on as favorable terms as H.R. 3835 provides, and they cannot pay the interest.

The farmers' union knows that this Government has loaned millions of dollars to steamship companies with interest rates of less than 1 percent and on as much as 20 years' time, and that this Government has settled with foreign countries, involving many billions of dollars, on a basis of canceling the principal, and with interest rates as low as 1½ percent to some of the countries, to be paid in 62 years. Then the debt is completely wiped out. The farmers' union knows that the Government has loaned other institutions millions of dollars on as long as 10 years' time, on as low a rate of interest as one eighth of 1 percent per annum.

These facts John A. Simpson has called to the attention of the Members of Congress and to the farmers of this country.

FRAZIER BILL WANTED BY FARMERS

The Frazier bill, providing for refinancing of farm mortgages on a basis of 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent payment on the principal each year until the debt is paid, is the bill which the Farmers' Union and the Farmers' Holiday Association want. There is no doubt about it. They have made their demands known in the past, and Mr. SIMPSON has recently called this fact to the attention of Congress again. Mr. SIMPSON tells us that there are more farmers who know about this bill than any other bill that is now pending in Congress. The legislatures of 20 States have memorialized Congress to pass it. They are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Wisconsin. They want it passed, and Mr. SIMPSON is pleading with the Members of this House to sign the petition now on file with the Clerk of the House. He is pleading to get this bill to a vote and passed at the earliest possible moment.

JOHN BOSCH ASKS FOR SIMPSON AMENDMENT

I have this day received a telegram from John H. Bosch, president of the Minnesota Farmers' Holiday Association, and Walter Groth, secretary of that organization, stating that 3,000 Minnesota farmers assembled in annual convention of the Holiday Association voted to declare a national farmers' holiday. They demand that the Frazier bill be taken out of the committee and voted upon. They demand that the Simpson-Norris amendment in H.R. 3835 be kept in that bill. They demand that money issued under the refinancing provisions of that bill not be based on interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds but that the funds with which to liquidate and refinance existing farm mortgages be provided by the issuing of farm-loan bonds by the Federal farm-loan system through the Federal Farm Loan Board and Federal land banks—bonds secured by mortgages on farms and chattel mortgages on livestock.

These are the demands of the farmers of this country. They are demands the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota stands ready to meet. These farmers' organizations know what the farmers need. They are not asking for profit; they are asking only for cost of production for their products. They are asking for the refinancing of their mortgages on an interest rate allowed by this Government to foreign countries. They have declared that they must have the Simpson amendment, and they have declared that the Frazier bill must be taken out of the committee. I ask the Members of this House to heed those demands. Let us all march up to the Speaker's desk and sign the farmers' Frazier-Lemke bill.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I am voting to retain the cost-of-production plan, better known as "the Simpson plan", not because I believe it will be a success if the Department of Agriculture attempts to put it into effect but because it is requested by more farmers than have requested any other proposition contained in the bill. The fact is that most of the actual farmers are opposed to the allotment or rental plan contained in this bill. I am voting to retain the cost-of-production plan because if it is not included in this bill and given some sort of trial, agricultural stability will again be endangered at the next session of Congress by some more legislation probably along this line. I think inasmuch as this is an omnibus farm bill, including everything in it except the Ten Commandments, we might as well include the cost-of-production plan.

Inasmuch as there are several plans included in the bill, if I were writing this legislation as an experiment, I would include every nostrum that has ever been offered the farmer, so that when we meet at the next regular session some farm leader could not be here holding out a "pot of gold at the end of the rainbow." I would include the export debenture and the equalization fee along with the cost of production, and then hope that these agencies that have advised the farmer for the past 10 or 15 years would run out of ideas and let those of us who desire to farm alone.

RECORD TYPE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for the first time within my knowledge in the history of the Congress an important address of the President of the United States was printed yesterday in the RECORD in small, 6-point type. I do not think that ought to go by without correction. It has always been the custom of the House and of the Senate that whenever an address of the President of the United States is printed in the RECORD, to print it in regular 8-point type. I do not know how it got by, or how it came to be in there in 6-point type.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I asked unanimous consent on yesterday to insert it in the RECORD. I sent it down to the Printing Office, and the Printing Office printed it in that size type to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BLANTON. And it ought to have been put in there in regular 8-point type under the custom and usages of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Joint Committee on Printing has entire control of the arrangement and style of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is the law.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is the first time in the history of this Congress that an address of the President of the United States has been accorded so little consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter to take up with the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLANTON. I expect to take the matter up with that committee.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (H.Con.Res. 18) for the purpose of correcting a word in the bill.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 18

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to strike out the word "basic" where it appears in subsection (3) of section 8.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from Texas make a short explanation of why it is necessary to do this.

Mr. JONES. The reason for presenting this resolution is this: In the section preceding, which provides for trade agreements, the word "basic" has been stricken out. Trade agreements may therefore be made in reference to any agricultural commodity, regardless of whether it is classed as basic.

In carrying out these trade agreements it may be necessary to use the licensing features. In the provision for licensing which is contained in the following section this word "basic" is found. Its effect is to limit the paragraph to the commodities named in the bill. It seems that as "basic" has been taken out of one section, it should be taken out of the other.

In the immediately following section we struck out the word "agriculture." The word "basic" being in both bills, we were not privileged to take it out in conference. It would simply make it harmonize with the trading-agreement section, thus enabling them to carry out their trading agreements without being handicapped by a limitation on the commodities which might be covered.

Mr. SNELL. Then it is necessary to do this in order to make it correspond with other sections of the bill?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS AGAINST UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE LOUDERBACK

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House in the Louderback impeachment matter may be excused from attendance upon the sessions of the House until the conclusion of the trial before the Senate in that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 5081) to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. Speaker, pending that I desire to make a statement. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a short statement. The President invited Senator NORRIS and myself to the White House this morning for a conference. The President indicated in very unmistakable terms his desire that this bill should go to conference promptly and that the conferees should agree as speedily as possible and report their conclusions in order that there may be prompt legislation on the Muscle Shoals problem.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, I was prepared to offer a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate bill—the Norris bill. Many Members had asked for and been promised time to speak in favor of my motion, and I believe we had enough votes to pass it. The Speaker had kindly agreed to recognize me for that purpose. But I have just had a talk with Senator NORRIS and I am prepared to say to the Members of the House who agree with me on this measure, that this agreement reached between the gentleman from South Carolina, Senator NORRIS, and the President carries with it an understanding that the conferees are to accept the principal provisions of the Norris bill. [Applause].

There are some other minor amendments that will be ironed out in conference.

Therefore I have agreed to consent to the bill going to conference and to withholding my motion to instruct the conferees. We have secured the desired result under this agreement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman was facing the other way and I did not understand all he said. Did the gentleman say that the President is in favor of the provisions of the Norris bill?

Mr. RANKIN. He is in favor of the principal provisions of the Norris bill, yes.

Mr. SNELL. May I ask the gentleman who was at the conference at the White House this morning which one of these two bills the President favors. The President favors the principal provisions of which one of the bills?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that as I am going to conference and as I ought not to disclose the details of the conversation with the President, I should not answer his question categorically.

Mr. SNELL. I thought the gentleman started to disclose them.

Mr. McSWAIN. The President indicated his will with regard to the main provisions in this bill. In my humble view, there never were many very substantial differences. There was a little difference in regard to fertilizer.

Mr. SNELL. I thought there was quite a substantial difference.

Mr. McSWAIN. There was also some difference in regard to transmission lines. I am quite sure that if the House will give us the opportunity, it will be a matter of only a few days before we will report back a bill that will be accepted overwhelmingly.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman from Mississippi right in his statement or not?

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman from Mississippi had a talk with Senator NORRIS over the telephone, as I understand.

Mr. RANKIN. From the White House.

Mr. McSWAIN. I am trying not to get into any trouble between Senator NORRIS, the President, and the gentleman from Mississippi. I am asking the House to entrust their conferees with the responsibility of bringing in proper legislation.

Mr. SNELL. Both gentleman have quoted the President in regard to this bill. Which is correct?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman from South Carolina would inform our friend the distinguished gentleman from New York that in due time he will find out just exactly how the President feels on this matter.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from New York, if it is any consolation to him, he is pretty familiar with my views and with Senator NORRIS' views. Both of us are entirely satisfied with this agreement.

Mr. SNELL. I wish someone could speak with authority as to what the President's position is, as long as he has been brought into this argument.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina tries to observe the proprieties which should prevail in such circumstances. I have not tried to quote the President except to say to the House that the President wishes us to go to conference immediately.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Inasmuch as he reports an agreement, are those provisions still in the bill, and will they remain in the bill, which permits the turning over of this power to private interests?

Mr. McSWAIN. The bill has not yet been written in full in conference. The gentleman will have the fullest opportunity to disagree to the conference report.

Mr. McFADDEN. I asked the gentleman a question.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman has read both bills with regard to the right of the authority to sell power; and, as I told the gentleman when the matter was under discussion before, the authority can sell power to anybody under the sun.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then these so-called "power interests" who have been trying to get control of Muscle Shoals all these years will have that opportunity when this bill passes?

Mr. McSWAIN. No; if they get power, they will pay for it, but they will not get Muscle Shoals.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand they will pay for it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. A few days ago the House expressed itself as to whether it was in favor of the House bill or the Norris bill. Will this have any influence on the conferees when they are considering this matter?

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman knows that the Senate has amended what was then proposed as a substitute for the House bill by way of a motion to recommit in 32 different respects, and, of course, the question as related to the motion as the bill then existed is not pertinent at this time. I am sorry, therefore, I cannot commit the conferees, in advance, as to what they will do.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] that my understanding is they are to accept the provisions of the Norris bill with reference to the distribution of power.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman is doing his own talking.

Mr. McFADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman if these private power interests would have the right to get the excess power. I may say to the gentleman that at one time I know that one of these interests was willing to pay $80,000,000 to get this right, and deposited the money. I am wondering whether under this particular bill that is coming out they are going to get this right for nothing.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman need not be uneasy. The people's interests will be protected under this agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. McSWAIN, HILL of Alabama, and JAMES.

SALE OF SECURITIES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. RAYBURN, HUDDLESTON, LEA of California, PARKER of New York, and MAPES.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—GORMLEY v. GOSS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2 and ordered printed:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 9, 1933.

The SPEAKER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Seventy-third Congress of the United States for the fifth district of the State of Connecticut, Martin E. Gormley against Edward W. Goss, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit herewith original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases", such portions of the testimony as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed together with the notices of contest, and the answers thereto and original papers and exhibits have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the aforesaid case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee which, together with an abstract thereof and copies of the briefs of the parties, will be laid before the Committee on Elections to which the case shall be referred.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 135

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill H.R. 4606, and all points of order against said conference report shall be waived.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. RANSLEY. We would like to have the usual 30 minutes on this side of the House.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman will be yielded 30 minutes of the hour.

Mr. Speaker, when the bill H.R. 4606, introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], was before the House some days ago, the bill being known as the unemployment relief bill, it contained the following language:

The administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of—

And then followed the employees necessary to administer the relief in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

On motion in the House this clause was eliminated from the bill and the bill was sent to the Senate, so amended. In the Senate the language stricken by the House was inserted and the bill was sent to conference with this difference between the two Houses.

The conferees have agreed upon the following amendment in the adjustment of the differences between the two Houses:

The administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and their appointment may be made and compensation fixed without regard to the Civil Service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

In other words, practically reinserting in the bill the language of the House as transmitted to the Senate.

There is no question but what this amendment is subject to a point of order without a rule, and therefore it is necessary to submit this rule to the House in order to test whether or not you were in earnest when by your vote, during the pendency of the bill, you eliminated this language from it. There is no doubt of the fact that the purpose of the amendment was to remove from the personnel charged with the administration of this law the provisions of the Civil Service laws.

Your vote on this rule will endorse the elimination of the provisions of such law and remove the personnel selected by those whose duties and responsibilities will be to administer the act therefrom.

The House has already expressed itself, and therefore it is entitled under the rule to determine whether it is its purpose and desire to adhere to its former action.

The only opposition will come from those who believe in the adherence to the Civil Service law in all legislation and that it should be applied to the personnel to be selected for the administration of this law. There is no question the House action is the usual method employed in all relief measures we have passed in recent years.

Personally I do not believe that it should so apply. When we passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act there was no suggestion by those in charge that this should be continued in the law. We have passed several measures in the House creating certain agencies where there was no such provision with reference to the Civil Service law. So I say that the precedents are entirely with the House in regard to the application of the Civil Service rules.

There is another feature with regard to this particular bill. We have created in many States of the Union voluntary organizations for the administration of relief laws. These organizations are functioning today, and they are prepared through their experience as well as character to perform administrative duties. It is said that they would relieve much expense in connection with the administration of the law. Personally I think we should employ these voluntary organizations, and in doing so effect necessary economies of administration. But that is for the House. If you care to adhere to the former act, this gives you an opportunity to do so.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In other words, the adoption of this rule makes it possible to administer the law and employ people to carry into effect the provisions regardless of whether they have a Civil Service status or not?

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman is correct. I want to say further that the amendment you adopted did not fully effectuate your purpose. This conference agreement does. I realize, as a matter of fact, that when you vote to eliminate the language I have read your purpose was to relieve the personnel from the exactions of the Civil Service law and remove the salary provisions as fixed by the act of 1923.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. BACON. As the bill was introduced it was approved by the President and it contained a provision for employment under the Civil Service.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BACON. Can the gentleman say whether the President has disapproved taking it out?

Mr. DRIVER. I have had no expression from the President one way or the other. I have nothing to indicate that he has ever expressed himself in regard to this particular matter. I will say that the provision was incorporated in the bill by the drafting service that frequently employs the usual language in the preparation of bills.

However, that is only my opinion. The gentleman who had charge of the bill, the chairman of the committee, may make an explanation that will be more complete than that that I offer. My own is based on my own opinion.

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLIVER of New York). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. I should like to know whether the bill as it passed the Senate is in printed form so that Members can obtain a copy of it. The only copy that I have been able to get is the copy of the bill as it was reported by the Senate committee. It does not have the amendments numbered as the conference report numbers them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The information the Chair receives is that there are no available copies now of the bill as it passed the Senate. The gentleman may examine the official copy on the Clerk's desk, if he cares to do so.

Mr. MAPES. In order to act intelligently the Membership generally ought to have a chance to look it over as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think the House ought to know definitely just how the bill as passed by the Senate differs, if at all, from this copy which is now being distributed to the various Members of the House. The mere reading of the resolution from the Committee on Rules gives us no information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is asking for general information, not propounding a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair suggests that, due to the fact that we have no copy of the bill as passed by the Senate, the debate will probably give the gentleman the exact information desired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Democratic Party does not intend to stultify itself this afternoon by taking this extreme method of getting a few patronage jobs. Never could there be a more inopportune time to break down the Civil Service regulations than at the present moment. Thousands of men and women, Republicans and Democrats alike, from every State in the Union, are being furloughed, and this afternoon we are asked by means of a special rule to place positions in unemployment relief under political patronage. Instead of efficiency we are to place favoritism as the guide for appointment, and at the same time faithful employees of years' service under the Civil Service are turned out. I do not believe that the American public will support this policy any more than they are supporting the drastic regulations which have unexpectedly emanated from the Veterans' Bureau. Many worthy veterans injured in battle or suffering from disease incurred in the service of their country are being harshly and unjustly treated. I believe the American people believe in the Civil Service, and personally I do not believe that the President of the United States is in favor of what we are asked to do today. When this measure came before the House it contained the Civil Service provisions. The provision was eliminated in the House, and if I am any judge of the past record of the President, I believe he would be the last man to ask you to do what is being forced through by a special rule. I believe you gentlemen on the Democratic side are making a lot of trouble for yourselves by adopting this resolution. If you are not careful, you will be obliged to issue a second edition of that best seller of 1933, the book which contains the patronage jobs. I ask you to think seriously of what you are doing in striking down the Civil Service laws, which Democrats as well as Republicans have supported for many years.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Would the gentleman even admit that the Democrats could pass a Civil Service examination?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, in the past I believe a good many of the outstanding Democrats of the country have stood stalwartly for the Civil Service, and the Democrats should follow their example, and if they do it will be the act of wisdom.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Under the Republican administration Democrats could not even pass a Civil Service examination.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a copy of the bill as it passed the Senate is not before the House of Representatives, so that it is a little difficult for Members who have not had their attention called to the matter before to know exactly what is before the House. This is the situation; the question really before the House is this: Is the House for the Civil Service or is it for the spoils system? Those who favor the spoils system will vote for this resolution and those who believe in the Civil Service will vote against it.

Why is it necessary to bring in this rule? What does it do? Speaking generally, this is the situation.

As the bill was reported to the House by the House committee, it contained an express provision that the personnel necessary to administer this law should come under the classified Civil Service, but on the floor of the House that provision was stricken out. The Senate reinserted it. But—

and this is the point—it is not necessary to put that express provision into the act in order to bring the personnel under the Civil Service. They would come under it under the existing law and regulations unless taken out by express provision. The conferees therefore found themselves in the position of being unable to take the employees out of the Civil Service by simply eliminating the Senate amendment. They were obliged to go outside the scope of their authority in order to carry out their purpose.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I cannot yield at present. I will yield to my colleague later, if I have time.

The conferees, in order to put into effect the "spoils" system, had to incorporate in the conference report a provision of their own, going entirely outside the scope of the conference. This they did. That is the reason this rule is necessary, so that this provision in the conference report that otherwise would not be in order, may be made in order.

I yield now to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Is it possible that the gentleman's views are somewhat influenced by the result of the election last November? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Not at all. I am glad my friend has asked that question, because otherwise I might not have made this statement as definitely as I shall do now and as I intended to do when I took the floor. In fact, the main purpose I had in taking the floor was not to discuss at length the merits of this legislation, but to express very briefly my own position. I have been an advocate of the Civil Service ever since I entered public life, and I do not like to see it torn down. It was for the purpose of expressing my own position, largely, that I took the floor at all.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I am a new Member, and I do not know very much about the working of this; but I wonder if the thousand employees of the former Republican Senator Smoot and 600 of the former Republican Senator Moses got in under Civil Service, or how did they work that?

Mr. MAPES. I will say that as a new Member the gentleman is learning very fast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentlemen from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I do not want to take in too much territory. I am not here either to criticize or to commend the attitude of other men on this question, but I took the floor largely to inform the membership of the House just what was involved and to express my own belief in the Civil Service.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was in the House I offered an amendment which struck out the language referring to the Civil Service and Classification Act. When the bill got into the Senate they said my amendment did not perfect the bill at all—it left the Civil Service just as it was at that time. I must plead guilty to the fact that I was not informed as to all the law on Civil Service matters, and I find that if we pass the law creating the positions and we do not exempt the Civil Service and Classification Act from it, they will automatically take charge of it under the act of 1923. Therefore the Senate replaced the language stricken out by the House. Before it went to conference I conferred with the Comptroller, and he said that in order to carry out the intention of the House there should be a provision inserted declaring that the administrator could appoint those to administer the affairs of this bureau, notwithstanding the Civil Service or the Classification Act.

Of course, that was new legislation, more or less, but the conference committee agreed upon it. The Senate conferees unanimously agreed and the Senate adopted the report. We are only asking for approval and confirmation by the House to exempt the Civil Service employees from administering this law.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. I did not quite understand the gentleman. The Senate put in a provision indicating its belief in the civil service?

Mr. FULLER. No; they did not. They put back the very language that we took out by my amendment, and in doing so the gentleman who made the motion and the argument, Senator LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, said that the bill was no better with the language taken out by the House amendment, so they might as well put it back; but there never was any argument as to whether or not they thought it should or should not be administered by the Civil Service. As a matter of fact, Senator WAGNER agreed to my amendment before I introduced it in the House.

Mr. MAPES. But the point I was trying to make is this, that by the action of the Senate we have a right to conclude that the Senate favored the Civil Service law and regulation.

Mr. FULLER. Yes; that is true in one sense.

Mr. DRIVER. That would be subject to this qualification, however, that the Senate has now adopted the conference report with the language before the House.

Mr. FULLER. Yes; and absolutely exempted the administration of this law from the Civil Service and the Classification Act.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. Much has been said about the Civil Service. When this is adopted people under the Civil Service and those outside may be employed alike?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. It does not discriminate against those in the Civil Service?

Mr. FULLER. It does not bar them, but it puts them on an equality with the unemployed all over this country, and gives all an equal opportunity.

Mr. GLOVER. If this is not in the bill, then the Civil Service would take all the work and those on the outside would not get any?

Mr. FULLER. That is correct.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman in his experience found that the Civil Service law has been administered entirely free of politics?

Mr. FULLER. We know it has not.

Mr. COX. In other words, is it not the gentleman's experience that the Civil Service is responsible for more inefficiency, more deadheads, and more disloyalty to the Government than anything Congress has ever done?

Mr. FULLER. I will not say that the Civil Service system is accountable for it, but I will say that that condition exists to a certain extent.

Mr. COX. Politics always control in the findings made by the Commission?

Mr. FULLER. That is correct.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. As a matter of fact, is not this legislation of an emergency and temporary character, anyway?

Mr. FULLER. I am going to discuss that. I thank the gentleman for calling it to my attention. The gentleman from Illinois wished to ask me a question, I think.

Mr. BRITTEN. What I wanted to determine was how the language which has been agreed upon by the conferees differs from the language in the bill that was passed by the House.

Mr. FULLER. Here is an exact history of it. Read this [indicating] and it will show you exactly what it is.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thought the language in the conference report was the same as the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FULLER. The language of the conference report is to the effect that the appointments may be made and the compensation fixed without regard to the Civil Service laws or the Classification Act of 1923.

There is no disposition whatever on the Democratic side of the House to try to reflect upon the Civil Service; not a bit in the world. As a matter of fact, the Democratic administration during the terms it has been in power since the Civil Service was created has been more friendly toward it and has done more for it than the Republican administration. We have not played politics with it like they have. Why, you say, this is a partisan matter. Before the late Chief Executive, ex-President Hoover, went out of office he put 30,000 Republicans in office by Executive order, transferring them to Civil Service in order that we could not reach them by appointment when we came in. [Applause.]

I am friendly to the Civil Service. I think it is a wonderful thing. For 4 years I have served on the Civil Service Committee, and the employees of the Civil Service Commission know I am a friend of Civil Service and would do anything in the world to help them or anybody else seeking to make working conditions better.

The men who drew this bill were under Civil Service and they wanted to put these jobs under Civil Service. This bill provides half a billion dollars to care for and feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and take care of the poor and distressed in this country; and they wanted all the jobs under this bill placed under Civil Service notwithstanding the fact that throughout the entire duration of this panic the one class of citizens in the United States who suffered least by reason of the panic is the Civil Service employees in the city of Washington, the richest city in the world.

This bill is designed to grant relief to the unemployed and those in distress. Why should they not have some of the jobs that will be created under it? The jobs will not necessarily go to Democrats alone. In those States where there is a Republican governor and a Republican administration they will take charge of the administration of the funds that will be turned over to them, as they have taken charge of the matter in the past.

In the cities and townships of my State we have charity organizations and people who volunteer to give their services for nothing, yet if you allow this provision to remain in the bill requiring it to be administered by the Civil Service, no one will hold a job except he is paid a salary of $1,440 a year as a minimum. The salaries will run from that up to $9,000.

Mr. LUDLOW. In Indiana we have a relief organization under our efficient Governor. Is it not true that in every State of the Union there is at the present time a relief set-up that can be utilized to carry out the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FULLER. Absolutely. So, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to the idea that my good friend from Massachusetts injected into this argument that this is a question of the spoils system; not at all. There is nothing political about it. Those who try to make it so I refer to the actions of the last Republican administration. The Republicans established the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and provided that they could appoint whom they pleased, and appointments have been made by the hundreds, by the thousands, a great portion of them drawing $8,000, $9,000, and $10,000 a year. They are not under Civil Service.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. When the Republicans enacted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law they did not put the employees under the Civil Service; and is it not true that when the last decennial census was taken the bill providing for it, passed by a Republican Congress, exempted the men in the field service from the provisions of the Civil Service law, and thousands of men and women were appointed in taking the census, 99 out of every 100 of whom were Republicans?

Mr. FULLER. I wish the gentleman had mentioned this when my good friend from Michigan was speaking. I remember when the act came into existence. Down in my country there are lots of townships where you cannot find a Republican. If they could not find a Republican in the township, they would import a Republican, or they would consolidate two townships; but they would not appoint a Democrat. That is what they did with even those little 2-by-4 census positions. Small-town cheap politics. They took the jobs under that bill out of Civil Service, and that is the way they carried it out.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman should remove to some other part of the country where they believe more in the two-party system.

Mr. FULLER. Then I would have to go to Massachusetts, to Michigan, or some place like that.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter. I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLIVER of New York). The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members present; a quorum.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen who have spoken have, in part, explained this peculiar situation, but have on both sides missed what seems to me the important point.

The other day the House sought to take out from under the Civil Service the personnel to be employed in carrying out the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill." Its failure so to do has some humorous aspects. I do not wish to embarrass my good friend from Arkansas by going into that in detail. It rarely happens in the House, however, that the House is persuaded to do precisely the opposite of what it meant to do. The gentleman who made the motion the other day continues in his misunderstanding of the real point at issue. He has failed, as has some of the other speakers, to examine the law in question. It is contained in part of a sentence which I will read for the general information, the first sentence of the Civil Service law:

The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the Civil Service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter.

This is the function of the President of the United States. We have been so dazed in these last few weeks by the transfer of authority from the legislative branch to the executive branch that we have forgotten this practice was begun at least 50 years ago.

So the question the other day was not whether we should of our own initiative and on our own responsibility as a new matter determine the administration of the Civil Service law, but the issue was whether we should take away from the President power now in his hands.

As the bill was written it said in effect that we were to take away from the President certain power. We proposed that he should not, in this particular instance, be able to exclude anybody from the Civil Service requirements. We abridged his power, we lessened his power, we diminished his power by the bill as it was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency to the House.

When the matter came up for debate the House was not informed of the facts. The gentleman from Arkansas, I believe quite unintentionally, refrained from disclosing that the issue here was not, primarily, Civil Service, but the power of the President. So he proposed to remove from the bill a superfluous provision in the bill, superfluous in part at any rate, and the House saw fit to approve the removal of this provision, and thereby the House is to be assumed to have intended, though it failed, to secure that the President would be refused the right to apply the Civil Service regulations to this particular class of personnel.

The bill went over to the Senate, and there the Senate also took away power from the President, but the precise opposite of the power the House thought it had taken away, because the Senate said in effect: "We will take away from the President the power to keep them out of the Civil Service." So if the position of the House had been put into proper and adequate language, and if what the gentleman from Arkansas tried to do had been accomplished, you would have had the House forbidding the President to let them in, you would have had the Senate forbidding the President to keep them out, two diametrically opposite proposals. When the matter came into the committee on conference it was manifest that the House had acted illegitimately. Of course, I mean to convey no invidious idea in that word.

The committee of conference discarded the Senate proposal and then went beyond the scope of what on the face of it was in disagreement between the two branches. The conferees transgressed the rules by reporting to the House what the gentleman from Arkansas and a majority of the House sought to accomplish.

So the issue at the moment is this: Do you want to forbid the President to keep the agents and employees of the new bureau out, do you want to forbid the President to keep them in, or do you want to let the law stand and leave its application to the judgment of the President?

This brings the matter to a somewhat more than ordinary crisis. It is an exceptional situation, a phenomenal situation, a situation that history will record, because for the first time in the memorable 2 months since the 4th of March the House will consciously have said that we are going to shear the President of power. We are probably going to forbid him to use his judgment as to whether or not these officers and employees should or should not be chosen under the merit system. So I am bringing the issue home to you straight. Are you going, as the Civil Service law says, to leave this to the judgment of the President, or are you going to insist that you know more about it than he does; that your judgment is likely to be wiser; that you can reach a more sane conclusion?

Gentlemen have not asked themselves this question in 2 months. Today, for the first time, they are going to ask themselves that question. Are they going to leave this to the President or are they going to follow their own fancy, whim, prejudice, or what not?

So the primary question is whether gentlemen on my right are or are not at last going to desert their leader, whether they are or are not at last going to exercise their own duty as Representatives, whether they are or are not at last going to carry their brains under their own hats. That is the question they will decide today, and I am uttering these sentences that the country may know whether the Democrats of the House have at last decided to do their own thinking. [Laughter.]

Now, then, let us come to the further question, that involving the Civil Service. One hundred years ago, Andrew Jackson, the patron saint of the Democratic Party, was President of the United States. He had come into power in 1829; and if you desire to read a page of misery, a page of suffering, a page of injustice, read the story of office seekers that crowded this city and successfully thronged the offices of the President and the Members of Congress belonging to his party.

One hundred years ago last December William L. Marcy, of New York, then a Senator of the United States, coined a phrase which since then has been the slogan and watchword, the chief thing in the very bible of politicians—and I am using the term "politicians" in its ignominious sense. He declared in the Senate, "To the victors belong the spoils of the enemy."

That doctrine implanted in the public life of America by Andrew Jackson and William L. Marcy grew like a poisonous mushroom. All political parties accepted it. All nourished it. Steadily the public service grew worse.

Fifty years after Marcy spoke, in 1882, 50 years ago, the country awoke to the truth, to the danger. Then George H. Pendleton, Senator from Ohio, delivered in the Senate a speech you will find in at least one of the volumes that comprise the great speeches of our political history.

That speech awakened the conscience of his own party, the conscience of the other party, the conscience of the people, and destroyed, for the time being at any rate, the poison that was threatening the very life of the Republic.

You say that I am extravagant? I will presently show you that such were Pendleton's words almost precisely.

When the bill he had introduced was before the Senate, he disclosed that one bureau of the Treasury, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, had 958 employees, of whom more than 500—if I remember aright, 531—were absolutely superfluous and had been discharged. In one office they found 20 messengers doing the work 1 could do. They cut down the appropriation for the Department from $800,000 to $200,000. That was typical of what the spoils system had done first for one party and then for another, as they succeeded each other in control.

It was the speech of Senator Pendleton that did most to secure the passage of the law of which I have read the first sentence as it now stands. In its course he reminded the Senate that Jefferson on taking office in 1801 had established fidelity, capacity, and honesty as the tests. I know how unfashionable it is now to quote Thomas Jefferson. The gentlemen on my right have forsaken his doctrines, trodden on them, turned their backs on them, and now of Thomas Jefferson it may be said that on my right "there is none so poor to do him reverence." Ah, they worship now at the altar of Andrew Jackson, and it is idle for me to repeat these words of Jefferson to men who have forgotten even his existence.

Mr. Pendleton further said that—and here I venture to read in order that I may be correct—describing the condition to which the conduct of Government had been brought by the belief of Jackson and the utterance of Marcy "To the victors belong the spoils."

I do not say that the Civil Service of the Government is wholly bad. * * * But I do say that the Civil Service is inefficient; that it is expensive; that it is extravagant; that it is in many cases and in some senses corrupt. * * *

This whole system demoralizes everybody who is engaged in it. It demoralizes the clerks who are appointed. That is inevitable. It demoralizes those who make the appointment. That also is inevitable. And it demoralizes Senators and Representatives who, by the exercise of their powers as Senators and Representatives, exert pressure upon the appointing power.

Mark you, these words of a great Democrat, a man incorruptible and fearless, a champion of the welfare of the country:

I believe that the existing system which, for want of a better name, I call the "spoils system", must be killed or it will kill the Republic. I believe that it is impossible to maintain free institutions in the country upon any basis of that sort.

I believe the spoils system to be a great crime. I believe it to be fraught with danger. I believe that the highest duty of patriotism is to prevent the crime and avoid the danger.

And so, if you do not care to decide this question today upon the issue of whether you will trust your President, turn to these words, dwell upon them in your minds, let them appeal to your judgments, and to your conscience, and do not now, when first the opportunity squarely presents itself, say that it is your wish to return to that system which menaced the very life of the Republic itself.

It is not prudent for you to do that.

Furthermore, it is not for your individual interest to do that. At luncheon this noon I sat next to a fellow Member who told me he had 167 postmasters in his district, and he was bewailing his sad lot and the trouble they had caused him through the years of his service. Ask any one of the older Members here who has had a share in these appointments and secure from him his own judgment as to the personal benefit of this system. If you are to be selfish in this matter, then you ought to turn your backs against every proposal to burden you with more office seekers. We, who have been here long, know that what has been said is true, that every time we secure an appointment we make 1 ingrate and 20 enemies. That is an old saying, but it continues to be true in the experience of every man in public life. So, for selfish motives as well as public interest, I pray you forswear a return to this system, which seemed to one of the great Democrats in our time the greatest menace to the very existence of the Republic.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman was speaking a moment ago of a great Democrat, Thomas Jefferson; and with all the admiration and respect that I possess for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], I admire him still more because of his devotion to the apostle of the Democratic Party, and may I ask the gentleman if he ever heard these words of Thomas Jefferson, speaking of officeholders, in respect to their qualifications: "First, is he capable; second, is he honest; third, is he a Democrat?"

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has altered what I attributed to the first Democratic President. If the gentleman desires to know what Senator Pendleton averred that Mr. Jefferson actually said, I will repeat the words as used by Mr. Pendleton in his speech: "Fidelity, capacity, honesty." They were the tests used by Jefferson. My friend for the word "fidelity" substituted "Democrat." Of course, I will grant that they are synonymous.

Mr. SISSON. I refer the gentleman to Jefferson's whole works for the fact.

May I ask the gentleman—and I say this with all respect to him, and I have admired the very eloquent speech of the gentleman—if a reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will disclose an equally eloquent speech upon the same subject, carrying admonition to the gentleman's own party when that party was in power?

Mr. LUCE. As far as I can recall, this is the first time since I have been a Member of the House that the question has come before the House squarely, or even in such a way as to warrant taking the floor in the matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman was here, I am quite sure, when we had a vote as to putting the employees of the Census under Civil Service. As I recall, looking at that side of the House, I did not see the gentleman stand up against that "spoils" system under the Fifteenth Census.

Mr. LUCE. If I failed to stand up at that time, it was one of the numerous sins that I have committed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Will not the gentleman state for the RECORD what he has already implied; that is, that this entire system of patronage, the so-called "spoils" system, is just a polite but very effective form of bribery?

Mr. LUCE. I do not quite understand the gentleman. Our minds fail to meet. [Laughter.] But if my notion of his thought is correct, I agree with him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the House for listening so patiently. I have spoken with some earnestness, because for 50 years I have believed that the wise thing to do was to fill the Civil Service by competitive examinations, where efficiency should be the chief requirement. I am paying a debt today that I contracted more than 50 years ago when I first became converted to what was then a new idea. I thought we had so firmly implanted it in the American soil that it could not be uprooted, and it is my regret that any attempt is made to undo the great work that those who went before us accomplished in its creation. [Applause.]

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 237, nays 133, not voting 61, as follows:

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "their appointment may be made and compensation fixed without regard to the Civil Service laws, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Administrator may, in the same manner, appoint and fix the compensation of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "The Administrator may, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of the administration in any State or States where, in his judgment, more effective and efficient cooperation between the State and Federal authorities may thereby be secured in carrying out the purposes of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, and on page 8, line 3, of the House bill, after "Hawaii", insert "the Virgin Islands"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: The House bill provided that the Administrator should receive a salary not to exceed $8,500. The Senate amendment provides that the salary shall be fixed by the President at not to exceed $10,000. The House recedes. The effect of the provision, as agreed to in conference, is that the maximum salary is $10,000, which will be subject to the applicable reduction under the economy law.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment provides that the officers and employees (other than experts) of the administration shall be appointed subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, and their compensation fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. There was no such provision in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment providing that experts and other officers and employees may be appointed without regard to the Civil Service laws and their compensation fixed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923.

On amendment no. 3: This amendment provides that the maximum compensation to be paid to any expert or other officer or employee appointed by the Administrator shall not exceed $8,000. The House recedes. The effect of the provision is that the maximum salary is $8,000, which will be subject to the applicable reduction under the economy law.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment provides that the Administrator may, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, assume control of the administration in any State or States where, in his judgment, more effective and efficient cooperation between the State and Federal authorities may be secured. The House recedes with clarifying amendments.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment extends the benefits of the act to the Virgin Islands. The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
 T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, there are only four changes in the legislation as it passed the House. The House fixed the salary of the administrator at $8,500. That has been changed to read "not exceeding $10,000", but subject to the application of reduction under the economy law, which is really not a substantial change.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. I proposed the original amendment that put a limitation, as the gentleman will recall, on the salary of this official. It seemed to me at the time almost the unanimous will of the House that this limitation should be placed in the bill. I was wondering what pressure was brought upon the conferees to bend the position of the House on this particular item.

Mr. STEAGALL. The change is not substantial. The Senate language placed a limit of $10,000 upon the salary, but makes it subject to the reduction provided in the economy bill, which, under the present adjustment, would make the salary $8,500, as provided specifically in the House bill.

Mr. BEEDY. That is just what I wanted to ascertain.

Mr. STEAGALL. Another limitation was placed on the salaries of employees and experts employed by the administration, placing the maximum at $8,000 annually. There was incorporated a provision which authorizes the administrator of the relief fund to set up authorities in the different States to administer the fund, where it is found desirable to do so, in order to secure more effective and more efficient administration of the fund. I do not think there is anything in that provision that need create any serious concern.

There might possibly be an instance where complaints would arise on the score of local politics or otherwise that might make it desirable for the administrator to exercise control of the funds, in some instances, without leaving them in the hands of persons selected by the State authorities. But I think it is safe to say that such thing is not likely to arise in any instance; and if it should, it certainly would be an exception to the rule. The general provision is that the funds are to be administered by State authorities and distributed upon the application of the Governors of the States.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been any estimate anywhere along the line or in any hearings of the number of employees who will be put to work in the administration of this measure?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that the purpose of this legislation is not primarily that of dealing with unemployment.

Mr. SNELL. A good deal of unemployment will be relieved through the jobs created under this bill, will there not?

Mr. STEAGALL. What we desire through this legislation is to relieve hunger and distress. Other things are incidental to the main object.

Do I understand the gentleman directs his inquiry to the personnel set up to administer the $500,000,000 fund?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman it was not thought there would be any large number employed or necessary in the administration of this fund for the reason that it is to be left to the State authorities to distribute and to administer after allocation by the administration in Washington.

Mr. SNELL. I hope those who administer the law will remember the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STEAGALL. That, of course, is what is contemplated by the Congress and, so far as we were advised, by those who appeared before the committee advocating the enactment of the legislation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice as the bill passed the House the salary of the administrator was fixed at $8,500. The conference report limits it to $10,000. Does this mean the administrator of this law will receive $10,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have already explained that the change made was for a specific provision that the maximum salary should be $8,500 to a provision that it shall not exceed $10,000, the purpose being to fix the basic salary at $10,000, leaving it subject to reduction under the economy law, which, according to the adjustment now in effect, will make it $8,500.

Mr. McFARLANE. So the net result is that the salary is left at $8,500, the figure it was before.

Mr. STEAGALL. It should be less under this than it was under the provisions of the House bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why should it not be?

Mr. STEAGALL. It can not be more. The House bill fixed a definite sum. The amendment of the Senate provides that it shall not exceed that sum.

Mr. Speaker, these are the changes in the bill, except the one which has been fully and adequately discussed in connection with the rule which has just been adopted by the House. I refer to the provision which removes the employees of the administration from the provisions of the Civil Service law.

The discussion of the rule has left nothing necessary to be said. In this connection I think it proper to state that the force to be employed in connection with this legislation really affords a very trivial basis for controversy in connection with the application of Civil Service rules.

We all desire to preserve our Civil Service System insofar as it should be done, properly safeguarded to continue the personnel of the Government who are peculiarly trained and experienced, whose continued service is desirable for the public welfare.

This is an emergency measure. We were urged to have the legislation passed by the 1st of May. Funds are being depleted and it is desirable that the administration be left free to employ local help wherever available in cases where it is necessary to employ personnel in the different States.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. Is it not true that in every State there is now a trained personnel and an adequate set-up?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. I think that is generally true.

Mr. LUDLOW. This trained personnel may be utilized and a large sum may be saved in administrative expense if the employees to be taken on under this bill are not required to be taken from Civil Service lists, whereas they could not be utilized if the employees are put under the operation of the Civil Service law. In Indiana there is a relief organization under the directing genius of our able Governor, Paul V. McNutt, that is prepared to take over this relief work and administer it most efficiently and at a minimum of cost. The utilization of that organization not only will mean that relief will be applied where it is needed in Indiana but it will result in a large saving to the taxpayers. I am a firm believer in Civil Service, but I think that on account of the temporary nature of this work and the facilities already at hand there should be an exception in this instance.

Mr. STEAGALL. It would vastly increase the expense of administration of this act and handicap the administrator in his duties if we put the Civil Service requirement into the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. And add greatly to the difficulties of the administration.

Mr. STEAGALL. It would add greatly to the difficulties of the administration of the law, as the gentleman says.

After all, our Civil Service system is far from satisfactory. There are not many things about it so sacred as to forbid change or suggestion for improvement. The system is lop-sided and unfair. I have not the figures in mind, but four States and the District of Columbia have taken over an unjust share of the jobs under the prevailing Civil Service system and left without opportunity for employment by the Government multiplied thousands of citizens throughout other States and other sections of the Union who have no opportunity to find employment with the Government.

This subject is now under consideration by one of the committees of this House and will be dealt with, I hope, constructively in legislation that will be considered in just a day or two. I hope the unfairness that has been developed under the present Civil Service system of the country will be corrected by this legislation and that we shall have a just and equitable distribution of the favors to be dispensed by the Federal Government.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. And if these inequalities and abuses are not corrected, then all Civil Service laws ought to be repealed.

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the proper course is to improve and perfect the Civil Service law and its administration, so that fairness and justice may result and that its true purpose may be carried out.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think a policy should be declared which will offset the effect of these blanket orders of the last three administrations placing so many under Civil Service, so that lots of good Democrats, who are now out of employment, may be given employment?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that, of course, I share the feeling he entertains. My political sympathies are the same as his. But we should deal with the subject from the standpoint of justice and public welfare and adopt a permanent system to accomplish these ends.

The Civil Service law ought to be put on a fair basis, to stand throughout the years, no matter what party may be in power. This is what ought to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 4589) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANNON of Missouri, BLANTON, BUCHANAN, TABER, and BACON.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I was on my feet attempting to secure recognition in order to reserve the right to object to the previous unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. KVALE. I simply feel that under the previous agreement entered into I should have been recognized because I meant to ask the chairman of the committee to make a clarifying statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. KVALE. I simply want a statement from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the intent and purpose of the conferees with respect to the amendments of the Senate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. We understand that some of the restrictions and some of the changes have to do with a more liberal policy toward the schools, playgrounds, swimming pools, and other activities of the District, and I am wondering what the attitude of the House conferees is going to be.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know, and I cannot speak for the House conferees because I have not consulted them. Ordinarily, when conferees are appointed, it becomes their duty to carry out, so far as it is in their power to do so, the will of the House as expressed in the bill. I assume the conferees are going to try to carry out this duty. However, they are not going into the conference with any predetermined or unyielding convictions that would not permit of a real conference.

Mr. KVALE. And this action today will not be interpreted as a mandate to stand by the provisions of the House bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly not. This is simply the appointment of House conferees.

Mr. KVALE. I simply wanted that statement in the Record, and I thank the gentleman. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question: Would the gentleman mind telling the House what is to be the program for the balance of the week?

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that if the House is willing we can meet at 11 o'clock in the morning and conclude general debate on the independent offices appropriation bill, which has been fixed at 6 hours, and then take up the independent offices bill Thursday under the 5-minute rule, I assume, at the regular hour of meeting. Whether the consideration of the bill can be concluded Thursday or will go over until Friday, I do not know. Further than this, I know of nothing that can come before the House unless it be some conference reports.

Mr. SNELL. Then it is the idea of the gentleman that if we should finish the consideration of the bill Thursday night to adjourn over until the following Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. Unless something develops in the meantime which indicates it is important for the House to stay in session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that Calendar Wednesday business in order tomorrow be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

HOOR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are some committees that have important hearings scheduled for tomorrow. I wonder if the gentleman from Tennessee has consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BYRNS. I have not; but I can give them assurance that there will be nothing come up between the hours of 11 and 12 except general debate on the appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I should like to make this statement: A good many Members of the House have expressed interest in the independent offices bill and especially in that portion of it dealing with the appropriations for veterans. It is the purpose of the committee, when the House convenes at 11 o'clock tomorrow, that the first speech shall be a speech explaining the provisions of the bill, and I hope that such Members of the House as are interested will be present, and that it will not be necessary to take the time to have a roll call to get them here.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask some questions before we consent. I understand 6 hours of general debate is provided for. Who is going to allot this time in general debate?

Mr. BYRNS. Under the rule which has already been adopted it will be allotted by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and will be confined to the bill.

Mr. BUSBY. The entire time of 6 hours is to be confined to the bill?

Mr. BYRNS. That is the rule, as I understand it.

Mr. BUSBY. That has not been the practice heretofore.

Mr. BYRNS. No; we have had general debate, so as to permit Members—

Mr. SNELL. We have had a lot of new practices this session, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. BYRNS. I think this is a very wise practice, particularly with reference to this bill, because there are many important matters of legislation in it.

Mr. BUSBY. One other question. Is it expected that the Members who address the Committee will talk to empty benches, as they do usually in general debate, or is it expected that we shall have a quorum?

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure they will talk to a crowded House, because the gentlemen who are going to address the House are going to make some splendid speeches. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BUSBY. Reserving the right to object, I am not satisfied with that last wise crack. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. Is the gentleman on the list of speakers?

Mr. BUSBY. No; and I did not ask to be, but I want to inform the gentleman that he will have to have a quorum here all day tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H.R. 5569) for the construction, repair, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and referred to the calendar.

Mr. SNELL reserved all points of order on the bill.

WHERE ARE WE HEADED TODAY?

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD the remarks made by my colleague, Mr. HOLLISTER, of Ohio.

There was no objection.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by my colleague, Hon. JOHN B. HOLLISTER, of Ohio, at the annual dinner of the Cincinnati Bar Association, April 29, 1933.

My colleagues of the Cincinnati Bar: When I was asked a short time ago to address you tonight, I realized how little time there was to prepare adequately a scholarly address suitable to the occasion, and to the dignity of the assemblage now before me. I selected the subject, "Where Are We Headed Today?", with a purpose. We are moving so fast, and the kaleidoscope changes so greatly each day that no matter how carefully I might prepare myself on the subject I knew full well that the elapse of 24 hours might and probably would render all my observations obsolete. It left me a fine "out" for any lack of preparation which might appear.

Let me say at the outset that I have no answer for the question "Where are we headed today?" I only wish I had, but the man who has the temerity to give an answer to that question with any reasonable degree of accuracy is yet to be found. Our position today makes me think a little of the actions of Lord Nosh, in Stephen Leacock's humorous story, Gertrude the Governess, who whenever he was perturbed left the house, jumped on his horse's back, and rode away rapidly in all directions. It looks as if we were today riding rapidly in all directions.

Let me lay a little groundwork before discussing the present situation in more detail. Since I am speaking to men and women learned in the law it will not be necessary to expatiate on some of the elementary ideas of government which seem to be going rapidly into the discard. We know our Federal authority was conceived as a grant of powers by independent and sovereign States to a central government, and it was the view of our far-seeing forefathers that there must be unceasing watchfulness against encroachment by the central Government on the prerogatives of the States. You all know of the historic controversies between Hamilton the Federalist, and Jefferson the Democrat, although they did not call them Democrats in those days. You all know how John Marshall, as Chief Justice, expounded the Constitution, and how under his guidance, little by little, the Federal idea took form and crystallized. But Hamilton and Marshall would have been aghast at some of the governmental manifestations which we today accept as normal, and I am afraid that poor Thomas Jefferson has grown callouses from turning rapidly in his grave at the mere thought of how far we have departed from his principles.

The Constitution was conceived on the theory of rugged individualism. The ideas of the framers of the Constitution was that there should be just as little interference as possible by the central government with the right of the individual to live his life as he saw fit, to work when and how he pleased, and to amass what property he could. Even a cursory reading of the Constitution makes it clear that scrupulous care was taken to protect the individual from encroachment on those rights; and it is, of course, well known that the first 10 amendments, popularly known as the bill of rights, were submitted immediately after the adoption of the Constitution as part of an agreement without which the Colonies would not have approved the basic document itself. The famous wording of the fifth amendment that no person shall be "deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" is familiar to every schoolboy. It has been the due-process clause which has constituted the chief protection of the individual in the preservation of the rights which the founders of our country considered as innate.

But what has come over the picture of ideal simplicity which was presented by our early Government? We started off with a President, a Vice President, a Congress, a Supreme Court, and three departments—the State, Treasury, and War. When Jefferson became Secretary of State in 1790 he had two clerks and a budget of $6,300. There are now 4,700 Civil Service employees in the State Department alone. In 1790 the War Department had a staff of 13. There are now 50,000 civilian employees. Whereas the whole Government operated in 1790 with three departments and a total of a few hundred employees, we now have 150 different departments, bureaus, commissions, and boards; and the civilian employees of the Government, full-time and part-time, number almost 850,000.

I am not here to criticize any particular department or bureau, or the people who work in them. They are in the main capable individuals, doing their jobs honestly and well. It is all a part of the great bureaucratic system which has grown faster and faster, increasing in volume like a snowball, to which very little attention has been called until the last few years.

If a service was demanded by a small group of citizens, the Government gladly gave the service. Times were good, and the national income was more than enough for the purpose. The ambitions of individuals in the various departments themselves to expand their work and therefore to acquire perhaps a higher salary and more importance has been responsible for even more of this increase. It was easy to expand, but contracting means the losing of jobs or a reduction of wages, and this has up to recently been found almost impossible.

My purpose tonight is not to give a detailed dissertation on Government bureaucracy. That subject, treated properly, would take several times the amount of time I expect to use. What most of us do not realize is that there is serious doubt whether a great part of all this development is really constitutional at all, based on the views of the framers of this great document. It is true that the Treasury with its enormous subsidiary, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, is based on the constitutional powers "to lay and collect taxes . . . to borrow money on the credit of the United States . . . to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin . . .", supplemented, of course, by the income-tax amendment. It is true that the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission are based on the commerce clause. It is true that the War, Navy, State, and Justice Departments have their constitutional sources, but under what authority do we justify most of the activities of Commerce, Interior, Agriculture, and Labor Departments? How many of us realize that the only constitutional justification for these enormous bureaus and their staggering expense are the two words "general welfare" in section 8 of article I of the Constitution, where, hidden away among other things, there appears the power granted Congress "to provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States."

A study of the debates in the Convention prior to the adoption of the Constitution indicates that the term "general welfare" was adopted because of the fear that the Central Government might favor one district over another, might discriminate in the exercise of its functions, and it was therefore decided to include language to indicate that all parts of the country should be treated on an equality. Who dreamed that the power of the Central Government to raise revenues and to expend them would bring about a situation where, on the theory of providing for the general welfare of the country, we should build hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of roads with Federal money, set up employment offices, inspect cows for tuberculosis, attempt to abolish the boll weevil, fight the grasshopper, and do the thousand and one things which the Federal Government does today and which might perfectly well be done by the States themselves?

No one doubts but that most of this work does some good; and if it were only a question of expense we might be able to bear up, particularly in good times, but all this unnecessary and unlimited expansion has a more sinister side. There is not only a taking over by the Federal Government of purely State functions but there has been developed the Frankenstein of "government in business", the competition by the Government itself with industry, government with all its wasteful and inefficient operation, yet backed by the huge resources of the National Treasury, so that the question of cost which fixes the price of private production is disregarded. How can private industry, which must show a return on its capital in order to survive, compete with the Government in the same line when the latter does not have to show this return?

I have here a report of a special committee appointed by the House of Representatives in the past Congress to investigate this very subject. It covers some 250 pages and runs the whole alphabetical gamut from architects to warehouses. To detail the mass of information contained here would bore you most exceedingly. It is sufficient to say that the data collected by the committee showed that governmental competition affected detrimentally 225 different items of trade, industry, and personal and professional services.

I shall give you some typical examples. A post exchange at an Army post starts up with a few items carried for the soldiers which cannot be locally acquired. Its ambitious head begins to find there is a demand for other things. He puts on new line after new line, and before he is through he is selling radios and automobiles to the whole community. Next a laundry is installed; and before you know it everyone in the neighborhood, whether connected with the military or not, is having his laundry done at the post establishment.

The convicts at a penitentiary are at work making chairs by hand. An up-and-coming warden asks for an appropriation for extending this work, and before you know it high-speed machinery is installed and 50 convicts who, of course, are paid nothing, are doing more work than 500 did before, and taking business which the furniture industry of the country can ill afford to lose.

One of the recent manifestations of the way in which the Government operates is the setting up of a separate corporation by the Government in which it makes the capital investment and then turns this corporation loose to go into business like any other corporation. If it is a failure, as it usually is, the Government loses the investment, shrugs its shoulders and goes on, but meanwhile another nail is driven in the coffin of the private industry with which it competes.

The first of these was the Panama Railroad, set up in 1904, for a worthy purpose, but before long the Panama Railroad was running its own ships to American ports in competition with private shipping companies which in turn the Government had to subsidize with mail contracts to make operations profitable.

The Great War was the happy hunting ground for this method of placing the Government in business. Most of us remember the Merchant Fleet Corporation of the United States Shipping Board, the United States Grain Corporation, the War Finance Corporation which was the ancestor of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Sugar Equalization Corporation, the Spruce Production Corporation, etc. The exigencies of the Great War may have justified this development but quare—whether the same result could not have been achieved by industry itself under proper governmental supervision?

This was continued even after the war, for shortly thereafter the Department of Labor set up the United States Housing Corporation and actually built and later sold at a considerable loss thousands of homes. The Government still holds 28 millions in the stock of this company. The Inland Waterways Corporation is thriving today, taking business from the railroads and claiming to make a profit because of a system of accounting which fails to take into consideration invested capital and proper depreciation, a practice which the Interstate Commerce Commission would under no circumstances permit to a railroad.

The crowning atrocity in this list of governmental ventures is the Federal Farm Board, which is still dragging out a miserable existence, and which has cost the Government to date hundreds of millions of dollars. It was conceived as a help to the farmer, but today the farmer is in a worse plight than ever, and to a great extent because of the operation of the Farm Board, which took over his surplus crops and thus encouraged him to keep on producing when he should have been curtailing his acreage. Even the United States Government, great though its resources may be, cannot long oppose successfully the inexorable operation of the law of supply and demand.

We carried this same plan into the field of finance for the first time in 1923, when we organized the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks to assist in the financing of agriculture, banks of which the Government now owns the capital stock to the tune of 32 millions.

I have here a statement of the securities owned by the United States. It shows that in addition to the foreign debts of eleven billions plus there are owned securities of various subsidiary corporations in the amount of 2½ billions of dollars.

You may think that I am going too far into the past; that a good deal of what I have said is "old stuff" and has little bearing on my subject, but it is all part of the picture. It shows that there has been increasing emphasis on the importance of the Federal Government over that of the States, and increasing exercise by the Federal Government of functions which it should never have assumed, and an increasing interference with your business and my business and your daily life and my daily life.

Incidentally, you will note that I have given no attention to the ill-fated prohibition experiment which happily now begins to be a matter of the past. That was, of course, another manifestation of complete forgetfulness of the basic principles of individual liberty which gave our country its early virility and which we are in serious danger of losing.

And now we come up to the time of the depression. There is not the slightest doubt but that the reckless expenditures of our Government, encouraging similar expenditures by States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals, was an important contributing factor to our troubles. Certainly the failure of this country to balance its Budget for more than 3 years and the certainty that it will be unbalanced for the current fiscal year ending June 30 next was largely instrumental in bringing about the general lack of confidence which resulted ultimately in the closing of all the banks in the country. The emergency of the depression was met at the beginning by an attempt by the Government to take under its wing the vast credit structure of the Nation.

I am trying to speak dispassionately and without any consideration of party or politics. The Republican Party and its representatives have made ghastly mistakes, and I am only praying that the Democratic Party and its representatives will not follow the same course, for parties and politics are secondary when the welfare of the country is concerned.

Shortly after Congress convened in December 1931, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized, a corporation with a capital stock of half a million and with authority to issue bonds and notes for several times that amount, which authority has since increased a number of times. Railroad bonds were then showing the result of many months of operation by the carriers in the red. Banks found in their portfolios many of these railroad bonds and industrial bonds whose values had shrunk alarmingly, together with many loans which could not be collected and were undersecured. They dreaded the day of reckoning when a substantial number of their depositors might demand their money. Insurance companies were in the same predicament as far as their investments were concerned and their needs for cash to satisfy their policyholders.

It was the theory of the sponsors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that inasmuch as the backbone of this mighty industrial country was its financial structure the greatest good would be done for all if the Federal Government would get behind and bolster up these great institutions. Thus the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act provided for loans to railroads, banks, and insurance companies alone. While this method had the support of almost all of us at the time, one wonders today whether it would not have been better to take our medicine then rather than to attempt to postpone the collapse.

In July of last year the relief bill was passed and Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans were extended to States and even to counties and municipalities for relief purposes. They were also extended for certain agricultural purposes and to private corporations operating self-liquidating projects. In the first days of the recent session of Congress we authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to acquire preferred stocks in banks, and we have now for consideration before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House a bill to do the same for insurance companies. Note this significant development: First, loans for the sole purpose of giving current assistance to the credit structure of the country; next, loans for relief purposes, a great departure from the original plan; next, the purchase of preferred stock in banks, a definite departure from the loan idea, for it placed the Government in the position of having a capital investment instead of merely a loan. But what was the crowning act? A few days ago, in the Wagner-La Follette-Costigan relief bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was instructed to give—give, mind you, not lend—half a billion dollars to States for relief purposes. It is the first step along the road of the dole, which has brought other proud countries to their knees. Could there be a clearer picture of how popular pressure, ignorant of constitutional principles, is responsible for the distortion of an idea far beyond its proper and original concept. Is this the legitimate offspring of the general-welfare clause of the Constitution?

What, in my opinion, made this last act particularly vicious was the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was used at all. Why use a loan agency to make a gift? Why not face the music and say that inasmuch as the Treasury must pay it ultimately, it should pay it directly? Is it fair to deceive ourselves and the public and talk about balancing the Budget with the assistance of the Economy Act, when a few weeks later we authorize the expenditure in free gifts to the States of a sum greater than the estimated savings in the Economy Act?

Let us see what else we have done in the way of attempting to finance the whole country. In January 1932 we placed 125 millions of additional capital in the Federal land banks on the plea that it would protect the farmers against foreclosure, but resulting, of course, in strengthening the position of the Federal land-bank bonds. We have eight millions in stock in Federal home-loan banks authorized last July, and we are committed to invest in them many times that amount. We have agreed to guarantee the interest on 2 billions of bonds to be used in exchange for farm mortgages and 2 billions of bonds to be exchanged for home mortgages, and we are to pay further millions for stock in the corporations set up by the Government which are to hold these mortgages when exchanged. If these two last bills, which have passed the House, receive final approval, and they will, this Government will be the owner of $4,000,000,000 worth of farm and home mortgages.

What else are we doing today? We have passed a so-called "reforestation bill", which sends young men from the bread lines to work in the woods at a dollar a day. We must in addition feed them, clothe them, house them, and supervise them. The estimated cost of a unit of 250,000 for a year is about $200,000,000. The President is now considering discharging from the Army 12,000 men who are already clothed, living in existing Army camps and drawing only $21 a month, and who when discharged must either get jobs or join the bread lines, and he is also considering retiring 4,000 trained officers who must be given retired pay. In the same breath we decide to send a similar number of men to the reforestation camps at $30 a week and call out 4,500 reserve officers to supervise them, who must, of course, leave their jobs and who have to be paid for their work. Perhaps you might expect that of a Government which passes a farm relief bill providing for a subsidy to the agricultural producer who cuts his acreage and then maintains a fund for the making of crop loans and also maintains financing agencies for the specific purpose of assisting the farmer to grow more crops.

And what did we do in the House a few days ago? We passed the Muscle Shoals bill, by an enormous majority, providing for the development at great cost of additional power in a district which now has more than a million kilowatts of excess, unsalable power and providing also for the manufacture of fertilizer, at a time when fertilizer is dirt-cheap and most private fertilizer companies are trying desperately but vainly to make a profit.

But the end is not yet. Not long ago we were presented with the spectacle of 96 men, called Senators, selected by their States, theoretically at least, from among the best—we saw these men not only debating seriously the 6-hour day, 30-hour week work bill but actually passing it. Please do not misunderstand me. With 15,000,000 men out of work and only a certain amount of work available, I have the deepest sympathy with any reasonable attempt to spread work around, but can anyone contend seriously, even if the operation of such a bill were practical in all our industries—which, of course, is not the case—that we can so torture the commerce clause of the Constitution to uphold a law debarring from interstate commerce certain articles because of the number of hours which may be worked by any individual, not, mind you, on the particular article involved but anywhere in the plant which produces the article? You will say that the unconstitutionality of such a law was settled in the Child Labor case, but there are many who claim to be lawyers who will tell you that a 5-to-4 decision of the Supreme Court is not a precedent, and there also seems to be a large school of thought which makes so bold as to say that if Congress declares a law to be an emergency and puts it into operation for a limited period, in some miraculous way the Constitution ceases to operate with respect to it.

And now for the question of inflation. You all know that the Senate is considering various currency proposals as amendments to the farm relief bill, and that a few days ago it approved a provision authorizing the President to fix from time to time a ratio between gold and silver and allow free coinage of silver on that basis. Can you not see the face of the Great Commoner staring out at us from the mists and can you not hear his ringing words about the "cross of gold"? Are we to turn back the hands of time 35 years?

But this is not enough. We are being asked to give the President authority to issue currency at will up to $3,000,000,000, and this when there is more currency outstanding than at the peak of the 1929 boom. We are also to be asked to authorize him to change at will the gold content of the dollar.

Does it mean nothing that the United States has solemnly covenanted to pay its bondholders in gold of the present standard of weight and fineness? If this is lived up to and the gold content of the dollar is changed, more dollars will be required to pay off these bonds, and the same thing will apply to private obligations containing the gold clause. Will this make things easier for the debtor class or arrest deflation? The only other alternative would be the repudiation by the Government of its obligations and the impairing of the sanctity of contract by governmental action. But if contracts are not to be observed, what becomes of our great industrial system, which is based on contract, and how will the Government be able to sell its bonds in the future if the prospective investor realizes he may be robbed of a portion of his property at the will of his debtor?

The crowning folly is a bill now before the Appropriations Committee, in support of which administration spokesmen have appeared and which actually proposes that the President shall have the right to cancel any Government contract leaving the other party to his redress in damages. Those of you who have tried to recover from the Government know the endless sorrows such a bill would bring.

We seem to be living in a strange new world. The instrumentalities, the very terms, are strange. Within the last few weeks we have passed or are considering bills setting up the following:

- An emergency agricultural adjustment administration.
- A home-owners loan corporation.
- Federal savings and loans associations.
- A Federal emergency relief administration.
- A Tennessee authority.
- A Federal liquidating corporation.
- A civilian conservation corps.
- A general agricultural bureau.
- A dollar-stabilization board.

Is it any wonder that the brain becomes a bit foggy and that we wonder what has become of the good old Government we used to know.

My friends, I have brought you on a long and perhaps a tedious path, but I hope that the various steps have led logically toward the goal. It is apparent that the Federal Government is the influence which looms most menacingly in our lives. It has today enormous interests in the railroads, insurance companies, and banks of the country. It will soon own billions of dollars' worth of mortgages. It wishes to say when and how long we shall work. It regulates us in everything we do, and the worst of it is we voluntarily turn to it for more and still more paternalism. We have embarked on Government regulation and on State capitalism with a vengeance, and State capitalism is a long step toward true socialism.

I have almost finished. I do not believe that it is necessary, even with times as they are, to tread the path we are treading. I believe that there are other solutions which will relieve the situation and which will preserve adequately the basic principles of the Constitution and of our Government, but that is not the province of my talk tonight.

I began this speech by stating that I could not answer the question that I propounded as the subject of my speech. I repeat, who can say where we are headed? The answer is shrouded in the mists of the future. I think I have given you sufficient evidence that we have come far afield from the original ideals of our Government and that this process has been greatly accelerated within the last few years. This acceleration seems to have reached the proportions of an irresistible whirlwind today, and where it will carry us Heaven alone can tell. We can only pray that it will not wreck completely our basic ideals and that the country will emerge from it a finer and greater land than ever.

ACTIVITIES OF THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior over the radio last evening. It was a splendid address on the activities of the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting the address delivered over the radio last evening by Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior. This is the first time, so far as I know, that a Secretary of the Interior has ever delivered over the radio a detailed description of the numerous bureaus and activities of that Department, which extend from the Arctic Circle to the Equator. It is a splendid and exceedingly informative and instructive address.

Having been actively interested in the affairs of the Interior Department for a great many years, I feel that this address should be preserved in the RECORD for the benefit of the public generally. I have always felt that the Interior Department has more human interest, comes nearer to the human side of life, and has a wider variety of interesting activities than any other Department, and for these reasons I am pleased to have the opportunity of inserting it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The address is as follows:

Established by the act of March 3, 1849, the Department of the Interior, comprising within its jurisdiction as it does so many varied and widely divergent activities, is, to my mind, the most interesting division of the Federal Government. From building up a reindeer herd in Alaska to cultivating tomatoes in the Virgin Islands; from supervising the social and business affairs of the approximately 228,000 Indian wards of the United States to keeping touch with the activities of hospitals and schools for the Negroes; from administering the 14,702,205 acres of the national parks and monuments and seeing that they are available at all seasonable times for the enjoyment of the millions of American citizens who visit them each year to passing upon such technical matters as are involved in the administration of the General Land Office, the Geological Survey, and the Reclamation Service, offer a sufficient variety to engage the enthusiastic interest of any man.

So diverse are the activities of the Interior Department and so pressing are the many important questions that are presented daily for decision that one wonders how the Federal Government managed to get along without this Department prior to 1849. Historically, the Department grew out of the General Land Office, which was organized originally as a bureau of the Treasury Department under the act of April 25, 1812. The work of this office had become so burdensome to the Treasury Department that it was turned over to the Interior Department for administration in 1849. This really marks the beginning of the Interior Department, which was intended to be, and still is, the land, home, and educational department of the Government.

The first annual appropriation for the Department of the Interior was $3,584,029.77. The highest appropriation ever made was in 1929 and amounted to $353,332,000, of which $275,950,000 was for pensions and Civil Service retirement, since transferred to the Veterans' Administration. For the fiscal year of 1933 the appropriation was $81,325,484, and for the fiscal year 1934, which begins July 1 next, the appropriation is $55,860,936. However, in conformity with President Roosevelt's economy program, the actual expenditures for the Department for 1934 will be considerably less than the appropriation.

The Department employs, roughly, 15,000 persons, of whom about 2,200 are temporary employees. For reasons that are obvious, let me hasten to add that practically all of these employees are under Civil Service.

But if my listeners have as much difficulty carrying figures in their minds as I have, they will not be interested in having too many dry statistics detailed to them. I take it that, as taxpayers and voters having the fortunately revived interest in our Government that is so wide-spread at this time, they would rather have from me a brief outline of what this Department is responsible for as its share of the administration of the Federal Government.

The functions of the Department, broadly stated, are sociological and scientific. Our primary concern is the protection and enlargement of life and the conservation of natural resources. For the effective administration of the responsibilities entrusted to this Department several bureaus have been established, each specializing in a particular field. A brief review of the activities of these will give an idea of the scope of the work of the Department and demonstrate that it comes closer to the life, happiness, and well-being of the average citizen of the United States than perhaps any of the other great administrative divisions of the Government.

THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

There are more than 300,000,000 acres of unappropriated public lands in the United States proper, of which 49,333,717 acres still remain to be surveyed. This takes no account of the hundreds of millions of acres of public lands which, through the General Land Office, have already passed into the hands of private citizens under the homestead law.

Land is the basis of our civilization. What citizen has not felt the urge of land hunger? It is as common to the lawyer who works in his skyscraper office as to the farmer whose possessive feet sink deep into the loosened soil of the furrow he is plowing. Uninspiring as the term "General Land Office" is, no bureau of the Government has meant more to the citizens of the United States or has made a larger payment in the coin of peace, contentment, and prosperity to thousands upon thousands of our people.

Nor is the General Land Office concerned exclusively with the holding and the development of agricultural, grazing, and forest lands. It is the trustee, representing the whole people of the United States, of the mineral wealth that lies in the bosom of the soil, of the undeveloped and undiscovered oil pools within the public domain, of the water-power sites of enormous financial potentiality.

It may be thought by some that the General Land Office is a matter of local concern to those living on or near what is or has been the public domain. As a matter of fact, the administration of this office profoundly affects the citizens of every State of the Union, even of those States where for years, if ever, there has been no such thing as a public domain. The discovered or potential wealth in or underlying the national domain belongs to all of the people of the United States, and the general economic well-being of the entire country would be adversely affected in a drastic manner if suddenly, through some cataclysm of nature, this vast national wealth should disappear overnight.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

This was established under the act of March 3, 1879. It is concerned with the discovery, appraisal, and development of natural resources, including water power. Its work represents a combination of highly practical and scientific services. Its principal activities are the making of topographic and geological surveys, the gaging of streams, the classification of lands by field examination, the supervision of mineral leasing on public lands, and the investigation of mineral resources in Alaska. It goes without saying that undiscovered or undeveloped mineral wealth is of no benefit to the people. In bringing to light sources of vast mineral wealth so as to permit of its development, the Geological Survey has been of inestimable value to the people. Coldly scientific in its interests and in its approach to its problems, its opinion on any matter within its jurisdiction is recognized everywhere as being the last word.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

This Bureau was established under the act of June 17, 1902. It is charged with the duty of developing the agricultural possibilities of the arid and semiarid regions of the United States. The present total area irrigated from Government works comprises 2,846,607 acres, with a crop value in 1931 of $73,960,377. The total crop value of irrigated-land crops from 1906 to 1931, inclusive, reaches the impressive figure of $1,835,889,877. For the work of this Bureau appropriations are made from the reclamation fund, which is a revolving fund consisting of revenues from public lands and repayments by water users in the reclamation districts. The projects are supposed to be self-liquidating, and nearly all of them are managed by local water-user organizations. The major construction job now being handled by this Bureau is the Colorado River project, which includes Boulder Dam and the All-American Canal. Beginning with the fiscal year of 1931, and up to and including the fiscal year 1934, a total sum of $56,660,000 has been appropriated for this project, which, in the end, exclusive of the all-American canal, will cost a total of approximately $125,000,000, to be repaid by income earned under contracts made with various municipalities that are to enjoy the fruits of the enterprise. The construction contract calls for the completion of the dam within 7 years, and the work is now about 15 months ahead of schedule.

OFFICE OF EDUCATION

This Bureau was originally established as a department under the act of March 2, 1867, and became a part of the Interior Department in 1869. Its functions are research and the dissemination of data on education. Its personnel consists mainly of specialists in the various branches of educational work. It has no administrative functions. It is a scientific bureau intended to collect and furnish accurate information relative to schools, based on careful studies, for the purpose of stimulating those engaged in education throughout the United States to an ever higher standard.

INSTITUTIONS

Howard University, established by the act of March 2, 1867, is an institution of higher education for the colored youth of the Nation in the liberal arts and sciences, in medicine, law, and religion. It is the largest Negro university in the world. The Government, through the Interior Department, contributes to the salaries and general expenses of the university, which, however, is administered independently of this Department.

Freedmen's Hospital, originally under the control of the War Department, was transferred to the Interior Department by the act of June 23, 1874. It provides medical and surgical treatment for negroes.

St. Elizabeths Hospital was established under the act of March 3, 1855, and is a class A institution for the treatment of mental diseases of men in the Army and Navy and of residents of the District of Columbia.

Columbia Institution for the Deaf cares for the deafmutes of the States and Territories and of the District of Columbia. It was established by the act of February 16, 1857.

TERRITORIES

Alaska, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands are among the administrative responsibilities of the Department of the Interior.

The gross area of Alaska, both land and water, is approximately 586,400 square miles, and its population, according to the 1930 census, is 59,278. In area it is roughly equivalent to the combined areas of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, Missouri, and Kansas. Purchased originally from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000 in gold, its minerals alone have been a source of vast wealth to the United States, without taking into account other unexplored and undeveloped mineral riches of probably tremendous proportions. Gold, copper, silver, and minor mineral products have already been produced to the total value of about $650,000,000. In addition the fisheries of Alaska have yielded about $950,000,000. Here we have a total of $1,600,000,000 in round figures—not a bad return on an original investment of a little over $7,000,000.

The United States Government has built and now owns and operates a railroad in Alaska 479 miles in extent. We also own two steamships. One, the North Star, operates between the water terminus of this railroad and Seattle, thus providing for freight and passenger traffic between ports in Alaska and the United States proper and as far north as Point Barrow in the Arctic Circle. The other, the Bozoe, will ply between ports in Alaska, carrying medical supplies, fuel, etc.

Besides fostering important commercial salmon and seal fisheries already referred to, a comparatively new Government enterprise in Alaska has been the development of a reindeer herd for the benefit of the natives. This herd is now estimated at 800,000 head.

Hawaii, while technically within the jurisdiction of this Department, is practically self-supporting, and except for the appointment of a governor by the President, is in effect independent, administratively, of the Federal Government.

The Virgin Islands, originally purchased from Denmark, were transferred to the Interior Department from the Navy Department in 1931. The Department has purchased land in the islands for homesteading and is engaged in readjusting families on the land in the Island of St. Croix. Our chief concerns are to make these islands economically self-sufficient, to raise the standard of living, and to improve the system of education. Serious problems are presented here but we are hopefully trying to solve them.

Varied and interesting are the component parts of the Department of the Interior already enumerated. We come now to two bureaus which are more appealing to the imaginations of a greater number of people than any of the other activities within our jurisdiction. I refer, of course, to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the National Park Service.

What boy has not felt repeated thrills as he has listened to tales of the original Americans or read the pages of such a book as The Last of the Mohicans? Generally speaking, we have been taught to regard the Indian either as a highly romantic, noble figure or as a cunning and revengeful savage. We have not, at any rate until recently, looked upon him as a fellow human being. Because his habits and customs and religion have been different from ours, because he has spoken a different language, because he has preferred to live his own life and develop his own culture we have put him outside the pale. As the dominant race, we have pressed him ever backward, ruthlessly and greedily taking from him his fertile soil and his rich resources.

Now the Indians are herded in reservations located in widely separated parts of the country. They are wards of the Government and until a new and more humane concept of our duties and responsibilities began to dawn on us not many years ago, we resolutely kept them outside our consciousness except when we saw them dancing and performing, always in roles inferior to the white man, in our wild-west shows. It was no concern of ours if they lived in squalor and ignorance, restricted to inhospitable areas whittled out of a vast domain that until the coming of the white man was theirs by immemorial right of possession. If they were cold and hungry and diseased it was their own fault. We did not know about the under-feeding, to the very point of starvation, of their children. We did not want to know. Why should our smug self-satisfaction be disturbed?

But gradually a different and more humane attitude has been adopted by the Government toward the Indians. Slowly, perhaps even grudgingly, we have come to admit that we have a moral responsibility that we can no longer evade. We have discovered to our surprise that the Indian is not only a human being but, if given a chance, a likable and interesting human being. We have found out that there is something of value in the culture of the American Indians. We know now that in the Southwest, notably in New Mexico and Arizona, are well-developed civilizations that go back to a time centuries before the white man ever set foot on American soil. We can even see a value—a dollars-and-cents value—in fostering the arts of the Indians which we have come to appreciate. Men boast of Indian blood in their veins. Women of culture and artistic perceptions in our eastern cities are proud of the fine rugs and other Indian artifacts in their homes. They wear artistic jewelry fashioned out of Mexican pesos and raw turquoise by the skillful hand of the Navajo silversmith working with only the crude implements of hammer and anvil. American artists of the first rank flock to the Southwest to paint colorful pictures of native Indian life and native Indian pueblos which we buy at large prices proudly to display on our walls.

We can even see something worth while in the age-old ceremonials of the Indians. By the thousands tourists flock into the desert spaces of New Mexico and Arizona to see the buffalo dance, the corn dance, the shaliko, and that most sensational of all native ceremonies, the snake dance.

The policy of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is to help the Indian to help himself. We want to protect him in his property rights. We want to prevent further ruthless exploitation. We want to encourage him to live his own life in his own way. We want the white neighbors of these original Americans to learn to respect their religions and their ceremonies. We want the Indians themselves to rebuild and develop their own cultural life. Our policy is to encourage both races to live together in mutual tolerance and understanding.

The national parks and monuments are among the most cherished possessions of the people, and the National Park Service which operates them is outstanding as an efficient and understanding agency of the Government.

Until recent years practically all of the national parks were in the West, where natural phenomena and areas of rare beauty and charm insistently called for preservation for all time to come. But so great a want were these western parks found to fill that the Government decided to develop a park system in the East, so that we now have or are about to have the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia, Isle Royale in Michigan, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in Tennessee and North Carolina, the Morristown National Park in New Jersey, which will be dedicated to the United States Government on July 4, and the Acadia National Park in Maine. In addition to these great playgrounds the historic Mammoth Cave in Kentucky will soon be the property of the United States.

In acquiring and developing these parks and monuments the Federal Government has been generously assisted by some of the States and by citizens either acting individually or in association with each other. The State of Virginia by appropriating $1,000,000 and raising an additional $1,000,000 by popular subscription, including $50,000 given by Mr. Edsel Ford and $200,000 by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has acquired the land for the Shenandoah National Park, which will be turned over to the United States Government as soon as a few remaining technical questions of title have been solved. The States of Tennessee and North Carolina have opened their purses to acquire that wonderful and mysterious section of wooded heights now known as the "Great Smoky Mountains National Park." In buying this area these two States have also leaned heavily upon the generosity of Mr. Rockefeller, who has put into the enterprise $5,000,000, matching an equal amount paid by the two States mentioned.

An organization of patriotic women under the leadership of Mrs. Josephine Rust, and encouraged by a gift of $113,000 from Mr. Rockefeller, is responsible for the rebuilding and development of Wakefield, the birthplace of George Washington, and its dedication as a national monument to the Federal Government. Citizens of New Jersey, inspired by an offer of $300,000 by Mr. Lloyd Smith, of New York, have contributed to the purchase of the Morristown National Park.

Stephen T. Mather, of Chicago, in whose honor a memorial tablet will be dedicated at Bear Mountain in the Palisades Park on May 27, was the man who dreamed a dream of what the national parks ought to mean to the people. It was he, who, as director of the National Park Service, had the foresight to lay, deep and wide, the foundations upon which we have been building ever since. Out of his comparatively modest fortune he contributed, while in the Government service, several hundred thousand dollars to the development of the parks and the upbuilding of the Park Service. William Kent, at one time also a citizen of Chicago, and later a resident of, and Congressman from, the State of California, bought and dedicated Muir Woods to the National Government, thereby saving a fine grove of the great redwood trees, which, but for his intervention, would long ago have succumbed to the woodsman's ax.

But the one man who has done most to help us realize the ideals that Stephen T. Mather and Horace Albright, his successor in the service, have had with respect to our national parks is Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Unostentatiously, but with rare imagination and unmatched liberality, he has already actually given some $10,000,000 for our national parks and monuments, and before he shall have reached the end of his rainbow his generosity will be expressed in the startling figures of approximately $25,000,000, poured out in order that our children may have preserved for their enjoyment and inspiration those glorious areas of trees and wild flowers, of beautiful lakes and limpid streams, of towering mountains and expansive meadows, where vast herds of native animals graze, secure from the huntsman.

I have already enumerated some of the items that go to make up this total. Another of Mr. Rockefeller's gifts was that of $1,500,000 to enlarge the Teton National Park in Wyoming. When the great sugar-pine forest which is now part of the Yosemite was threatened with destruction he found $1,650,000 to save it. He is spending $4,000,000 for a system of highways in Acadia National Park in Maine and land in the park itself he has already given of the probable present value of $500,000. Special mention should also be made of the additional $7,000,000 already expended toward his brilliantly conceived restoration of Williamsburg, Va.

Generosity this, which stirs our sentiments and appeals to our imagination, poured out on national projects which likewise stir our sentiments and appeal to our imagination. Where else in the world can such an investment in a dream be matched? Individuals and States have joined with the United States to preserve such wonders of nature as are so lavishly displayed in Yellowstone Park. Magnificent specimens of the oldest living things in the world, the giant Sequoias, happily preserved from being turned into shingles and posts, will continue to stand sentinel over the coming and going of countless generations of men. Snow-covered peaks will forever tower in their majesty in Glacier and Rocky Mountain and Mount Rainier Parks for the inspiration of mankind.

A generous and noble heritage this to pass on to our children. A heritage made possible by the vision and generosity of men.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would couple that with the request that the gentleman from Washington may address the House for 5 minutes immediately following the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I objected this morning because I was afraid the gentleman from New York was going to make some adverse criticism of the soldiers from our districts who are coming to Washington. The gentleman since then has assured me that he had no such intention. He was only to warn them, he said, against certain communistic leaders in Washington. Therefore I withdraw any objection.

Mr. GREEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know if the gentleman from New York is going to rehash the deplorable Scottsboro case in Alabama? If not, I have no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in regard to keeping a quorum here tomorrow, if every Member who speaks will remain we will have a quorum. The trouble is that as soon as a speaker makes his speech he leaves the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Washington 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I assure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that I do not intend to make any reflections on those veterans who have been invited here from congressional districts, the 20 veterans from each congressional district, to participate in this so-called "convention" next week. I am one of those who believe that 98 percent of the veterans of the United States are loyal and patriotic and can be depended upon at all times. [Applause.]

The veterans in the United States, however, were shocked a few days ago when they read in the newspapers an announcement, issued from the White House, by the Veterans' National Liaison Committee, with the approval of Colonel Howe, the Secretary of the President, that a convention was to be called here in Washington by this group between May 12 and May 18, and that, with the consent and cooperation of the President and of the administration, these veterans would be housed and fed at Government expense, if necessary. The great veterans' organizations in America, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, feel that they have been betrayed because they know that the Veterans' National Liaison Committee is inspired and led by Communists and has been repudiated by all veteran organizations incorporated under the laws of Congress.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield; I am sorry. I should like to, but I cannot.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wonder if the gentleman is speaking as the official representative of these organizations.

Mr. FISH. I have spoken with the national legislative representatives of all of those organizations, and after having read their own statements to the press, I understand that all of them were requested by the White House to use their influence with their members to prevent a bonus march on Washington, and that they all did cooperate to the fullest extent. Naturally they are disgusted at the action of the White House in recognizing a red organization sponsored by Communists and securing time over the Columbia Broadcasting System to summon veterans to Washington. Those organizations are opposed to holding this convention in Washington, because they know that those who have inspired it, who have organized it, who have led it and are still leading it, are mostly Communists or affiliated with Communist activities. Mr. Newlin, the national adjutant of the Bonus Expeditionary Forces, from Pittsburgh, went to the White House a few days ago and explained to Colonel Howe that one of the leaders, Emanuel Levin, was a Communist. The secretary said, "How do you know that he is a Communist, and how do we know anything about you?" I take this opportunity to place before you the record of Emanuel Levin, one of the active members of this committee and also the head of the Workers Ex-Service Men's League, an out-and-out Communist organization, and a former editor of the Daily Worker, the official organ of the Communist Party.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have not the time. I cannot yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Then I shall make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FISH. Very well; I yield for a brief question.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Levin is not a veteran of the World War, and he would not be in a position to have anything to say if they have a convention here.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Levin is an active and leading member of the National Veterans' Liaison Committee. He has been up to the White House several times himself, and was there this morning, and Mr. Newlin informed the press that when he told them Levin was a Communist he was told that they did not know he was a Communist.

Mr. PATMAN. He cannot participate in the convention.

Mr. FISH. The record shows that this man, Emanuel Levin, who still is a leader of the Veterans' National Liaison Committee, and recognized as such at the White House, is not a veteran. He was asked by Mr. MILLIGAN at a hearing before the Joint Congressional Committee on Veterans' Affairs, held on February 2, 1933:

Are you a veteran of the World War?

He replied:

I am not a World War veteran. I served in the United States Marine Corps.

Mr. MILLIGAN. During peace times?

Mr. LEVIN. During peace times.

Later on Mr. Chipfield asked him:

I should like to ask you this question: Are you connected with the Communist group? I am not asking whether you are a member of the Communist Party.

Mr. LEVIN. It is a matter of record. I am a member of the Communist Party.

He is one of the main leaders, if not the actual leader, of the Veterans' National Liaison Committee, on which are also James W. Ford, a Negro, who was the Communist Vice-Presidential candidate in the last election. On that committee also is a man named Harold Hickerson, whom I do not know, but who is an influential Communist, according to Robert Dessoff, the national legislative representative of the B.E.F., who was a member of the liaison committee, but resigned because of its Communist propaganda, activities, and affiliations. Then there is Alfred Sellers, one of the few men who was actually connected with the B.E.F., and who, I am informed, signs his letters "Yours for the revolution." These are some of the leaders of the committee that organized the V.E.F. convention that has been called here in Washington, practically with the consent and approval of the administration.

I rose for the specific purpose of calling attention to the record of these men, so that your people back home, your veterans, who want the bonus, and who have a right to ask for it, will not come here without knowing the facts that the proposed V.E.F. convention has been organized, inspired, and led by Communists.

Mr. KVALE rose.

Mr. FISH. Of course I will say to my friend from Minnesota that there are one or two members on that committee whom the gentleman knows who probably are not Communists. So far as I know, I have no record that they are Communists, but the majority of this liaison committee, which has organized the convention in Washington, are out-and-out Communists. I am not rising here to inject politics into this discussion or to impeach the White House. The White House evidently does not know the facts. They said so themselves, that they did not know that Levin is a Communist, but I presume when they find out the facts—as Al Smith says, "Let us look at the record"—when they find out the record of these members of the committee, and that a majority of them are Communists or affiliated with Communist activities, I hope the White House will repudiate this convention, and I hope it will do so tomorrow morning, because the record is undeniable, so far as a majority of the members of the Veterans' National Liaison Committee are concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If these soldiers were able to take care of themselves on the battlefronts of France, do you not think that when they come here they will be able to properly manage a bunch of Communists? They are not going to let these Communists control them.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman asks me that question, and I am glad to answer it.

I think that is exactly what will happen. I believe the members of the old B.E.F., 95 percent of whom were loyal American citizens and will not tolerate communism, when they come here of their own accord and find that this V.E.F. convention is led and controlled by Communists, of course there will be trouble in the city of Washington. The B.E.F. veterans have a right to be incensed as no quarters or food have been provided for them whereas the Communists are to be taken care of.

Mr. BLANTON. They will put them in the Anacostia River. The 20 soldiers who will come here from my district will be the kind who will put the fear of God in the hearts of all Communists.

Mr. FISH. They will try to, but that is another matter. I am only rising to present the facts to the Congress about this particular convention and what will happen if the administration's plans are carried out. What the B.E.F., the Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, or the Disabled American Veterans are going to do I do not know, but I do know that the members of the Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the D.A.V. believe that they have been betrayed. They believe that they have been thrown over and cast aside in favor of a group that everyone knows except the White House is led by Communists. If you are going to invite any conventions of veterans to Washington, why not extend invitations through the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the D.A.V., and the B.E.F., all of whom stand for American institutions and our Republican form of government. That is why they have a right to believe that they have been repudiated and betrayed, and I hope the administration, as soon as it finds out the facts and finds from the record that most of the leaders of the Veterans' National Liaison Committee are Communists, will reconsider their consent and their cooperation to feed and provide quarters for an organization that is not here to get the bonus, but an organization that will try to gather in all of the elements of the veterans which they can, for their own revolutionary purposes, in order to build up the Communist Party. That is the object of the meeting, and we in Congress do not want to have any part in it, and the administration, whether Democratic or Republican, should not have any part in it either. If it does it will be a serious blunder and will help to promote the spread of communism among the veterans. It would be a travesty and a disgrace if American veterans are compelled to seek quarters and food from Communists who are preaching the overthrow of the Government.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Is the gentleman willing to except from that indictment the two members of the committee that I spoke to him about, namely, Mr. Brady and Mr. Williams, both of whom have been performing unselfish and thoroughly devoted tasks in behalf of their comrades?

Mr. FISH. I am, because I know nothing against them except that they are radically inclined; and, of course, they know they are associating with Communists, and that the Communists are in control of the liaison committee. That is the only thing I know against them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, it is with some degree of trepidation and some reluctance that I trespass upon the time of the House at this hour of the day. However, I have laid upon the Clerk's desk today a resolution about which I desire to make some small explanation.

This resolution, in substance and effect, which I offer upon my own responsibility and ask the consideration of this House, is a resolution that provides for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in substance and effect, authorizing the Congress to limit the wealth of individual citizens; provided, however, that at no time shall the amount be fixed below the minimum fixed in the amendment, namely, $1,000,000 per person.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; I yield, but I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman meant maximum, did he not?

Mr. LLOYD. Minimum. For almost 60 days we have been in session; and while we have tried to do much, and I believe so far as the good of the country is concerned, we have done much—

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LLOYD. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. I wanted to ascertain whether or not the millionaires were walking out while the gentleman is making his address.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LLOYD. For almost 60 days we have sat in extraordinary session, and my judgment is that all too little legislation of a permanently constructive character has been enacted or even planned, or is now contemplated.

Palliatives, to be sure, have been applied. We have subsidized the farmer and charged the cost to labor, and we are attempting to subsidize labor and propose to let the farmer pay the bill. We have inflated the currency without profit if the major portion of that inflated medium shall find its way into the hands of those who already possess an overabundance.

This resolution proposes that once and for all we shall lay the ax of legislative enactment at the tap root of the evil; that we shall cease to equivocate and bravely face a condition, not of our choosing, that has been the natural and inevitable result of a progressive civilization, and in the interest of the future of all of our people, place a definite limitation on the acquisition and ownership of wealth.

I could point out in logical sequence the causes that have brought about our present conditions, but even the effort is foreshadowed by futility since the fact remains that the vastly major proportion of our national wealth is enjoyed by a startlingly small number of our people. There is no thinking man in our Nation but who knows that the only reason there is a widespread poverty is that wealth and the ownership of wealth has become centralized—the only reason many men are too poor is because a few men are too rich.

In a country like ours, blessed with an abundance of all that the needs of men require, poverty among those who are willing to work should be an accident rather than a universal habit, and a system of government that makes widespread poverty possible is neither just nor economically sound.

I do not seek to destroy wealth or industry, but I do purpose to place the burden of public expense and national development upon the shoulders of those best able to bear that burden and those who have profited most. I would have the strong help the weak rather than have the weak forever carrying the strong. I would have fewer billionaires and more millionaires, and more opportunity for every man to acquire a little fortune. I purpose in the main to bring up the poor and bring down the rich into the class of the average man, where all may find real happiness and where we may know a widespread national prosperity.

I recognize in this proposed amendment the right of every man to strive for gain, within reasonable limits, not inconsistent with the rights of every other man, and recognize, too, the oft-proven fact that no tyranny is more cruel than the tyranny of a temporary majority. So I have deemed it wise to place a limit beyond which Congress may not go in equalizing fortunes that will insure to every man the exercise of the maximum amount of initiative.

I am not insensible to the fact that this portends a radical departure from preconceived concepts of the rights of property, but I recognize that a condition has grown upon us that the founders of this Government could not have foreseen. I am committed to the doctrine that it is the natural and inalienable right of every man to own and control the property that he may earn or create, but I recognize the fact that not only the happiness of our people but the entire future of the capitalistic system is dependent upon its submission to reasonable regulations and restraints.

Unusual times may demand unusual measures, but the test by which every policy of legislation must be judged is the test of whether it be in itself constructive or destructive. Even though it be new and untried, if it promises a constructive program that will rebuild our industry and reestablish our people, it is worthy of consideration by those whose duty it may become to find a way out of the fog of discontent and uncertainty and fear that now surrounds us. New conditions always have required and will always require new thoughts and new inventions, and new ills will require new remedies.

The world is moving on flying wheels and speeding wings into an unexplored future, and men of faith and vision must be found to guide the way. May we have the faith and vision of those brave men whose brains conceived a free and happy people in the Nation that was to be, and may we meet our problems with the same directness of purpose that guided them. [Applause.]

The House joint resolution is as follows:

House Joint Resolution 178

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Congress shall have power to limit the wealth of the individual citizens of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and of all persons owning property within the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 2. No law shall be enacted fixing the maximum amount of wealth allowed to any one individual at a sum less in value than 1,000,000 gold dollars, 25½ grains, nine tenths fine.

"SEC. 3. The power of levying and collecting taxes for revenue under the existing articles of the Constitution and the amendments thereto shall be in no wise abridged.

"SEC. 4. All sections of the Constitution of the United States inconsistent herewith are suspended for the purpose of carrying this article into effect.

"SEC. 5. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment of the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by Congress."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SO-CALLED "BONUS MARCHERS"

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not favor a march on Washington by veterans of the World War. I am not in sympathy with it. Those who are encouraging it no doubt believe it will be helpful, but I believe it is calculated to be harmful to their cause. It is my understanding that a convention and not a march is proposed. Probably the present administration is facing a condition rather than a theory. The last administration had in the Capital City a large number of veterans of the World War; and if the administration had handled the situation more diplomatically, I believe those veterans would have left here in 10 days and there never would have been the least trouble in the world.

CONDITION AND NOT A THEORY

The present administration is facing a situation about which some of the Members of this House do not know. The administration is handling it in a way that will be satisfactory to the Congress and to the country. Less harmful results will develop than would otherwise develop.

I think the administration is to be commended for its efforts rather than condemned. I assure the Members of this House that what I know about the situation is that no one connected with the administration—and I am not speaking for the administration, I have no right to, but I am just giving you the benefit of my limited knowledge on the subject—is in sympathy with a march on Washington by the veterans of the World War or by any other group. On the other hand, I believe the administration recognizes that they should not be discouraged from peacefully assembling and presenting their views.

THIS IS A FREE COUNTRY

It is true the veterans believe they have the right to come here, and they do have a right to come here. The so-called "Economy Act" has caused many of them to have a grievance. They believe the payment of the adjusted-service certificates will help the country. They have a right to be in Washington. They have a right to be in New York City. They have a right to be any place in the United States. This is a free country, and no one should attempt to deny them this right. But I do believe they are exercising poor judgment in attempting to enforce their views and their judgment by a march on Washington. There is a difference in having a convention in Washington, or veterans coming to Washington, and a march on Washington.

NO REFLECTION ON VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

I do not believe it is a reflection on the disabled American veterans or the Veterans of Foreign Wars or the American Legion for the reason that they will have a right to participate in the convention the same as veterans who do not belong to any organization. If I understand the plan correctly, it is to prevent, to prohibit, the very thing the gentleman from New York complained about. He said he was apprehensive that these veterans were going to be led by Communists. If they do come here unorganized, without any program, without any means of support, without any food, or without any shelter, do you not think a worse condition is created and more harm done to the cause of the veterans, most of them coming from just a few cities, than if a plan is worked out whereby a few will come from each congressional district in the United States? In other words, instead of having 10,000 come here from a few large cities, Communists—I mean a large number of them Communists; I do not mean to say that all of them are Communists. I think very few of them are, very few. Practically all of them are good, loyal, patriotic American citizens. Many of them have spilled their blood upon foreign soil for this country. They are entitled to be heard.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield for a question.

TWO GROUPS ASSEMBLING

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish to make a statement, not ask a question. There are two different groups coming here. One is purely a Communistic organization, as the gentleman from New York City said. I have the literature in my office if the gentleman wants to see it.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not doubt but what there are a large number of Communists coming here. I regret this exceedingly. But I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the veterans of the World War are not going to be misled or deceived by a few Communists. They were not the last time and they are not going to be this time. I know the last time they were here it was said the Communists had control, but instead of their encouraging communism, they were an answer to communism. They kept the Communists under control.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. They conducted themselves in a very commendable manner.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that the B.E.F., who were here last year and who conducted themselves in a satisfactory way, are opposed to this whole convention being held here?

Mr. PATMAN. It is not my understanding that they are. Albert G. Sellers, one of the three incorporators and national treasurer of the B.E.F., as I understand, is behind this movement and is one of the leading officials in the National Liaison Committee which the gentleman says has been conferring with the White House. Three of the other four members of the committee, I understand, are former members of the B.E.F. I understand the chairman of the committee, George D. Brody, enlisted a few hours after war was declared, April 6, 1917, and was in five major engagements in France.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman understands that Waters, Carter, Newlin, Dessop, and Thomas and practically all the other leaders are very much against it.

Mr. PATMAN. I understand they are very much divided on it, but the gentleman must realize we are facing a condition we must deal with in the best possible manner, and I may say that if the last administration had left it to General Glassford to handle in the human, diplomatic way that he has always handled every situation I ever knew about, they would never have had any trouble; and if the veterans want to come here, and they are coming here, I insist that it is much better for them to come as good veterans from all sections of the country, from every congressional district, if you please, and be permitted to assemble here peacefully and present their views to Congress and to congressional committees, say their pieces—in other words, get it out of their system—and tell the country what they want and what should be given to them, and then peaceably go back home—I much prefer this to a large number coming here from a few large cities, and a large number of them would be Communists. I will listen to them and give consideration to their views, and I believe all the other Members of Congress will consider any petition they may present.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. It is reported in the papers that Colonel Howe said they would be fed by the Federal Government. Can the gentleman give us any information about that or tell us what right any man has to say that the Federal Government will appropriate money to feed any aggregation of citizens that comes to Washington?

Mr. PATMAN. The information I have is from a statement given out, it is said, from the White House, although not by the White House, that last year there was appropriated by this Government $40,000 to entertain veterans of the World War from France. There remains an unexpended balance in this fund, and as I understand, it has been suggested that the portion of that fund which remains unexpended, and which was to be used to entertain World War veterans from France, be used, if necessary, to shelter and feed those who attend this convention and who do not have any means of support and cannot otherwise provide accommodations for themselves.

Mr. SNELL. But no one has any right to promise that for Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I do this in order to tell the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], and I am sure he will be glad to have the correction, that the authorship of the statement to which he refers is with that Veterans' Committee and not with the White House.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for making my statement plain.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CROWE, for the week, on account of urgent business.

To Mr. BEITER, for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. ZIONCHECK, for 2 days, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 8, 1933.

Hon. H. T. RAINY,

Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I wish to tender my resignation from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, to take effect at once.

Yours very truly,

A. C. WILFORD, Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will not be here tomorrow, and, therefore, appoints the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] as Speaker pro tempore.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 48. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.;

H.R. 1596. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C.;

H.R. 4127. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Waccamaw River near Conway, S.C.; and

H.R. 4491. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of an overhead viaduct across the Mahoning River at Struthers, Mahoning County, Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83 to the said bill.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4589) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TABER, and Mr. BACON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5480) to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. LEA of California, Mr. PARKER of New York, and Mr. MAPES were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5081) to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. McSWAIN, Mr. HILL of Alabama, and Mr. JAMES were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 18) authorizing the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of H.R. 3835, to strike out the word "basic" where it appears in subsection (3) of section 8, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H.R. 48. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.;

H.R. 1596. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C.;

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of claims, amounting to $13,569.10, allowed by the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement under appropriations the balances of which have been carried to the surplus fund of the Treasury (for the service of the Navy Department), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation pertaining to the legislative establishment under the Architect of the Capitol, fiscal year 1933, in the sum of $5,000, for maintenance of the Senate Office Building, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation pertaining to the legislative establishment, United States Senate, fiscal year 1933, in the sum of $20,000 (for miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, contingent expenses of the Senate), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AWARDS OF THE MIXED AND THE TRIPARTITE CLAIMS COMMISSIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 for the purpose of extending for one additional year from March 10, 1933, the time within which American nationals who have obtained awards from the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, or from the Tripartite Claims Commission, United States, Austria, and Hungary, may make application to the Treasury for the payment of such awards, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman and secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report covering the operations of the Corporation for the first quarter of 1933, January 1 to March 31, 1933, inclusive, and for the period from the organization of the corporation on February 2, 1932, to March 31, 1933, inclusive, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REVISION OF ACCOUNTING METHODS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 350, Seventy-second Congress, a report relative to the savings that may be effected through the reorganization, centralization, consolidation, and/or elimination of accounting records, accounting and audit procedures, disbursing and collecting offices, and purchasing and warehousing activities of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Assembly Joint Resolution 4, relative to memorializing Congress to enact the Ludlow unemployment bill

Whereas there is pending in Congress the Ludlow unemployment bill, H.R. 5317, calling for the creation of a Federal industrial commission to aid in the stabilization of employment in industry, agriculture, and commerce, with a view to formulating such plans and recommending such legislation as will enable employees to obtain a saving wage and investors a reasonable dividend; and

Whereas the prevention of recurrent periods of industrial prostration and unemployment is the greatest problem of our age; and

Whereas this Nation is experiencing a period of industrial, agricultural, and financial stress with over 5,000,000 willing workers unemployed; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States of America be hereby memorialized and earnestly urged to enact said bill, and the President and Vice President be likewise memorialized and urged to support said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be, and is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Senators and Representatives of California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas section 41 of the organic act, being "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii", now, in effect, provides that the legislature shall meet on the third Wednesday in February of every odd-numbered year; and

Whereas tax returns are not made until the month of March of each year and as a consequence the income of the Territory and its various subdivisions is not ascertainable with any degree of certainty until such returns are made, and by reason of such fact the legislature of the Territory is not in the time given the data necessary to balance the budget of the Territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That Congress be requested to amend section 41 of the Organic Act of Hawaii to the end that regular sessions of the legislature be held in Honolulu on the third Wednesday in March in every odd-numbered year; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, April 24, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on April 24, 1933.

HERBERT N. AHUNA,
Speaker House of Representatives.
JAS. S. ACHONG,
Assistant Clerk House of Representatives.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, April 24, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted in the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on April 21, 1933.

GEO. P. COOKE,
President of the Senate.
ELLEN D. SMYTH,
Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of South Carolina, transmitting a petition signed by every member of the House of Representatives of South Carolina, excepting two, recommending the appointment of William Pierce Drennon, an orphan, of Abbeville County, S.C., as a page in the Senate or House of Representatives, or to some other position, which, with the accompanying petition, was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Veterans' Postal Employees' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of legislation permitting the optional retirement rather than the compulsory retirement of Federal employees who have completed 30 years' service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States, Department of New Jersey, protesting against the weakening of the national defense, and particularly against any reduction in the number of officers of the Regular Army or in the amount of training given to reserve officers, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Dr. Fayette C. Ewing, of Alexandria, La., praying for continuance of the investigation by the Special Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures of the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the publisher of the Long Island Daily Press, of Jamaica, N.Y., enclosing a book prepared by D. E. McAvoy, chairman of the Long Island Division of the Home Mortgage Advisory Board, containing amendments suggested by that division to the so-called "home owners' mortgage bill", which, with the accompanying pamphlet and newspaper clippings, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the League of Catholic Women of Detroit, Mich., protesting against the persecution of Roman Catholics in Mexico and Spain, and favoring the making of representations, consistent with the comity existing among nations, to the Governments of Spain and Mexico in the premises, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial and three letters in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate several letters in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from John D. Ewing, president the Ewing newspapers, of Louisiana, transmitting an editorial from the New Orleans States, in its issue of Sunday, May 7, 1933, entitled "The Price Louisiana is Paying for Longism", which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a letter, in the nature of a memorial, from the San Antonio Manufacturers' Association, signed by its secretary, of San Antonio, Tex., remonstrating against the exemption of imports from the operations of 30-hour-week work legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of "The Free-the-Scottsboro-Boys Marchers", proposed by the League of Struggle-for-Negro Rights and endorsed by the National Scottsboro Action Committee, praying that no discrimination be practiced in the exercise of civil rights by reason of race, nationality, or color, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the city government of Chelsea, Mass., protesting against the closing of the United States Naval Hospital located in Chelsea, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States, favoring necessary governmental action to feed, clothe, and house innocent and helpless victims of the economic collapse, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the League of Catholic Women of Detroit, Mich., felicitating the President of the United States on his selection of Hon. Frank Murphy, former mayor of Detroit, Mich., as Governor General of the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, favoring the immediate federalization of all of the Gulf Coast Highway and the allocation of funds to Florida for the construction of such highway, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. TRAMMELL on the 8th instant, p. 2965, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

INVESTIGATION OF BANKING IRREGULARITIES

Mr. WHEELER presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures, as follows:

TARKIO, MONT., March 8, 1933.

Senator BURTON K. WHEELER,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: We, the citizens of the United States, do hereby petition Congress, through your honor, to thoroughly investigate, prosecute, and convict to the fullest extent of the law, if found guilty, the large banking institutions of New York City and elsewhere in the United States, and especially the Morgan Banking Co., New York City, N.Y.; National City Bank, New York City.

REGIONAL OFFICES OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint Resolution 45

Joint resolution requesting Congress to maintain the regional offices of the United States Veterans' Administration

Whereas the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States now has before it a bill providing for the closing of the regional office of the Veterans' Administration at Charlotte and the regional offices in other sections of the country and recentralizing in Washington the handling of all claims of veterans, which means the sending of over 2,000,000 pending cases to Washington and the discharge of over 6,000 employees; and

Whereas humanity and mercy demand that these cases be handled in the field and the transfer to Washington will result in endless trouble, uncertainty, and delay; and

Whereas 17,459 citizens of North Carolina are now drawing compensation under the laws relating to veterans, all but 5,579 of these being for disability directly connected with war service, and have a very vital interest in the maintenance of the present efficient field service afforded through the regional office at Charlotte; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact into law some measure that will provide for the maintenance of the regional office of the United States Veterans' Administration at Charlotte and all of the other regional offices in the country.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of North Carolina with the request that they seek by appropriate legislation to secure the maintenance of these regional offices.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in force from and after its ratification.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Stacey W. Wade, secretary of state of the State of North Carolina, do hereby certify the foregoing and attached one sheet to be a true copy from the records of this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done in office at Raleigh this 28th day of April A.D. 1933.

Secretary of State.

EMPLOYMENT STABILIZATION AND ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred suggestions for a plan for employment stabilization and economic recovery by William G. Roylance. I should like to state that Mr. Roylance was at one time a professor of history and political science at the University of Utah, and that I was one of his students. It is with pleasure that I offer his suggestions to the RECORD readers.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUGGESTIONS FOR A PLAN FOR EMPLOYMENT STABILIZATION AND ECONOMIC RECOVERY

1. Ascertain, list, and classify all unemployed.
2. Establish and maintain a national employment service, through which all employment opportunities may always be known and which can place applicants according to their fitness, preference, and locality.
3. Place all unemployed persons who are able and willing to work, and who need to work for a living, immediately on the public pay roll and pay them wages or salaries according to their several occupations.
4. Establish a minimum wage, which shall be based: (1) On the minimum efficiency and comfort needs of the average family; (2) on the total wage-paying capacity of industry, operating at its ready maximum; (3) on the volume of wage distribution estimated to be necessary to support maximum production.
5. Establish a maximum working time, based on the estimated total man power needed for maximum production.
6. Adjust the minimum wage according to variations in the indexes of retail and wholesale prices, raising the minimum when retail prices fall below a given level and lowering it when wholesale prices rise above a given level.
7. Similarly, adjust the working time in accordance with the index of employment.
8. Make permanent provision for employment on public works, or in public services, of all persons able and willing to work who are not provided for in private industries. Among the activities in which the persons on the public pay roll could be employed are the following:

Making the proposed surveys and operating the proposed employment service. Providing occupational schools for those who are unassigned and conducting and teaching in such schools. Enlarging and improving needed public services. Improving public parks and playgrounds. Reafforestation. Flood control. River and harbor improvement. Highways. Elimination of slums. Building hospitals.

9. Methods of financing: The following methods for financing this plan are given in order of preference:

(1) By direct issues of currency, (2) by bank borrowing, and (3) by issuing bonds.

If the first method is employed, the cost to the Government will be nothing. It would continue to disburse money in wages and salaries, fees, payments to contractors, etc., so long as any persons remained on the stabilization pay roll and so long as prices did not rise above a given level. If bond issues are resorted to, the rates should be extremely low and interest and principal should be paid out of profits resulting from reflation and stabilization. Credit interests and wage and salary earners—in fact, all consumers—would be automatically taxed as a result of reflation.

In any case the issuance and control of money should be taken entirely out of the hands of the banks, and made an exclusive public function. The State could and should pay most, if not all, of its costs out of the profits that would accrue from the issuance and control of money. Banks should (1) act as custodians of the money of their depositors, charging a reasonable fee on deposits subject to check or to withdrawal without notice; and (2) loan only time deposits, and these only for the period indicated.

10. If this plan were put into effect immediately, it would not cost the Government anything, and no burden would be imposed on any private interest. In fact, all would gain from its operation. Everything would be paid for, with a handsome margin over, out of production that will otherwise not be realized. The margin between the estimated total output of industry last year and the estimated ready productive capacity of industry is at least $90,000,000,000, expressed in dollars of 1926 wholesale all-commodity purchasing power. It is hardly likely that in the absence of employment and wage stabilization, production can be restored even to the 1929 level for several years to come. If all classes of workers are included, there are probably no fewer than 15,000,000 unemployed at the present time. The output per worker in all industry in 1932 was probably about $2,660. At this rate, the 15,000,000 who are now unemployed would produce approximately $40,000,000,000. If 60 percent of this were paid out as wages and salaries, there would be $16,000,000,000 left for employers and investors. If as many as 5,000,000 should have to be employed in public activities, in order to keep the entire 15,000,000 on the pay rolls, the cost of the public works would be $13,000,000,000 annually. This would leave $3,000,000,000 for employing and investing interests, even if they were taxed with the entire cost of the public works. And they would also be relieved of their present heavy depreciation and maintenance charge on idle plant and equipment, and their share of the support of the unemployed. (Upkeep and depreciation of idle plant and equipment has been estimated as high as $5,000,000,000 annually for all industry.)

But the likelihood is that the Government would not have to take care of any such number of workers. Probably the main practical difficulty would be that private industry would soon be calling for workers faster than they could be released. With a stabilized consumer demand, which, under modern conditions, can be provided in no other way than by the establishment of a permanent and adequate pay roll, industry would soon advance to the realization of maximum production; and that maximum would be progressively increased.

Industry could easily support a minimum subsistence for each family of $3,000 a year, equivalent to approximately $2,000 per worker, all classes of workers included. This would mean a basic consumer demand, chiefly for food, clothing, housing, heat, light, and family transportation, of approximately $90,000,000,000 a year. And at least that much would be required to support a total output of $150,000,000,000, the estimated ready maximum capacity in 1929.

If this volume of production were realized, and if it should prove to be necessary to still carry 5,000,000 on the stabilization pay roll, the margin above the minimum provision would be $60,000,000,000. Employing and investing interests and wage and salary earners whose earnings were in excess of the minimum would divide this amount among them. And they would have their $3,000 per year family subsistence beside. If, then, they paid the entire cost of maintaining the stabilization pay roll, they would still have a balance of $47,000,000,000, and would save the present cost of maintenance of idle plant and of unemployment relief—a net margin of, say, $53,000,000,000.

Total gains over 1932 would be:

For wage and salary earners, $55,000,000,000, plus earnings in excess of minimum subsistence.

For employing and investing interests, $53,000,000,000, less wages and salaries in excess of minimum subsistence.

For all of us, public works or services to the value of $13,000,000,000.

If the plan were financed by direct money issues, the cost would be paid by consumers and by creditor interests through reflation to the 1926 price level.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 813) to remove the limitation on the filling of the vacancy in the office of senior circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 57) thereon.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 5390) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 59) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1410) to amend section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act with respect to bank reorganizations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 60) thereon.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H.R. 5040) to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 58) thereon.

This is a bill extending the gasoline tax, dealing with the reduction in postal rates, and also having reference to the tax on electrical energy. I submit the report, and, because we are anxious to expedite the business of the session, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course I cannot give consent to the request of the Senator from Mississippi. The report has just been submitted and opportunity should be had to consider the bill. I shall probably have no objection to the consideration of the bill tomorrow, but I shall object to its consideration today.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state, in deference to the Senator from Oregon, that I shall make a motion tomorrow to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

By Mr. MCGILL:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 53) granting the consent of Congress to a compact or agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri authorizing the acceptance for and on behalf of the States of Kansas and Missouri of title to a toll bridge across the Missouri River from a point in Platte County, Mo., to a point at or near Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kans., and specifying the conditions thereof; to the Committee on Commerce.

REGULATION OF BANKING

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President I desire to introduce a bill for proper reference. It is the so-called "bank bill", which I am reintroducing by direction of the subcommittee having it in charge so that a new print may be available, as several very major modifications have been made in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill (S. 1631) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal Reserve banks and of national banking associations, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FEDERAL REGULATION OF INSURANCE—PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, facts have been brought to the attention of the Senate which indicate that the methods of several insurance companies of the country are under suspicion. Instances of gross mismanagement have been disclosed which are of sufficient gravity as to indicate the imperative need of further exploration in this field. It is of the utmost importance that policyholders be protected from recurring instances of misconduct and extravagances on the part of company officials.

Insurance as an institution is of such great value to the people and the ends so commendable that it is essential that evils in the business or misconduct in management, if they exist, be exposed at the earliest possible moment in order that the people may not lose confidence in the excellent purpose of insurance itself.

I am personally such a firm believer in the great value of insurance that I will go to almost any extreme to bolster up confidence among policyholders in the benefits of carrying insurance. But I am equally anxious that they be not defrauded of their savings by unscrupulous or even vicious management of the companies which may be carrying their insurance.

When we learn that large companies of the United States since the depression began have increased salaries of executive officials to such aggregates as $200,000 per year, to say nothing of other extravagances in management, while at the same time they have violated their contractual obligations to the extent of denying loans to policyholders on the policies and have suspended payments under the cash-surrender clause, it is high time that the United States Senate take note of what is going on.

The very purpose of insurance is to protect the policyholder against the proverbial rainy day. How tragic then it must be when the rainy day comes and the policyholder learns that he is denied the benefits for which he has been paying throughout the years. Such practice results in the defeat of the very purpose of insurance and in irreparable injury to the policyholder.

There should be a thorough Federal investigation of the subject; but, unfortunately, the National Government at present has no authority whatever over insurance companies. They are State institutions, and the United States Supreme Court has decided that insurance is not commerce and therefore not within the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. This situation should be corrected. Therefore I desire to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the proposed amendment to read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution of the United States, namely:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to regulate the business or commerce of insurance throughout the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

"Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Mr. President, I send the joint resolution to the desk and ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer it and that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 51) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to the regulation of the business or commerce of insurance, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in connection with my remarks, I desire also to have incorporated in the RECORD a newspaper article from the Chicago Tribune of May 4, which contains a table of insurance salaries which has been compiled by that newspaper, with comment on the pitifully small reductions in salaries that have gone into effect in some of the companies since public opinion on the subject has become aroused.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000, payable from tribal funds on deposit to the credit of Indians of the Truxton Canyon Reservation, Ariz., for assisting in the eradication of scabies in the livestock of such Indians, intended to be proposed by them to House bill 5390, the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SALE AND DISTRIBUTION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 76), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Whereas it is claimed that price levels in dairy commodities within the District of Columbia indicate that competition in trade in such commodities has become stifled therein, and that the cost to the consumer of such commodities exceeds the cost to the producer by more than a fair margin of profit to the producer: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate conditions with respect to the sale and distribution of milk, cream, ice cream, or other dairy products within the District of Columbia with a view to determining particularly whether any individual, partnership, or corporation, whether residing in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, is operating within such District under any contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or is a party to any conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any such dairy products, or in any way monopolizing such trade within such District. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress until the final report is submitted, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting several nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SERVICES OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present, for publication in the RECORD, an address by Hon. Jesse H. Jones, director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, before the American Society of Newspaper Editors at Washington, D.C., April 28, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I appreciate the opportunity of addressing you and wish to thank my friend, David Lawrence, for the invitation.

There is no set of men for whom I have greater regard than you and those of your profession, and no class has so great an influence upon the affairs of the world.

The conditions through which we have passed and are passing will unquestionably leave a lasting influence upon our generation. Let us hope that it does not extend beyond.

The reasons for these conditions are more easily understood than is the way out, but undoubtedly order is being restored and with it a wider and deeper interest in public affairs. I doubt if any of us has ever felt quite so keenly that degree of responsibility for the general welfare as he does now, and the result of the last Presidential election was evidence of the determination of our people to right conditions.

That we have started out of the tangled maze under an inspiring leadership that is bold and unafraid can be accepted as an assured fact.

The eyes of the world and the hope of the world are centering on Franklin D. Roosevelt as much now as was true of Woodrow Wilson in 1918. No President of the United States ever faced a greater task than Franklin Roosevelt faces at this time, and none ever enjoyed greater confidence. His courage and determination are admirable, as is his comprehension of world conditions.

People in all walks and of all political faiths are willing to accord him a free hand. Congress is giving him the power to act—to correct on the spot, as it were.

We in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can see, as I am sure you gentlemen see, decided signs of improvement.

The work of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been so far-reaching that I should like to review it, but time will not permit of that except in the sketchiest sort of way.

The Corporation endeavored especially to bolster up banks in the summer and fall of 1932, and undoubtedly we saved a great many institutions and their depositors; but men and machines can only stand a certain amount of strain, and by the 4th of March chaos was upon us.

State after State declared moratoriums, both bank and law, until it became necessary for President Roosevelt to make the bank holiday Nation-wide.

Following that were days and nights of hectic effort to determine upon the next step, culminating in the remarkable speech by President Roosevelt on the banking situation, which was heard and read, I should say, in every hamlet of the Nation. And it is doubtful if any speech was ever more easily understood or better accepted. It gave the people confidence in their Government and increased their confidence in their President.

The President stated that only sound banks would be permitted to open, and the judgment of what constituted a sound bank was not left to the determination of the people in charge of the bank. Thousands of banks were permitted to open on a limited-withdrawal basis and many others are in the hands of conservators. These banks are now receiving the undivided attention of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Comptroller's office and, to a large extent, the Treasury, as well as the many State banking departments.

Naturally every bank in the hands of a conservator or that is open on a limited-withdrawal basis wants to be the first waited upon in the plan of reorganization, and as a result our forces are burning the midnight oil.

We have invested and in the course of closing more than $50,000,000 in preferred stock in banks. In each instance we first make a thorough examination of the bank. We feel that it is necessary to be more careful in subscribing for stock and in becoming stockholders in banks than in lending to banks for the reason that the public will have every right to assume when the Government subscribes for stock in a bank that that bank will be thoroughly sound.

Most of these reorganizations entail substantial loans to the old banks in order that the depositor may have as large a percentage as possible of his credit balance made immediately available. The percentage of deposits that can be made available in this way varies with localities and to a large degree measures conditions in that particular locality.

In some instances, where new banks are organized, the common stock is subscribed for by depositors of the old banks, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation matching dollar for dollar with preferred stock. In others old banks are reorganized by freezing a percentage of the deposits to provide the common capital.

Where loans are made on these frozen assets to provide liquidity, it is the purpose of the Corporation to carry such loans, giving time for orderly liquidation and the best possible results for the depositors and stockholders of the old institutions.

Our largest single subscription for preferred stock is $12,500,000, and our smallest to date $12,500, the $12,500,000 going to Detroit and the $12,500 to Texas.

As I see it, there is no reason why even sound licensed banks should not avail themselves of the privilege of issuing preferred stock and selling it to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to provide greater liquidity and to put themselves in better position to make loans to their customers, to the end that business and trade may be gotten under way.

All banks have had losses and, however sound, all have a certain amount of slow paper. It was the intention of the President and of Congress to provide banks with every possible facility for making credit plentiful and getting business started again.

Naturally, bankers are timid about extending credit, and, indeed, good borrowers are timid about borrowing, with uncertainty continually confronting them. But under the President's program and with all these facilities it is my firm belief that the bankers of the country and the Federal Reserve banks should encourage borrowers where loans can be made on a safe basis, measured by the ordinary yardstick, and people put to work.

If everyone is required to liquidate, and business done on a cash basis, unemployment will increase to the point of national disaster.

After all, it is the money borrower who gives employment, buys materials, and makes business.

I am not so sure but that it would be helpful if all banks, the best and the most liquid, were required to increase their capital structures by the issuance of preferred stock to be sold, either to their present stockholders or to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

A billion dollars of added capital to our banks would expand banking facilities and bank credit in a multiplied form. It would build up the morale of our bankers and give them a sense of security which would encourage them to confidence and action.

Of our $882,000,000 loans to banks and trust companies, more than $200,000,000 is to banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System, and it is the hope of our directors, as I am sure it is the hope of Secretary of the Treasury William H. Woodin that these member banks will find it desirable to get their accommodations from the Federal Reserve banks and thereby lessen the burden on the United States Treasury.

Under section 10 (b) of the Glass-Steagall bill and the new legislation, all banks, State and National, whether members of the Federal Reserve or not, can borrow from Federal Reserve banks on their assets, regardless of character. Naturally the Federal Reserve banks should not be expected to make unsound loans, but they can lend on slow paper, just as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can lend on slow paper. They can lend at lower rates and without burden to the Treasury.

It is as much the responsibility of Federal Reserve management to meet this situation as it is of the United States Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to the extent that the Federal Reserve makes these loans the demand by Reconstruction Corporation on the United States Treasury will be reduced.

These times require the willing cooperation of the Federal Reserve banks, the Comptroller of the Currency, State banking authorities, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I am glad to add that at recent meetings this cooperation has been evidenced.

It can no longer be regarded as a disgrace for a bank or banker to be found in the borrowing class no more than an insurance company, a mortgage company, the Federal land banks, or, indeed, any other money-lending agency.

It is our expectation that the home-loan banks will soon relieve us of loans to building and loan associations and that the new Farm Credit Administration will take care of loans to Federal land banks, joint-stock land banks, livestock-credit corporations, Federal intermediate-credit banks, and regional agricultural-credit corporations.

That will leave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with banks, trust companies, mortgage companies, credit unions, insurance companies, railroads, self-liquidating loans, and loans for marketing and exporting of farm products.

Our loans to railroads, of approximately $350,000,000, are considered by some as more or less doubtful; but, in my belief, most of these loans will either be collected or put on an entirely sound basis through railroad reorganization.

It is not unlikely that when these reorganizations are undertaken the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be called upon to furnish additional funds, and in doing this these new funds, as well as previous advances, could become preferred claims.

Some of our railroad loans, in my own opinion, have been wisely made and some not, but undoubtedly the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can be helpful in reorganizing railroads and in putting their capital structures on a sounder basis. Indeed, until the investing public can be brought back into the bond market, it will be necessary for the Government to furnish them with credit. I can conceive of the necessity and the desirability of the Government taking a strong position in financing the railroads. This can be safely done under the proposed coordination to effect economy.

We have all been disappointed at the small amount of self-liquidating loans we have been able to make. The law provides that these loans may be made to States or their political subdivisions and to a certain selected group of private corporations for construction projects which fill an economic need and are self-liquidating in character; that is, that the cost will be returned within a reasonable time by means of tolls, fees, rents, and such other charges as can be made, other than taxation.

The variety of projects that have been offered for our consideration ranges from intracoastal canals to bathing pools, from 40-story market houses to subriver tunnels, from floating drydocks to airplane hangars.

We have been able to find ways to lend to many small communities for waterworks and sewers and, in some instances, for light plants. We have made a few loans that carry water to arid land and one large loan that will carry electricity to a great city.

We have also made loans under this provision of the act to State institutions of learning for construction of dormitories and have approved a very limited number of housing loans.

There is a wide difference in opinion as to the advisability of housing loans, but they can probably be justified especially where new buildings replace old ones, such as slum clearance, and because of the employment and stimulation of trade that they provide.

We have only authorized approximately $200,000,000 under the classification of self-liquidating loans and that includes $60,000,000 to the San Francisco bridge project and $13,000,000 for spanning the Mississippi River at New Orleans. Our directors and engineers have strained every effort to make these loans qualify, but, under the law, they must and should be adequately secured.

We have authorized a total of $2,700,000,000 of loans. Of this sum, $177,000,000 was canceled, $422,000,000 not yet disbursed, and $448,000,000 has been repaid, so that we have outstanding at the present time loans aggregating $1,650,000,000, and that includes $234,000,000 relief to States.

While our organization was hurriedly put together and expanded rapidly, it is fairly efficient, and I venture to say would compare favorably with any private institution of approximate complexity and extent.

A great deal of service is furnished to our borrowers and to applicants for loans. We have a large engineering force that helps applicants without expense to them, and this is true also with architects for housing and some of the self-liquidating loans.

Our legal staff spends a great deal of time with applicants who are not qualified to borrow, and I am glad to say that our Board and all of our force resolve in favor of the applicant where and if a good purpose is to be served by making the loan; that is, we endeavor to make loans qualify under the act and to assist the applicants in putting their applications in such shape that they will qualify if and when a good purpose is to be served and men given new employment or kept employed.

We are in no sense technical in our requirements, but do exercise care in the granting of loans, and in the preparation of all necessary contracts and papers. This and the necessary examination and study of self-liquidating loans sometime cause us to be charged with too much red tape, but there is no red tape in the Corporation, nor is there unnecessary delay.

During periods of depression there is a constant search for signs of business revival; and while I have no intention of entering the field of prediction, I should like to leave a hopeful thought with you—we have a resourceful nation, both in natural resources and in men, and are especially fortunate at this time in having a leader in whom the people have implicit confidence.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC UTILITIES—ARTICLE BY E. MICHAEL WHITE

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an article on public utility regulation, by E. Michael White, appearing in the Nation of date of May 3, 1933.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC UTILITY REGULATION

By E. Michael White

The ability of the public-utilities monopoly to keep rates up to the 1929 level has been one of the bright spots in the depression—that is, bright for the companies. It is a major problem for the consumer with a reduced income. In the 3½ years since November 1929 all other prices have dropped with unbelievable rapidity to unbelievably low levels. This drop in prices has been accompanied by reduced incomes. Why have utility rates escaped the deflationary process? The answer is that the purchaser of a competitive product or service is at the mercy of the law of supply and demand and the vagaries of a competitive market, while the purchaser of gas, electricity, and telephone service is "protected" by public-utility regulation. This regulation, which preserved utility properties from confiscation, so-called, in periods of rising prices, has utterly failed to protect the consumer in a period of falling prices. The facts tell the story.

In September 1929 the food bill for a typical workingman's family in New York City was $381.53 per year. In February 1933 the bill had been reduced to $212.65, a drop of 44 percent. In September 1929 the same family paid $97.80 annually for three necessary services furnished him by the great utility companies. He paid $4 a month for his telephone, for which the New York Telephone Co. allowed him 66 calls; $2.30 to the Consolidated Gas Co. for 2,000 cubic feet of gas; and $1.85 to the New York Edison Co., a subsidiary of the same Consolidated Gas Co., for 25 kilowatt-hours of electricity per month. In February 1933 he paid $4.25 for the telephone, $2.30 for the gas, and $2.30 for the electricity, a total for the year of $106.20. In other words, his annual bill for the three services increased $8.40, or 8 percent. During the same period factory employment decreased 44 percent in New York State, and factory pay rolls dropped 60 percent.

The electric bill of the average domestic consumer in the Nation increased from $31.65 in 1929 to $33.64 in 1931. To be sure, he got more current for his money, owing to a decrease in the rate per kilowatt-hour throughout the Nation of approximately 7 percent. During the same period, however, his income dropped approximately 45 percent, and a larger share of that reduced income went to pay what the economists call "rigid" utility prices. In addition to causing hardship for the individual consumer, the increasingly large share of our national income which is required to pay these "rigid" prices is a major barrier to economic recovery.

Now let us look at the dividend record of the utility companies during the depression. In New York State total dividend payments to gas and electric companies increased from $72,020,334 in 1929 to $89,806,855 in 1931. This was in addition to increases in surplus. The companies serving New York City, most of which are owned by the Consolidated Gas Co., increased their accumulated surpluses during this period from $223,458,282 to $251,809,399. In 1932 Brooklyn Edison, in addition to paying 8 percent on its overcapitalized common stock, increased its surplus by almost $3,000,000. (That surplus had increased 250 percent in the past 5 years.) The theory of a surplus is that it is built up in the fat years to provide for the lean.

The rate of return on the book value of common stock of the New York utilities ranged from 8 percent in the case of Brooklyn Edison to 25 percent for the Syracuse Lighting Co., 41 percent for the New York Light & Power Co., and 60 percent for the Long Island Lighting Co. The 1931 dividend record was maintained in practically all instances in the low-water year of 1932. One notable exception was the New York Edison Co., which was forced to reduce its dividend rate from 12 to 10 percent! However, Consolidated Gas, the holding company to which the dividend was paid, declared the usual $56,000,000 dividend, which is at the rate of 11.7 percent on its common.

How about rates in New York City, where we are supposed to have one of the most enlightened and alert public-service commissions in the country? Milo R. Maltbie, the new chairman of that commission, in a letter to the New York electric companies in July 1930, made an eloquent plea for lower rates. He wrote:

"The trend of electric rates has been generally downward, and New York City should lead the procession. A number of other cities have lower rates than New York City, and with the exception of areas having cheap hydroelectric power, New York companies ought to be in a position to serve their consumers at as low rates as any metropolitan center. A factor in the approval of mergers and consolidations permitted by this commission has been the economies which could and should be effected, and you have freely conceded that consumers should share in the economies."

Does New York "lead the procession"? The following table of annual electric bills of customers using 50 kilowatt-hours of current per month—the average for the country—demonstrates that the only procession which New York City leads is the procession of exploited consumers:

	Annual bill
New York City	$36.60
Average for the country	34.88
Publicly owned plants:
Cleveland, Ohio	18.00
Los Angeles, Calif.	24.60
Kansas City, Kans.	21.60
Seattle, Wash.	28.80

It is true that there have been tremendous economies in the producing of electricity in New York City as a result of mergers and advances in the industry, but these economies have not been passed on to the consumer. Between 1920 and 1930 the four subsidiaries of Consolidated Gas furnishing New York City with electricity enjoyed operating economies of at least $14,000,000. (These figures do not take into account the tremendous savings due to lower prices since that date.) The extra profit made possible by these economies was paid to the holding company in the form of dividends on common stock. Consolidated Gas raised capital necessary to expand its plant during these 10 years by the sale of 5½-percent preferred stock to the general public. It used this money to buy the common stock of its subsidiaries, on which it receives a return of from 8 to 16 percent today—annual differential, $13,571,379. While the economies were taking place, the four electric companies increased their surplus by an average of $9,360,000 a year.

One further fact and the picture is complete. That is the fact of monopoly. Five great banker-industrial groups control from 85 to 95 per cent of the electric light and power industry of the Nation. The electric and gas industry in New York State is dominated by three great holding companies—the Associated Gas & Electric Co., the Niagara-Hudson Power Co., and the Consolidated Gas Co. The last two companies, controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co., supply over 80 percent of the gas and electric consumers of the State.

In 1929 the Legislature of the State of New York created a commission to investigate the system of regulation in the State. That commission, composed of the outstanding utility experts of the country, reported as follows:

"Effective regulation along the lines originally intended by the act [the public service commissions law] has broken down and the consumer has been left to the exploitation of the monopolistic private companies which control the public services."

The commission stated that Manhattan homes, for example, could get their electricity for a maximum of 5 cents per kilowatt-hour if they were charged in accordance with the cost of serving them. That estimate was based on peak 1929 prices. But in 1933, when prices are at the bottom of the trough, the average consumer pays 6 cents per kilowatt-hour and the small user pays an average of 7 cents per kilowatt-hour. Consolidated Gas, which was overcapitalized $150,000,000, had from 1921 to 1928, by means of a coal surcharge fraud, collected $20,000,000 more than the increased cost of coal warranted. While the consumer was being defrauded, Consolidated Gas absorbed Brooklyn Edison, and the concrete result of that merger was an increase in cash dividends of $18,000,000.

At the conclusion of its investigation, the legislative commission had this to say about the public service commission:

"The public service commission, as the evidence shows, has felt willing or obliged to sanction rates which cannot possibly be justified on any economically sound basis of control. It has tended to dodge every vital issue of a controversial character because of its fear of court reversal, and has in effect surrendered to the utility companies the right to charge whatever rates the conditions of their business and the monopoly character of their enterprise will support."

If that was true in 1929, what words in the vocabulary of respectable men can describe the situation in 1933, when the plight of the consumer has reached a new low? Following the report of that commission, Milo R. Maltbie, long an outstanding figure in public-utility regulation, was appointed chairman of the commission, to replace Mr. Prendergast, who took a $50,000-a-year job with the E. L. Phillips interests, whose companies he had been regulating ineffectually. Under the leadership of Mr. Maltbie the New York Public Service Commission has attempted to reduce rates by a policy of negotiation. This new policy was a result of the difficulties inherent in a system of regulation.

In a decision involving electric rates in New York City in 1931, Mr. Maltbie sought to justify a reduction of $5,500,000 which he had negotiated, in place of reductions of from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 which the consumers demanded, on the ground that "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." He pointed out, quite ably, the numerous obstacles to regulation—the time and expense involved, the uncertainty of the outcome due to the confused state of the law, the large number of companies under the jurisdiction of the commission (over 1,000) for whose regulation the commission has a limited staff, and the lack of a scientific basis for fixing rates. He referred to the New York Telephone case, which is a classic example of the wastefulness and inefficiency of the present system of regulation. That case was started in 1920 and is now on appeal to the Supreme Court. It required the taking of 62,864 pages of testimony and 4,232 exhibits, and cost $10,000,000.

Mr. Maltbie went on to say that if the reductions offered by the companies in that case were not accepted, they would be withdrawn and the commission would be forced to resort to rate hearings, with all their delay and uncertainty. What a position for the public! If it does not want to accept reductions offered by the companies, it can take its chances with the courts and a commission whose chairman is pessimistic about the outcome of a rate case. Here is a frank admission that the commission cannot regulate, that it can only "force" reductions which are consented to by the companies. This hat-in-hand policy means a surrender to the very monopolies which public-service commissions were created to regulate. It is such abrogation of control which was criticized by the legislative commission in 1929.

In its annual report of 1932 the New York Public Service Commission defended its policy of negotiation, stating that "the policy of obtaining reductions in rates by negotiation rather than by formal cases has been justified again by the results obtained in 1932." What were the results? Reductions in 1932 resulting from both negotiations and rate cases in 1931 amounted to $1,884,200. Reductions negotiated in 1931 are supposed to save the consumers another $8,200,000 annually. Most of this last amount is accounted for by the reduction in electric rates in New York City, which resulted in an increased bill for 50 percent of the customers, the small users who are least able to bear the increase. The total reduction is less than 2 percent of the revenues of the companies involved. A reduction in the dividend rate of gas and electric companies to 6 percent would have meant an annual saving of $40,000,000. Such a reduction of the dividend rate of the New York Telephone Co. alone would have meant a saving of $7,500,000 per annum.

During the war and after, many utilities, faced with ruin because of the sudden increase in labor and commodity prices, sought immediate relief—without the formality of rate cases and valuations upon which they now insist. They got it. Rate increases were allowed throughout the country on very limited showings by utility companies, and courts uniformly sustained these emergency measures. It was during this very crisis that section 72 of the New York Public Service Commissions law was amended, giving the commission the power to fix temporary rates; and the New York commission has stated recently in several cases that it can fix temporary rates without the necessity of a complete valuation of all company properties.

The Wisconsin Public Service Commission has recently attempted to give the public the benefit of immediate and drastic reductions. In January 1932 it cut telephone rates 12½ percent, thereby reducing the dividend rate of the Wisconsin Telephone Co. to 6 percent. The reduction had been preceded by an investigation of 11 months. It was set aside by a Federal court after a 3-hour argument, between trains. The Federal court was recently reversed by the Supreme Court on procedural grounds and the case was sent back for reconsideration. The Wisconsin commission does not know today whether its decision will be upheld by the Supreme Court.

There is only one sure relief for the apparently helpless consumer. That is public ownership. The figures contained in the table quoted above are more eloquent than argument. Even the threat of public ownership would force the companies to see the light, but in New York State we are denied that weapon. The public operation bill annually introduced into the New York State Legislature, giving cities the power to operate their own utility plants, was defeated again this year. The representatives of the utility companies argued to the legislative committee that to allow cities to go into the business of producing gas and electricity would lead to "racketeering" and "extortion." The politicians of New York City, who recently appropriated $50,000 in order to force rate reductions, were noticeable by their absence from the hearing on the public operation bill, which the Democratic senate failed to pass.

ASSOCIATED GAS AND ELECTRIC SYSTEM—ARTICLE BY RUTH FINNEY

MR. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "A Pyramid of Profit—the Associated Gas and Electric System", written by Ruth Finney, and appearing in the Nation under date of May 10, 1933.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PYRAMID OF PROFIT—THE ASSOCIATED GAS AND ELECTRIC SYSTEM

By Ruth Finney

A strange reticence has overtaken the public-utility industry, strange, that is, in contrast with its former ardent appetite for attention. It is less remarkable when its practical results are considered. When the industry was maintaining an elaborate country-wide organization to get utility news before the public its self-praise, for lack of evidence to the contrary, was generally accepted at its face value. Now publications are free to print facts about gas and electric utilities whose accuracy is guaranteed by the Federal Trade Commission. And such is the nature of the facts that the energy once devoted to propaganda is devoted now to keeping them obscure.

If utility lawyers went to court to try to stop the Federal Trade Commission, as the Electric Bond & Share Co. did once, that would be news, and the papers would print it. If they challenged the figures or conclusions of the commission's accountants that would be news. So expensive lawyers sit in silence at the commission hearings protesting not at all against what is said about their clients, and the hearings are, therefore, extremely dull.

The Associated Gas & Electric System has been one of the principal beneficiaries of this policy of silence. The Trade Commission's findings concerning it compose the most remarkable record so far disclosed, yet few if any of its 1,425,000 customers and 104,000 holders of common stock have been enlightened. J. I. Mange and H. C. Hopson control the entire $900,000,000 system of properties extending from Nova Scotia to Florida and from Cape Cod to the Philippines, including 26 States of the Union. They gained control by an investment of $298,318 in the Associated Securities Co., and on that investment they netted a return of 164 percent in 1929. Investment of another $10,000 in a 2-man trust association, the apex of their vast structure, secured them the assurance that control can never pass from their hands and that no one else shall share their ultimate profits. On this investment the two men netted 265 percent in 1929. The names of Mange and Hopson, unlike those of Insull and Young, have never been household words. Mange, a practical operator of electric companies, has been part of the Associated System since its beginning in 1906. Hopson is an accountant who graduated from the pay rolls of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Public Service Commission of New York.

The associated system is a perfect example of the sort of intercorporate complexities which even utility men have ceased to defend—since Samuel Insull's complexity collapsed. Associated Gas & Electric Properties is at the top. This is the trust owned exclusively by Hopson and Mange. It owns all the stock of the Associated Securities Corporation, which owns all the stock of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. owns:

1. Associated Utilities Investing Corporation, which owns seven holding companies, all of which own operating and servicing companies.

2. Associated Properties, Inc., which owns Associated Electric Co., which owns six holding companies, all of which own operating companies, and some operating companies of its own.

3. Associated General Electric Corporation, which owns W. S. Barstow & Co., Barstow Securities Corporation, and General Gas & Electric Corporation, which owns operating companies.

Beginning again at the top of the structure, Associated Gas & Electric Properties owns Manson Securities Trust, which owns New England Gas & Electric Association, which owns operating companies. It owns Associated Electric Cos., which owns operating companies, and also Associated Electric Properties, which owns both operating companies and a subholding company, which owns operating companies. It owns Transit Securities Associates and Railway and Buss Associates, which own a network of transportation companies. It owns three more trusts and companies.

In some cases six holding companies intervene between an operating company serving the public and the topmost trust where Mange and Hopson sit in joint remunerative control. The system earned $50,282,036 net in 1929. The money came from ratepayers in the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and down the coast to Florida; from consumers in Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, and southward to Louisiana; and from others westward from Texas to Arizona.

To investors, "write-ups"—unaccountable appreciations in book values of the system—are of most immediate concern. The Trade Commission found that $33,362,152 has been added in this manner to book values of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. alone. Other write-ups occur in the books of the numerous subholding companies. For example, Pennsylvania Electric Co. books show a $17,000,000 write-up, an amount equal to one third the entire ledger value of the company's assets at the close of 1929. A transaction which took place years ago between companies in the Associated system illustrates how values are inflated overnight. H. D. Walbridge & Co. owned certain securities carried on its books at $10,176,636. It sold them to its subsidiary, the old Pennsylvania Electric Corporation, which then entered them on its books at $20,919,750 valuation.

Constant calling and substitution of stocks within the Associated system also makes the condition of the investor uncertain. Investors who put their money into the Binghamton Light, Heat & Power Co., an operating utility, found themselves a little later with nothing to show for it but Associated Gas & Electric Co. debentures. The company had been merged with the New York State Electric & Gas Corporation, and Associated debentures were traded for the assets of the operating company.

So complicated are the stock, bond, and dividend transactions in the system that occasionally securities have been issued without the authority of the directors supposed to have issued them. On two occasions, the Trade Commission discloses, the board of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. has passed retroactive resolutions ratifying various issues. As securities are issued in the system, it has been the practice to sell them for $35 to the Associated Gas & Electric Securities Co., which resells them to the public at the market price, usually about $65 in normal years. As a result of this practice the Associated Gas & Electric Securities Co. paid a dividend of $22,540,285 to the Associated Utilities Investing Corporation in 1929 and in the same month this second company paid a $21,000,000 dividend to the Associated Gas & Electric Co.

But it is in the intercompany fee system of Associated that the juiciest figures are found, the figures of most immediate concern to the ratepayers—the consumers of electricity and gas. Fees are the simplest and most general method employed to defeat State regulation of rates. Large fees paid by operating companies for management services, financial services, construction services, purchasing services, all go into operating expenses, and thus into the rate base. The companies which receive them are not regulated.

Five servicing companies, all owned by the Associated Gas & Electric Co., compete with each other in collecting fees in the Associated system; and in addition Associated Gas & Electric has been collecting fees itself and permitting another subsidiary to do so without making even a pretense of giving services. Apparently this last practice has been discontinued; but in 6 years $9,970,944 was collected by Associated companies from Associated companies in the form of fees. Theoretically, these paid for services costing $3,397,204 to render. The net profit was $6,573,739. But that is not all. So lucrative was the fee-collecting business that companies in the system bid for the right to it, and in the space of 3 recent years fee-collecting rights were sold and resold to various Associated subsidiaries for amounts totaling $28,247,400. Associated Gas & Electric sold the privilege of collecting management fees from its operating utilities to the Utilities Management Corporation for $5,200,000. Utilities Management hired another subsidiary, the J. G. White Co., to do the work for which it was being paid at $200,000 a year. It collected in 9 months $751,212, of which $571,850 was net profit. It then sold J. G. White its fee-collecting rights for $8,000,000.

Another subsidiary, the Consumers' Construction Co., was willing to pay $5,000,000 for the right to fees. In 1928 the entire operating expenses of this company were $113,208, and in that year the Pennsylvania group of operating utilities alone paid fees amounting to $152,613. The Pennsylvania group could have hired the entire staff of engineers and clerks of the construction company, rented an office for them, paid all overhead, and still have been $80,000 in pocket if relieved of fees.

The Utilities Purchasing and Supply Co. paid $3,700,000 for the privilege of purchasing for the Associated system and collecting fees. Most amazing of all is the action of the Associated Utilities Merchandising Co., which paid $5,900,000 for the right to engage in the appliance business with the operating companies and then made the operating companies pay all expenses of selling appliances while it collected the entire gross from them. It was, as the Trade Commission says, "a clever scheme for taking from the operating companies a normal and legitimate source of revenue," which would of course have reduced operating expenses and therefore rates.

To cap the climax, the Associated Gas & Electric Co., in addition to collecting fees directly and selling rights to other fees which it collects indirectly, until recently also apportioned all its expenses to its operating companies. The operating companies have been bearing the costs of services for which they pay fees far in excess of the costs. The public furnishes the money. There are other ways of inflating operating costs to the detriment of the ratepayer and the profit of the top companies. Take the Pennsylvania Electric Corporation division of the Associated system. All operating-company subsidiaries of Pennsylvania Electric Corporation deposit all cash they receive to the credit of the holding company. At the beginning of each month Pennsylvania Electric computes interest at the rate of 8 percent per annum on the open accounts maintained for the subsidiaries and charges this sum to the open account. The result amounts to a compounding of interest on accounts receivable. Operating companies would pay neither 8 percent interest nor compound interest if they were free to get capital elsewhere.

Another account on the books of the operating companies labeled "Federal income tax" helps to swell the amount of current expense which the ratepayer must bear. It is the practice in the associated system for subsidiary companies to accrue Federal income tax as an expense, crediting the amount to the open account maintained by their immediate holding company. The holding company computes a tax on the basis of the consolidated income of the group of which it is parent, charges the amount to its expenses, and credits it to the open account of the holding company next above it. But the senior company of this system, Associated Gas & Electric, paid no Federal income tax to the Government for the years 1927, 1928, and 1929. The public paid rates sufficient to cover a charge which any utility commission would have to allow, and the money went into the pockets of the associated owners instead of into the Federal Treasury.

Write-ups, fees, 8 percent compound interest on open accounts, income-tax accruals that never go for income tax—how much do they mean to the man who pays the bills? In Erie, Pa., served by the Erie Lighting Co., a subsidiary of the Pennsylvania Electric Co., which is a subsidiary of the Pennsylvania Electric Corporation, which is a subsidiary of the Associated Electric Co., which is a subsidiary of the Associated Gas & Electric Corporation, which is a subsidiary of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., families pay 8.5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 50 kilowatt-hours of electricity used to light their homes, 4 cents for the next 2,950 kilowatt-hours, and 3 cents for all in excess of this amount.

A few miles down the lake front is Ashtabula, Ohio, where electric service is supplied by the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co., part of the North American system, a company which has had to meet the competition of a municipal plant in Cleveland for many years and has done so on a profitable basis. Ashtabula families pay 5 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 40 kilowatt-hours used, 4 cents for the next 200, and 2.8 cents for all thereafter. Trade Commission records should be even more illuminating to the people of Erie than the electric lights for which they pay so much.

HALFWAY MEASURES ARE DANGEROUS—EDITORIAL FROM THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Philadelphia Record of May 10, entitled "Half-way Measures are Dangerous."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record, May 10, 1933]

HALF-WAY MEASURES ARE DANGEROUS

The United States needs an increase in mass purchasing power if the present improvement in business and prices is to be maintained.

Two bills, framed with that purpose in mind, are now before the President.

One, by Senators LA FOLLETTE, COSTIGAN, and CUTTING, calls for a $6,000,000,000 public-works program.

The other, drawn up by Senator WAGNER with the cooperation of big business interests, calls for $1,000,000,000 in public works and $2,000,000,000 in R.F.C. loans for private construction by industry.

Under the terms of the Wagner bill also, trade associations will have new power to fix prices, working hours, wages, and production under Government supervision.

The Record hopes the President will choose the first.

The Record believes that at least $6,000,000,000 must be spent on public works, and $6,000,000,000 distributed to depositors in closed banks, to provide the increased purchasing power that will enable business to resume production.

A $1,000,000,000 public-works program at this time would be of little effect—against the $5,000,000,000 deflation caused by closing the banks and balancing the Budget.

Senator WAGNER's plan to provide $2,000,000,000 for expansion by private industry puts the cart before the horse.

Private industry cannot use its present plant to capacity until mass purchasing power is revived.

Senator WAGNER, like Mr. Hoover, would pour more money into the wrong end of the horn.

Mr. Hoover thought that if he gave the banks more credit, they would expand their loans to business.

But the bankers could not safely loan, and industry had no use for more funds until people had money to buy.

Senator WAGNER's plan would fail in the same way that Hoover's open-market operations failed to revive business.

Whatever the administration may decide about other features of the Wagner bill, it cannot safely accept the billion-dollar limitation on public works and the cart-before-the-horse proposal for private-construction loans.

The Record looks to the President for a $6,000,000,000 public-works program and for a $6,000,000,000 payment to depositors in closed banks.

Such a program would go far to fill the gap left by a shrinkage of some $18,000,000,000 in credit currency since 1929. The money can be raised by direct discounting with the Federal Reserve banks. The result would be to put us securely back on the road to prosperity.

Half-way measures threaten the gains already won.

MUSCLE SHOALS—LETTER FROM JASPER E. CRANE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, several days ago in the discussion that took place on the so-called "Muscle Shoals bill" I had occasion in some remarks I made to refer to the plant of the Du Pont Co., located 5 or 6 miles out of Charleston, W.Va., where this company had set up a plant for the purpose of obtaining nitrogen from the atmosphere. I told the Senate of going down there and of the company's sending down with me a man who I said was a German chemist.

I have, this morning, a letter from the Du Pont Co., signed by Mr. Crane, vice president, in which he calls my attention to the fact that I was in error and asks that it be corrected. As soon as I read the letter I remembered distinctly that I had made a mistake in my statement in the Senate when I referred to this man as a German chemist. He was Dr. F. Sparre, a Norwegian chemist. I remembered that I was wrong as soon as my attention was called to the fact. In order that there may be no misunderstanding whatever about it, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the letter of Mr. Crane.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS & Co.,
Wilmington, Del., May 8, 1933.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Senator from Nebraska, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: I read your address of May 1 on Muscle Shoals and your presentation of the bill you propose in the Senate with much interest and appreciation. May I congratulate you on your position in the matter, which seems to me both courageous and full of wisdom.

Because of our large investment in the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen in the manufacture and sale of nitrogenous products we have felt that we might be misunderstood and criticized if we took any part in the long controversy regarding the disposal of Muscle Shoals. We have, therefore, scrupulously refrained from any approach on the matter to members of this Congress or its predecessors. Indeed, I am quite sure that the only contact which any Du Pont man in a position of authority has had with a Member of Congress was our invitation to you to visit our plant at Belle, W.Va. May I add that my own recollection about that visit was not that you wrote us requesting permission to see the plant, but rather that, understanding that you might be interested in such a visit, I promptly called you up and told you how glad we would be to have you see what we were doing. That spirit of cooperation still exists, and if there is any information that we can contribute which would be helpful to your handling of the nitrogen phase of the Muscle Shoals matter we shall be very glad to respond, consistent, however, with our unwillingness to take up any controversial position.

I would like to correct one or two comments included in your address. The man who accompanied you to Muscle Shoals was not a German chemist, but Dr. F. Sparre, then and now director of the development department of the Du Pont Co., who is of Norwegian family but 100 percent American. He is, as you quite properly pointed out, an outstanding authority on nitrogen fixation, having closely followed the progress of all phases of that development from the beginning.

You described synthetic ammonia as being the Haber process. It is probably not important but may be interesting to you that the Du Pont Co. did not follow the Haber process, but acquired rights to a French process and an Italian process for the synthesis of ammonia, adapted the best features of these to American conditions, and made ourselves noteworthy contributions to the art, so that our present process is distinctively our own and is not derived from the Haber process. It is true that the Haber-Bosch process was the first successful commercial synthesis of ammonia, worthy of great credit in this scientific development, but our work in this country has not been one of imitation. We are proud of our plant at Belle, of its efficient performance, amazingly low cost of production, and its large potential capacity, though unfortunately its capacity is only being partly utilized on account of what has been in reality dumping at prices far below the cost of production, of enormous quantities of nitrogen products, imported into this country from Europe and Japan over the past 3 years.

Incidentally, as you yourself pointed out, American nitrogen plants now have ample capacity to supply all American nitrogen requirements. Even record-breaking demands for fertilizer nitrogen would not occupy them all fully. Prices in this country are the lowest in the world, except the fictitious or rigged prices in Holland, and they are the lowest prices for nitrogen compounds in history. Increased production in our plants to supply all American needs would give employment to hundreds more of American workmen in these factories and in the coal mines, were it not for this organized foreign attack on our market with which we have had to contend.

In your speech you made the excellent and very true point of the decreased consumption of power in the cyanamide process compared with the arc process, and above all, in the synthetic ammonia process compared with cyanamide. The arc process is obsolete and abandoned, cyanamide is on the decline except for special uses. But I did not notice that you pointed out that the reason for locating our plant in West Virginia was not the abundance of high-quality coal for producing power, for the power requirements in synthetic ammonia are relatively low, but rather the abundance of good coal for the production of coke as the raw material for making hydrogen. After all, that is the gist of the matter. Though called the fixation of nitrogen, nitrogen is presented to us almost without cost by the atmosphere, and that exists everywhere. The expensive ingredient in making ammonia is hydrogen, and it seems quite certain that hydrogen derived from any gas at real market value or produced by the electrolysis of water with electric power at any equitable price cannot economically compete with hydrogen made from coke produced from good-quality, low-cost coal. That is the reason, therefore, to make cheap hydrogen, that we located our ammonia plant in a good coal region.

I trust that these comments may be of interest to you and perhaps of some use in any further statements you may have occasion to make in addition to your speech of May 1, which dealt so excellently with the questions at issue. I hope you do have opportunity to correct one item, regarding the gentleman who accompanied you to our plant at Belle.

With kind personal regards, I am, yours sincerely,
JASPER E. CRANE.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I submit the report of the committee of conference on House bill 8835, known as the "farm-relief bill", and move its immediate consideration,

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (nos. 1 to 84, inclusive) to the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 27, 32, 42, 46, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, and 82, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the pre-war period, August 1909-July 1914. In the case of tobacco, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919-July 1929"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 5, line 16, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "act" and insert "title"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "Under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture requiring adequate facilities for the storage of any nonperishable agricultural commodity on the farm, inspection and measurement of any such commodity so stored, and the locking and sealing thereof, and such other regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the protection of such commodity and for the marketing thereof, a reasonable percentage of any benefit payment may be advanced on any such commodity so stored. In any such case, such deduction may be made from the amount of the benefit payment as the Secretary of Agriculture determines will reasonably compensate for the cost of inspection and sealing, but no deduction may be made for interest"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "The making of any such agreement shall not be held to be in violation of any of the antitrust laws of the United States, and any such agreement shall be deemed to be lawful: Provided, That no such agreement shall remain in force after the termination of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(5) No person engaged in the storage in a public warehouse of any basic agricultural commodity in the current of interstate or foreign commerce, shall deliver any such commodity upon which a warehouse receipt has been issued and is outstanding, without prior surrender and cancelation of such warehouse receipt. Any person violating any of the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both. The Secretary of Agriculture may revoke any license issued under subsection (3) of this section, if he finds, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, that the licensee has violated the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Beginning with line 3 on page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out through line 13 on page 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) To obtain revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of the national economic emergency, there shall be levied processing taxes as hereinafter provided. When the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, he shall proclaim such determination, and a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to such commodity from the beginning of the marketing year therefor next following the date of such proclamation. The processing tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of the commodity, whether of domestic production or imported, and shall be paid by the processor. The rate of tax shall conform to the requirements of subsection (b). Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as of the date the tax first takes effect, and the rate so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy, be adjusted by him to conform to such requirements. The processing tax shall terminate at the end of the marketing year current at the time the Secretary proclaims that rental or benefit payments are to be discontinued with respect to such commodity. The marketing year for each commodity shall be ascertained and prescribed by regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That upon any article upon which a manufacturers' sales tax is levied under the authority of the Revenue Act of 1932 and which manufacturers' sales tax is computed on the basis of weight, such manufacturers' sales tax shall be computed on the basis of the weight of said finished article less the weight of the processed cotton contained therein on which a processing tax has been paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 15, line 3, of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out "sums" and insert "sum"; and in line 21, strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(b) No tax shall be required to be paid on the processing of any commodity by or for the producer thereof for consumption by his own family, employees, or household; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, by regulations, to exempt from the payment of the processing tax the processing of commodities by or for the producer thereof for sale by him where, in the judgment of the Secretary, the imposition of a processing tax with respect thereto is unnecessary to effectuate the declared policy."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 18, line 20, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after "delivery", insert "on or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On page 29, between lines 10 and 11 of the Senate engrossed amendments, insert the following new paragraph:

"The rate of interest on such direct loans made at any time by any Federal land bank shall be one half of 1 percent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged to borrowers on mortgage loans made at such time by the bank through national farm-loan associations."

On page 29, line 22, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

On page 34, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before "value," insert "normal."

On page 35 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 13, strike out all through line 9, page 36.

On page 36 of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out lines 12 to 19, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 31. (a) Out of the funds made available to him under section 30, the Farm Loan Commissioner is authorized to make loans, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $25,000,000, at a rate of interest."

On page 39, line 6, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before "value," insert "normal."

On page 39, line 16, of the Senate engrossed amendments, after "years," insert "or, in the case of a first or second mortgage secured wholly by real property and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage within an agreed period no greater than that for which loans may be made under the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended."

On page 39, line 19, of the Senate engrossed amendments, before the period, insert "if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage."

On page 41, line 7, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$8,500" and insert "$10,000."

On page 42, line 8, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "(1)."

On page 42 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with the word "including" in line 10, strike out through the word "project", in line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and to political subdivisions of States, which, prior to the date of enactment of this act, have completed projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands for agricultural purposes."

On page 45 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 1, strike out all through the period in line 9, and insert "Sec. 37."

On page 46, line 9, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$325,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

On page 47, line 12, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "$8,500" and insert "$10,000."

On page 47 of the Senate engrossed amendments, beginning with line 13, strike out all through line 20, page 48.

On page 49, line 2, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "shall" and insert "may."

On page 46, lines 3, 12, and 24, of the Senate engrossed amendments, strike out "37", "38", and "39" and insert "38", "39", and "40", respectively.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 83.

E. D. SMITH,
CHAS. L. McNARY,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
ELMER THOMAS,
ROBERT F. WAGNER,
F. C. WALCOTT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARVIN JONES,
JOHN D. CLARKE,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
WALL DOXEY,
H. P. FULMER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. REED. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to call for the yeas and nays because some Senators desire to be recorded on this vote.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before that is done I should like a brief explanation and statement with reference to the conference report.

Mr. SMITH. The conferees on the part of the House and Senate have agreed on every point with the exception of what is known as the Norris or Simpson amendment, which is the cost-of-production amendment. The House conferees disagreed and the amendment was taken back to the House and by an overwhelming vote was rejected by the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report is not debatable. The motion to adopt the report is debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to proceed to the consideration of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the only point of difference was the price-fixing amendment. In view of the circumstances, I think the Senate should recede on the amendment, because what there is in the bill that will benefit the farmers ought to be operating now. The cost-of-production amendment is the only point of difference. I think the author of the amendment himself sees the importance of having the matter acted on at once. Therefore I shall move that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will first have to adopt or reject the report. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to agree to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand the conference report strikes out the word "basic" before the words "agricultural commodities"?

Mr. SMITH. It does in two places.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator what is the effect, if any, upon any agreement which may be made by processors of farm commodities so far as the antitrust acts are concerned?

Mr. SMITH. As everyone knows, the provision looks toward a suspension of the antitrust acts as applied to the particular commodity involved in any agreement which may be made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The question which I desire to have answered is whether striking out the word "basic" enlarges to any extent the privilege of entering into the agreements which are not to be restrained by the antitrust acts.

Mr. SMITH. It does in some cases.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator explain how?

Mr. SMITH. The agreements entered into would apply where the word "basic" is used and only to those commodities that are enumerated, but under the terms of the bill the processing tax would apply to any competing commodity. The Secretary of Agriculture requested that the word "basic" be eliminated because in entering into the agreements contemplated he might have opportunity not to apply the processing tax in order to restrain the competition, and therefore we made it apply to practically all the agricultural products that might come in as competitors to those which were under the tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is this a correct statement? The effect of striking out the word "basic", as provided in the conference report, leaves it within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the processors of any agricultural commodity to make agreements, the antitrust act to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if there is any provision in the bill repealing the antitrust acts?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no; it does not repeal the antitrust acts. It only provides that where agreements shall be entered into touching any commodities, the antitrust acts will be suspended during the time of the life of such agreements, under such restrictions as the Secretary may make in the agreements themselves.

Mr. BORAH. The effect is to suspend the antitrust acts in any instance in which the Secretary of Agriculture and the processor make an agreement?

Mr. SMITH. That is true, but that was in the amendment that was adopted by the Senate. We have not modified that a particle in conference. That was in the bill as it passed the Senate and the House. That point was not in conference at all.

Mr. BORAH. But there was a limitation by reason of the word "basic"?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; there was a slight limitation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Supplementing what has been developed, may I inquire whether the removal of the word "basic" extends the exemption from the antitrust law to any, or at least any competing agricultural commodity?

Mr. SMITH. That is my understanding of the effect of the removal of the word "basic", because in dealing with farm products the Secretary of Agriculture, if he is going to enter into these agreements, ought to have full and complete authority to act. We all concede that what he is trying to do in this emergency is to benefit agriculture to the fullest extent. If in his judgment by any entering into these agreements he will not have to impose the processing tax and thus can get rid of the machinery that is set up for making it mandatory, if he can enter into the agreements and reach the same end without the machinery and the embarrassment that would be necessarily involved, the committee thought it was best for him to have that power.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is also true, is it not, if the Senator will yield further, that the exemption from anti-trust laws extends to all parties who handle agricultural commodities, and not merely to processors?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. If it did not we would have one contradicting the other.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In subdivision (3) of paragraph 8 the word "basic" appears to have been retained unchanged because it was in the original bill and was approved by the Senate. There has been some intimation in the press that a supplemental measure will be presented which will eliminate the word "basic" from subdivision (3). Is that in prospect?

Mr. SMITH. That is true. It has been requested. Under the rules we will have to have an independent resolution passed eliminating that word.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if the House has not already passed a concurrent resolution for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to understand thoroughly the effect from two standpoints. In the first place, the Senator said the provision gives the right to suspend the antitrust laws as to all processors of agricultural products. Does that include cotton mills?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Does it include packers?

Mr. SMITH. It includes all.

Mr. BLACK. Does it include shoe factories?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think shoe factories come under its provisions at all.

Mr. BLACK. It would include the processing of the hide, but it would not include the manufacture of shoes?

Mr. SMITH. If they were to compete with any agricultural products, though I do not know just how they would come in; I suppose the Secretary would have the power to include them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to make a statement to my colleague, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the junior Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The clause referred to is designed to provide that only agreements made with the Government shall be exempt from the effects of the antitrust law. It does not permit any agreement among the processors themselves.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is not to be assumed that the agreements that may be made will be violative of the Antitrust Act. The point is that if an agreement is made with the Government by the processors the arrangement ought not to permit of a prosecution under the antitrust laws. That was all argued out in the Senate when the bill was before the Senate. It was maintained then that it would not be fair for the Government to authorize entering into an agreement and then prosecute one of the parties to the agreement for having entered into it.

Mr. SMITH. Did I understand the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to ask if processors might have agreements amongst themselves suspending the antitrust law?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no; that could not be done. That would apply only to agreements made with the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose they have an agreement among themselves fixing prices, which is approved by the Government; would that be permissible and would that suspend the antitrust law?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has read the bill. He knows just to what extent the power is given the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into the agreements. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has already pointed out, the suspension of the operation of the antitrust laws in an agreement between the Government and an individual is for the purpose of expediting the relief of agriculture if in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture he finds that is the best course to pursue.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator one other question with reference to the striking out of the word "basic"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand that striking out the word "basic" has the effect of permitting agreements with certain businesses that compete with agricultural products that were not formerly included in the exemption?

Mr. SMITH. It gives the Secretary the right to cover the field with his agreements and does not restrict him to the enumerated articles.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator, for instance, as an example, if that would permit a suspension of the antitrust laws with reference to jute, which is in competition with cotton?

Mr. SMITH. I do not see any reason why the Secretary might not enter into an agreement with the processors of jute and effect that just as he does in the other cases.

Mr. BLACK. Could he do that if we leave in the word "basic" before "agricultural products"?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. We cannot hear the chairman of the committee at all on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BLACK. The question, then, that I desired to ask was this: As the Senate passed the bill, keeping in the word "basic", would it have been possible for the Secretary to make an agreement with jute manufacturers suspending the antitrust laws for their benefit?

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

Mr. BLACK. But the Senator does think that under the terms of the bill as the conferees have agreed on it, striking out the word "basic", there could be a suspension of the antitrust laws with reference to the jute manufacturers?

Mr. SMITH. That would necessarily depend. Of course, the Senate realizes that in this emergency we must give to the Secretary of Agriculture the fullest possible power to accomplish the purpose for which the bill is passed. I think all of us recognize the emergency; and therefore I hope that the Senate will recede.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. I am about to yield the floor, but I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the word "basic" is stricken out of the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Where?

Mr. SMITH. We struck out the word "basic", except in subsection (3) of section 8.

Mr. BORAH. Was not the word "basic" in the bill as it passed both the Senate and the House?

Mr. SMITH. It was.

Mr. BORAH. How did it get stricken out then?

Mr. SMITH. The word "basic" was included in part of the Senate proposition that was not included in the House bill and therefore went into conference. I offered the amendment here myself. Where the word "basic" was included in the bill by the House, however, of course, the conferees could not do otherwise than leave it in. That is the origin of the proposed joint resolution to strike it from the paragraph to which I refer.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this was an exceedingly bad bill as it passed the Senate. As it comes back from the conference, it is infinitely worse. This measure should be entitled "An act to promote bureaucracy, to impose embargoes, for the abdication of its powers and duties by Congress, and for the emasculation of the antitrust laws."

With remarkable supineness, the Senate conferees have succeeded in cutting out of the bill in their conference report practically every beneficial amendment that was put in during the consideration and debate of the bill in the Senate.

Great pride is exhibited in the newspapers in the fact that the Senate amendment including cane sugar and beet sugar in the basic commodities was stricken out of the bill, and I think it is a good thing to strike it out; but by the striking out of the word "basic" in the section relating to trade agreements, the Secretary of Agriculture is enabled, if he wants to, by a trade agreement, to put the Sugar Trust, the sugar refineries of the United States, in the position of having a greater stranglehold on the production and sale of sugar in this country than it has ever had before.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CLARK. I do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The talented Senator from Missouri has referred to the omission of sugar beets and sugar cane from specified basic commodities. Does the Senator realize that if exemption from antitrust laws is given to sugar processors, and if there is no inclusion among the basic articles of sugar beets and sugar cane, exceptional advantages will be given by law to the processors of sugar, and no assured minimum farm wage of pre-war prices will be provided to many forgotten farmers—men and women who grow sugar beets and sugar cane? In other words, safeguards thrown about wheat growers will, so far as the terms of the proposed statute reveal, not be extended to cane and beet growers.

Mr. CLARK. That is precisely the point that I was about to make, and I thank the Senator, because he has stated it much more clearly than I would have been able to do myself. This section with the word "basic" omitted is designed to strengthen the grip of the most merciless trust this Nation has ever seen.

The amendment inserted in the Senate requiring that the great army of agents and employees to be employed under this act—which, as I said in offering the amendment, will probably exceed in number the combined military and naval forces of the United States, and the reforestation army added on—should be, as far as possible, practical farmers, and should be confined in their efforts to the congressional district in which they live, was stricken out.

A week ago today, as I recall, the Senate wasted three hours and a half in a lengthy dispute as to whether the administrator under the $500,000,000 relief act should be paid $8,500 a year or $10,000 a year—a man necessarily required to be a technical expert, a position necessarily requiring a great administrator—and yet, under the terms of this conference report, there is no limit on the face of the report as to the number of $10,000 jobs that the Secretary of Agriculture may create.

If the Secretary of Agriculture and Professor Tugwell should conclude that it is necessary to have one hundred thousand $10,000-a-year experts to bring to the hogs of the United States a clearer and more complete understanding of the Prophet Ezekiel's logarithmic formula, he has complete authority under this act to appoint them. [Laughter.] The pledges of every Democratic platform for 40 years are made hollow mockery by the emasculation of the laws against trusts and monopolies.

The provision inserted in the Senate putting a limitation of 5 percent on the amount of the processing tax to be expended in administration was stricken out in conference, leaving absolutely no limitation whatever upon the enormous sums which may be squandered under this act. The Norris-Simpson amendment, embodying the solemn pledge of the Democratic national platform, is omitted from the report, although no man has yet been able to explain why the permissive—not mandatory—powers therein contained are any more unworkable and impractical than the rest of the bill.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, that we ought to have a record vote on this conference report and that the bill ought to be sent back to conference in order to have those salutary provisions reinserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, under section 36 of the bill as it passed the Senate, provision was made for relief in nearly every line of agricultural pursuit that might require relief by way of borrowing money; and, included, we sought to have the farmers of the West get just a little opportunity to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with the intention of paying back, bonding their districts, if you please, with the intention and purpose of paying the required interest. Among those districts that might have been benefited by this act were the districts that were created by the Newlands Reclamation Act—the districts where the farm-seeking people of the world were invited to come into the arid West and reclaim that territory. Those people now find themselves, by reason of a prevailing condition, unable to pay the charges imposed upon them by the Government itself for maintenance and operation. All they sought by my amendment to the Wagner bill was to be permitted to borrow sufficient amounts to pay the maintenance and operation charges of last year, if you please, and to carry out the privileges and the powers and the rights and the obligations that were imposed upon them by the Newlands Reclamation Act and their contractual obligations with the Federal Government.

In some instances the settlers on these projects, for the purpose of relieving themselves from the red tape and expense imposed upon them by the Reclamation Bureau, had special acts passed in the respective States whereby they might take over to themselves, for themselves, under their own administration, the projects in which they were the farmers, and organize their districts as bodies corporate, if you please, so that they might elect their own boards of directors, and, by the election of their own boards of directors, cut down the expense naturally attendant upon the project when it was under the supervision of the Reclamation Bureau.

These projects now conducting their own business find themselves in the condition that prevails with reference to all other farming communities, and they sought by my amendment to this bill to have some relief. On page 55, as the bill returns here, commencing with the first line of section 36 and reading down to and inclusive of the word "State" in line 17, the conference committee saw fit to retain that part of the section. Thereby drainage districts and levee districts in the South, on the Mississippi, are protected, and they may borrow; but from there on, it is all stricken out by the conferees, and the learned chairman here, speaking for the conferees, says that he agreed to yield, that my amendment might be stricken. So that those who represent this very industry that we encouraged by the Newlands Reclamation Act, those who went into these projects and reclaimed the West, are now, by the act of this conference committee, deprived of the right to come in and ask their own Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be allowed to borrow sufficient to pay the charges of operation from year to year during the emergency.

Let me explain the situation, because I take it that this matter is not understood by those who are not familiar with a Federal reclamation project.

There are certain charges for maintenance and operation that cannot be avoided. The Government imposes those charges. What are they for? They are for the purpose of maintaining the canals and laterals that must be taken care of every year. They are for the purpose of protecting the dams that impound the water and divert it from the natural water courses, so that it may reclaim the land. May I with propriety say that one object of my amendment was to meet a condition that is personally known to me, where a dam costing the Government of the United States nearly $7,000,000 is now in such a condition that the spillway apron of that dam is about to disintegrate. These farmers, conducting this project themselves, are required to protect that dam under their contract with the Government, and yet they have not the money with which to do it, and will not be able to do it unless they can borrow the money under the amendment that I offered and had placed in the bill, commencing with the figure (2) on line 1 of page 56 of the bill as it returns here, down to and including the word "project", the amendment reading as follows:

(2) To irrigation districts organized under the laws of any State, and operating under contract with the United States, to aid in the payment of their operation and maintenance charges and to provide funds for the installation and operation of necessary works, and to protect the rights of the United States in the project.

There was nothing in that amendment that indicated that these irrigation districts would not pay back the loans that they wanted to make, the money that they wished to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is nothing in my amendment that would make insecure $1 or any sum borrowed by these farmers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Indeed, if other loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under congressional sanction were as secure or as certain of being repaid as the loans provided for by the amendment which I offered to the Wagner bill, the Government and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, acting for the Government, would have little to worry over.

The fact of the matter is that if the bill carries reference to any activity on earth from which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may hope to receive back the money it lends, it is the provision relating to loans to farmers' organizations, especially western reclamation projects, because they borrow with the intention of paying back, and that cannot be said of some of the other borrowers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that every other conceivable organization, every other kind of a body, every other class of business has been permitted to come in and borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, why, in God's name, cannot the actual farmer who tills the soil, who plows the sagebrush, who is willing to take himself and his family out into the desert and face the winds of the desert to reclaim the West be permitted to borrow from his Government—to protect the Government's own property, if nothing else?

I understand it has been asserted that to carry out the provisions of my amendment to the Wagner bill it would be necessary to increase the amount from $50,000,000 to some greater sum. This assertion is entirely unfounded. The amount of money required for maintenance and operation charges on reclamation projects from year to year is not so great that it would have materially affected the enormous sum of $50,000,000 placed at the disposal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be loaned to drainage, irrigation, and levee districts.

The amendment which I proposed to the Wagner amendment to the farm relief bill was the only comfort or assistance that might be looked to by the western farmer growing out of this legislation. The sum involved was but a pittance as compared with the millions that will be taken for levee and drainage districts along the Mississippi. The failure of the conference committee to sustain my amendment strikes a blow at the tillers of the soil and the reclaimers of the desert and the builders of communities in these Federal reclamation projects established under and by sanction of the Newlands Reclamation Act. I realize that there are those in this Chamber who have little or no sympathy with reclamation projects. I realize that it is difficult for my colleagues here on the floor of the Senate who have never visited the West and have no knowledge of the history or operation of reclamation projects to understand or realize either the methods of their operation or the vast benefits that flow from their existence.

Mr. President, it would be a glorious thing if there were more reclamation projects in America, into which and onto which there might come honest men and women, willing, capable, and competent to bend their individual efforts and cause two blades of grass to grow where one had formerly grown, and cause the soil to produce sufficient for their own sustenance and for the sustenance of their dependent ones. All the millions that may be appropriated for unemployment relief, for emergency doles, if you please, are at best but temporary in their nature and go nowhere toward the upbuilding of national life; but the moneys of the Government extended by way of encouragement to the men or women who, tilling the soil, support themselves, is money well expended, leads to national security, and builds a nation of industry. The honest tiller of the soil seeks for no dole. He only seeks an opportunity to cope with the forces of nature, cause the soil to produce and support himself and his family. The millions of acres now in the vast West, yet unclaimed, must in the days to come constitute the haven to which honest toil will turn, on which homes will be constructed and out of which a national life and a national destiny will be perpetuated.

Why, Mr. President, should we be willing to extend a helping hand to everyone who seeks to borrow Federal money but deny to the builders of the Nation the right to prosecute an honest pursuit, out of which they will support themselves and thus lighten the burden of national obligation?

Mr. President, for the reasons I have given, I must oppose the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

On a roll call, the conference report was adopted and the McCarran amendment was lost.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say a word or two on the conference report before the vote is taken.

It seems to me that Senators ought to remember, to begin with, that all legislation is more or less the result of compromise. Necessarily, in order to reach any agreement, a conference committee must compromise. In this case the committee has stricken out, in the compromise, an amendment which, in my judgment, as far as the farm portion of the bill is concerned, is more important than any other. I believe under it a great deal of good could have been done for the farmers. But I must say that the conferees acted absolutely fairly with the Senate. I think the record shows that the conferees on the part of the Senate did the best they could to retain the amendment. They refused to agree to having it stricken out, and the House conferees took the matter back to the House. That was a fair thing to do. That was a courteous and a gentlemanly and a logical way to proceed. The House rejected the amendment by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. President, I should have liked to see that amendment stay in the measure, but it looks to me as though it is a practical impossibility, with the record before us, to retain that amendment, even if we should reject the pending conference report.

There were a great many other good features in the bill which have been kept in. I recognize that every Senator must balance in his own mind the importance of amendments which he favors, and which have gone out, and put on the other side of the scales the probability of accomplishing anything in the desired direction if we reject the conference report.

If the House had not acted on the amendment to which I have referred I would have been here today advocating the rejection of this conference report; but I do not see how we can ask of our conferees, as far as that amendment is concerned, anyway, any greater work or any more fidelity to duty than they have exhibited. They went to the extreme. I think they were justified in doing that; but, as I look at it, they did their absolute duty. They refused to consent to the elimination of the amendment until the logical step was taken which the House conferees agreed to take, until the bill was carried back for action in the House. If the amendment had been defeated by a close vote in the House, I might feel differently about it, but it was defeated by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that that was the only amendment in disagreement, and we insisted that the House conferees take it back and get a vote on it.

Mr. NORRIS. They took it back, and the House has acted. With the action of the House on that particular amendment before us, as much as I favor it, I must say that I believe nothing else could be accomplished. If it were a separate bill, standing alone, and the same action had been taken, if the House rejected it, no matter how we might feel about it, we would have to accept the result.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not desire to make a speech, but I want to say that I shall vote for the conference report and for the bill solely because provision for inflation has been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is one of the best things in the bill, I think. We have sometimes to yield in order to accomplish the enactment of any legislation, and, for the reasons I have stated, I believe we ought to approve the pending conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the fact that a separate vote was taken in the House on the amendment to which he has been referring.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The RECORD shows that the vote was on a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, which was a direct vote on the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. A direct vote; yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And that the vote was 109 in favor of the motion, to 283 against.

Mr. NORRIS. With that vote staring us in the face, I do not believe we are justified in delaying longer final action.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If a majority should vote against the adoption of the report, it would have the effect of sending it back to conference?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a final disposition?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. But there is nothing about which to confer except this one amendment, and the House, by the vote just mentioned, rejected it.

Mr. BORAH. I recall that at the last session the House, on three different occasions, voted a certain way, and finally, on the fourth, reversed its position on the matter; so that there is a possibility of their changing in regard to this.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that there is a possibility that that might happen.

Mr. BORAH. I believe the cost-of-production provision, so far as the farm part of the legislation is concerned, is the most important part of the measure. I am in favor of making every effort to secure it as a part of the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. There is another thing about it. That provision, like all the other provisions in the farm part of the bill, would not be compulsory on the Secretary of Agriculture. That could be retained and still not be enforced. I was very glad to help put that provision in, in the committee, and was glad to defend it on the floor of the Senate, and I should like to see it in the law. I believe there is a principle involved which is a right principle. I do not want to ask our farmers to produce anything at a loss. They are entitled to cost of production.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to have clear in my mind what the status of the cost-of-production feature is to be if we adopt this report.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be out of the bill, and our adoption of the conference report, as I understand it, will be the final act. I think that is correct.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand the situation, the Senator from South Carolina stated that he intended to move to recede to the House on this cost-of-production provision after the report was adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. He could not do that, as I understand the present parliamentary situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the conference report, which does not include amendment no. 83. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has announced that after the conference report is agreed to, he will move that the Senate recede from its position on amendment no. 83.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say that in view of the circumstances I shall vote for this partial agreement, but I shall also vote against receding from the position of the Senate on the cost-of-production amendment, and I shall vote against the joint resolution proposing to strike out the word "basic", and to extend the power to make agreements under immunity from the Antitrust Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is absent from the Chamber. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], and vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I understand that if he were present, he would vote the same as I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO].

I am advised that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] would vote "nay" if present and voting, and that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] would vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business: The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR].

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 28, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH. The vote now to be taken is on the acceptance or rejection of the so-called "Norris amendment"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was just going to lay before the Senate a communication from the House, but has not yet had an opportunity. The clerk will read it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 9, 1933.

Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 83 to the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment no. 83.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on the pending motion I desire to say that it seems to me part III of this bill, which is known as "amendment no. 83", is one of the most important provisions of the whole measure. The title of this proposed act is "to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power." There is no way on earth to increase agricultural purchasing power except by giving the farmer cost of the production of his products. The amendment provides in subsection 2 of section 20 for the farmer receiving "the average domestic cost of production, including therein a reasonable profit, for the commodity."

Mr. President, part III of the bill, providing for cost of production, is only 1 option of 3 in the measure which would increase the purchasing power of the farmer. It should be adopted. Personally, I will say that I voted against the conference report because it did not contain this provision, and I shall now vote against the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

This amendment, it seems to me, is the one thing that the farmers of the United States are demanding in this legislation; it is the one thing in this bill which is of far more interest to them than any other. It is true that inflation may help some; it is true that the refinancing provisions may help some by lowering the rate of interest a little bit; but refinancing is only a 5-year proposition; it is not anything permanent. Amendment numbered 83, it seems to me, would give the Department of Agriculture, if it is adopted, a chance to give the farmers a purchasing power, to put agriculture on a paying basis, by giving the farmers an average cost of production and a reasonable profit.

Throughout the Middle Western States, the great agricultural States, during the past few months there has been organized what is known as the "National Holiday Association", the members of which have announced that they are going on a strike on the 13th of this month, which is only a few days off. One of the things demanded by the Holiday Association is that they shall get the cost of production, and the reason why they are going on a strike, it is asserted, is that they do not get the cost of production for their products.

If the Senate shall recede from this amendment, that farmers' strike will undoubtedly begin on the 13th of the present month; and, Mr. President, I fear for the outcome of that strike; I fear for the safety of our Nation. In my opinion, without this amendment in the bill, Members of the Congress from agricultural States can hardly justify their votes for the bill. I hope that the motion of the Senator from South Carolina may be defeated, and that the amendment may again go to conference.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not recede from the amendment now under discussion. It seems to me that the Secretary of Agriculture has taken an entirely inconsistent position in his statement asking that this amendment be eliminated from the bill. First of all, in his letter which was sent to the committee the other day, the Secretary made the statement, as I recall—and if I am wrong about it I should like to have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina—that the cost of production was impossible of ascertainment. He further stated, in effect, that if the farmers were given cost of production, commodities would back up on the farm. Then, he made the further statement that the farmers of the country would get more under his proposed plan than they would under the cost-of-production plan. I submit that there is an absolute inconsistency in the statements made by the Secretary of Agriculture. First, he states that the adoption of the cost-of-production plan will result in backing up commodities on the farm because of the fact that the cost-of-production price would make prices too high. Secondly, he states that if the farmers should get what he proposes to give them, they would get more than they would get under the cost-of-production plan. Thirdly, he states that it is impossible to ascertain what the cost of production is, notwithstanding the fact that the Department of Agriculture has for years been asking the Congress of the United States to appropriate millions of dollars to find out what is the cost of production of the farmer's product; and the Department has actually given out statements setting forth what the cost of production is of wheat and cotton and various other commodities produced in the United States.

The Secretary of Agriculture is in the position of coming to the Congress of the United States and asking for unlimited power to abolish by agreement the effect of the Sherman antitrust law, and he asks that he be permitted to put into operation one of several different schemes for the purpose of raising commodity prices; but when the largest farm organization in the United States of America, representing more actual dirt farmers than all other farm organizations put together, request that there be inserted in this bill a provision giving the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion as to whether or not he shall put into operation the plan which they have proposed and for which they are asking, then, Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture states that he does not want that power. I say that it is unfair to the farmers of the Northwest; and, in my humble judgment, if we strike this amendment from the bill, we are really doing a disservice to the country. Not only has the Farmers' Union, which, as I said a moment ago, and which I want to impress upon the Senate, represents more actual dirt farmers in this country than all the remainder of the farm organizations put together, asked that the cost-of-production plan be incorporated in the bill, but likewise the farmers in Iowa, in Wisconsin, and throughout the Northwest, who have recently organized a new group and are now threatening a strike, have asked that this provision be placed in the bill. I see no reason in the world why this Congress, the Democratic Members of which pledged themselves in the Democratic National Convention to give the farmers cost of production for their products, should not have the courage to put the cost-of-production plan in the bill so that the Secretary of Agriculture may have the power in his discretion to place it in operation.

I want to say to any Senator from the Middle West, to any Senator from the Northwest, to any Representative from any of the farming States, that he is going to have a very difficult time explaining to his constituency, if we give the farmer cost of production, how it is going to back up the products on the farm, and then say to the farmer in the next breath that we are going to give him more under this bill than if he had cost of production. Talk about inconsistencies on the part of the Department of Agriculture! This seems to me to be the extreme limit.

Mr. President, I propose to vote against the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to recede from the amendment. I think it ought to be in the bill. I think Congress ought to keep it there. If the Department of Agriculture can find the cost of production, as they have said they have found it, then how can we go back and say to our people, "We will give you this kind of price fixing bill, but we will not give you something else you have asked for?"

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] referred to the ability of the Department to get cost-of-production figures. In yesterday's debate on the floor of the House Representative LEMKE, of North Dakota, made the statement that last January, which is January of the present year, the secretary of agriculture of the State of North Dakota had made an inquiry of the then Secretary of Agriculture in Washington in regard to the average cost of production of wheat for the 1932 crop and that the then Secretary of Agriculture last January made the report that for hard wheat the average cost of production was $1.01 per bushel and for winter wheat $1.14 per bushel.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to this statement in the Democratic national platform:

The enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmers to receive for their basic farm commodities prices in excess of cost.

That pledge was in the Democratic national platform which was drafted in the city of Chicago last year. I was one of the members of the committee that wrote it. We wrote it in the platform because of the fact that farm organizations came to Chicago and asked for that very provision. Now we are not only not going to give them a plan that would give them in excess of the cost of production but we are asking in this amendment that they be given only the actual cost of production. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]—and I appreciate that he is actuated by the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture has taken the position he has taken—is asking Members on this side of the Chamber actually to go back upon the promise made to the people in our Democratic national platform.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I made some remarks on the prior motion to agree to the conference report under a misapprehension of the parliamentary situation. I thought it was a complete report and that the cost-of-production amendment was included in it. I would not be willing to kill the bill by insisting upon the inclusion of the provision on which we are about to vote. I said what I did at that time on the theory that it was all included in the conference report. I was unwilling to prevent the adoption of the conference report and send it all back to conference by voting against the conference report. I find that I was wrong. This is a proposal outside of the conference report which has been agreed to. This is a proposal to pass on the particular amendment; in other words, it is a motion to recede. I believe that we are justified in sending it back to conference, and that would be the effect of defeating the motion, because its defeat would be followed by a motion to send it back to conference. So far as I am concerned, I should like to try it again in conference, and therefore I feel justified in voting against the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the vote in the body at the other end of the Capitol on this amendment, a direct vote rejecting it, I do not believe that the Senate is justified in delaying the final passage of the bill by taking steps to return the bill to conference. If the vote in the House had been close, Senators who favor amendment no. 83 would apparently be justified in that course even though they favor the bill. But with a vote of 109 in favor of amendment no. 83 and 283 against it, a vote that is nearly 3 to 1 against it, it is apparent that the Senate will finally yield on the amendment.

By reason of the injection into the farm relief bill of important but comparatively irrelevant matters, the consideration of the measure already has been long drawn out. Quite naturally those who are opposed to the legislation join in proceedings calculated to defer its enactment in the hope that its defeat might finally be accomplished. Already the planting season in many sections of the country is far advanced. If the provisions of the bill having relationship to agricultural-commodity prices are to have any effect during this season, the measure must be quickly disposed of.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in my judgment, in his first statement took the correct position on the subject. I know there is much support here for the so-called "cost-of-production amendment." It is well known to the Senate that I did not favor it when the bill was under consideration. For that reason I have no right to speak for or attempt to bind those Senators who did favor it. But with the Secretary of Agriculture vested with discretion in the use of the plan, with his announcement generally understood that he would not resort to the plan, nothing whatever is to be accomplished by incorporating it in the bill except perhaps embarrassment as to the administration of other features of the bill.

I shall not go at length into the merits of the cost-of-production plan for the relief of agriculture. It developed here that the proponents of the plan contemplated such a system of reaching a conclusion as to what constitutes cost of production that the conclusion would have little relationship to any statistics that are available from any source.

Reference has been made to the provision of the Democratic platform that prices be promoted for agricultural commodities that would exceed the cost of production. That standard, of course, is somewhat indefinite. The plan incorporated in the bill, the fair exchange value, in most instances would support prices that would exceed any cost-of-production arrangement that might be worked out. There are probably some instances in which that would not be true, but if the fair exchange value can be given effect it would result in justice to every one and in injustice to no one. It would be the equivalent of the cost of production except in a few cases.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Arkansas made the statement that it would be an injustice to no one if the fair exchange value was adopted. In cases where the fair exchange value is less than cost of production, it would be gross injustice to every farmer who produces commodities that come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have already said that cost of production usually is actually less than the fair exchange value as contemplated in the bill.

To give an illustration, which is one that I discussed here some time ago, some of the proponents advocating the amendment before the committee took the position that in order to give cost of production it would be necessary to fix prices at $1.50 per bushel for wheat and 23 cents per pound for cotton. I say that the conclusion is so erroneous as to raise a question as to the value of the judgment of those asserting it. It does not cost anything like 23 cents a pound to grow cotton, and every Senator from a cotton State knows that is true. It does not cost anything like $1.50 per bushel, save perhaps in certain comparatively small localities, to produce wheat. After all, an average must be taken. It costs less than 10 cents a pound to produce cotton in the cotton-growing States under present conditions. It costs less than $1 per bushel to produce wheat in most of the wheat-growing sections of the country under present conditions.

There is no use in attempting to fool the American farmer. There is no plan that can be resorted to that will fix the price of cotton at 23 cents a pound in the United States without destroying both the cotton-production industry and the cotton-manufacturing industry. A similar provision is correct with respect to the production of wheat. But, after all, those who favor the cost-of-production amendment must realize that in order for the legislation to become effective at all there must be an agreement between the two Houses. The Senate conferees have been fair about the matter. Even after the House took the vote of 109 to 283 against the amendment, the conferees did not attempt to enter into an agreement but brought it back here for instructions from the Senate. If we should send the bill back to conference, as many are disposed to do, there would be still further delay, and the result would be that in all probability we would have to yield in the end.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, just a word.

The farmers of my State are wondering why the administration is so zealous in avoiding competition and cut-throat prices in all things that the farmers have to buy, while it is strenuously opposing fair cost of production to the farmers.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to call attention again to the Democratic platform in two particulars.

I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that it does not cost the farmers of the United States a dollar and a half a bushel to produce wheat at the present time. I do not know anything about cotton, but I assume likewise that he is correct when he states that it does not cost 23 cents a pound to produce cotton at the present time. In this amendment there is no mention of fixing the price of wheat at $1.50 a bushel, nor is there any mention of fixing the price of cotton at 23 cents a pound, although I should like to see the farmers get that price for their products. The amendment simply provides that the cost of production shall be found, and the only people who will find it will be the Department of Agriculture when they fix it.

The cost-of-production provision of this bill is much simpler, much easier, it seems to me, to put into operation, much more consistent with Democratic principles, than other features of the bill, in that it does not build up a great bureaucracy here in Washington; it does not seek to regulate every farmer in the United States; it does not seek to put a processing tax upon various industries, as is proposed under the bill; it does not seek to break down the Sherman antitrust law. And let me call attention to this fact:

In the Democratic platform we have this provision:

We advocate strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices.

Yet the effect of this bill as it now comes from the conference committee is completely to break down the Sherman antitrust law. The effect of it is to permit one man—the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States of America—to enter into agreements with the packers of this country, with the millers of this country, and also with any other industry that he wants to enter into an agreement with in order, he may say, to carry out the provisions of the bill.

The Members of the Senate ought to realize, when they are casting a vote for this bill under these circumstances, what they are doing. We ought to have the courage to stand up and express our own individual views with reference to these matters, and not simply take the dictation of some professor down here in the Department of Agriculture as to what we should do and what we should not do with reference to these promises that we have made to the farmers and to the other people of this country.

So far as I am concerned, I want to say that when we strike out this provision we are violating two provisions of the Democratic national platform adopted in the city of Chicago less than a year ago. We ought to realize the tremendous power that we are placing in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, first, as I say, to fix prices. Talk about a price-fixing scheme! The so-called "allotment plan" is nothing more than a price-fixing scheme. Then I want to repeat what I said a moment ago as to the inconsistent position taken in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. First, he says that if we give the cost of production, commodities will back up on the farm. Then he says in the same letter that if we pass this bill, the farmers will get more than they will get under the cost-of-production plan. I am perfectly amazed, and I want simply to say this in conclusion:

I dislike very much to have to disagree with the Secretary of Agriculture, in whom I have a great deal of confidence and for whom I have a great deal of respect; but I think he is wrong in this instance. I think he is wrong when he comes here asking for power to place a tax upon commodities, when he asks for power to let these people enter into agreements with him violating the Sherman antitrust law; and I think the Democratic Party will deeply regret the action it takes when it passes this bill containing some of these provisions. I think we are going to have to explain our action to the people of this country when we break down the Sherman antitrust law in the face of platform pledges, in the face of the long-established principles of our party.

I, for one, am going to assert my independence. I am going to vote to keep the platform pledge. I am going to vote to keep the promises that I made to the farmers of my

State, and not only to the farmers of my State, but to the farmers in the entire Northwest, in Iowa, in Minnesota, in North Dakota, in Wyoming, in Utah, and in Idaho, because I went upon the public platform and said that when we adopted this platform we meant what we said.

I never intended to vote for a bill giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power absolutely and completely to break down the Sherman antitrust law, and to let one man say what is a good monopoly and what is a bad monopoly. I never intended to vote to give to one man the power to tax the people. I never intended, after making these pledges and saying to the people of this country, "We are going to give you cost of production", to have one man come here and say, "We are not going to do it; and not only will we not do it but we will not even let the Congress of the United States give us the discretion to use the cost-of-production plan in the event that we find that our own scheme does not work out."

I hope the motion of the Senator from South Carolina will be voted down.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the remark made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] a few moments ago, in regard to "fooling the American farmer", reminded me of a statement made recently by John Simpson, the president of the National Farmers' Union organization. He referred to the paragraph in the Democratic platform that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] read a few moments ago about giving the farmers cost of production for their products. Mr. Simpson said that he was a delegate from the State of Oklahoma, his own State, to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, and was very anxious to get that provision in the platform, and succeeded in doing so with the help of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Mr. Simpson states that he campaigned in 12 or 14 of the greatest agricultural States of the Nation last fall during the campaign, he made over a hundred speeches, and especially stressed that feature of the Democratic platform that the farmers would get cost of production for the amount of their basic products used for home consumption here in the United States.

Mr. President, I submit that if we strike out this provision for cost of production it will amount to a repudiation of the Democratic platform, and also of the Republican platform, because in the Republican platforms of the last 2 or 3 conventions we have promised practically the same thing. So it seems to me that if this is stricken out, it means fooling the farmers some more; and I want to say right here that the farmers of the Nation, not only in the Middle West but in the South and in the East and all over the Nation, are in no mood to be fooled any longer. They want cost of production for their products. They are entitled to it. They should have it. They have been promised cost of production by the Democratic Party, which swept the Nation last fall. They have been promised cost of production in the past and fooled by the Republican Party; and now are they going to be fooled again by the Democratic Party? If they are, it is going to be just too bad for that party.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 83. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PATTERSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in regard to my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I am informed that that Senator, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I understand that if he were present he would vote the same way that I shall vote. Feeling at liberty to vote, therefore, I vote "yea." I am advised that on this question the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr.

METCALF] is specially paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], who, if present, would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN] is unavoidably absent on public business, and that, if present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. McADOO. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I refrain from voting. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

I also desire to state that I am advised that the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF and Mr. HEBERT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] would, if present, vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. LEWIS], who is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—48

Adams	Connally	Harrison	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	Hastings	Reed

So the motion of Mr. SMITH that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 83 was agreed to.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT OF FARM RELIEF BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 18, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to strike out the word "basic" where it appears in subsection (3) of section 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not think we should adopt that concurrent resolution without having a vote on it. I want it known that I am opposed to the resolution if it is going to be adopted in its present form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5081) to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMITH, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. McNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4220, for the protection of Government records.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On Monday last this bill was passed and a motion was made and agreed to to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I had assumed that somebody would present this measure and explain it. If nobody will, I will endeavor, for the benefit of the authors of the bill, to make the explanation which I think is appropriate, and then to state why I am against the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations was appointed to consider House bill 4220 and to propose amendments to it. The bill as it came from the House provided that certain acts committed by the press should be considered as criminal acts. All of that portion of the measure has been eliminated. The only act made a crime by the measure as it now stands is that of a person who, by virtue of his employment, acquires certain Government records, or correspondence between governments, and publishes it, or gives it to another to publish.

Mr. President, in its present form the measure provides—

That whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, shall obtain from another or having custody of or access to, or having had custody of or access to, any official diplomatic code or any matter prepared in any such code, or which purports to have been prepared in any such code, shall willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publish or furnish to another any such code or matter, or any matter which was obtained while in the process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

In the first place, it will be observed that the measure is limited to the individual. It will also be observed that he must acquire possession of the diplomatic papers by virtue of his office. In other words, the individual will be guilty of a breach of confidence, and, to some extent, guilty of an act almost verging on treason, in violating the extraordinary confidence placed in him by virtue of his office, where he might obtain possession of code messages, whether those code messages were of his own Government or of some other government. In my opinion, it is unconscionable for trusted employees to publish private correspondence between foreign governments which they obtain by virtue of their office. That is all that is covered in the measure, in my opinion.

There has been some objection to the words "or which purports to have been prepared in any such code", on line 9, page 3. The reason for that is this: If a message purports to be a code message between some foreign government and our Government, or between two foreign governments, and it is obtained by one through virtue of his office, or through his ability to crack a code which he has been taught by our Government, it might be found almost impossible to prove that it was a code of the foreign government without placing the representatives of that foreign government on the witness stand. But if a man is in a position of trust and confidence, and the message purports to be a code message, whether it is a code message or not a code message, he still would be violating his trust if he deliberately and willfully published it or deliberately and willfully gave it to another to be published without competent authority, as provided in the bill.

I do not think we should encourage trusted officers, who are in such confidential relationship, who are taught by the United States Government to interpret other codes than their own, who must have great confidence reposed in them, willfully and deliberately, without authority, to utilize that private information to the embarrassment of our Government, or of any government with which we are friendly.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am rather curious to know what it is that we have managed to go along from the First Congress to the Seventy-third without this sort of legislation. What is the purpose of it at this time?

Let me ask a further question before the Senator answers. This measure apparently is quite broad enough to bring about the imprisonment or the fining of a man for publishing anything in any diplomatic code. For instance, if I were a Government employee and I should by some means have access to a code of any nation on earth, and should publish any part of that code, having nothing to do with my own country at all—it might be a message passing between two European governments—if I got possession of that and published it in this country, I could, under this measure, be subjected to fine and imprisonment. I am wondering whether it is necessary at this time to have this kind of legislation enacted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will state that in the past our Government apparently has been very fortunate in having trusted employees in these extremely confidential positions. It has, however, recently found, or believes it has found, that there are grounds for suspecting that that confidence has been violated, and may be violated again. If this measure did not apply to information obtained by an officer through his public employment, I could understand why it would be pretty broad to say that the Senator from Washington, or anyone else, should not pick a code message out of the air and publish it. This measure applies only to one who obtains possession of information by virtue of his employment by the United States, not to anybody else.

Mr. BONE. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. Is this bill designed to punish someone who has already committed some such offense?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think not, because in that event it would be an ex post facto law. It is, rather, a warning of what the department considers a violation of a trust. According to the Secretary of State, it is deemed advisable in the future to protect the Department against such breaches of trust as are covered by the bill.

I ask leave at this time to place in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of State with regard to the matter. I will not take the time to read it or comment upon it, except to say that he disclaims emphatically any desire, in the first place, to have this measure refer to the press or in any way restrict the press in the publication of facts; that he had no knowledge that the bill was in that form when it was presented to the House of Representatives, and that he approves the bill in the form in which it now stands with the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MAY 6, 1933.

The Honorable KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of May 3, 1933, regarding the bill (H.R. 4220) for the protection of Government records, and I submit, for your information and for such use as you may think proper, the following statement as to the genesis of the bill.

When I assumed my present official position at the State Department I soon learned that certain individual acts of interference with secret governmental code information in process of transmission between this and other countries, or like information in process of transmission between a government and its diplomatic mission in the United States, and the threat to make the results public, imperatively called for immediate action making such publication unlawful.

I, thereupon, telephoned a ranking member of the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives, calling attention to this state of facts and suggesting appropriate legislation to make unauthorized publication of the particular kind of code information just described, unlawful. I think I suggested to one of the attorneys in the State Department that he might well have a similar telephone conversation with a member or members of the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives, which he later informed me he had immediately proceeded to do. Some days later I was informed that a number of officials in two or three branches of the public service collaborated in the preparation of the measure against which you complain, and also that certain of its provisions were being objected to upon the ground that they infringed upon the freedom of the press.

Such effects as to the press, of course, were not remotely contemplated by myself in telephoning, nor I am sure, were they contemplated by those responsible for the final draft of the bill in question. At any rate, I at once urged that any provisions that could possibly be construed as to the least extent affecting the freedom of the press be stricken out of the bill. There is not the slightest relationship between the protection of code information as aforesaid and the utmost freedom of the press. And besides, my individual view is that the American public should suffer incalculable injuries in other respects before the freedom of the press should be injuriously affected to any material extent whatever. I think I have a consistent public record of 40 years in support of this doctrine.

Sincerely,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. JOHNSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question before he sits down. I merely want to ask the Senator for an explanation of the words "or any matter which was obtained while in the process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States."

As I read those words, they are not limited to questions involving a code, but apply to any matter obtained in transmission of the kind indicated. I was wondering what, in the judgment of the Senator, the necessity was for those words.

Mr. PITTMAN. It would undoubtedly cover mail correspondence as well as wireless and telegraph messages in code. If a message were telegraphed or sent by wireless and were not in code, then the provisions of the bill would not apply; but if some employee of our Government "by virtue of his employment"—for I will have to tie everything to those words—obtained possession of a mail sack of the British Government directed to the British Ambassador here and robbed it, or if he got possession of it in any way by virtue of his employment under the United States, I say that he should be punished.

Mr. CUTTING. I agree with the Senator to that extent, but I cannot read the bill as the Senator reads it. To my mind "by virtue of his employment by the United States" applies only to the obtaining of a code or other document and anyone who shall obtain such code is thereupon forbidden from publishing not merely the code but possibly any matter obtained, as the Senator says, while in transit through the mails.

Mr. PITTMAN. The interpretation I put on it, of course, is that the prohibition applies only to those who obtain the matter by virtue of their employment, whether it be a code message by air or a communication lying on a desk which is intended to be confidential or a letter that is left on the table by accident in the office of the Secretary of State by a foreign ambassador. I think the words "by virtue of his employment" qualify both acts.

Mr. CUTTING. I apologize to the Senator from California for taking his time. I intend to discuss the pending measure at greater length later.

NOTIFICATION OF NOMINATION OF J. F. T. O'CONNOR

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor as Comptroller of the Currency. I think there is no objection to the request.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has the Senator consulted the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]?

Mr. LONG. I tried to see him, but he was not here.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Oregon objected on a previous occasion, and I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he wait until the Senator from Oregon shall be present before he makes the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4220) for the protection of Government records.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON. No. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, the suggestion was made by the Senator from Indiana that I yield for the purpose of having a quorum called. I deem it wholly unnecessary, because those who, like myself, have an academic or another sort of interest in a measure of this kind would probably have very short shrift at this particular time in the pleading effort to create another crime at the instance of a particular department of the Government.

Mr. President, it will be observed that the title of this bill is "An act for the protection of Government records." On the calendar it is thus described as well—"An act for the protection of Government records." As you read the bill, Mr. President, you may regard it as quite innocent, as an ordinary measure, creating another crime, it is true, but creating a crime designated therein that is repugnant, of course, to everyone who believes in the sacredness of fiduciary relations. Upon its face the bill is as conventional as a wedding and as respectable as a funeral. It is a measure, Mr. President, that as you read it would indicate that some wrong has been committed in the past or some wrong is about to be committed or may be committed in the future that should meet with condign punishment from the Government and should be repugnant to and should be reprehended by every man who is called upon to pass upon a bill of this sort.

But, Mr. President, if one reads with care, if one analyzes the bill as one ought to analyze a measure creating a new crime, if we look at the measure in its implications and its possibilities, it is not quite so innocent as it appears at first blush, and it does not accomplish the result that was sought when the bill was presented. Probably there are not many Members of the Senate here who are interested in this bill at all, but those who are here ought to know its genesis, and they ought to understand exactly why it was presented in this fashion that it was.

It happened that on a certain day young gentlemen from the State Department rushed into the Capitol here, and said that, as a matter of emergency, in order that guns should not rumble at our doors, we should forthwith pass this measure. Indeed, so persuasive were they with the House that the House considered it without ever telling its Members why it was presented and without Members of the House knowing at all the subject matter of the bill or the reason for the emergency. "Emergency" was cried again and again in the House in respect to this measure; it was cried so successfully that I think within the short space of a very few hours the bill which was to rescue us from war was passed without report, without knowledge, and without disclosure of any kind or any character. "Emergency", in order that we should not do a great wrong to a foreign country; "emergency", sir, that we should be saved from the direful consequences, possibly of armed conflict. That emergency was a month and a half ago, and the bill has been pending ever since, but nobody has heard of any of the dreadful and terrible things occurring that it was asserted were going to happen unless this bill should forthwith become the law of the land. So the reason for the passage of the bill first so vehemently asserted, does not exist now, and, calmly scrutinizing the past, never did exist. The hysteria of the young gentlemen of the State Department has doubtless now been succeeded by a tempered judgment.

I dare state the facts because they have been published throughout this country and there is no use in further concealment. They are these: Somebody, whose name escapes me for the moment, was in the employment of the Government as a Secret Service man or as the head of one of the secret-service departments during the late war. This individual was a master of the breaking of codes. Until 1929 every first-class government had in its employment in its secret service an individual who broke the codes of every other country; and every other country on the face of the earth that considered itself a first-class power through its secret-service agents would, we will say, appropriate—we will not say "steal", but would appropriate—the code messages that would come into that country from another country, sent to the other's diplomatic agents. The nations employed individuals to break those codes and, then, of course, after they had been broken, they were read and digested by the officials of the country thus translating the codes of other nations.

Be it said to the credit of the Government of the United States and to the credit of the Secretary of State who came into office in 1929 that when that practice was found existing in our country he stopped it forthwith, and he closed the particular office that was devoted in our country to that sort of business; and probably—I do not speak, of course, with exact knowledge—but probably, sir, ours is the only first-class power in all the world not now doing this sort of reprehensible thing that has been done for many years in the past. But remember, always, that the other nations of the earth are doing it probably with our despatches sent to our diplomatic agents in their particular countries. So that was the situation in 1929.

An individual whose name I do not recall—it was published in all the newspapers, however, after the particular intelligence department was dispensed with in 1929—saw fit to publish a book called "The Black Chamber."

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will permit me, the name was Yardley.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yardley; that is the name. I thank the Senator from Missouri. Mr. Yardley published a book called "The Black Chamber." In that book he purported to set forth certain despatches that had come from the Japanese during the Disarmament Conference in 1922. I read the book at the time of its publication. There was nothing particularly startling about it; it was more or less interesting; and we all had the like feeling, I assume, and there could be no difference of opinion among any of us concerning the publication of the despatches set forth in the volume. He published code despatches from the Japanese Government to its representatives that had come into his hands in 1922 while working for the United States Government. But remember also that in 1922, when those despatches were received which Yardley published in his book, they were decoded at the request of our own high officials and put upon the desks of distinguished gentlemen who represented the United States of America, and they unquestionably were familiar with them and used them. All right!

Yardley committed his offense against good taste, against every rule that relates to fiduciary relations that we can suggest. I have nothing but indignation for that sort of act upon any man's part, and no sympathy whatsoever with him. After the publication of the book referred to he undertook recently to publish another containing despatches of the 1922 Disarmament Conference and relating, as had his first book, to that period. These were communications from the Japanese Government to its diplomatic agents here.

In 1932, or perhaps in the early part of this year, he was about to publish his second book. It was then that the great "emergency" arose. His manuscript, as I understand, was confiscated, and after its confiscation, then into the Halls of Congress came these frightened gentlemen to say that it was such a delicate, perilous, and immediate emergency that they had to have a new criminal statute. That was the 1st of April or thereabouts of this year. So this proposed statute was born.

Immediately upon the bill being passed by the House—and it was passed in such fashion that no one knew anything about it until it had been passed—the members of the press set up the usual howl of the press about the freedom of the press and how this sort of a statute would interfere with them. The result was that, of course, everybody ran to cover and the bill was amended in the twinkling of an eye in order that the press should not be interfered with and the freedom of the press at all hazards should be preserved. Then the original bill was reframed and the new measure is before us.

That is the story of the amendment. The amendment is infinitely better than the original bill, I grant, although, of course, as will be demonstrated during the progress of the afternoon doubtless by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the amendment is not in good English and makes no sense, but perhaps for that very reason it is infinitely better than the bill as originally presented. [Laughter.]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Without trying to incriminate anyone, I want to say that I was not a member of the subcommittee which prepared the amendment, but it was prepared by other gentlemen.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that. The gentlemen who were on the subcommittee which drafted the amendment prepared it with the idea of removing the obnoxious portions of the bill that had been passed by the House. There is no doubt about that. That they did not succeed is the contention I make. Their intentions were good, but their execution was not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am wondering what the Senator observed about the subcommittee? I happened to be a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I said the subcommittee's intentions were good, but its execution was bad.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his 50 percent agreement at least. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator is entirely welcome. [Laughter.]

Let us look at the bill as presented. I am speaking more or less academically in respect to this matter. I do not believe in creating unnecessary crimes. If it be essential that a crime should be created in order that punishment shall be meted out, I can recognize, of course, that it is proper for the legislature to undertake it; but unless an absolute necessity exists, I do not like the idea of creating additional crimes. Here is a bill designed to fit a particular case. It is a misfit and never will touch that case. It will rest upon the statute books, a criminal law with harsh penalties, until—far in the future, when its original purpose will have been forgotten—it will be used for another purpose for which it was never intended and may do gross wrong.

This has ever been the story of this kind of law made to fit some past particular offense. I shall not attempt to parse the sentences. My distinguished friend the English scholar and grammarian from New Mexico unquestionably will parse them for the delectation of the Senate. But I find that this measure provides:

That whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, shall obtain from another—

Is guilty of a crime. Under the plain import of the language of this particular measure, he is guilty of a crime for obtaining from another. But, sir, when we go farther—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, should he not be guilty? If he does such a terrible thing as that, should he not be guilty of a crime?

Mr. JOHNSON. Obtaining from another?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; I think so. In these days anybody that obtains anything from another ought to be condignly punished if he gets it, but the difficulty is with most of us that while we strive we do not succeed. [Laughter.]

Then we go on with the measure and we see that it provides that whosoever—shall willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publish or furnish to another any such code or matter, or any matter which has been obtained while in the process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] asked a question a moment ago about obtaining matter in transmission. The bill relates to obtaining matter in transmission between a government and its diplomatic mission in the United States, no matter how it shall be obtained.

But just prior to that we say "which purports to have been prepared in any such code." There is an implication, it seems to me, that ought not be written in a criminal statute. Whoever does a certain thing relating to a certain matter and publishes it, or anything that purports to be that kind of thing, is guilty of a crime. We cannot and ought not to enact a penal statute of that sort, and it ought not to be in any such loose language.

But we go far beyond that. When these gentlemen of the press fondly imagine that by this amendment they have corrected anything that related to them, they are simply suffering under a delusion. It is true that originally, with a bluntness that is very strange and that never before have we encountered in statutes of this sort, the press was made practically particeps criminis, and the Senate committee hastened to answer the call of anguish of the press, but this particular proposed statute would make them just as guilty under the law of conspiracy as they would be under the original statute. If they imagine that they have gotten clear by virtue of the amendment, they are entirely in error.

I am not so concerned with the press as I am with the making of a statute of this sort and with the right of any man to express himself exactly as he sees fit. Of course, freedom of the press is a matter of consequence that ought to be preserved, but the press will preserve it, Mr. President, without any of your valuable assistance or mine. They will take mighty good care that we do not interfere with their prerogatives. I am just as keen not to interfere with the prerogative of just the humble individual to express himself freely. Side by side the two prerogatives should be maintained, and each is fundamental, of course, in our kind of government.

The proposed statute is one made for a particular and specific case. Statutes of that sort are always doubtful. Sometimes they are necessary, I am willing to concede; but this measure is made in such fashion, so loosely drawn with implications and possibilities that may make for wrong and injustice, that it ought not to be passed. I am not interested in the individual who is sought to be reached by this kind of a measure, of course. I would do with him anything that might be justly desired, but keep in mind, sir, that we are not only touching him with this measure, but we are touching anyone else from whom he obtains something. We are touching someone through whom he may communicate and the like, and we may be striking at the very fundamentals that we would preserve in this country untouched and unharmed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, when this measure was brought before the Committee on Foreign Relations it was suggested by the eminent Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], as I remember, that the Secretary of State should come before the committee and explain why he wanted the bill passed. At a subsequent meeting of the committee the Secretary of State failed to appear, but in his stead came a clerk from that Department of the Government. His name escapes me now. With all the ability which the distinguished Senator from California possesses in cross-examination, and that is conceded by all of us to be much, it was impossible for him to learn from the clerk from the Department of State why they desired the law enacted.

Furthermore, it was suggested before the committee when Mr. Yardley's name was mentioned that the clerk tell us just how he got the information with respect to a prospective book, the manuscript of which Mr. Yardley was presumed to have prepared. The clerk from the Department of State answered the Senator from California something in this fashion: "Do I have to tell that to this committee?" Somebody asked him if he was not willing to tell it. He was told, in effect, "This is the Committee on Foreign Relations, dealing with the foreign relations of the American Government. It is our understanding that we have nothing to do with breaking down codes of other governments in recent years, certainly not since 1929. If that is the case, private affairs ought not to be broken into here in this country." That was how the question was suggested: "How did you get this information about Yardley?" He was silent. Up until this moment nobody knows how he got it.

Mr. President, it looks like a gag proposition from beginning to end. Representatives from the State Department might as well not have appeared before the Senate Committee. We received no worthwhile information from them at all. The committee is as much in the dark now as to why the legislation should be enacted as it was then.

Mr. President, since Mr. Yardley's name has been mentioned in the debate and brought into the question, I think I ought to do what I had not before intended to do. I think I ought to read a telegram from him. It happens that Mr. Yardley is a citizen of Indiana. On the eve of the hearing before the Foreign Relations Committee, I may say to the Senate, I did my best in the interest of fair play to have the Senate committee hear Mr. Yardley, but the committee refused to call him.

I had understood in conversation with Mr. Yardley that he had refused to call on the former Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, because he did not desire to discuss the question with him at all. But he stated that he would be glad to call on the present Secretary of State and have a complete and full conference with him with reference to his own activities or anything he had done. My understanding from Mr. Yardley is that Mr. Hull refused to see him or to discuss the matter with him, although I had the clear intimation from Mr. Yardley that Mr. Hull himself, or some agent of his Department, had suggested the interview. Since Yardley was not to be given an opportunity to appear before the committee, and since his name was being used constantly in connection with the legislation, I got in touch with him and asked him to send me by wire his own position, and, if it required a defense, his own defense, so that on behalf of an Indiana citizen I could state his position to the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand that Mr. Yardley, while in the employ of the Government, secured certain documents that were sent by another government to its agents here? Is that how he got them?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question, permit me to say that, so far as I understand the matter, Mr. Yardley some years ago wrote a book entitled "The American Black Chamber." It had, perhaps, a wide sale. He is said recently to have prepared a manuscript to be incorporated into another book. Just what that book will contain I do not know. What objectionable features are in it, if any, I do not know. Until this minute we have been unable to elicit from the State Department any important information on the subject, which makes me believe that the purpose of this legislation is far deeper and far more significant than anything with relation to Mr. Yardley.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not violating any confidence. I received the common street rumor that was going around that what had happened was that the gentleman, while in the employ of the Government, had come into contact with some messages sent by another government to some of their agents here in Washington, and, being very clever at the work of deciphering such messages, had been able to decipher them. I do not know whether this bill is supposed to try to protect them or not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There may be some truth in that. I am not familiar with the details. We have not been able to get them from any authoritative source. In any event, regardless of the facts with reference to Mr. Yardley, this bill would not reach him anyhow—not possibly—nor would it reach any book he has written, past or prospective, because the manuscript is in the hands of the publishers, and has been for, lo, these many weeks. As the Senator from California said so pertinently, it was sent to us as "a great emergency measure" that must be passed now, this instant. That has been 6 weeks and more ago, and nothing has been done with it until now. So I am certain in my own mind that there are other motives behind this proposed legislation, and entirely unrelated to Mr. Yardley.

Now, Mr. President, let me read Yardley's telegram under date of April 11:

Please refer to your telegram in which you ask that I give you my defense for my publications, since they seem to have inspired the new bill.

I presume you refer to "The American Black Chamber." The American Cipher Bureau, which intercepted and deciphered foreign code messages, was created by me in 1917 and directed by me until 1929, when the Government ordered it disbanded on the theory it was unethical to read foreign code messages.

My justifications for publishing The American Black Chamber, in which my activities are described, are:

(1) It could not injure this Government, because it proved to foreign nations that we would no longer stoop to this sort of espionage.

(2) It could not offend any foreign government, because it contained no material about their machinations in this country.

(3) It would, I hoped, awaken the conscience of the State Department, so that they would revise their own code systems and render American diplomatic secrets invulnerable to attack by clever foreign cryptographers.

(4) I assumed that the United States Government belonged to the American people, and since this Government had washed its hands of secret diplomacy, I saw no reason why the people should not know about the world in which we live—a world in which we are too unconcerned to follow the espionage practices of all great nations, a world in which we are even so unconcerned about our own diplomatic secrets as to use unsafe codes.

One press dispatch carries the story that the bill is to protect our own codes. Just to keep the record correct I wish to say that I have been very careful not to publish a single word about our own codes except to say a year or so ago that they were decipherable. If our codes have since been revised and are now indecipherable by master cryptographers of foreign nations, the publication of The American Black Chamber was not in vain.

This Government's fear of the unpublished manuscript now in its hands is, in my opinion, due to false sensational rumors originating in New York. It is a dull treatise for scholars and students of history. The ordinary person would fall asleep while reading it. Whether it is published or not is of no consequence to me. As a matter of fact, I am too busy in my laboratory completing my experiments on a commercial invisible secret ink for children and adults to write their letters with to be at all concerned about anything else.

HERBERT O. YARDLEY,
Worthington, Ind.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does Mr. Yardley, in the message to the Senator from Indiana, disclose where he did get the information—whether from the codes of foreign governments or otherwise?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; he states to me no more than what I have just read in his telegram.

Mr. CONNALLY. So he is not frank and free with the Senator. He does not tell him where he did get this information, and from what particular foreign nation he filched the information which he was peddling and wished to sell for money?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I understand that if he got any information he got it, probably, through his connection with this particular work in deciphering these codes, breaking them down. I do not know. I do not know what information he got. I am only suggesting that he claims that in none of his books, past or prospective, was there anything that in the least wise could be injurious either to this Government or to any other, or to this Government's relations with any other; and I am confirmed in my belief in Yardley's statement by what the Senator from California has said with reference to his notion about the same thing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator from Indiana think that his constituent, who expects him to defend him on the floor and repel any charges of bad faith or betrayal of his duty to the Government for which he worked, ought to have been frank enough with the Senator to have told him the truth about the matter, and to have revealed the sources of the information which he was selling for money?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why, bless the Senator's heart, we cannot get the truth from the State Department up until this minute! Nobody knows why they want this bill passed—not even the Senator from Texas. We did our best to get them to tell us. We asked them how they got hold of the manuscript of Yardley. "Did you steal it? Where did you get it?" Not a word. "Do I have to tell that?" they whimpered; and the Senator from Texas asks me why Yardley does not tell a lot of things! The Senator cannot get the information from his own State Department, though we are jointly responsible with the Executive of the Nation for the conduct of the foreign relations of this land.

I hold no brief for Yardley. I have not claimed to do so; but I want Yardley's statement to go in the RECORD. He has a right to that. This is still America, I hope. Every man is entitled to his day in court. I tried to get a fair deal for Yardley before the committee. The committee refused to hear him. We tried to hear the young man sent up by the State Department, and his voice was inaudible, and we could get utterly no information from him. So we are asked to pass this bill without one word, even at this moment.

We have made Mr. Roosevelt a dictator—a dictator. Nobody denies that statement. It is widely heralded on all sides. Now we propose to gag the American people with reference to all foreign relations, with the debt questions coming up, the question of destroying our tariff walls and permitting all foreign nations, with their low-paid labor, to dump their cheaply made products continuously on our soil, continuing to break the great American market and to destroy the American people, economically at least.

We have just had a series of conferences here, Mr. President. Though in office only 2 months, Mr. Roosevelt has seen fit to invite the representatives of all the great nations here. Though we are ourselves in sackcloth and ashes, and one would naturally imagine it would require all of his attention to remedy economic conditions in this country, with 15,000,000 men unemployed, he diverts as much of his energy as it requires to discuss foreign questions with the great men of Europe, who have come trooping here in these latter days. I make the bold assertion here and now that Europe and Japan know more about what took place at those conferences than the American people. Mr. Roosevelt has not yet seen fit, up to this moment, to take the American people into his confidence as to what transpired. What promises did he make to Great Britain with reference to their debt, or to France, or to Italy, or to any of them?

If this bill goes into effect, anything that purports to be secret is taboo, and the American people must be kept in ignorance. Not a word! Who is there here who does not remember the days just preceding the World War, when we had our secret agents running all over Europe, keeping the people in the dark? If there had been more "pitiless publicity" in that day, there would have been more "open covenants, openly arrived at", and America never would have gone into the war—never! never! Do you suppose, if the American people had known what Colonel House was doing in Europe in those days, that we ever would have gotten into that war? We have found out since what he did. We had him running over Europe secretly—secretly!—under a Democratic administration, which is presumed to believe in the people, and to be keeping the people informed. Now we have another Democratic administration, and immediately they attempt to apply the gag.

Dictatorial power? Yes. We understand that new dictatorial powers will be asked for shortly with reference to the debts, with reference to the tariff, and other economic questions. The much-advertised big international conference is coming in June; and when it comes—listen!—when it comes, if we pass this bill, it would not make any difference if an American citizen knew that information with which he came in contact, if given to the American people, would save the Nation; he would not dare publish it, and any newspaper that attempted to publish it without "proper authorization", whatever that is, would be engaged in a conspiracy with the party who attempted to publish that information, vital, it might be, to the life of the Republic.

Not a convincing reason has been suggested by any Member of the Senate for the passage of this gag law. The Senate itself has largely become a rubber stamp in these latter days. It will be completely so if we pass this measure. A Member of Congress in either House would not dare go out and publish any vital information he might get if Congress were not in session and he were unable to have congressional immunity from the law. Even though it were to save the Nation, though the Republic's life were in danger, it would be impossible to publish it in any way, shape, or form under this infamous thing, and it would be impossible for a newspaper to publish it without violating the law.

I ask why it is that, during these last few days, the President of the United States failed to take the American people into his confidence as to what he was talking about with these foreign diplomats. Ask any member of the press if he knows just exactly what took place. But Europe seems to know all about it. The information filters back from Europe as to what took place at the conferences here, so I assume that in time the American people will get the news second-hand from foreign sources. Then this bill is brought in, and we are asked to pass it, and I suppose it will be passed. The President dominates the Congress, advertises the fact, and tells the Congress what to do.

Mr. President, I am not afraid for the people to know the facts. I go further; if the people of the world could always know what is going on in diplomatic circles, there would never be any war. One of the most serious things to consider doing is to suppress free speech and a free press, the sources of public information, and that is exactly what this bill undertakes to do.

Mr. President, I would oppose the bill no matter who was President. It is un-American. It is contrary to everything for which the country has stood in the past. It is the last thing to which a republic ought to resort. It is dangerous in the extreme.

There were the old alien and sedition laws, which ruined John Adams and the Federalist Party.

Just one more word, Mr. President, and I shall conclude. Here is the bill; I read:

Whoever by virtue of his employment with the United States—

No matter how he is employed, everybody is forbidden. "Shush, shush." "Gag, gag"—

Any matter prepared in any such code, or which purports—

The Senator from California has said all that is necessary on that subject.

Which purports—

They can make anything purport to be official—

Whoever without authorization or competent authority—

Where is the authorization to come from? Who is the competent authority? We tried our best to get somebody on the committee to tell us, so that we would know when we were violating the law. Who is this competent authority? Who is it? Silence. Nobody knows. Presumably, from what follows, it might be a clerk in the Rumanian Legation here, or in the legation from Liberia. Who is it? Where rests this power to authorize?

Publish or furnish to another any such code matter—

Listen to this:

or any matter which had been obtained while in the process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States.

"Any matter." That would mean that if an American citizen should somehow or other get information through anyone employed by the Government, no matter what it might be, in connection with some powerful foreign country, directed to its mission here, or from here to its national capital, which might be injurious to this country, to the extent that it might mean our dire peril, he could not publish it, no newspaper could publish it, it would be impossible, without violating this proposed law. Then let us see what position he would be in. He would be subject to imprisonment of 10 years, or to a fine of $10,000.

Mr. President, of course this is thoroughly unnecessary. We have gone along for 145 years, and, though we have had our troubles, we have done pretty well as compared with other nations of the earth. Let it be remembered that early in the history of this country, in the Adams administration, the infamous alien and sedition laws were passed, which destroyed a President and a party. They were promptly repealed, and from then to now we have gone along without sedition laws, without a gag law, without the "shush shush", and we have built up our marvelous prestige and reputation as a nation since then. We have done that on a basis of free speech and a free press, and we can go on along the same line.

Evidently something is wrong when it is necessary to resort to a "shush shush" law, to keep information, vital information, it may be, from the American people.

Mr. President, the measure is utterly vicious and indefensible from any standpoint. While I assume the votes are here to pass it, I should vote against it though I were the only Member of the Senate who did, and I hope, of course, with all my heart, that the bill will be defeated.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT—COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of Mr. O'Connor as Comptroller of the Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT RECORDS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4220) for the protection of Government records.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Indiana takes occasion to use every measure upon which he speaks as a vehicle for denunciation of the President and for the delivery of a bitter partisan speech. Let me remind the Senator that when we go to war, if we unfortunately get into war, his party will have to fight just the same as those on this side of the aisle.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, we did before. After a Democratic administration took us into war, Republicans helped to win it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I shall yield when the Senator respectfully asks me to yield; but I do not yield to a Senator who gets to his feet and, in a perfect frenzy of rage, undertakes to interrupt the Senator from Texas with—out permission. I want to be courteous; and if the Senator from Indiana desires that I yield, I shall do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I merely repeat for the RECORD what I just got through saying.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Indiana returns brusqueness for courtesy and consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, Mr. President; I have the highest regard in the world for my good friend the Senator from Texas; I never question the motives of my friend, and I respect him as highly as one could another Senator. But, Mr. President, I was answering his question, or trying to, directly. Perhaps I was a little emphatic. What I had to say was this: When a Democratic administration and a Democratic President took us into the great World War—and I am not criticising the President, I am not finding fault with him—I say that had the American people known what Colonel House was doing in Europe, and all that was going on over there at the time, we never would have entered the war. But when we did go into it, under a Democratic administration, the Senator will agree with me that Republicans stood shoulder to shoulder with Democrats. We went out to win the war, and did win the war, and there was no shirking in Republican ranks.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana evidently misconstrued what the Senator from Texas intended to say, or he misunderstood the motives which prompted him. What the Senator from Texas desired to suggest was that the Senator from Indiana, when we are here trying to consider emergency legislation, takes occasion to make these bitter partisan speeches, dragging in President Wilson and Colonel House and the World War, which took place 15 years ago.

What I meant to suggest was that this measure was based upon a desire to prevent the unlawful and illegal divulgence of State Department and diplomatic secrets which might involve us in war and that when we are involved in war the Senator's speeches will not be of any avail, because the Republicans will have to fight the war just as we shall fight it on this side.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not really answered what the Senator said as yet, but I shall yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope we will never get into another war. When I see the veterans of the last war reviled and abused and maligned all over the United States, as they are today—and I have a photograph which I will put in the RECORD tomorrow of a disabled veteran discharged from the hospital in Dayton in his underwear, not even being given clothes to go home in—I say that I hope there never will be another war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if it is to bring forth the repeated outbursts of the Senator from Indiana, I, too, hope there will never be another war. [Laughter.]

I happened to be on the subcommittee which had something to do with the drafting of this amendment, and I want to analyze this terribly repressive measure which has aroused the bitter attack of the Senator from Indiana, and I assume will arouse the attack of the cultured and literary Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

What is proposed to be done by this measure? All the bill would do is simply to make it a criminal offense for a scoundrel to betray his confidential relationship with the Government, or for another to conspire with some agent of the Government to get confidential information, and then go out and sell it for money. That is what the measure would do, and that is about all it would do.

Why was it proposed? It was proposed for the purpose of protecting the Government, for the purpose of keeping the Government out of unfortunate diplomatic situations which might involve us in war, and it is designed to prevent our becoming involved in war.

Let us see what it would do; what this terrible measure would do. Let us see what this dictatorship bill, as the Senator from Indiana calls it, would do. This is what it provides:

Whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States—

In other words, whoever, in the confidence of the Government, whoever, in the employ of the Department of State, drawing a salary, under obligation to be loyal to his Government and to its citizens—shall obtain from another—

In other words, whether he gets it out of the file himself or obtains it from somebody else—or having custody of or access to, or having had custody of or access to—any official diplomatic code.

It is confined to diplomatic codes; that is all. The United States code belongs to our Government; it is its property; it has a right to keep it secret. The codes of foreign governments belong to them; they are their property, and they have a right to be protected in their use. That is all this bill proposes.

Now, whoever does those things and—shall willfully—

Not innocently. The Senator from Indiana implied that a citizen might come into possession of some information and might use it innocently and thereby would incur the penalty of the penitentiary or an enormous fine. That is not true; that is not a fair conclusion. The individual must divulge it or use it "willfully." What does "willfully" mean? It means with an evil intent; with an intent of malice; with an unlawful intent. So there is no danger of any innocent citizen's becoming enmeshed in the terms of this bill.

What else does it propose to do?—

Shall willfully, without authorization, or competent authority.

And the Senator from Indiana makes a great point as to who is the authority. The authority must come from someone who is charged with the responsibility of the custody of the particular codes or papers, of course.

The Senator from Indiana has individuals in his office and secretaries in his employ who are on the pay roll of the Government. Suppose one of those clerks should go into the Senator's confidential files and purloin information and publish it to the world—would the Senator from Indiana think that act ought to be protected? Would that man not be guilty of disloyalty? Would he not be guilty of theft? Would he not be guilty of breaking faith with the Senator?

According to the Senator's argument, every clerk in his office ought to be free to disclose everything that is in his files. The Senator says he favors a free press; let a citizen publish to the world everything that he may find out, no matter where he got it, even though, in order to get it, he must commit theft; he must be guilty of treachery to his employer and treachery to his Government. What of that, says the Senator from Indiana. If he can get control of the information, he ought to have the right to publish it to the world. I dissent from any such view.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield to the Senator from Florida in just a moment.

Of course all of us believe in a free press, but a free press does not mean a press that is based upon treachery; it does not mean a press that is based upon theft; it does not mean a press that is based upon disloyalty to the Government in whose employ the man works and whose money he draws. Now, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if he did not think it more probable that the Senator from Indiana would remove such a clerk and in that way punish him? Certainly he would not promote him.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure he would punish him. I dare say the Senator from Indiana would not only "fire" that employee but that he would probably make him a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what is all this about? Why all this tempest in a teapot? It is true that this man Yardley is a citizen of Indiana, I understand, but it does not make any difference to the Senator from Texas whether he is a resident of Indiana or a resident of some other State. My contention is that any citizen, whether white or black, male or female, big or little, lean or fat, who is in the employ of the Government and, having access to confidential papers and records, disloyally and improperly uses knowledge so obtained for private gain or private profit ought to be punished.

Suppose an employee does not get such knowledge from his own Government, but by reason of the knowledge that he gains in the Government's service gets information from the codes of other governments and then publishes that material, when he knows that it is apt to involve his own Government in war or in diplomatic difficulties, he is as much a traitor to his country as one who deserts his general on the field of battle.

Mr. President, what is there so wrong about this measure? What is there so terrible about it? Where is the Senator who approves pilfering private records? If there be such, let him rise. Senators who become outraged because of a man's stealing a spotted calf and want to put him in the penitentiary would seem to entertain the idea that a man could steal a public record or a public document and sell it for money to the newspapers and that that would be an act of patriotism and public service. I do not so regard it.

The newspapermen have a code of their own; they respect confidences. When they are told something in confidence they will not publish it; it is a violation of their highest ethics for them to violate a confidence; and yet because the Government asks those who are in its employ and who are receiving its compensation that they be loyal and not divulge information obtained in their confidential capacity Senators rise and say that we are interfering with a free press.

We are interfering with free thieving and free betrayal of trust; that is what we are interfering with. We are interfering with free treachery to their employer and to their Government; that is all.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana—and I regret he has left the Chamber, for I do not like to refer to Senators when they are not present—took occasion to denounce the President again, of course, and to say that he is a dictator. There is nothing in this bill which gives the President any power, except possibly that which refers to Government employees' divulging matter covered by the bill without having proper authority. Of course, the President, as the head of the Foreign Service Department of the Government, might or might not withhold authority for the publication of any information; but, other than that, there is no new power conferred upon the President of the United States.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. May I ask the Senator if his definition of "competent authority" as mentioned in this bill would refer to the President of the United States, or to just what official in his judgment would it refer?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think that that term is comprehensive enough to embrace both the President and the Secretary of State. I think if a man obtained material and published it with the consent of the Secretary of State or with the consent of the President he would be protected, because he would be acting under "competent authority."

Mr. CUTTING. Take the case of a man who worked in the War Department under the Secretary of War and who also has access to such records?

Mr. CONNALLY. In that case it would be the Secretary of War instead of the Secretary of State.

Mr. CUTTING. In other words, the provision would include the President, the members of his Cabinet, and others?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator from New Mexico that my view is that the words "competent authority" would include any official whose legal duty it is to have custody of records, and that, of course, would depend upon each particular case. Instead of mentioning them by name, we simply refer to "competent authority", meaning that authority which under the law is charged with the custody of the records and which, in the ordinary course of business, would have the right to divulge them to the public or to withhold them from the public. I do not know whether or not that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes. I merely wanted to get the Senator's opinion as to what the words meant.

Mr. CONNALLY. Now, I wish to make just a few remarks with reference to the attack of the Senator from Indiana on President Roosevelt. The Senator from Indiana says, "We have a dictator, and everybody knows he is a dictator." Well, the Senator from Texas wants to say that if that be true—and he is not saying that it is true—we have seen more improvement since the 4th day of March under the so-called "dictator" than we had during the 4 years prior to March 4 under the benevolent rule of the last 4 years of the Republican administration. I do not want to bring on any bitter partisan debate—and I do not intend to do so—but, for one, the Senator from Texas is weary of the Senator from Indiana on each day and each occasion seizing the opportunity to denounce and to abuse the present administration, regardless of the bill that may be before the Senate, and no matter whether his remarks are relevant or are wholly immaterial to the matter before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana entered the Chamber.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad the Senator from Indiana has returned. I expressed grief over his absence a moment ago, because I dislike to refer to a Senator when he is not present. I was just observing, and I shall reiterate for the Senator's benefit—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I shall be very glad to hear the reiteration, if the Senator desires.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was referring to the fact that the Senator from Indiana day after day seizes every opportunity to abuse the President of the United States and the present administration. He charged today that we have "a dictator" in the person of the President, and the Senator from Texas merely wanted to observe, whether we have a dictatorship or whether we have not, that since the 4th day of March under the so-called "dictatorship" the country has moved forward farther and has accomplished more toward getting out of the depression than it did during the entire 4 years under the leadership of the late administration, of which the Senator from Indiana was one of the most obeisant and subservient followers. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I never abuse the President of the United States, no matter what party he may represent, but I reserve the right to criticize the President of the United States freely and without reserve if I think his policies are bad. That was true when the Republicans were in office, and it is true now. Mr. President, I want to assist the President of the United States, so far as I can do so in conscience, and if the Senator from Texas will go over the record which has been made here during the past two months he will find that time and again I have not only supported the President of the United States and his measures but have voted for them; and, so far as my feeble influence could extend, I have used it in favor of every measure that I thought was for the best interest of the country. It is never my intention to abuse the President of the United States.

Perhaps the Senator may mistake the emphasis with which I speak at times for abuse, but I do not mean it to be abuse; I do not abuse, but I will freely criticize, just as for years Senators on the other side of the aisle criticized Republican Presidents. They were well within their rights in doing so, and I never objected to that, but I think they should be consistent about it now that we have a Democratic President.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator that he is going to follow the President in the future.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana today denounced the President of the United States because he did not publish all the details of the conversations which the President has been having with foreign representatives with reference to the World Economic Conference which is to be convened in June.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I did. I think the American people are entitled to know what went on there, and they do not know; and they have no way of finding out except through the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has made one speech on the question. I am trying to answer the Senator's first speech without his making two.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana now admits that he has been denouncing the President of the United States for not publishing to the world the details of his conferences with foreign representatives with regard to questions related to the world economic conference. There have been no secrets, so far as I know, about the subject matter of those discussions. Of course, they were private in the sense that when gentlemen meet together to discuss questions the reporters are not always called in until after the discussions are over and a report as to the substance of those conversations is made. The press will bear witness to the fact that after each one of those conferences there were given out joint statements by the President of the United States and the foreign representatives as to the subject matter discussed. Of course, they did not have a shorthand reporter to take down each question and each answer.

If that is the idea of the Senator from Indiana of what diplomatic intercourse ought to be, to have a conference in the morning and have a stenographic report of it published in the afternoon papers, I want to observe that we would never get anywhere in our diplomatic intercourse, and the Senator ought to know it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield, and I shall keep on yielding.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That was Woodrow Wilson's idea. It was frequently announced by him—announced many times.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that is true, and the Senator from Indiana approves it, it is the first principle President Wilson ever enunciated that has been approved by the Senator from Indiana. Woodrow Wilson now lies out yonder in the Cathedral, his memory enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen, and yet on each occasion when his name is mentioned the Senator from Indiana violates that sacred repository with his political footsteps and drags the memory and the name of Woodrow Wilson around the Senate Chamber. I resent it. The Senator from Indiana can find no warrant in any words of President Wilson for the utterances now made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; not for a moment. I shall yield presently.

The Senator from Indiana referred to President Wilson here today and dragged his honored name around this Chamber for partisan purposes; that is why he did it. Senators know it, and the Senator from Indiana knows it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I recall when a Republican President had been laid in his grave, that his body was scarcely cold before he was denounced and abused and his memory profaned on the other side of the Chamber. Day after day that continued. It has not yet stopped.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that were true, I have no admiration for such conduct, and I cannot approve the action of the Senator who uses that incident, which he himself denounces, as a precedent for now abusing and reviling the memory of Woodrow Wilson.

Mr. President, there is not very much to the bill. The purpose is to protect the United States from having its international relations interfered with by those who obtain information while in the Government employ and publish it to the world and offend foreign nations and perhaps involve us in difficulties. That is all there is to it. The immediate incident was a threatened publication by a man by the name of Yardley of a book with relation to affairs in the Far East. It was supposed to contain confidential information obtained from code messages of foreign countries and perhaps from that of our own country. The bill is designed to prevent that sort of thing in the future. It is simply a bill against intellectual theft. It is a bill against treachery to the Government by its own employees. It is a bill in the interest of peace by preventing the publication of unauthorized diplomatic matter in order that our foreign relations may not be disturbed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. FESS. On page 3 of the bill, line 9, occur the words "or which purports to have been prepared in any such code." Does not the Senator think that language should be stricken out?

Mr. CONNALLY. This is the reason for the insertion of that language: If a man publishes it and says that it is from a code, it is just as harmful as if it were in fact from a code. On the other hand, in order to convict him and to show that it was from a code, the Government would have to reveal its code in order to prove that he had used the code. Does the Senator get the point?

Mr. FESS. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. For all intents and purposes there is just as much harm caused by the use of material which purports to be the United States code as though it were the genuine code.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If that language were stricken out, it would place upon the Government the burden of proof of the authenticity of the message and thus compel it to make the disclosure itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the point I was trying to indicate to the Senator from Ohio. If we strike out that language, the Government would have to prove that he used the genuine code, and in order to do that would have to reveal the code, which would be the identical thing we are trying to prevent. It would give publicity to our own code and to a foreign code.

Mr. FESS. I am in sympathy with the efforts to protect matters of this kind, yet it is rather a serious thing to interfere with publication.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator. We have tried to limit it. If the Senator will read the bill carefully, he will see first that the person must have been in the employ of the Government and had access to or custody of the documents, or by reason of that relationship secured it from another and then published it, not innocently, but wilfully, harmfully, maliciously, with an evil intent.

Mr. FESS. I think the point of the Senator is well taken. I had not seen that side of the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote agreeing to the committee amendment as amended and the votes whereby the amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time will be reconsidered.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New Mexico proposes the following in the nature of a substitute: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That whoever by virtue of his employment by the United States shall obtain and thereafter willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publish or furnish to another any official diplomatic code or any message or matter prepared in any such code shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, with one sentence in the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] I am in hearty agreement. The Senator from Texas said concerning this bill that there is not very much in it. I quite agree with the Senator in that respect. The trouble is that in a time of stress, a time of emergency, a time of crisis, it is quite easy to pass some measure about a matter which is apparently trivial, but which may nevertheless have serious consequences. I want to point out, so that Senators may know what they are voting on, exactly what is in the bill.

In the first place, the House of Representatives, as has been stated, passed a bill which was entirely intelligible. It may have gone too far, but anyone who reads the text of the House bill cannot fail to understand what it means. I submit that the language which was substituted by the Senate committee is ungrammatical, unintelligible, ambiguous, and therefore dangerous.

I shall omit for the moment the subordinate clauses and point out merely the subject, predicate, and object of the subordinate and principal clauses. In the grammatical form in which it came from the committee the bill provided that "whoever shall obtain any code or matter, shall publish or furnish any such code or matter, or any matter * * * of a different description, * * * shall be fined or imprisoned." In other words, the word "whoever" governed three sets of verbs without any grammatical connection between them.

On Monday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] amended the bill by inserting the word "and" before the second "shall." That does away with some of the grammatical ambiguity. It shows at least that the crime consists in first "obtaining" and thereafter "publishing." But I still submit that a great deal more has to be done to it to get it in grammatical shape, because the insertion of the word "and" before the word "shall" leaves the clause "or having custody of or access to or having had custody of or access to" floating in the air without any connection with any other part of the sentence.

The word "or" in line 2 is followed by "having custody of", but it is not preceded by any other participle or adjective. The words which I have placed in parenthesis on the chart on the wall cannot be grammatically connected with any other part of the bill. That is a minor point. Personally, I think those words in parenthesis could be left out of the bill without injuring it in any way. I do not see that it makes the slightest difference whether a Government employee had "personal access to" or "custody of" any particular matter. If he obtained it by virtue of his employment by the United States, he should be equally guilty when he publishes it. That is the essence of the crime, as I understand the intention of the committee, as expressed in the speech of the distinguished Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. PITTMAN] and the speech of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to observe that the words "shall obtain from another" ought to be kept in the bill. I understood the Senator to say they ought to be eliminated.

Mr. CUTTING. No; I said the subsequent words, "or having custody of or access to", could be eliminated with manifest improvement to the grammatical construction and without any injury to the sense of the provision.

Mr. CONNALLY. But there are two points involved—first, that he should obtain it from another and, second, that he shall himself take it from the files or get access to it. The purpose of that is that he may be in the State Department and get it from the Japanese code and then have it published. We want to prevent his obtaining it from another and obtaining it from his own files.

Mr. CUTTING. I think the Senator's object would be attained by striking out everything after the word "obtain" and before the words "any official diplomatic code", so it would read:

Whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, shall obtain any official diplomatic code—

And so forth. Whether he obtained it from the files or from another, he is equally guilty if he obtains it "by virtue of his employment by the United States." I think the latter words are the important ones in the legislation, if the legislation is of importance at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose the man were not in the employ of the United States, but obtained it, would he be guilty under this provision if he published it?

Mr. CUTTING. The language is "whoever shall obtain any code matter." If the subsequent words "having had custody of or access to" mean that it applies to an ex-employee, I suppose if he ever had been in a confidential relation to the Government he would be guilty.

Mr. TYDINGS. My point in asking that question of the Senator was that just from looking at the language hastily, it seemed as if a person in the employment of the United States might give a code of this kind to me, or might give it to someone who was not in the employ of the United States, and the second person might obtain it and publish it, but he would not be guilty under this proposed statute.

Mr. CUTTING. No; he would not, under the proposed statute.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. TYDINGS. What I wanted to ask was, if this measure should go through, whether it is not the intention of the proposed law to prohibit any publication of matter of this kind by any person, rather than just by one who was in the employ of the United States Government.

Mr. CUTTING. May I say to the Senator that, as I understand, that was the intention of the House bill, but is not the intention of the Senate bill. May I ask the Senator from Texas whether I am correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; if the Senator will yield right there, the committee took the view that under the general conspiracy statute, if an employee of the Government conspired or agreed with an outsider to do this, they would both be principals, and therefore it was not necessary to go farther than we have gone here.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator from Texas rather an extreme case, I admit; but suppose a man who was not employed by the Government of the United States should happen to find in some abandoned papers a number of code messages which had been deciphered or broken down. Suppose he should take those code messages and publish them, and thereby disclose what these messages were said to contain when they were published subsequently. I imagine that what is sought to be obtained by this legislation is the prohibition of publication of any secret telegram or diplomatic paper or code or writing whatsoever, regardless of whether it was obtained from a Government employee or in any other manner.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That matter was gone into fully by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The history of this legislation is that after the bill came over from the House, hearings were had by the Senate committee; and a subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and myself. At our suggestion, the State Department prepared this draft according to our instructions. Considerable care was given to the preparation of the draft; and it was the intention both of the subcommittee and of the full committee not to penalize a person publishing unless he was in the employ of the Government and abused his confidential relationship, or unless the person publishing willfully contributed to that act, advised, aided, and abetted it. We still think that is the sound position.

May I say now, in the time of the Senator from New Mexico, that the committee, I think, feels—those favoring the legislation feel—that this is rather carefully worked out. An instance was brought to light where one who was in the employ of the Government went to a telegraph office, represented himself as a Government agent authorized to receive information in a secret code, procured the code, and then went out and tried to sell the information that he had obtained from the telegraph company in some article or book that he had written. It is to prevent such transactions as that, and it is to prevent any publisher who tries to embarrass his Government by inducing persons in the employ of the Government to violate their trust, that this measure is proposed.

It is not intended to interfere with the legitimate freedom of the press. It is only intended to penalize a practice which has become too common in many countries; that is, of selling alleged Government secrets. When one publishes what he claims to be a code he puts upon the Government the burden of making a denial and of proving what the actual code is. This legislation is for the protection of the code, and it is a fair proposition.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to make an inquiry? This language being construed somewhat strictly, I am wondering if the use of the term "by virtue of his employment" does not narrow the bill more than is intended. Those words mean to me that the only one who would be reached would be the man who obtained the information actually by virtue—that is, because—of his employment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is true. That is what it is intended to do. In addition to that, however, it would reach the person who incited, induced, aided, or abetted in the perpetration of the act.

Mr. ADAMS. I was speaking of the very case the Senator from Arkansas illustrated—the case of a man who went to a telegraph office. He did not get the information by virtue of his employment, although he was an employee, but he got it by a misrepresentation or a deception, rather than by virtue of his employment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I do not think that distinction is applicable. I think, when he was in the employ of the Government, represented himself as such, and obtained secret, confidential information, his act comes fairly and fully within the terms of this language. In any event, the language is adequate to meet the purposes of the State Department; and, as said by the Senator from Texas, I feel that it is almost unreasonable for a Senator to object to the passage of this measure. Of course, there can be no objection to perfecting or improving the language, as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] is attempting to do; but how can it be alleged that there is something unfair, or inconsistent with the fundamental liberties of our citizens, in trying to prevent one in a trust relationship from violating his trust, or trying to prevent others from inducing or aiding him in violating his trust?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland; but I want to remind him that I have not yet had much chance to say just what my opinion is about this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate that, and I shall not do more than make an observation. In line with what the Senator from Arkansas has said and what the Senator from New Mexico likewise has said, it occurred to me that if the language were still further amended by inserting, for example, "whoever by virtue of his employment by the United States, or who falsely represents that he is employed by the United States", that would cover the case of the man who falsely represented himself as being employed by the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or a man who was yesterday in the employ of the Government, and who today took advantage of his former situation; and that is the implication of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as I understand. I see no objection to the suggestion.

Mr. CUTTING. May I say, in the first place, that with the intention of the authors of this bill, as explained by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Texas, I am in complete sympathy. My objection is that the bill, as worded, takes in a great deal broader territory than was the intention of the authors of the proposal.

The Senator from Texas has talked about punishing "scoundrels who betray their confidential relations with the United States Government", and has implied that those who object to this particular language are defending the "pilfering of records." That certainly is not my intention, and I want to make that clear at the outset.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator got any such impression as to his own attitude, the Senator from Texas abjectly begs his pardon. I did not assume that that was the attitude of the Senator from New Mexico, because I have understood that his was merely a complaint of the text, and that he was not in opposition to the principle of the measure. I did make some inferences which some other Senator on the other side might apply to himself, but certainly they could not be applied to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I at this juncture bring to the attention of the Senator from New Mexico a difference between his proposal and the committee draft which is the immediate subject matter of consideration which does not relate to any mere form of expression? It is found in the fact that the Senator omits any reference whatever to procuring or publishing confidential communications that are in process of transmission.

For instance, suppose someone who was in the employ of the Government should get possession of a diplomatic pouch or of a mail bag containing a communication from the Japanese Government to the Japanese Ambassador in Washington, or from the British Government to the British Ambassador in Washington, and should publish the contents of that communication, even though it is not in code. While it is in transmission, he procures it and publishes it, resulting in the same embarrassments that would occur if it were in code. The Senator's amendment does not reach that case at all. The committee draft does.

Mr. CUTTING. I prefer to take up that point when I come to it, if the Senator from Arkansas pleases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well; I apologize.

Mr. CUTTING. No; I did not mean to criticize the Senator, but I left that out on purpose, for reasons which I shall explain in a moment.

The amendment I have offered includes those who shall confidentially obtain and thereafter willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publish or furnish to another certain matter. In other words, the crime is a double one. First, the obtaining by virtue of employment by the United States, and secondly the publication. I think that is the clear meaning of the original text, now that the word "and" has been included. To some extent my amendment covers, perhaps, a little more ground even than the committee's version, because under it anyone who obtains this matter by virtue of employment, whether or not he had access or custody, comes under the provisions of the act. What I think is important, however—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It might be oppressive to enact a statute that would have the effect of punishing one who was in the employ of the Government merely for obtaining the code. It might be his duty to obtain it, and no doubt it is the duty of certain employees of the Government to obtain information respecting these messages. Under the Senator's language as he himself interprets it, if an officer of the Government in the discharge of his duties should obtain information respecting these code messages, he would be liable to conviction.

Mr. CUTTING. Not unless he thereafter willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publishes or furnishes it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then the same rule applies to the Senator's amendment that applies to the committee amendment. It is not the obtaining that is punished, as the Senator said a moment ago, but it is the obtaining and publishing without authority.

Mr. CUTTING. That brings me to what seems to me the fundamental defect in the committee amendment, that you obtain one set of things and are punished for publishing or furnishing an entirely different set of things. In my amendment you obtain and publish the same series of things.

As this bill comes from the committee it reads:

Whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, shall obtain from another—

Mark the words—

any official diplomatic code or any matter prepared in any such code, or which purports to have been prepared in any such code—

Those are the things which you obtain. You are punished for publishing not merely those things, "any such code or matter", but you are also punished for publishing an entirely different thing—namely, any matter which was obtained while in the process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States. As everyone has admitted, that language includes not only code matter, not only the things which you obtain by virtue of your employment by the United States, but anything else in process of transmission between a foreign government and a diplomatic mission.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he is in error again? The last clause does not apply to the man who got the matter in the employ of the Government. If I should intercept a diplomatic pouch, and I were not in the Government service, and yet I got this matter out of that pouch and published it, as I understand, it is our purpose to punish that publication.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is not right in that interpretation. If so, I should not vote for it for a moment.

Mr. CUTTING. Nor should I.

Mr. CONNALLY. Wait a moment—

Publish or furnish to another any such code matter, or any matter which was obtained while in process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States—

Mr. CUTTING. I think the Senator from Texas makes out his own bill much worse than I ever thought it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am probably somewhat in error, but I know that was added as an afterthought. That last clause was added after the bill had been completed.

Mr. CUTTING. That is exactly the way it reads, as though it had been added as an afterthought; I am sure that is the case. I believe the bill was very much sounder without that clause in it.

Let me point out that the subject of the whole bill is "whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, shall obtain from another or having custody of or access to, or having had custody of or access to, any official diplomatic code or any matter." That is, anyone who obtains a code, or matter prepared in a code, through a confidential and fiduciary relationship to the Government. He is punished not only for the publication of that code or matter—and in that respect I agree with the authors of the bill; I think he ought to be punished for such publication—but he is also punished for publishing matter which has no relation to the matter which he obtained by virtue of his confidential relationship to the Government. He is punished for any matter which may happen to come into his possession innocently, and which he may think it his duty to the country to publish.

The Senator from Texas called attention to the word "willfully", and said that that word could only mean "harmfully", "maliciously", or "with unlawful intent." I submit that the intention of a statute is to be understood by the public at large, and that although that may be the legal meaning of the word "willfully" it is certainly not the meaning of common speech. I refer to Webster's Dictionary, which gives only two meanings for the word "willful", namely, on the one hand, "voluntary" or "intentional", and on the other "obstinate", "perverse", or "stubborn." So I think this language would include a man who patriotically and from the highest motives published any matter which was obtained while in process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission, although he got the matter not by virtue of his employment by the United States but in some other way.

Take, for instance, my own case. It so happens that for some years during the war by virtue of my employment by the United States I had daily access to and was daily obtaining our own diplomatic code and a number of diplomatic codes of foreign governments. As every Senator knows, we had possession throughout the war of the German diplomatic code and they had ours, and those codes were in daily use. Of course I could not today remember a single word of the German code or a word of our own, but I still come under the scope of this bill, because at one time I did have access to and obtained from another an official diplomatic code and matter prepared in such code.

Now, suppose I today were to discover some message, not in code, passing between a foreign government and its diplomatic mission. Suppose someone brought me such a message and I felt it my duty to do something about it. Suppose the message contained something which meant imminent danger to this country and its Government. I could not without competent authority or authorization make any use of that information. Who would be competent authority to give authorization to me to decide whether I should or should not publish that matter, which did not come to me by virtue of my employment by the United States?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I assume that the Senator's difficulties are increased by the fact that he is not only a Senator of the United States but a newspaper publisher.

Mr. CUTTING. No; I do not think so, because I do not think there is anything in this bill which would include the newspaper profession. What the Senator means, I suppose, is that I could not give out the information to my newspaper or any other newspaper if I had it in my possession. To that extent, of course, I would be handicapped, but I want to point out that I am in no peculiar situation in that respect. There were thousands and probably hundreds of thousands of American citizens, who during the war had access to diplomatic codes, and any one of them could be punished under the terms of this bill.

Mr. President, I submit that the word "obtain" and the words "publish or furnish" ought to apply to exactly the same objects, and that one should not be punished for publishing or furnishing anything except what he obtained by virtue of his employment with the United States. That is what I have tried to remedy through the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I have offered.

It is true, as the Senator from Arkansas says, that under my amendment we could not punish anyone who published or furnished matter that was "obtained while in process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission", but if we want to make that a crime—and I should be very hesitant about the advisability of putting any such crime on the statute books—then it ought to be a crime for everybody. We ought in that case to forbid everyone from publishing any such matter, and ought not to confine it to people who obtain an entirely different class of matter by virtue of their employment with the United States Government.

That is where grammar becomes important in framing a bill of this sort, because, unless we can parse the sentence, it is almost impossible to know to what it refers. It is almost impossible to know who is reached by this bill, or just exactly what is the crime sought to be punished.

I submit that the Senate should either adopt the substitute I have suggested, or should refer the bill again to the Foreign Relations Committee for further consideration. I am sorry that the chairman of the committee is not present, because I discussed my amendment with him a little while ago, and he seemed to have no serious objection to it, although he suggested one slight modification. I do feel that the Senate ought to know what it is doing when it passes a bill so ambiguous, a bill in my opinion so dangerous, a bill so uncertain in its action as this one which comes from the committee. I therefore move the substitution of my amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, when I inaugurated this discussion on the pending bill in rather academic fashion, I had no idea it would take the range it ultimately did take. I began the discussion because I saw defects in the bill which I thought ought to be called to the attention of the Senate, and my intention was to call those defects to the attention of the Senate, and then permit the Senate to pass upon the matter. But the discussion has now taken such a wide range, that I wish to say a word or two with respect to some of the things which have been said.

All of us have a single idea in respect to fiduciary relations. I yield to none in regard to the tenderness or the delicacy respecting that kind of relation. I insist it shall be kept not only in the officialdom of this country but that it shall be kept in every relation wherein there is confidence bestowed and where fiduciary restraint ought to obtain. So we may dismiss the hot words on the one side or the other concerning a fiduciary relation or a particular offense. I am not interested in the individual whose actions precipitated a measure of this sort, nor am I interested in the slightest degree in whether or not the bill shall provide for his punishment if he commits, in the days that are to come, the offense he has committed in the past.

There are implications in this bill, however, which I think we ought not to tolerate, as lawyers, and which, I think, as lawmakers, we ought to be very certain concerning, before we pass a measure of this particular character.

Mr. President, the Senators who are present will recall that when this bill came from the House it aroused intense antagonism on the part of the press. Immediately that was met, not alone by an authoritative utterance from the Secretary of State, which has been put into the Record here today, but it was met as well by an amendment to the bill which came from the House which sought to eliminate and to remedy the mistake or the error or the wrong which it was assumed had been done in encroaching upon the freedom of the press.

This measure was presented upon the theory, and it is now asserted, that it does not in any degree affect publications. But the answer to that was made by the Senator from Texas just a moment ago, when he said that if any of the matter referred to in this particular measure be published, then, under the general statute relating to conspiracy, the individual publishing it would be guilty with the original wrongdoer, and in that he is absolutely accurate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. He would be guilty under the conspiracy statute if a publisher conspired with a man in the Department to get the material and publish it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. And if he did, he ought to be punished along with the man whose confidence he violated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well; the Senator may be entirely right. I am not defending the press, and I do not propose to. As I said in opening the remarks which I made on the bill, the press will take care of itself. But when it is asserted, as it has been asserted here today, that any question of publication by the press is removed by the amendment presented by the Foreign Relations Committee, I insist that that is wholly inaccurate, that it has not been removed at all, and that the press is just as responsible under this amendment presented by the Foreign Relations Committee as it was in reality under the original bill that was passed by the House.

Here is a new crime described, a new crime created. I do not like the creation of crimes unless it be absolutely essential that they shall be created in order to meet a specific case and remedy a particular wrong. Here was something that was done in 1922. Now, long subsequent to the publication that occurred, a bill is insisted upon with us as being an emergency measure that must be passed overnight, and concerning which there cannot be the slightest delay. There is no emergency, there is no necessity in reality for this particular statute to meet the particular facts that were suggested originally which should be met, and there is presented here, therefore, a statute which, as demonstrated by the Senator from New Mexico, is ambiguous and unintelligible, and which ought not to be passed.

I submit, Mr. President, if we are going to enact a statute at all covering this subject, the only one that is appropriate to pass is the substitute presented by the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment reported by the committee. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed to the amendment will say "no"—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the result is announced, if I may have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico, I inquire if any amendment to his proposed substitute has been suggested?

Mr. CUTTING. No, Mr. President; no one has suggested any amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the Senate is voting I think debate is not in order.

Mr. REED. The result had not been announced, and I had been trying to attract the attention of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate was engaged in voting.

Mr. REED. Very good. But the Senate had not voted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It has voted; that is the very point.

Mr. REED. But the result had not been announced. I do not believe that the Senator wants to cut me off.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not wish to be technical about it, but we have been debating the bill for several hours.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator from New Mexico accept an amendment to his substitute by the insertion in line 5, after the word "prepared" of the words "or purporting to have been prepared"?

Mr. CUTTING. I prefer the amendment as I submitted it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I insist upon the Chair announcing the result of the vote.

Mr. REED. And I insist on my right to be heard, Mr. President. I have been recognized and the vote has not been announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote had not been announced when the Senator from Pennsylvania was recognized.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator from New Mexico accept the suggestion as I have indicated?

Mr. CUTTING. I would do so if that would harmonize the difficulty. I think it is better without those words in it, but I do not think they would be particularly harmful.

Mr. REED. Take Yardley's case. If Yardley were tried for doing in the future what he has done in the past, he could not be convicted under the Senator's proposed substitute until the United States attorney had proved that the matter was in the official Japanese code, and that is something that is wholly incapable of proof.

Mr. CUTTING. I have no particular objection to the amendment, for the reason that if those words should be included the individual could not be punished unless he obtained the matter by virtue of his employment by the United States; and if he obtained it by virtue of his employment, I do not think that he would have any right to give the matter out, whether it actually came from the code or not. He would not obtain possession of it except through his employment, and therefore I have no particular objection to the suggested amendment.

Mr. REED. Very good.

Mr. CUTTING. But if we should separate, as the original bill does, the thing which he obtained, on the one hand, from the thing which he published, on the other, then I would have very serious objection to such a clause.

Mr. REED. Then, I offer an amendment to the proposed substitute of the Senator from New Mexico, as follows: In line 5, after the word "prepared", insert the words "or purporting to have been prepared."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask the Senator, How would the prosecutor prove that something purported to be in a code? Would he not be confronted by exactly the same dilemma with which the Senator asserts he would be confronted if he had to prove that the matter was taken from a code?

Mr. REED. Not at all, because from the language of Yardley's book, which I read with great care, it was plain that he therein admitted and claimed that the material published purported to have come from the Japanese code. If to establish a case it is necessary to go further and prove that it was prepared from the Japanese code you have an impossibility.

Mr. JOHNSON. But at the same time, will not the disadvantages of incorporating the words "purporting to have been prepared" in the code be quite as great as the advantages which may be derived from the suggestion which the Senator has made?

Mr. REED. No, I do not think so, because the admission of the defendant himself would cover that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the use of those words is wholly unjustifiable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In line 5 of the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from New Mexico, after the word "prepared", it is proposed to insert the words "or purporting to have been prepared", so as to read:

Or any message or matter prepared or purporting to have been prepared in any such code.

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in order that there may be no mistake concerning the matter, I call for a division upon the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum, if the Senator insists upon a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The result has been announced. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee. (Putting the question.) The "noes" have it and the amendment to the amendment is lost.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the vote I asked for a division, or let us have the yeas and nays; I do not care which; but let us have the question determined accurately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has announced the result.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before the Chair had started the announcement of the result of the vote, I asked for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Cutting	Hatfield	Overton
Ashurst	Dickinson	Johnson	Pope
Bachman	Dieterich	Kean	Reed
Bailey	Duffy	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.
Barkley	Erickson	King	Robinson, Ind.
Black	Fess	La Follette	Russell
Brown	Fletcher	Logan	Sheppard
Bulkeley	Frazier	Loneragan	Steiwer
Bulow	George	McAdoo	Stephens
Capper	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Caraway	Goldsborough	McKellar	Townsend
Connally	Gore	Murphy	Vandenberg
Costigan	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Couzens	Harrison	Nye	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation is that the vote has been had, is it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT (putting the question). The noes have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, before there be a determination, let us either have a division or let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico, to my personal knowledge, has been trying since before the question was put to obtain recognition. I am sure the Chair did not mean to cut him off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair of course did not know the Senator was seeking recognition. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, as there are many Senators who have not heard the argument, I will try very briefly to summarize my contention with regard to this bill. My objection to the bill as reported from the committee is that, in the first place, it is ungrammatical; that the words "or having custody of or access to, or having had custody of or access to", in lines 6 and 7, on page 3, have no grammatical connection with any other part of the bill. I should like to add to that that no Senator, in the course of debate, has attempted to explain either their grammatical pertinence or their grammatical construction. That, however, is a minor matter.

My major objection to this proposal is that it is ambiguous and unintelligible and does not properly define the crime which it purports to put on the statute books.

Take the case of a man who, as provided in the first clause, "by virtue of his employment by the United States shall obtain an official code or matter prepared in such code", and who then goes about publishing the same. If the bill ended that way and if it could be grammatically construed, I should have no objection whatever to that proposition. I do not believe that any man has a right to obtain, through a fiduciary relationship with the Government, any secret matter and thereafter, after his connection with the Government has been severed, publish the same for private profit or for any other reason.

But the bill does not stop at that. It provides that the man who obtains a code or diplomatic matter by virtue of his employment by the United States, be punished not merely for publishing such code or matter, but also for publishing "any matter which was obtained while in process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States."

It is not necessary, may I say to the Senate, that this latter matter should be obtained by virtue of a man's employment by the United States, but the bill refers to any matter which may at any time come within his knowledge, no matter how he derives that information. In other words, if any man who has ever had access to a diplomatic code—and there are probably hundreds of thousands of such people in the United States—should discover or should have given to him the information contained in the message between a foreign government and its agents here, he would be unable to publish the same, even though it might refer to blowing up the Capitol or assassinating the President. He would be fined or imprisoned unless he could get authorization or competent authority. Who is competent to give authority to a Senator of the United States, for instance, to publish matter which he may consider of grave importance to his Government and to his country?

I submit that a man should be punished for the publication only of such matter as he has obtained by virtue of his employment by the United States and nothing else. I therefore offered the following substitute, which I think is intelligible and which seems to me to accomplish all that the authors of the original bill endeavored to accomplish:

That whoever by virtue of his employment by the United States shall obtain and thereafter willfully, without authorization or competent authority, publish or furnish to another any official diplomatic code, or any message or matter prepared in any such code shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

I claim that that language is clear and that it adequately defines the crime which we are trying to define.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks the language of the bill as contained in the chart, with the words and objects capitalized as they are on the chart.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The chart referred to is as follows:

WHOEVER, by virtue of his employment by the United States SHALL OBTAIN from another (or having custody of or access to, or having had custody of or access to)

ANY official diplomatic CODE (or any MATTER prepared in any such code, or which purports to have been prepared in any such code)

AND

SHALL (willfully, without authorization or competent authority)

PUBLISH or FURNISH to another

ANY SUCH CODE or MATTER or ANY MATTER (which was obtained while in process of transmission between any foreign government and its diplomatic mission in the United States)

SHALL BE FINED not more than $10,000, or

IMPRISONED not more than ten years or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. McADOO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], but I am advised that I may transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], which I do, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—30

Adams	Cutting	McCarran	Steiwer
Austin	Dill	Murphy	Stephens
Black	Frazier	Neely	Townsend
Borah	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Bratton	Hastings	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrd	Johnson	Nye	Wheeler
Caraway	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Costigan	La Follette	Schall

NAYS—42

Bachman	Copeland	Harrison	Reynolds
Bailey	Dickinson	Hatfield	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Dieterich	Hayden	Russell
Barkley	Duffy	Kendrick	Sheppard
Brown	Erickson	King	Smith
Bulkley	Fess	Logan	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Fletcher	Loneragan	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	George	McKellar	Trammell
Capper	Glass	Overton	White
Clark	Gore	Pope
Connally	Hale	Reed

NOT VOTING—23

Ashurst	Dale	McAdoo	Shipstead
Barbour	Davis	McGill	Tydings
Bone	Hebert	McNary	Wagner
Carey	Keyes	Metcalf	Walcott
Coolidge	Lewis	Patterson	Walsh
Couzens	Long	Pittman

So Mr. CUTTING's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, just for the sake of correct English, I move to strike out the word "having" and to insert the words "shall have."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Committee several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are now in order.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the nominations of First Lt. Edgar G. Kirkpatrick to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 8th day of April 1933, and of Second Lt. Bernard H. Kirk to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps from the 8th day of April 1933.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (for Mr. PITTMAN), from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported back favorably the nominations of Dave Hennen Morris, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Belgium, and also Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Luxembourg, and of George Bliss Lane, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer, unclassified, and a vice consul of career, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, reported back favorably the nomination of Robert Hayes Gore, of Florida, to be Governor of Puerto Rico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the calendar.

COAST GUARD

Mr. STEPHENS. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably sundry nominations in the Coast Guard and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nominations reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not ask for that.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, a special request has come that these confirmations be had as soon as possible. These young men are nominated to be ensigns in the Coast Guard. I understand that they are to graduate within 3 or 4 days, and it is desired that their commissions be issued.

Mr. FESS. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that they are mere routine appointments.

Mr. STEPHENS. They are mere routine appointments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the nominations of the following-named young men to be ensigns in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from May 15, 1933:

David Hall Bartlett.	Albert Everest Harned.
Rudolph Bjorge.	Clarence Herbert.
Emmett Timothy Calahan.	Swen Alfred Hill.
Albert John Carpenter.	George Whisler Holtzman.
Hubert Roe Chaffee.	Joseph Howe.
William Wilder Childress.	John Jenkins Hutson, Jr.
Eugene Auguste Coffin, Jr.	Vaino Oliver Johnson.
Warren Loomis David.	Robert Egan McCaffery.
Harry Elmer Davis, Jr.	Joseph Francis McCue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of these nominations in the Coast Guard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports of committees? If not, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk announced Executive C (72d Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932, as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. REED. I ask that the treaty go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaty will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dean G. Acheson, of Maryland, to be Under Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will not the Senator let that nomination be considered? The Committee on Finance had Mr. Acheson before it, and no objection was raised to his confirmation. May I ask the Senator what reason there is for asking to have the nomination go over?

Mr. FESS. I am making the request on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

Mr. HARRISON. I cannot insist on it, of course; but I never heard that there was any objection to Mr. Acheson's confirmation.

Mr. FESS. I myself have no objection. I am only complying with the request of the Senator from Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be passed over.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albin R. Sweeney to be senior surgeon from March 7, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry F. White to be senior surgeon from March 12, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ray P. Breaux to be passed assistant dental surgeon with grade of passed assistant surgeon from July 21, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James F. Lewis to be passed assistant dental surgeon with grade of passed assistant surgeon from July 21, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas L. Hagan to be passed assistant dental surgeon with grade of passed assistant surgeon from July 22, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Donald J. Hunt to be passed assistant surgeon from March 1, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT—COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I inquire if at some time previous today consent of the Senate was given to the notification of the President of the confirmation of the appointment of Mr. O'Connor to be Comptroller of the Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was. The President has been notified.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Chair.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 11, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 10 (legislative day of May 1), 1933

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m. and was called to order by Mr. BULWINKLE, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Grant us, blessed Lord, through the hours that await us, Thy wise, guiding presence. Look into our hearts, and mayst Thou hear the music of charity and justice to all men. Thou who dost shepherd the worlds, lead all of us into a larger vision, and allow nothing to obscure our outlook and hope of the diviner life. Make it gloriously possible for us to do the utmost things for our fellow men. Father of Mercy, minister unto the poor, the homeless, and sorely distressed; especially be in the haunted places of the hopelessly afflicted. Devotedly and joyously may we cling to the high privilege of helping those whose lives are dark and flat and unprofitable. Through Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCCLINTIC in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this bill is being considered under a special rule with 6 hours' general debate. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. Mr. Chairman, this is the second time the House of Representatives has been called upon to consider the independent offices appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934. During the regular session this bill was considered by Congress, and as finally enacted into law carried the total sum of $1,003,314,981.

For the convenience of the Committee I have prepared and here exhibit to the Committee a chart showing the appropriations in the first column for the several activities for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. It carries $1,024,286,041.

The second column, carrying $1,003,314,981, is the amount carried in the bill which was vetoed by the President.

The third column carries the amount in the present bill of $535,573,936.

The fourth column shows the increases or decreases, as the case may be, which shows the net reduction in the appropriation from the amount carried in the vetoed bill of $467,741,045.

Four hundred and sixty million six hundred and thirty-four dollars is accountable by the reduction in Veterans' Administration. Seven million seven hundred and forty thousand four hundred and eleven dollars is the reduction made in the several independent establishments.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting at this point a duplication of this table, designated "Chart I", in order that it may be in the RECORD for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The chart referred to is as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM. Now, gentlemen, I want to call attention to the fact that in the independent establishments of the Government, which includes the bureaus and commissions that we hear so much talk about, we have made reductions from $36,476,347 to $28,735,936—a reduction of $7,740,411 below the amount carried in the vetoed bill.

In the last 3 years Congress has reduced the appropriations for the independent establishments almost 25 percent. Now, I am going hurriedly over this list. I do not want to spend any more time on the independent establishments than I have to, because I want to devote most of the time I consume to the major item, which is the reduction in the Veterans' Administration costs, so that I may give the Committee information if I can on that subject.

Most of these reductions in this column showing reductions are of comparatively small amounts. We come down the list of the Employees' Compensation Commission, where we show a reduction of $685,800 below the amount carried in the vetoed bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I notice in the Executive Offices that the salary of the President is carried at the regular amount of his salary, while the salary for the Vice President has been cut 15 percent. Why should there be a difference in those two?

Mr. WOODRUM. Congress does not have the right under the Constitution to diminish the salary of the President during his term of office.

Mr. SNELL. And the Vice President does not come under that constitutional provision?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; but as the gentleman knows, both President Roosevelt and President Hoover have remitted to the Treasury their proportionate reduction in their salaries.

Mr. SNELL. Yes. I wanted to ask about the salaries of the secretaries of the President. I see the salary here is carried at $9,500. How does that come about? As I understand it, the salary fixed by law is $10,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. During the administration of President Hoover we carried for him three secretaries at a salary of $10,000 each.

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. At the request of the present administration, we carry a salary for one secretary at $10,000 and for two assistant secretaries at $9,500 each, subject, of course, to the regular 15 percent reduction.

Mr. SNELL. And that is what that means?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is the salary for the secretary and the two assistant secretaries.

Mr. SNELL. One is $10,000 and the others are $9,500 each; all subject to the regular cut?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

I come now to the Employees' Compensation Commission, which shows a rather substantial cut of $685,000. A portion of that is accountable in the regular 15 percent reduction in salaries. Then there is what is equivalent to a 15 percent reduction in the amount payable to the beneficiaries of the Employees' Compensation Commission, the idea being that the beneficiaries of that fund should stand about the same pro rata reduction that the Government employees and others are taking, which is equivalent practically to 15 percent.

I come now to the Federal Farm Board. The Committee will recall that the Federal Farm Board is now in process of evolution, we might say.

A MEMBER. Dissolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. We might call it "evolution" or "dissolution" or "rejuvenation", but I think "rehabilitation" probably would be the better word, because I am sure under the new set-up we are going to have a very splendid and efficient management of the duties that will come to this organization. An Executive order has been entered and becomes effective May 27 consolidating all the various farm-credit activities under a new administration, which is called the Agricultural Farm Credits Administration, which takes in the old Farm Board and the Federal Farm Loan Commission, and quite a number of those independent establishments and combines them into one organization.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Some of those consolidated agencies are not independent establishments.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But they will be classified as such under the new consolidation order.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. The gentleman is correct. This is a reappropriation of funds. This $1,050,000 that is carried in this column here is not figured in the total, because it is a reappropriation of funds which had already been appropriated for the Federal Farm Board. In the last bill we carried an appropriation of $500,000 for 6 months' activities of the old Federal Farm Board. That was a reappropriation. This bill carries $1,050,000 reappropriation for the consolidated activities of the Federal Farm Board, which will include the administration of the farm-loan provisions of the new act which is now in process of becoming a law. The duties will devolve on this new organization to administer this law, which permits farmers to refinance their mortgages, and $600,000 of the amount carried in this bill is for that activity, which Mr. Morgenthau, the new chairman, tells us will mean that the average cost of refinancing a farm mortgage will be about $1 per transaction. If that outfit can carry out their purpose to finance their organization in that manner I am sure Congress will have no complaint to make of that.

Next we find the General Accounting Office with a substantial cut, which is probably 85 percent reflected in personnel.

We come next to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a cut of $2,097,639. That is reflected almost entirely in a curtailment of the activities of the accounting division of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the valuation departments. Members of the Committee will recall that there is now pending legislation which we have every reason to believe will be enacted into law, which will retroactively repeal section 15a of the Transportation Act, which is known as the recapture clause of the Transportation Act. May I say that I know of nothing the Congress can do that will do more to help the railroads than to repeal retroactively this unworkable law. I have advocated this repeal for several years. That will very largely curtail activities of the accounting division and the valuation department of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, of course, will necessitate a large reduction in their personnel.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In connection with that reduction, which is a reduction from $2,750,000 to $1,000,000, according to the testimony of Mr. Lewis, I believe, it is shown there will be a reduction from 913 employees, and probably a discharge of 600 of them. That is according to his testimony. In view of the fact that the Government has loaned to the railroads several hundred million dollars, and there is to be a revaluation possibly in connection with those loans at the same time, does the gentleman not think it is very unwise to make that drastic cut in that particular branch of the Interstate Commerce Commission's work instead of applying it generally over the whole work, including the Commission in Washington?

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee in the last Congress, as well as in this Congress, gave very careful consideration to this cut in the activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We think we have left them sufficient personnel to discharge the duties which they will have to perform. There is no doubt about the fact that it is a drastic cut, and it will cause separation from the service of a great many employees. I do not know how it is possible to reduce governmental activities without reducing personnel.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I understand the new proposal for the merger or consolidation or control of the railroads, to be put under a single coordination department; there will be a provision which will effect a revaluation of the railroads and the elimination of branch lines and large areas of that nature. Does that not make necessary a revaluation of all of the trunk lines, consisting of about 250,000 miles of rail in the country?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think so. The Interstate Commerce Commission has already completed the primary valuation of all railroads. That was a stupendous task. When that act was first passed, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, the late Senator La Follette, estimated it would probably cost $1,000,000 to make that valuation. The Government has already spent $40,000,000; the railroads estimate their cost to be $140,000,000, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has done a splendid job in making that primary valuation of railroads. In addition to that a great deal of work has been done in keeping the valuation up to date. Under this reduced appropriation they are left a skeleton force which will permit them to carry on and ready to be augmented and built up if the future activities of the Commission require additional personnel.

The Federal Trade Commission in this appropriation is given $920,000, which is practically the same amount we gave them in the vetoed bill, less added salary reductions of 15 percent. The committee will, of course, recall that under the securities bill just passed added duties will fall to the Federal Trade Commission. The hearings held before the Deficiency Appropriations Committee, I think, disclose very substantially, that there is need for this appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission, and we are very much in hopes that under its reorganization and some different policy in its affairs its usefulness will be greatly increased as an independent establishment.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes, I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the expectation that they will make new investigations, or is this to carry on the investigations they are conducting at the present time?

Mr. WOODRUM. This is to carry on and extend at least the investigations carried on with respect to the public utilities, and continue the regular functions of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. SNELL. The utilities investigation was started by a resolution in the Senate?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I understand one of the legislative provisions will require in the future that the Federal Trade Commission can only make investigations at the request of both Houses of Congress, unless it is initiated by the Commission itself?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think that would be a very wise provision of the law.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. If the present antitrust law and statutes against monopolies and activities in restraint of trade, and unfair trade practices are repealed, emasculated, or rendered impotent or innocuous, will there be any necessity for this Federal Trade Commission appropriation? If the present antitrust laws are to be abrogated, if the struggle of 75 years by the American people against monopolies and trusts is to end in failure, if the traditional opposition of the Democratic Party toward monopolies is to be abandoned, then will there be anything worth while that the Federal Trade Commission can accomplish?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, I may say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] that I do not agree with his premise that the laws which he has mentioned are going to be wiped off and emasculated, but there may be some change of policy, to lighten up a little, to give industry a little more latitude in expanding. That is a feature of the matter that I do not want to get into now, but I think there will be constructive work for the Federal Trade Commission to do, to require this appropriation; and if it is not required, let us bear in mind that the President always has authority to impound the funds of any of these activities if their usefulness ceases.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice there are substantial cuts all down the line and particularly in the Veterans' Administration. I am wondering if we could not to advantage bring in a tremendous saving there by a little legislation in regard to saving interest on the public debt, which will amount to about a billion dollars?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, there is no interest on the public debt involved in this appropriation, and I must respectfully refer the gentleman to the Director of the Budget. If the gentleman can show the Director of the Budget where he can save some money, I think he will find a very sympathetic auditor.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did the committee make any appropriation at all for the Federal Trade Commission to inaugurate the three investigations which they desired to begin? First, an investigation with reference to the practices of corporations; second, the effect of the antitrust laws on industries using natural resources; third, an investigation into certain general competitive practices that the Commission is continually running into.

Mr. WOODRUM. No. The appropriation does not carry any funds for new investigations, and the committee thought then, as we seemed to think when we passed the last bill, that if any new investigations are to be initiated, they should be initiated by either a joint resolution of Congress or some request from the administration.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In other words, you are going to let the Federal Trade Commission die unless the Congress authorizes investigations? The law permits the Commission to initiate investigations on its own motion but it needs money to do so.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think they will die as long as they have a million dollars to carry them along for another fiscal year.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; but that is to close up the investigations they have been working on in recent years, and they are earmarked in the appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; they are not earmarked in the appropriation bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But it is understood that money is to be used for that purpose, and they are to complete the Power Trust investigation and the chain-store investigation during the next fiscal year.

Then they are out—I speak of the economic division. There is nothing left for them to do unless they are permitted to have money to start the investigations they wish to undertake.

Mr. WOODRUM. Does the gentleman think we ought to create new investigations just to give them something to do?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely; because such investigations in the end will be beneficial to the taxpayers.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think the Federal Trade Commission, which is the only instrumentality the people of this country have to secure any protection from the corporations, should be taken care of by this Congress. The Federal Trade Commission is an agency of Congress. Now, is the Congress going to kill the agency by refusing the necessary funds so it can function properly?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it ought to be killed if its usefulness is over and there is nothing further for it to do. Though, of course, I do not make any such claim.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is the contention that has been made in this House year after year in a desire to kill the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission was started by President Wilson. It has proven itself a valuable instrumentality and is becoming more valuable every day, but there is a desire on the part of certain interests to get it out of the way. Why? Because the corporations fear its activities. It really accomplishes something.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, well, my friend is setting up a straw man to have something to knock down.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; that effort has been made on the floor of this House every year and Members know it. Look what happened in the last session.

Mr. WOODRUM. The Federal Trade Commission is very well pleased with this appropriation, yet my friend is kicking about it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They must have been told to be pleased with it. They were not pleased with it when it came up for consideration in the last session.

Mr. TABER. They have been well taken care of.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think we have been very liberal with them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from New York well knows he wanted to take $250,000 away from them.

Mr. TABER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That shows the position of the gentleman from New York with regard to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman knows I only want to keep them down where they belong.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I know what the gentleman is seeking to do with them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some member of the committee wishes to ask further questions about the independent establishments I shall get down to the veterans' provisions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true nearly all these investigations the gentleman has referred to were started in the Senate? We really ought to have a provision that investigations, which are always made at enormous expense, may not be made except with the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. FULMER. Can the gentleman point the House to any convictions that have occurred as a result of any of the investigations made by the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will find in the hearings a very illuminating and interesting statement by the chief counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, Mr. Healy. It is a very clear statement of what they have done.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. May I direct the gentleman's attention to the Federal Trade provision of this bill, page 21, providing that no new investigations shall be initiated by the Commission as the result of a legislative resolution, except the same be a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. I thank the gentleman for reminding me of that. We think that is a very wholesome provision.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Are ample funds provided under this bill to finance the Federal Trade Commission's general investigation of the Power Trust?

Mr. WOODRUM. We think we have given them sufficient funds. We have given them the funds that the Director of the Budget estimated, and they think they can carry on the utilities investigation.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the Federal Trade Commission satisfied with the appropriation, and do they say it will be sufficient to carry on this investigation?

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, my friend knows it is hard ever to satisfy a bureau. They would like to have more, of course. They say if they had more money they could do the job quicker and do a better job. But I may say to the gentleman there is no doubt of the fact they are given sufficient funds to carry on in a constructive way the power investigation. That is what the gentleman is interested in.

Mr. RANKIN. What I am interested in is that the Federal Trade Commission shall have ample funds to carry on this investigation of the Power Trust to the fullest extent without being hampered or restricted in any way that would embarrass them.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman that I think they are amply provided for.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BRENNAN. A short time ago I introduced a resolution in the House asking for an investigation of the cement industry. I note from the press during the last week that the Secretary of the Interior has been in touch with the Federal Trade Commission with reference to the cement industry insofar as it affects the National Government.

For information may I ask the gentleman if this appropriation contemplates the expenses connected with this investigation? I ask this because in a letter from the Commission I was asked that an appropriation be provided if I expected my investigation to be continued.

Mr. WOODRUM. The understanding of the committee, I may say to the gentleman, is that the cement investigation was, or will be, concluded by the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. BRENNAN. I may say that the investigation of the cement industry we asked for is not contemplated by the investigation being made by the Commission at this time. It is not a price-fixing investigation, but the investigation of the question of prices with reference to the cement companies took place since the conclusion of the report that is now in the hands of the committee, if I am correctly informed by the Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think, under this provision in the bill, Congress will have to appropriate by special joint resolution sufficient funds for the investigation.

Mr. BRENNAN. Then I am to understand that the request of the Secretary of the Interior made last week, or the complaints initiated by him within the last week against the cement industry, will fall unless some further appropriation is made?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is my understanding. If the investigations are new investigations they cannot be initiated unless funds are provided by Congress for the investigation.

Mr. BRENNAN. Then I may state to the gentleman and the Members of Congress at this time that in view of the fact the cement industry, as reported by the Secretary of the Interior, has such a price-fixing arrangement that the road building in the various States of the Union and the road building contemplated by the National Government is being held up. I am inclined to think, if this is the situation, sufficient funds should be provided at this time to enable the Government to determine whether or not there is a violation of law.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I had understood that the Government had just completed a thorough survey of the cement industry—is not that so?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. If they have just completed an investigation, they must have all the facts available at the present time.

Mr. BRENNAN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that the investigation did not cover what is now contemplated and was not thorough. It had nothing to do with price fixing; and I have a report from the Commission itself that the price fixing by the cement industry took place after the closing of the testimony taken at the investigation now before that particular Commission.

Mr. SNELL. I understood they had just completed an investigation.

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot yield any further on that point. The gentleman from Illinois will have to introduce his resolution and have it take the usual course.

Mr. BRENNAN. The resolution is now before the committee, and not only the resolution but the complaints of the Secretary of the Interior made within the last week should be taken care of at this time and should not be passed over, with the effect of telling the Secretary of the Interior that we have passed them over without taking any action.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not want to get into any cross-fire discussion of this particular matter, but I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I merely want to bring out one point in connection with the gentleman's remarks, and that is that you can buy cement at any place in this country at the same price, because it is being sold everywhere at the same price, regardless even of freight rates.

Mr. BRENNAN. I want to say to the gentleman that you cannot buy a sack of cement in the United States f.o.b. factory. You can only buy cement f.o.b. point of delivery, and I may say that road building in Illinois, Indiana, and Iowa is being held up and thousands and thousands of men are now idle because of the fact that the cement manufacturers are quoting the authorities of the different States an increase of 78 cents a barrel over prices given them a year ago.

The activities of the cement companies with relation to the manner of submitting bids to the several States of the Union have been forcibly brought to public attention since the press within the last week announced that these same tactics were employed by these companies in their dealings with the National Government.

I am not making any charges that any company or companies have been violating the law. I do not know.

However, I do wish to say that the circumstances connected with the submission of bids to the several States and to the National Government smack of irregularities that should be thoroughly investigated without delay.

Profiteering must not be permitted under any circumstances. If the greedy fingers of any corrupt organizations are found to be at the throat of American commerce, now is the time to call a halt.

Why should the cement industry refuse to submit bids f.o.b. factory, as they now refuse to do in Illinois and other States?

Why should all bids submitted be identical with respect to prices?

Why the great rise in prices at the present time compared with prices heretofore obtained?

Being permitted to meet and discuss prices and other matters pertaining to competitive bidding places the cement industry in a charmed class.

We are fighting our way out of a depression. A fine spirit of patriotic understanding between employer and employee has lightened the burden. National and State Governments are bending their efforts to relieve the situation.

The press of the country is entitled to everlasting appreciation for their invaluable assistance prompted by their unselfish desire to serve.

The National Congress is in extra session at this time enacting legislation and making huge appropriations to help those in distress. Some State governments have been compelled to enact sales tax laws and other legislation to cope with the unemployment situation in their respective States.

Courts have cautioned and advised against foreclosures and other forms of legal procedure that are unnecessarily obnoxious.

Are we not entitled to know, or at least to make inquiry, why the governmental bodies of the Nation are held up in their activities due to the cement situation? There is necessity for continued road building. The unemployment situation demands it.

We cannot build roads without cement. We cannot buy cement at exorbitant prices. Public opinion demands that competitive bidding be not destroyed.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield for a question.

Mr. FULMER. In connection with the gentleman's statement I should like to show to the House the result of investigations by the Federal Trade Commission. The cement corporations were thoroughly investigated and the Commission found many unfair practices in their business, but nothing was done except to tell them not to do it any more, and now we want to have another investigation following the one we have just had.

Mr. GOSS. If the gentleman will permit, before the gentleman goes on to the Veterans' Administration appropriation, will he not put in the Record at this place the chart he has been referring to?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have already put that in the Record.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question on the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Was it the opinion of the Commission that ample funds had been provided to take care of all investigations?

Mr. WOODRUM. It certainly was.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I want to ask a question about the Interstate Commerce Commission. As the gentleman knows, in the past it has been the policy of the Commission to conduct hearings throughout the country whenever matters of discrimination in rates at one port as against another, for instance, came up. Does the gentleman know whether it will be possible to carry on these hearings throughout the country as they have done in the past, or will the shippers and other persons interested in such rate-discrimination cases be compelled to come to Washington and appear before the Commission here?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Interstate Commerce Commission says that the cut in their appropriation will undoubtedly prevent them from having some of their hearings in the field, and some of them will have to be held in Washington rather than at points more convenient to the shippers. However, I may say to the gentleman that if experience shows the committee and the Congress that any great injustice is being done the taxpayer, we will have ample opportunity to be more liberal in their appropriations. Personally I feel they are not handicapped in their appropriations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to pass to the major item of reduction and one in which I am sure every Member of Congress, as well as everyone in the country, is interested; but before I come to that may I say that in the independent offices bill there are quite a number of legislative provisions. I shall not discuss these legislative provisions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 more minutes.

I am going to leave this to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], who will follow me when I have discussed the Veterans' Administration item.

Mr. Chairman, I should like, if I may, to proceed for just a few minutes without interruption. I shall then be glad to yield for any questions or give any information I can.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a facsimile of the chart which I have exhibited here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

<sup>3</sup> Supplemented by $10,850,000 transferred from "Military and naval compensation" under the provisions of sec. 317, Public, 212, 72nd Cong., approved June 30, 1932.

Mr. WOODRUM. This chart shows a reduction in veterans' expenditures of $460,000,634 for the next fiscal year.

These reductions are made by virtue of the new regulations promulgated by the President pursuant to the authority given him in the Economy Act.

I shall not undertake to say to my colleagues that these reductions have not been drastic. Undoubtedly, in many instances it will appear to us that they have been too drastic, but I believe if we were coming today to make initial provision for the veterans of our wars, if, for instance, we had never made any provision heretofore for the veterans, and we were coming now to provide for them, the veterans and their friends—and I count myself as one of their friends—would feel that the Government is being liberal with its ex-service men.

Of course, these cuts seem very drastic to us in comparison with the payments we have been making in the past and which many of the people of America had become convinced were unjustified.

May I call your attention to the fact that thousands of veterans are going off the rolls by virtue of these new regulations.

But the President has authority to revise these regulations at any point or place where it may develop that an injustice is being done to a veteran. I can speak with authority when I say this. I know it is the determination and purpose of the President and his associates in charge of the administration of these laws to do a full measure of sympathetic justice to relieve veterans injured in the service of their country or who are suffering from diseases contracted in the service of their country.

Under the new regulations every veteran who was injured in battle or who contracted a disease while in the service of his country and who is now in a physical condition caused by injury or disease is provided for, both in the matter of compensation and the matter of hospitalization.

Not only that, but the Government is going farther; every honorably discharged veteran of any war and the veterans of the World War who served as much as 90 days before November 11, 1918, who are now permanently disabled or unable to care for themselves, are not only given hospital and medical treatment and domiciliary care but granted a pension of $20 a month.

When this agitation for curtailment of veterans' cost was first inaugurated and attracted the attention of the country the veterans thought that all non-service-connected cases were going off the list. That is not true. The totally disabled veteran who served his country is going to be taken care of.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. How is he going to be taken care of on $20 a month?

Mr. WOODRUM. In lieu of the $20 a month he can go to the soldiers' home and be taken care of.

Mr. BOILEAU. But that will not take care of his family; they cannot go to the soldiers' home.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, and I should like to have him answer it.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. HOEPEL. A friend of mine—and I personally know this—was twice wounded in battle. He was captured when we fell back. He was receiving and will receive up to July 1 $70 a month for disability, and under this his pension will be reduced to $6, because he is occupying a position in the Veterans' Administration. Despite the fact that this man today carries a piece of shell in his body, under the new regulations he must forfeit his position in the Veterans' Administration because he is in receipt of a reduced pension of $6 per month. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is fair treatment of a veteran?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not accept the gentleman's statement of facts. I think he must have some of the facts wrong.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Virginia should be allowed to proceed until he has completed his statement. We want to hear the whole story. [Applause.]

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am always glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. BUSBY. I should like to say this: I do not agree with the gentleman's statement of facts, but I think I have documentary proof before me that the gentleman is not covering the case of veterans who are being dealt with under this provision. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman if, when the economy bill was before the House, the House had any intimation that the Veterans' Administration was going to strike from the rolls the tubercular veterans and those suffering from cancer, paralysis, and other chronic diseases who were put on the roll under the presumptive law of 1924?

I do not so understand it, and I do not believe the Membership of the House understood that those men were to be stricken from the roll. They were put on there because Congress believed their disabilities in all probability originated in the service. Yet if those men are not totally permanently disabled, they go off the roll entirely. That is working a terrible injustice, not only to the veterans but it is throwing many of those men and their dependents on the charity of the local communities.

Mr. WOODRUM. Tubercular cases undoubtedly present a problem that the administration will have to deal with, and I am frank to say to the gentleman that I am not here advocating any cause or undertaking to defend anything. All I am trying to do is to give you information, such as I have. It may be wrong—and, if so, the gentleman from Mississippi will correct me—but it was my understanding, and I think all of us knew perfectly well that a great many of the so-called "presumptive cases" under the old law were going to be taken off the rolls; otherwise there would have been no saving in that class of cases.

With reference to the tubercular cases, as the gentleman knows, they have a 2-year presumptive period now in which they may show the existence of tuberculosis during the service, or within a year after service, or, if it exists to a sufficient degree, then 2 years after service, so that they can say from a medical point of view, that it did exist within the 1-year period.

Mr. RANKIN. As I pointed out on the floor of this House before, there are at least three classes of cases that were put on under the presumptive law that at the very best this ruling will work a great injustice on. A great many men came out of the war—

Mr. WOODRUM. I hope the gentleman will not take up too much of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not want to, but I do think under the circumstances, since we are denied opportunity to amend—

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, you can amend on this.

Mr. RANKIN. If we did, we could not change the law. A great many of these men were gassed or suffered from influenza and came out of the war in a weakened condition. They did not know that they had a right to apply for compensation until after that 2-year period had expired. There were many men who did not know of their growing physical disability until after that term had expired. There were many men whose patriotism restrained them from making application until finally, when they broke down, and were compelled to do so, they found they were too late. To now rake those men from the roll and say to them that they are excluded seems to me to be a great injustice which ought to be corrected.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think that has been done.

Mr. RANKIN. I know it has been done. I do not think anything about it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Nobody said to them that they were going to be raked from the roll. The Government has said that if they can show that within 24 months after they were discharged from the service they had active tuberculosis, it will be considered service-connected.

Mr. RANKIN. If they could do that, we would never have passed the law in 1924. The law passed in 1924 was to take care of that situation after they began to break down. There were no records, many of them had no record, the comrades of many of them were scattered and they were unable to make proper proof.

This law was put on the statute books in 1924 to take care of those very cases. To now say to them that they will have to go back and dig up this testimony would be just like telling a Spanish War veteran that he would have to go back 35 years and dig up the proof in his case.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the operation of this law shows, when it is put into practical effect, that any injustice is being done to worthy veterans, the gentleman knows perfectly well that Members of Congress and the administration will all be willing to cooperate and correct the injustice.

Mr. RANKIN. It should be done.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I wish to have a matter cleared up which has been rather confusing to me, as I think it is to many other Members of the House. A few moments ago the gentleman used the phrase in speaking of compensation under the present regulation of those who were "injured in battle" and those contracting disease in the service of their country, and as a result thereof having permanent disability. That phrase "wounded in battle" has been used to such an extent that I think it ought to be cleared up. What is the gentleman's opinion of a case where a man is injured in the service of his country while on duty with his military organization, and yet not injured in battle?

Mr. WOODRUM. If I used the phrase "in battle", I meant a direct service-connected disability, whether it was in camp or on the battle front.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. WOODRUM. In the case of a man who was serving actively in the service of his country and was injured, of course, we have never made any distinction, whether he was in battle or in camp, except, I think, in the case of retired emergency officers.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Is it not true, under the orders now issued by the President, having to do with those permanently, totally injured in battle or subject to handicaps, disabilities incurred in active service, that their compensation was reduced in many cases by 30 or 40 percent. That they suffer an initial reduction of 20 percent, plus an additional reduction in benefit, due to the regrouping of cases under that 10, 25, 50, and 75 percent grouping, so that a man, for example, who has a 42-percent disability will get, in addition to the 20-percent reduction, a further reduction, which gives him only 25 percent benefit instead of 42 percent benefit to which he would be entitled today if he had a 42-percent disability because of injury incurred in battle. Does that not apply even to those who have suffered amputation of arms and of legs? Is it not true that they might, under these orders, suffer a reduction of 30 or 40 or even a greater percent under what they are now receiving?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes, and I will try to give the gentleman an explanation.

Mr. HOEPEL. Well, I have an explanation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, I have one, too, that I think I should give first.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia this question: In handling 4,000,000 veterans' cases, is there any power or any authority less than omniscient, omnipresent and omnipotent that could fail to do some injustice to some in that big group?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course not.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that it is the President of the United States who has bravely assumed the authority and responsibility for what has been done thus far, and we know he is brave and we know he is sympathetic, and he frankly admitted last Saturday that he expects to make some mistakes and that he certainly is going to make mistakes like other humans. When such mistakes are made I am one of those who believe that he is going to correct them. If he should fail to correct these injustices that surely will occur here and there, then the Congress in its power must correct them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Exactly. I thank the gentleman for that observation.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Congress will make proper corrections, but surely just now we should be patient with the President and not criticize him unjustly.

Mr. WOODRUM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. No, not now. I should like to say a few words myself while we are going along.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. I did not mean to reflect upon the President. I was simply asking for information.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am going to give it right now. Under the old law there were many grave abuses of compensation laws. Everybody knows that. Under the new regulations ten or twelve thousand veterans are now drawing compensation for service-connected disabilities who did not enlist until after November 11, 1918.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not yield to the gentleman. If he will permit, I should like to make a few remarks myself.

Mr. HOEPEL. I want the gentleman to yield for one question.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will not now yield for even one question.

Mr. HOEPEL. You evidently do not want the Members to know the truth. I want to give you the facts.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am glad to see the gentleman sitting on the right side of the House today, anyway. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOEPEL. If the gentlemen on my right reflect my viewpoint, I congratulate them as being Americans.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, I do not want to be offensive to the gentleman from California, or to anybody, and I think the Membership know that I want to yield, but I want to give an explanation. The gentleman from Massachusetts has asked me for information. If the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL] will sit down and calm himself and make himself comfortable, or will go outside for a few moments, I should like to make that explanation.

Mr. HOEPEL. I will sit down.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will yield when I get ready.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman answer one question? The regular order was demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now, gentlemen, I want to answer the question which the gentleman has asked, about the fact that some direct service-connected disabilities are going to be reduced by virtue of the operation of this new rating table, and that is correct. But I want to call attention to the fact, which has been overlooked, that a great many other cases will receive increases in compensation because of the new and very much more equitable method of rating the cases.

Under the existing law the veteran is rated on the basis of pre-war occupation. Under the new regulations he is rated on the basis of the average impairment of his present earning capacity.

Let us draw an example, for a moment, to illustrate what I am talking about. Suppose there are two brothers who went to war. We will say "A" is a bookkeeper and "B" is a structural-iron worker. They go to war and they are in the same company and in the same battle. Both of them have injuries to their hips from shrapnel, that causes ankylosis of the hip, a stiffening of the hip. Under the old rating table, the rating of the bookkeeper, "A", was 26. He got $26. The rating of "B", the structural-iron worker, because his variant is 9, and a hip disease to an ironworker causes a greater economic disability, was rated at 66, and his compensation was therefore $66. Therefore those two brothers who served in the same company, under the same flag, struck by the same shell, and having the same injury, one receives $26 and the other $66. Under the new rating table those two men are rated on the basis of the disability to the average man suffering that kind of disability, and their rating is 50 percent disability, and they get $40.

The structural-iron worker thus receives a reduction of $26. Undoubtedly he is going to write to his Congressman and kick about it, but you will never hear anything from "A" who got an increase, from $26 to $40.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this runs all the way through in detail. Undoubtedly some fellows are going to receive some reduction, but the new rating table is based on the average impairment of a man's proved earning capacity. He will receive what is right, what is just, and what is fair for the disability he incurred, and now suffers.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very briefly.

Mr. MAY. I merely want to make a helpful suggestion. I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia in his polite yielding.

At the present time veterans of the Spanish-American War are all reduced by a form letter to $6. At the same time the Department is getting out a set of blanks upon which to make application for adjustments. It is just like a court arranging its docket to have a hearing and determine what is exactly right about each particular case. While I voted against the economy bill, I want to say I think this illustration I have given is evidence of the fact that the administration is going to handle the matter justly. I think the House ought to understand that.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say further in this connection that one group of Spanish-American War veterans actually gets an increase of approximately $11,000,000 under this new rating, both the war veterans, their widows, and dependents will get an increase under the regulations.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very briefly.

Mr. MAY. Under the very first regulation made by the President affecting Spanish-American War veterans there is provided a graduated scale from $8 to $250 that will cover every kind of disability and allow latitude for adjustment and justice.

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly. I now yield to the gentleman from California if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. HOEPEL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question because he made the statement this rating is fair. I wish to recite to him a case that is personally known to me.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do not take all of my time.

Mr. HOEPEL. This man took part in 10 engagements in the Philippines. He lost his leg in the tenth engagement. Under this law his pension is reduced 200 percent, and he is forced out of Government employment because he is receiving a pension. His compensation has been reduced over 200 percent. I know the facts of this case and will recite them in detail if the gentleman wishes me to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I wish to yield first to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield right here for a brief question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very well.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Can the gentleman inform the House how it is possible mathematically to reduce a man's compensation 200 percent? [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I feel it has been very difficult for the gentleman to take the position he has, because I know of his great interest in the veterans, and I am sure he did not realize these very drastic cuts would take place.

Does not the gentleman feel it would be very difficult for the average war veteran, and especially difficult for the Spanish War veteran, to establish service connection of his disability after the lapse of all this time? A great many people and doctors who could have given affidavits have died.

Does not the gentleman feel some of these regulations can be easily changed? The President has the power to do so. The President promised in his campaign that no injustice would be worked upon the veterans.

Mr. WOODRUM. Undoubtedly they can be changed, and undoubtedly they will be modified.

May I say further that the burden of proof is on the Government to show in the case of Spanish-American War veterans that their disabilities were not service-connected. Bear this in mind. The difficulty of a Spanish-American War veteran establishing the service-connected nature of his disability was realized, and for this reason the burden of proof was placed on the Government to show that it was not service-connected.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question along the line of my previous one?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. As a matter of information, as I understand, there is, first of all, a 20-percent cut in all total permanent cases.

In addition, there is a change in the grouping so that an individual veteran suffering from a disability does not get the benefit of the actual percentage of his disability, but within a group he gets the minimum rating of the group. For example, let us take the group from 25-percent to 50-percent disabled. The man we are speaking of has a 42-percent disability. Is it not true he gets payment only for a 25-percent disability?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not exactly, I may say to the gentleman, for the reason that the old rating tables were based on a variant. Just as illustrated in the cases of the bookkeeper and the structural-iron worker, the bookkeeper was given a variant of 1, and the 26-percent disability rating gave him $26 a month. The structural-iron worker was given a variant of 9 and he was given $66.

Under the new rating table they are given a rating based on the average impairment of earning and each veteran will receive the proper allowance. It is a general leveling process under which, if the spirit of these regulations is carried into effect, there will be a very much more equitable adjustment of benefits between the same class of veterans.

My time is about up. I have but 3 minutes remaining and I wish to conclude.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very briefly.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman state the aggregate sum of the savings, or the decrease in payments to veterans, under this new Economy Act? It was rather hard to see them on the chart.

Mr. WOODRUM. Four hundred and sixty million dollars. The gentleman will recall that when the economy bill was under consideration it was estimated that $385,000,000 or $383,000,000 would be the amount of reduction; but I call attention to the fact that $50,000,000 is an arbitrary amount provided for loans on adjusted-service certificates. Of course, this is a mere matter of bookkeeping and does not affect the rights of the veterans. If they apply for the loans, they will have to get them. This takes $50,000,000 off of the $460,000,000, and $34,000,000 is the reduction in administrative expenses, some of which is salary reduction and a great deal of which is reduced personnel.

Mr. HEALEY. With these savings, there will not be many increases in the compensation of any veterans.

Mr. WOODRUM. Only time can demonstrate that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated a moment ago that, so far as the Spanish-American War veteran is concerned, the Government would have the burden of proof to establish that his disability was not service-connected. Is it not a fact that the Government will not go behind the records; and unless the records show conclusively that the disability was service connected, the burden of proof will be on the veteran, and no one else?

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not believe this chart reflects the true picture insofar as it refers to reductions in veterans' relief, and I should like to ask the gentleman a few questions about it. Take the item of pensions; it was $592,730,000 under the bill that was vetoed. The reduction under the present bill brings it down to $231,730,000. In truth and in fact, as I understand it, practically all the reduction was taken from the service-connected cases; is not that true?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, no; the gentleman knows that practically 400,000 non-service-connected cases go off the rolls entirely.

Mr. PATMAN. I know; but in this respect it was under the old law $372,000,000 annually, and it has been reduced to about $107,000,000 annually. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM. Approximately.

Mr. PATMAN. And that includes about $175,000,000 or $200,000,000 from service-connected cases.

Mr. WOODRUM. A great many of those, as the gentleman knows, will go to the non-service-connected cases and they will get the $20 allowance. A great many of them are cases that enlisted after the armistice, that go off the rolls entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has consumed 1 hour.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes. Under the rule the gentleman cannot proceed longer than 1 hour, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should be allowed to proceed beyond the hour, but the time should come out of the time fixed for general debate.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Under the original bill, as I understand it, there was a provision that would allow an insurance contract to be canceled. Has that legislative provision been taken out of the new bill or is it still in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is not in the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. As I understand it, the President, of course, will adjust certain cases, but will he adjust them by groups or classes or will he make adjustments in individual cases?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question, because just a few days ago the executive committee of the American Legion, meeting in Indianapolis, passed a resolution which I should like to insert in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution passed by the executive committee of the American Legion at Indianapolis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXTRACT FROM PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING, THE AMERICAN LEGION, INDIANAPOLIS, IND., MAY 4-5, 1933

A review of present regulations has already disclosed appalling injustice. Your committee makes the following recommendations for changes in regulations issued under authority of the National Economy Act:

1. This committee recommends that all of the power and influence of this organization and all of the knowledge gained from our years of experience with the subject, should be utilized immediately to bring about a modification and liberalization of existing regulations and recommendations issued under the economy bill to the end that the service-connected cases will continue to receive proper medical care and generous compensation.

2. That our national organization oppose with all its power the policy of recentralization by the Veterans' Administration.

It is the opinion of your committee that as a result of the suddenness of the passage of the new act and the important scope of changes effected under it, together with such misunderstandings as may exist concerning the future effects of the changed order, there will be many and varied resolutions adopted by posts and departments of the Legion in the near future which will recommend changes in the present law and procedure.

Your liaison committee respectfully suggests that the national executive committee direct the chairman of the national rehabilitation committee, together with such of his associates as he shall designate, be instructed to, at an early moment, seek conference with the Honorable Lewis W. Douglas, Director of the Budget, and, if necessary, with the President of the United States, so to point out the manifest necessity—in the interest of justice—of effecting liberalizations relating to the four following subjects. The liaison committee suggests the following subjects be declared to be the immediate future policy of the American Legion.

1. The perpetuation of service connection for all veterans properly granted such service connection under laws in existence immediately prior to March 20, 1933.

2. A relaxing of the present regulations relating to hospitalization and domiciliary care in Government institutions for non-service-connected disabilities, particularly in respect of the present requirement for "permanency" and as to income receipt.

3. Rectification of money payments to veterans suffering from service-incurred disablements to more equitable levels.

4. A liberalization of some of the present unduly restrictive burial provisions.

Should such conference fail to produce the proper modification of existing regulations, it is requested that area conference of the national rehabilitation committee be instructed to be conducted prior to the several department conventions to which representatives of the several departments be invited, in order that suggestions may be transmitted in respect of future policy to the department conventions for their consideration, and it is—in event of such failure—further requested that the chairman of the national rehabilitation and legislative committees be directed to call a meeting of the national rehabilitation committee prior to the 1933 national convention for the purpose of compiling and drafting a proposed act particularly relating to the foregoing subjects, the proposed instrument to be transmitted to the national convention, and if approved by that body to be forwarded to the national legislative committee for introduction at the next regular session of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

EARL V. CLIFF, Chairman.
PAUL M. HERBERT.

Approved by national executive committee May 5, 1933.

Mr. WOODRUM. In this resolution they set out certain objections to these regulations and appointed a committee to take the matter up with the administration, and I want to say to the gentleman and to the House that I am just as much interested as any Member of this House in taking care of the worthy veterans. I have them in my district just as you have them and I will join with you, if need be, though it will not be necessary, because I am confident our President is going to do the very best he possibly can to iron out any injustices or correct any errors in these regulations where there has been an injustice done to the veterans. And I may say this, because I know many of you are thinking about your regional offices, although no one has said anything about it up to the present time.

There is nothing in this bill that directly affects regional offices. There is no specific provision for or against them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. In this item of $34,000,000, of course, there is a reduction in administrative expenses, and as the affairs of the Veterans' Administration decrease, or as the load decreases, it may be at certain points in the country it will be necessary in the interest of administrative efficiency to close or reduce certain regional activities and recentralize them in Washington, but this is purely a matter of administrative policy, and if this House were to put back in this bill $8,000,000, the cost of these regional offices, it would not affect it at all unless the President would modify his regulations and require the opening and maintenance of the offices. But may I say before I yield for any further questions, if it becomes necessary at any time to put more money in this bill, I want to plead with you not to put it in at a point where it will be used to pay salaries, but put it in at a point where it will liberalize the hospitalization facilities, and that is the point in these regulations where I hope the President will revise the regulations.

Now, I want to say this: I think any honorably discharged veteran of any of our wars who is destitute and in need of hospital treatment—if there are available Government hospital facilities, the door ought not to be closed against that veteran. [Applause.] I hope and believe that the President will modify his regulations so that they will permit that to be done.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the lady.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I was under the impression that the Budget stated that it would require an additional $8,000,000 to keep the regional offices open.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is not my information. Nobody can tell until we know something about the regulations what will have to be done. Undoubtedly they are going to be diminished because thousands of veterans are going off the roll, and of course regional activities are going to be curtailed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know how many vacant beds there are in hospitals at the present time? I know that before the economy bill was passed there were about 3,300 vacant beds in the hospitals, and I understand now there are about 14,000 vacant beds. Cannot the men be kept in hospitals? I understood before the economy bill became law that the men now hospitalized would not be discharged until they were well.

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot give the exact number.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to ask the gentleman whether in making up the estimate of $77,000,000 plus any consideration was given to the question of whether or not the regional offices would be abandoned?

Mr. WOODRUM. In a statement filed in the joint hearings on the economy bill an item of $8,000,000 was included for regional activities. The gentleman knows that that is purely an estimate. Nobody could possibly say with any degree of certainty what effect the new regulations were going to have.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the veteran would be benefited from a persuasive and humanitarian point through the regional office rather than by correspondence from Washington?

Mr. WOODRUM. There is a difference of opinion as to whether or not it would not be advisable to centralize all the activities in Washington. I do not believe that we should expend money unnecessarily on these regional offices but should expend the money directly for the benefit of the veterans.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I illustrate my point by a little geography? My district is 100 or 150 miles from Boston. We had at Springfield a useful branch of the Boston office, but it has been closed, and the veterans now have to go to Boston. Now, if the Boston office is abolished, will it not be to the detriment of the veterans to have to carry on their correspondence with Washington, rather than taking their cases up personally with the present regional office? The men from my district have been going to Boston for physical examination and the correspondence has been carried on with Boston.

Mr. WOODRUM. That may very well be taken up by the administration.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. We have the same situation in Detroit. We have a regional office in Detroit, and we hope that it shall not be discontinued.

Conditions were very unsatisfactory concerning the adjustments of cases through the Washington office. The Detroit office is functioning much better than the office at Washington, and it is far better for the veterans and for the Government that the Detroit regional office be continued. It is my further wish that the empty beds in Government hospitals be thrown open to the use of needy and sick veterans, and that they not be allowed to lie idle.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. For the benefit of the membership and those interested in the regional offices, will the gentleman not explain that it is his understanding that it will be the policy of the administration to leave the nucleus of a regional office at Government institutions in those States where they have Government institutions for the purpose of direct contact?

Mr. WOODRUM. Where there are veterans' hospitals or administration hospitals or homes, it is the purpose of the Veterans' Administration to leave a nucleus there to take care of pending cases, and in other points where it is necessary to continue regional offices they will be continued. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on behalf of those who are interested in Federal appropriations, and to say that never in my experience has a bill like this one been brought before the House. It is to the great credit of the House that a large reduction has come about. This independent offices bill was passed originally last session in both Senate and House carrying an appropriation for the fiscal year 1934 of $1,004,000,000. It was vetoed by President Hoover. The amount carried in the present bill for 1934 is $535,000,000, or a difference of over $460,000,000 in reductions.

Last session I favored, as did a great many others of the House, a proposal permitting the President to make bureau consolidations and reductions in expenditures. That right was not agreed to by a majority of Congress at that time. Both sides of the House this session have agreed to a like bill and—with the President of the United States, who is our President as well as yours—Congress is making many needed reductions. We do not all agree with all the terms of this bill or any other bill. Like many of you, I question some reductions that have gone into the veterans' item and other controverted matters, and yet something had to be done. The chairman of the committee assures us that a review of these cuts will be made by the President to prevent injustice to veterans. I am hoping, if so, to support the bill, and in any event, I commend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], chairman of the committee, who has put an enormous amount of work on this bill as well as on appropriations generally. Also I congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], leading Republican member of the Appropriations Committee, who has labored hard though sometimes ineffectively in the past, because he was not supported by the House as he should have been, but who has been of great value to Congress in the work performed on the Appropriations Committee. One of the best compliments I have received at any time in my legislative experience came recently from the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who invited me to join with him in his work on this Appropriations Committee. I would have gladly done so if another assignment had not been made.

I say this especially in regard to the bill before us which helps materially to balance the Budget, and believe as an outsider I have right to mention these great reductions, because I have taken active part in the past in reductions of what were believed by action of the House to be unnecessary and large wasteful expenditures by the Government.

I spoke briefly the other day in regard to severe criticisms which come from the press continually in respect to the actions of Congress. We are criticized on everything from official franking to the new House Office Building. Such criticisms, if unjust, are destructive. Some of the Members have moved over into the new building, where two rooms now provide for clerks, stenographers, telephones, and all visitors. Heretofore all have been jammed into one room. An authorization for that building went through Congress 4 years ago for $7,500,000, and I mention this simply as an illustration of what I have in mind. That amount has been reduced by Congress, and a saving of something like $1,400,000 has occurred in the cost of that one building and furnishings. Those who represent us on the various committees deserve credit for such savings. I believe a fact like this should be given publicity by the press, but that rarely occurs, because broadcasting discontent seems more popular with a portion of the press and words of praise rarely occur. Gross injustice has been done Congress in both Senate and House by members of the press, owing to hurried judgment or frequent disregard for those who are unable to correct misstatements. Not 10 percent of the press has engaged in injustice, but that 10 percent makes much noise by continually hammering Congress without any opportunity given for meeting unjust criticisms. I wish to offer brief suggestions to disclose the extent to which some of these unwarranted criticisms extend, but at the outset I wanted to say a word of deserved commendation for the splendid work of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no Member will willingly enter into controversy with any reputable paper or newswriter. Public officials are always subject to just criticism, but during these days of world-wide business distress, sensational writers and metropolitan papers unjustly denounce Congress because possibly it is a shining mark for flippant, captious writers who know those assailed cannot well answer.

Imitators of the metropolitan press have taken the cue, and I submit a case in mind, for illustration, where Congress is constantly lampooned and Senators and Members are intimated as unworthy of trust or confidence.

Such charges undoubtedly present a case involving the privileges of the House, but no resolution is offered under the rule, leaving the facts and record submitted to speak for themselves.

I have been urged in this case to reply to constant libelous criticisms against the American Congress from a writer and publisher in my own State. With regret I break a rule not ordinarily to answer false charges against Congress as a body or against myself personally. Gross slanders against the Senate and House, however, injure public confidence in officials, and the patience of those maligned may be misinterpreted for fear.

Merlin Hull, a small-newspaper publisher of my State, writes such slanders every week, which are published by his own and a number of other papers. Old enough to know better, Hull sought public office some 30 years ago, and since that time has been a perennial candidate for office.

Defeated by discriminating constituencies in four attempts for Congress, in different districts, and again defeated for a State office, he publicly asserts if he can win once out of 3 times, not yet attained, it will financially repay him.

Blanket libelous charges against the American Congress by his weekly letters published in several papers have a yearly circulation equal to a 1,000-page printed book distributed annually free of cost and presumably read by many thousands in family papers also carried mail-free in counties where published. Based on a 1-term experience some years ago, Mr. Hull's letters, written in Black River Falls, Wis., purport to come from Washington, and he professes to speak with intimate knowledge of Congress, insinuating grafting, cowardice, and improper practices found among Senators and Members. Briefly, I desire to discuss, among other matters, the motive and methods of Mr. Hull, together with the record.

Let me say personally that for over 20 years it has been a privilege to serve my district and State continuously in the American Congress, and from generous statements by colleagues this extra session I have taken full part in legislative work. Prior to congressional service it was my privilege to serve in the assembly and senate of my own State, and at the request of the then noted governor actively to aid in handling the progressive laws Wisconsin then passed. Activities of several parliamentary bodies in foreign countries have also been personally witnessed and studied in an effort to compare those bodies with our own.

Speaker Clark during the World War said the Membership of this House in character, ability, and legislative service measured up with any other Congress known to him. As a humble Member I would modestly say from the sidelines the same of this House, confronted as it is by an unprecedented national and world-wide depression, akin to war, that demands nonpartisanship and courage to a high degree. Men of ability and character constantly drop out, but others step into their places, and these newcomers preserve the standards of this great body. Critics not privileged to know facts from the inside often pass hasty judgment, but I firmly believe that in honesty, patriotism, and courage high standards have been maintained and that 95 percent of those elected to the American Congress, each chosen from among an average of 300,000 constituents, measure up to these requirements—not claimed to be supermen, but men well equipped for the high offices they hold.

May I add that service on different committees, including for many years the powerful Ways and Means Committee, gives fair opportunity for measuring abilities and character of Members. For illustration, three former members of my committee within 3 months have acceptably filled the high places of Vice President of the United States, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and Secretary of State, the latter the highest office in the President's Cabinet. From that committee also was taken the last preceding Secretary of the Treasury. Diplomats, judges, and other responsible officials have been and will be taken as of old from the same congressional ranks. No better gage of the personnel of this great legislative body can be offered.

Senatorial qualifications have been maintained at the same high standard as when in my boyhood days I haunted the House and Senate galleries listening to so-called "congressional giants" of the past.

THE AMERICAN CONGRESS DESERVES THE RESPECT AND CONFIDENCE OF EVERY CITIZEN

During my membership of the House I have been jealous of its good name and of the high standards of Members chosen from 48 States to this body, nor have I hesitated to defend it from scurrilous attacks that might lessen the confidence of the American people whom we represent.

When the so-called "National Security League", a hypocritical band of libelous egotists, attacked the Membership of the House and Senate during war times with inflammatory charges, I drew and urged in the House a resolution of investigation that was unanimously passed by the House and, with the aid of Speaker Clark and Members on both sides of the aisle, we unmasked cowardly character assassins working under the name of patriotism.

Legislative and financial interests and motives behind the un-American gang of character assassins were exposed, and the high-sounding guardian organization of America was then kicked into oblivion.

As an individual Member of the House I later introduced a like resolution demanding investigation of false charges carried by the press claimed to emanate from Governor General Wood, of the Philippines, that unnamed Senators and Members had accepted bribes for favoring independence of the islands.

Governor Wood cabled back repudiating the statement published by many American papers and said categorically he knew of no improper influence either by Filipinos or any Senators or Members. The infamous published charges, like the boy's hundred cats fighting in the back yard, turned out to be one ex-Member legitimately employed before legislative bodies in his proper capacity as a private citizen.

Not as an especial champion of the House, but as one of the 435 Members, I have occasionally answered unwarranted charges brought by sensational press writers or scandal-mongers, and when so doing have offered any evidence of undisclosed motives for charges that were to be exposed.

Members of the Senate and House have no redress against powerful press agencies or private parties that libel Congress generally, and the public often believes unsupported slanders when regularly repeated and undenied. The press is fair as a rule, and it is only the unfair writer that seeks to poison the public mind.

A CONGRESSIONAL CRITIC REPEATEDLY DEFEATED BY WISCONSIN CONSTITUENTS

Merlin Hull, a broadcaster of discontent, has been 5 times defeated by Wisconsin constituents and 4 times defeated for Congress by a discriminating constituency. Some years ago he served one term from another district.

For a long period he has been writing weekly letters published in his own weekly paper and also sent to a dozen other papers, practically all of which letters intimate or denounce in specific terms Senators and Members as grafters and cowards. Defeated for return to Congress by my colleague [Mr. WITHROW], after two previous defeats by Congressman Beck, and after his county's removal to my district, he was again defeated last year. With this part of Hull's political efforts the House is not interested, but in order to secure favor by poisoning the public mind in the new district he continues weekly denunciation of the House and Senate whether Congress is in session or not. The "only soldier keeping step", he is mystified why he is not sent to Congress so as to have 1 honest man among the 530 national legislators he condemns. Fifty columns annually of congressional abuse printed in his own paper and 10 times that space in other papers that carry his weekly wails of discontent warrant a brief statement of Mr. Hull's record, methods, and motives.

From his little home town, 1,200 miles distant from Washington, Hull pretends to write from Washington his weekly criticisms of Congress, whether it is in session or not.

Quoting from a recent letter on franking, he says:

The Post Office Department, in explaining its deficit, has been emphasizing the fact that Congressmen and Senators have sent out so many speeches and public documents that it cost the Government $750,000 per annum to carry them. That is nearly $1,500 per Member.

Repeatedly he has reiterated his opposition to the congressional franking privilege which he briefly enjoyed during one term without protest. At the same time he misleads 4,000 readers of his weekly Banner paper that enjoys free mail privileges and also some 20,000 or more other readers who are furnished his complaints against Congress by weekly letters he sends to other Wisconsin papers.

Mr. Hull's protests against any use of official franking right is to stifle answers to his continuous venomous articles. He follows the example of some daily newswriters in declaring that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a needless expense and that extended remarks of Members discussing public questions are valueless to these well-informed newswriters. Only one side of the picture, however, is presented, because like Hull's free Government mail, these daily newspapers alone occasion an annual postal deficit to the Government reaching more than $36,000,000, an important item in Budget balancing.

If the President pursues his promise when the postal rate bill was recently passed, he will need no microscope when looking for leaks in our postal deficits nor will the reading public necessarily suffer if extended editorial remarks and instructions to Congress are reduced by the ax of the Budget Director.

COWARDICE, GRAFTING, AND EXTRAVAGANCE ARE AMONG HULL'S CHARGES

In January of this year Hull's letters denounce Congress for refusing to reduce salaries to $5,000 annually, although during his one brief term Mr. Hull and family were paid at the rate of $15,000 annually, as later appears. He says:

With all the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD * * * no committee has reported in favor of reducing the cost of Congressmen from $9,000 and mileage to $5,000 per year, which was the 1914 level. * * * Almost unanimously Congressmen are all agreed that $9,000 for Congressmen is not extravagance, as they are that $5,000 per annum would not be the proper kind of economy.

Hull is not saying this to Congress but publishes these distorted statements to many thousands of uninformed readers through a dozen weekly papers. Another recent characteristic weekly letter from Hull says:

No Congressman is going to read the Army appropriation bill to his audiences. Congressmen never brag about appropriations except those they secure for their districts, their own little part of Government pie. * * * It will be interesting to watch the sidestepping and dodging of Senators who are attached to the wires. * * * Congress listened to the propaganda mills of the Eastern press as well as the soft voices of the lobbyists sent to Washington. * * * Some day Congress will be forced by public sentiment to open up income-tax matters and let the people know.

Another weekly letter recently published by Mr. Hull in numerous papers in northern Wisconsin says:

Congress authorized buying a second-hand office building in New York for $15,000,000 only valued at $7,000,000. * * * It is likely that were all those connected with the project brought into the limelight and a full exposure made that Senators who helped it along might find themselves in an uncomfortable situation, but no move has been made to bring discomfort to them.

Unnamed Senators he intimates are grafters discovered at his Black River Falls home, 1,200 miles away.

Another letter from Mr. Hull to a dozen papers says:

What has happened in the past 12 or 14 years * * * In 10 years the American people, through the crookedness of international bankers and other grafters, have lost $50,000,000,000. If there is any lack of confidence in our Government, it is due to the fact that the Government fails to protect from their continued thievery. Congress must have overlooked the fact when it accepted the advice of the money lifters and dropped the investigation.

"Grafters" and "Congress" are equally culpable in Hull's malicious charges. From another Hull poison-pen weekly letter to a dozen papers:

The President's program is broad, but it has not yet included any suggestions as to congressional barber shops and free shaves for Senators. He may conclude to let Congress have its own way.

This from a man who knows that no such perquisites have ever been given to Members.

Congressmen are not idle about their political fence building * * * the high cost of explaining by Congressmen keeps up even in the depression. * * * Some Congressmen seem to think everybody is thick-headed who questions them.

A political mud slinger defeated four times for Congress, so says Hull of a body of which he has ever sought to become a Member.

Congressionally dishonest implication from another of Hull's letters to a dozen papers:

Congress keeps right on adding to the big Government machine, but seldom does it take out a cog or a wheel; * * * the fact that the American people, millions of them, cannot pay their private debts seem not to have been properly weighed by the congressional forces. * * * After appropriating $36,000,000 to the coffers of steamship companies a few weeks ago Congress will now investigate. It will enable those Congressmen who voted for the appropriation to say that Congress is looking after the whole matter.

In his campaign of untruths and half truths Mr. Hull "forgot" that on a former annual postal bill, when hailing from the Wisconsin district, he voted for like long-term postal contracts, later discovered, and he also voted knowingly for some $34,000,000 annual "daily paper" mail losses and $8,000,000 "free in county" paper losses, including his own Banner free mail, and a $700,000 official franking bill he now denounces. He will probably now deny the record.

Extract from another Hull weekly scavenger letter to a dozen papers:

The cost of maintaining a Senator is about $20,000 per year more than that of keeping an ordinary Congressman in operation.

And from another poison-pen letter:

Some Congressmen refer to use of the franking privilege as educating the public. The public is paying a high tribute for a biased form of instruction. One may read all the speeches in the RECORD without finding one reference to deficit of restaurants.

Another besmirching Hull letter to a dozen papers says:

Were congressional leaders to outline further legislation for increasing taxes and balancing the Budget, * * * able to see the farm question at all, they might have an inclination to do something. Many of these are able to see nothing but the lobbyists to press one project or another upon them.

Every Member knows such statements are false and ridiculous, but the readers of Hull's weekly gutter sweepings do not know that fact, and his constant political appeals to "farmers", he believes, brings political assets. Hull assumes they do not know the facts and expects they will remain ignorant of the truth.

From a weekly letter about April 13, 1933, by Hull, 1,200 miles distant from Washington, to many papers:

Congressmen and Senators are voting largely as they are told to vote, as they try to get their bearings. * * * Big lobbyists always play for time * * * political bosses are scared, and so are politicians in Congress who are looking forward to next election day, and not even a big banker can scare a Congressman into a vote that will cost him his job. "Job safety first" is the slogan of many Congressmen, and few there are who forget the slogan.

Hull's own corrupt associations in the past are indicated by this picture of the American Congress. No lobbyist has approached me or 9 out of 10 Members of the American Congress, so far as learned, to discuss or ask for a vote for or against any bill this session or last. We know the false, libelous character of Hull's many vicious articles, only a few of which can be quoted; but the readers of his repeated charges and insinuations back in northern Wisconsin do not know.

The Black River Falls fault-finding letter writer on Congress writes last week to northern Wisconsin papers:

The statesmen at Washington are always liberal with Europe's warring nations, when it comes to discounting the debts and let our taxpayers make up the difference. * * * European silver shines more brilliantly to senatorial eyes. * * * What our country has lost on European war debts would pay the bonus several times.

In passing let me say I served 16 years in the Regular Army and Wisconsin National Guard, and know what that life and small pay mean. That relates to the "bonus." I voted against the war that produced the European and our own enormous debts, and have always supported every relief measure offered for the veterans. By armed force alone can European nations be compelled to pay "lost European war" debts. Congress has ever opposed their cancellation.

Mr. Hull poisons the public mind against statesmen at Washington who, he alleges, are "always liberal with Europe's warring nations when it comes to discounting the debts and let our own taxpayers make up the difference"; "European silver shines more brilliantly to senatorial eyes"; and so forth.

Extracts from printed letters here cited among scores of others indicate Hull's malicious weekly dropping of poison to thousands of readers. Whether Congress is in session or not, for 52 weeks in the year Mr. Hull assails Congress for doing or not doing something. He professes to speak for the "farmers", the "public", "taxpayers", and others in his long-distance challenges to Congress, although Hull never discusses such matters from the same platform with those who know the facts.

THE OFFICIAL FRANKING AND FREE MAILING LAWS

Constant denunciation by Mr. Hull of official franking authorized by law for over half a century overlooks his own newspaper's free mail service which far exceeds in amount the average Senator, or Member's use of franking rights.

This free mail service in Jackson County he forgot to mention to his home readers during the past 30 years.

On April 20 I urged a 2-cent first-class postage rate on all first-class mail in House debate after previously offering the same amendment in committee and then placed in the RECORD an important official statement received from the Post Office Department, which is as follows:

Postal receipts and expenditures, fiscal year 1932

Attention is called to the last column and mail "loss" items reported by the Post Office Department, for it shows where the great loss to the Government occurs. One item alone of "daily papers", deficit of $36,400,000, is 50 times the $700,000 cost for all departmental and congressional franked mail combined. Free-in-county papers, it will be noted, brought a deficit of $8,600,000, whereas all franked mail was only one twelfth the free-in-county deficit. Franked-mail deficit of every character, according to the Department, reached only "one tenth of 1 percent of the postal expenditures."

DEPARTMENTAL AND CONGRESSIONAL OFFICIAL FRANKING

Quoting from my speech of April 20—

It has been constantly stated that "franking" accounts for the large losses reported by postal authorities. Broadcasters of discontent aimed at 96 Senators and 435 Representatives for that reason have denounced the Congress repeatedly.

Not one paper or newswriter in 10 is unfair, and few papers in my State abuse Congress, but a candidate for Congress (Mr. Hull) uses a poison pen every week. Yet the loss in postal rates from his paper and others is 12 times the cost to taxpayers of all franking privileges as stated, for all Departments and Congress combined, as noted from the postal statement. Free-in-county newspapers are carried free excepting where delivered by carriers.

These small papers could not exist in 90 percent of the cases if it were not for free-in-county postal advantages extended to them by Congress because of educational aid, but caustic criticisms assert Members of Congress are causing this great postal deficit, although the entire franking for all purposes is less than one tenth of 1 percent of the total.

From Mr. BEEDY and others in that same debate, I quote:

Mr. BEEDY. Inasmuch as reference has been made to barber shops and restaurants it is time to make it a matter of record that there are no free barber shops at this side of the Capitol, and Members pay for everything they eat at the restaurant; in some instances higher than elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that our good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] in his speech clearly brought out the fact that frankable mail is responsible for only one tenth of 1 percent of the deficit. * * * Much franked matter by all the executive Departments should not be franked. * * * As a matter of fact, Congressmen have reduced their salaries 15 percent, or $1,500, in addition to a reduced term of 2 months voted by them, which meant an additional $1,500 reduction, or a total of 30 percent * * * Congressmen have reduced their mileage 25 percent and their clerical hire $750 per annum.

Mr. Hull's paper, the Banner, with 4,000 weekly circulation, has been carried by the Government free of cost through the mails for 30 years, excepting where delivered by carrier in his own county. His denunciation of Congress in his own and other papers sent weekly through the mail to his readers, if letter postage were paid, would cost him around $10,000, or more, annually for the same postage rates paid by the "farmer" he pretends to defend. Carried by the Government free in the county, his own paper alone according to departmental statement, saved him from $30,000 to $40,000 during the past 20 years in actual profit to him.

Again quoting:

Like my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], I hope on the same platform to meet this critic and answer some of his criticisms against Congress. This is not offered as a challenge but a mild protest against a constant stream of abuse directed at the American Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield; certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my friend if it is not a fact that the small cost to the Government of franking by Members of excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not bring the best results of any money this Government spends? If it were not for the privilege of Members' sending the actual RECORD to their people, the press, sometimes antagonistic, could ruin any man in Congress.

Mr. FREAR. I have so stated, and given an instance of one critic, Mr. Hull, in my own district who, through his weekly letter, carried through his home county at taxpayers' cost, as stated, denounces the American Congress in every weekly issue he sends out. However, he complains constantly about the franking privileges enjoyed by Members of Congress, about free meals, free shaves, and incompetence of a Congress of which he was once a brief Member and knows the falsity of his charges.

Before attempting to answer malicious criticisms against the American Congress by Mr. Hull, a flattering picture of Mr. Hull is sketched by himself over what he did (?) in his one short term some years ago in Congress.

MERLIN HULL IN A FANTASTIC FAIRY ROLE, WRITTEN BY HIMSELF

Last summer in an effort to change his four defeats for Congress to a possible victory, using several hundred thousand pieces of different kinds of mail for ammunition, printed by his own Banner paper, Mr. Hull glorified himself with self-praise, appealing especially to farmers but sent to every voter in the new district. One pamphlet says:

Farmers remember it was Merlin Hull who stood alone in the fight on the floor for increased protection to Wisconsin dairy products when the Hawley tariff bill came up. There were other Congressmen from dairy districts. They did not think the fight worth while. He did.

Mr. Hull says he alone out of 435 Members stood upon the burning deck and fought for the dairy interests. That Baron Munchausen fiction is indicative of Hull's general letter writing. Continuing, he says:

They [the farmers] also remember that it was Merlin Hull who made the drive in the House of Representatives to stop feeding oleomargarine to the soldiers in the Army and veterans in soldiers' homes and hospitals. Not another Congressman from dairy sections aided him in that fight.

More likely "not another Congressman" knew Hull was there at the time.

Mr. Hull sent 100,000 or more of these particular circulars into his new district, in which he said what the "farmers remembered" of Merlin Hull.

Probably not 5 percent of the Senators or Members among the 530 then in Washington knew that Merlin, a rookie in the rear ranks for one term, existed. Certainly they did not know he was "leading any fight." The farmers, whom he pretends to champion, could not know or remember that Merlin, who has been quoted on the $5,000 annual salary for Congress, was always early at the window drawing down $10,000 a year as a one-termer in Congress. The farmers could not then and do not now know or remember that Merlin was also receiving from Uncle Sam $1,500 to $2,000 annually for free-mail carriage for his weekly Banner.

The farmers could not then know or do not now remember that Merlin's family was on the rolls for $5,000 annual clerk hire, and he was also then using the congressional franking he now denounces, and, in addition, all travel pay, stationery, allowances, and other perquisites, since then cut down—without one word of protest from Mr. Hull. Nor did the farmers know that all the free shines, free hair cuts, and free meals he writes about, if they ever existed, were to be had by Merlin, if so, and never once did he arise in wrath to protest them.

Every Member of Congress and all Senators familiar with his record know that Mr. Hull's statements of "fights" and his "drives" are without foundation, but disclose the monumental egotism of a man four times defeated for Congress by a discriminating constituency. No Congressman ever knew of Merlin Hull's claims, for they are both ridiculous and preposterous, as every Member knows, yet readers back home, unfamiliar with Congress, its rules, and Hull's record, may be misled by such palpable rot.

Let me say further, from personal knowledge, I was a member of the Ways and Means Committee that drew that tariff bill and in committee did everything possible to protect agricultural schedules and dairy interests. We raised farm rates in our committee, but not one amendment was permitted under the rule to be offered in the House; so, of course, Mr. Hull nor any other Member could offer one. I voted to send the bill to the Senate for amendments and in this was joined by every Wisconsin Member, excepting Hull, who neither offered any amendment nor by his vote would have permitted Senators in the Senate to do so. After securing all protection to be had for agriculture in the House and Senate, as urged by President Hoover, we voted against final passage of the bill because of its logrolling character that boosted other rates so as to nullify any gain to agriculture.

HULL'S DEFENSE OF A FOOLISH VOTE AGAINST THE FARMER

Hull sought credit for his foolish tariff vote by circulating a "resolution" that approved his vote against sending the tariff bill to the Senate. If successful by that vote he would have prevented additional dairy amendments later added by Senators Blaine, La Follette, and other Senators beyond those secured in my committee. Hull's vote was against the farmers and dairy interests of Wisconsin, and it was the only Wisconsin vote so cast. Hull's vote was inexcusable, and every other Wisconsin Member voted right.

The oleomargarine amendment to the Army appropriation bill—not the tariff bill—was supported by every Wisconsin and Minnesota Member, led in the House largely by Schafer, where the soldiers' home was located, and in the Senate particularly by Blaine, La Follette, and McNary, as I now remember. Every Member of the House familiar with the record, I am sure, will so agree.

Of the 435 Members of the House and 96 Senators, Hull, a novice, never had any voice on a single schedule of the tariff bill, dairy or otherwise, and his "drives", "fights", and personal bombastic glorification put forth years thereafter was to deceive farmers who could not be expected to know the facts, and whom he endeavored to bamboozle with his Banner and other weekly letters condemning the American Congress.

So much for Hull's word picture of himself with wings that, like Don Quixote, fighting windmills in Spain, was in his imagination alone, though oft repeated by him, according to report.

I have devoted time to the false statements of Mr. Hull against Congress and to the franking privilege, because official figures show, as stated, that his paper is one of those that help make up the $8,000,000 deficit, or 12 times the cost of all departmental and congressional franking of official matter combined, and the latter only amounts to one tenth of 1 percent of the total.

MERLIN HULL'S ACTUAL COMPENSATION DURING HIS ONE TERM

Mr. Hull's indignation against Congress has been cited in his weekly letters because $5,000 annual income was not voted by Congress this session. Nearly half of that amount is generally expended by the average Member for campaign expenses when a man of Hull's caliber with a private printing press is an opponent, but the record is the best answer to Hull's salary outburst against the present Congress.

As stated, he was defeated by Congressman Beck twice for Congress; he slipped through for one short term when Beck ran for Governor, but thereafter Hull was next defeated by Mr. WITHROW in the Seventh District and was next defeated by myself in the Ninth. Four times defeated for Congress by three men. Not only did Hull draw down a full $10,000 annual pay check during the one term he served in Congress, instead of $5,000 he now advocates for Congress, but in the name of his immediate family, from the record, he absorbed an additional perquisite at the rate annually of $5,000 for clerk hire. Full travel pay and other allowances, now reduced 25 percent, were also paid to Mr. Hull.

In addition to Hull's $10,000 annual pay and $5,000 family clerk hire and full pay for travel, stationery, and other allowances, he enjoyed the same official franking privileges that he now condemns in Congress, but never once objected to when he was in Congress that one term. In addition, for 20 years and more Merlin has had free mail service in Jackson County, as stated, with exception of carrier delivery, for his Banner, which, at rates paid by his farmer readers for postage, presumably would mean an additional income for his Banner of $1,500 to $2,000 annually, or $30,000 to $40,000 free mail for the Banner received by him during the last 20 years from that source alone.

Free haircuts, free shaves, and free meals Mr. Hull writes about frequently. If enjoyed by him as an extra perquisite, they would be helpful to his purse and with his carefully estimated profits. Merlin's income in the 2 years from all sources apparently reached around $17,000 to $20,000 annually. The average Congressman is not possessed of a free-in-county newspaper or of a family on the pay roll, or free shaves, meals, and so forth, but now receives around $7,000 annually this term, due to reduction in pay, unemployment of relatives, and the average shortening of term voluntarily voted. Far less than one half of Mr. Hull's pay.

With Government payments noted and additional fees from foreclosure and contracts and police-court cases in Black River Falls these materially swelled Mr. Hull's pay, because, according to report, he has choked out all opposition from other papers in State, county, and private printing and secured the cream of the local legal practice.

HULL'S APPEAL FOR THE COW, TURKEY, AND HEN NOTED

Another recent weekly letter comment almost escaped attention when Mr. Hull wrote:

With all the demands for increased tariff rates and embargoes to help more employment to American labor, the Wisconsin turkey, the Wisconsin hen, and the Wisconsin cow seem to have no friend in court—(Congress).

Standing alone on the burning deck whence all but him had fled, Merlin views with alarm the failure of 530 Senators and Members to save the above-named animals and birds. This Black River Falls scribe tells the farmers what he would do as a friend of the cow, turkey, and hen. He was in "court" once on a time but failed then and would fail now because Congress never knew he was an especial champion of any of these objects of his new-found interest.

Mr. Hull's weekly letters guardedly discuss the wets and alleged inconsistency of Members of Congress on this and other issues. An able Illinois colleague said to me: "When Hull came to Washington he was heralded as a 'regular' of regulars but before he left he was found impossible." I had not followed his record, but a leading Progressive of my State, equally prominent, said, although Hull occasionally voted right, possibly by accident, he was not a Progressive and no one could work with him.

A wet-and-dry record he criticizes in others confronts Mr. Hull, the denunciator of Congress. In Barron County he was generously advertised by the press, and on marked ballots ran as the driest kind of a "regular" last year. In Buffalo and Pepin Counties at a Sunday wet (Hull) gathering those present agreed that Hull's name should appear on a marked wet supposedly "progressive" primary ballot. This I am informed did occur at the primary in those counties.

NEW PERMANENT GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS EXCITE HULL'S HOSTILITY

In his weekly letters, not quoted, Mr. Hull, of Black River Falls, still 1,200 miles away, finds frequent fault with Congress for contracts he helped authorize over 4 years ago on the New House Office Building, built so that Members may have two rooms for themselves, their clerks, typewriters, visitors, and telephones, all of which heretofore have been housed in a single room. Yet while Hull was "fighting" and "driving" Congress in his wild imagination, he was authorizing the New House Office Building which he now condemns.

Another Hull weekly letter dealt with the underground garage for Senators under the Senate Office addition. He castigated the Senators because they did not park on the streets. Here, again, from his descriptions the farmers and other people back home visualize all the gorgeous settings graphically pictured by Hull. I am not here to defend extravagance, but to report that a saving of $1,219,745 by Congress in estimated cost of the New House Office Building, as authorized by Hull, and a saving of $172,000 out of $400,000 authorized for furniture which he likewise is greatly distressed about. Plans were not drawn by Congress but by Government architects, and Congress by holding down expenditures made a saving of $1,391,745 on these two items. This is the official report.

One word more as to Mr. Hull's faultfinding on any and every occasion with insinuations of grafting, extravagance, cowardice, and worse by Congress. Hull's quarters when in the $7,000,000 capitol at Madison, Wis., years ago were elegant and sumptuous compared with offices and furniture in the new or old House Office Building and more than anything possessed here by Members of Congress.

I know this to be so, because I have occupied both and he has not. Again when the architect's request for $760,000 was made with which to provide two rooms for each Member in the old House Office Building in January 1932, I offered an amendment to reduce to $60,000 cost of remodeling, which would then give all Members double the rooms and conveniences furnished Congress for 20 years. My amendment was defeated, but upon my urgent request Governor MONTAGUE, Member from Virginia, offered my proposal on a motion to recommit and it was agreed to and passed by both Houses and is now the law, saving $700,000 on that one item to the Federal Treasury, or enough to pay the entire cost of franking privileges for all official documents during 1932.

I claim no especial personal credit for savings to the Treasury, but actively helped specifically with several river and harbor, public-building, and flood-control bills that were cut down, reaching a total saving of many hundreds of millions of dollars and sufficient to pay all the salaries of the Presidents of the United States and all Senators and Members of Congress from the time of the adoption of the Constitution in 1789 to June 1, 1933, together with the entire cost of the New House Office Building in the bargain. This is not said boastfully but to advise Mr. Hull that others are here on the job to do what he never attempted or thought of doing.

Important cases in court are not decided by unsupported witnesses, prejudiced in their own favor. That is especially true where the important witness in his own behalf has been rejected by different constituencies. Corroborating testimony on which every jury makes its findings should be offered.

In all fairness Mr. Hull should furnish to Congress and his State evidence to outweigh the four defeat verdicts against him; also because of his approximate $30,000 1-term family clerk hire and salary and perquisites; his demands on Congressmen to reduce their pay to $5,000 annually; also his $30,000 to $40,000 free mail to his Banner concealed from farmers and other citizens by constant frothings against a 50-year-old official franking law.

No Senator or Member in Congress familiar with the record I predict will vouch for a single claim Mr. Hull has made of "drives" and "fights" he conducted or even participated in. Congress knows the truth, but 100,000 district voters, including the "farmers", "taxpayers", and "public" he assiduously cultivates, do not know, beyond his own bombastic claims.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY OF A FEW NATIONALLY KNOWN WITNESSES

Mr. Chairman, the right of personal privilege and privilege of the House is invaluable. Libel and slander have penalties reached by courts, but public bodies and public officials cannot resent unjust criticisms. It is the duty of every Member to purge this body of those who would bring discredit upon it and to defend the National Congress and Members when unjustly assailed. Public confidence in these days of national distress is imperative. My colleagues will accord me that purpose in the facts presented and recent Members can understand weight to be attached, from brief extracts offered of opinions by others whose belief in my own judgment invites your confidence. Such opinions, after all, are the best rewards of service. Among these I submit—

You are not afraid to fight, and you know how to fight. You were a vital factor in saving the Government close to $500,000,000. I know how important and valuable your aid was, and so did President Coolidge. (W. F. Kopp, former member Flood Control Committee and chairman of Labor Committee, Feb. 17, 1933.)

I know what a brave and single-handed fight you made for years for justice for the Indians. (Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, Apr. 22, 1933.)

Mr. President, the sales tax was practically defeated in the House largely under the leadership of a Member of Congress from Wisconsin. Representative FREAR. (Senator La Follette, Sr., in Senate debate.)

You have proven yourself to be a real representative of the people. I especially appreciate your fight on behalf of the farmers and labor * * * also on the fearless fight you have made toward reducing Federal expenditures * * * the progressive voters of your State and of the Nation appreciate the good work you have done * * * (LYNN J. FRAZIER, United States Senator, June 23, 1932.)

* * * I approve of practically every position you have taken on public questions * * *. I sincerely hope you will be successful in your campaigns * * * and thus the farmers have your services in Congress * * *. (John A. Simpson, president Farmers Union, June 11, 1932.)

I congratulate you progressives * * *. There was removed from the Ways and Means Committee (later returned) Mr. FREAR, the biggest and bravest of them all. You dared not face in committee * * * or on this floor the arguments he could present. (Record of debate, December 16, 1925, Mr. RAINEY—now Speaker of the House.)

Several corroborating witnesses, among many received, are quoted from the standpoint of legislative service to evidence some understanding is had of unwarranted and unsupported strictures by Hull on Congress.

As much as I dislike his methods, it is not personal, because Mr. Hull's unjust criticisms and glaring misstatements against Congress answer themselves to all those familiar with the facts.

If arrangements can be made in Jackson, Clark, and the 11 counties I represent in my State for mutual discussions with Mr. Hull on the same platform, I will try and answer him personally, not to compete in a continuous campaign performance attributed to Mr. Hull or to recriminate with slander, but to place facts and records before those who desire to know. Only one issue is vital to the American people. Personal and political ambitions are unimportant, but the country's right to a clean, strong, patriotic Congress is supreme. That Congress they have now.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, for my own part I am not going to make much comment with respect to the amounts carried in this bill. Some of the items, I believe, could be cut further than they have been. I believe after the bureaus have had an opportunity to work out and give us a picture of what they are going to do, we will be able to do some more cutting. There are some items which I tried to have cut some more, but I did not get very far in the committee, and I probably would not get very far if I attempted to bring about such a cut on the floor of the House. With the set-up we have now, we will be able, when we come back here in January, to tell a lot better where we "are at", and I hope, if the Budget does not cut certain items down, we will be able to do it on the floor.

I think the Federal Power Commission can be cut some more. It has been cut down to $210,000.

I think the Federal Trade Commission, if it does what it says it is going to do, can complete its power investigation and that we can cut that Commission from $250,000 to $500,000 without hurting its efficient administration.

I think the Interstate Commerce Commission should be able to organize itself so that it can do the bookkeeping under what they now call their Recapture Division, with recapture cut off, for $500,000 less than the $1,000,000 it now requires.

I think the Civil Service Commission can get along with a considerable amount less than the million dollars that we are now giving them. If I mistake not, the demand of the people is going to be toward curtailment of governmental activities. The result of that will be that there will be a tremendous pool of surplus employees who will be available for assignment to almost anything that is to be required of them.

I believe, with that picture staring us in the face, we are carrying too much for them now.

The Shipping Board, I understand, is to be in a position, with the reorganization, where we should be able to trim off a great deal of what that is costing.

The Federal Radio Commission is still costing us $620,000. I believe that Commission ought to be able to get along with less money. It did cost us $856,000 for the current year, and we ought to be able to save $150,000 there.

Now, with reference to the veterans' situation, I am going to speak for a moment or two on that, and then I am going to talk to you for a little while on the legislative provisions of the bill.

The President was given the power by the economy bill, which was passed early in the session, to revise by regulation the pensions which are now being paid to veterans, and to make certain provisions with reference to them. He has done that. Whether those provisions are going to work right or are going to work wrong I do not know and you do not know.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The regulations, of course, are the result of the Economy Act, and the appropriation is the financial set-up to carry out the regulations.

Mr. TABER. Certainly; that is correct.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the event the President, having the authority, should discover that injustices are being done, he necessarily would change the regulations, and that might change the financial set-up. Is that not correct?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Would the President have the power to expend money and carry it in some deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. TABER. He would have the power under the appropriation we are carrying in this bill, if he changed the regulations, and those regulations called for more money than is carried here, to go ahead with it. If there was not enough money to meet the expenditures that would be required under the amended regulations, he would be able to come to us next January when we meet and ask for a deficiency. I expect that that deficiency would be granted by the Congress.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If there was a deficiency in one department, he could transfer funds from another department if he thought they were not necessary there, could he not?

Mr. TABER. No. He can transfer funds within a department but not from department to department. He could transfer funds within the Veterans' Bureau, but there is no possibility, with the set-up which we have in this bill, of there being a shortage of enough money to carry us through until Congress meets in January.

Mr. RICH. They have given the President sufficient power that he can conduct the affairs of this country during the intermission of Congress, until next January?

Mr. TABER. Beyond any question; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Some questions were asked with reference to the regional offices of the Veterans' Administration. Can the gentleman give the committee the policy that is to be adopted, with reference to the continuation of those regional offices, if he knows?

Mr. TABER. We were told in the committee, and it appears in the hearings, that appeared to be the policy, insofar as it could be done efficiently, to abolish regional offices unless they were consolidated with a hospital which is being maintained. So that the manager of a regional office and the managership of a hospital could be consolidated in one person. Undoubtedly that will result in the abolishment of a large number of regional offices. Just how many I cannot say.

Mr. DOWELL. May I ask further if it is the policy, as the gentleman has stated, to abolish regional offices outside of a district where hospitals are located, then will it be the policy of the department to take from the regional office practically the same in that degree as where the district has been abolished?

Mr. TABER. I do not just understand the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. I will restate the question. If it be the policy of the Department to abolish regional offices and leave a regional office in a district where a hospital is located, will the regional officer in the district where the hospital is located continue to do the same character of work in that district that he is doing now?

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding, except the regional manager will have added to his duties the business supervision of the hospital.

Mr. DOWELL. But the work in that district and in that territory will be the same as it is now?

Mr. TABER. That is what I understand.

Mr. DOWELL. And that work will not be transferred to Washington, as others are transferred when the regional office is abolished?

Mr. TABER. That is what I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I inquire from what source the gentleman got that information and how definite his information is?

Mr. TABER. That came from the Chief of the Veterans' Bureau to our committee, and I assume it is definite, with this qualification, that nothing can be absolutely definite with reference to these regulations or to the policy on the part of the Veterans' Bureau, with the situation as it is.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I sought to interrogate the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] with respect to regional offices, but there were so many on the floor that I desisted. The gentleman appeared to be undertaking to show that regional offices might not necessarily be abolished.

I wanted to call attention to the explicit language of the report explaining how the saving of $340,000,000 was to be effected. It reads as follows:

Among other measures which will be adopted to bring about the reduction it is intended to abolish all the regional offices.

Mr. TABER. I understand that that is the present policy, except in the cases where the consolidation to which I referred is possible.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. To follow up this matter, this would not necessarily be a total saving of the expenditures these offices are being put to now. It would simply mean an immense enlargement of the personnel at the Washington headquarters, would it not?

Mr. TABER. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HESS. If the gentleman will permit, I will refer the gentleman from Colorado to page 172 of the hearings where General Hines in his testimony said that the regional offices will be eliminated and the administrative functions will be right here in Washington so far as the adjudication of cases is concerned.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for calling my attention to that statement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the independent offices appropriation bill carry the authority for the reduction or abolishment of these officers?

Mr. TABER. No. That provision exists elsewhere. This bill has nothing whatever to do with it. All we have done is to carry the amount which has been estimated to us.

Now, frankly, I do not see how the Appropriations Committee can go ahead and lay out a set-up for something that does not exist at the present time. If the set-up on the basis that it is going to be in the future had been running along for a year and we had something to follow up and check on, I could see how the Appropriations Committee could cut down or could say that perhaps something else was needed if the request were made, but I do not see how the Appropriations Committee can go ahead and make a set-up that is originally an executive function. Nor do I see how Congress is in a position to do this. We have got to wait until there are changes in the set-up or until the set-up works out before we can intelligently deal with anything along this line.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SWICK. Is it not a fact it will be a very great saving to the Government to have these regional bureaus right in the hospital where the men are being treated? To my mind, it seems as though it would save the Government a great deal of money. Also, it will be a very great advantage to the veteran to have the bureau right there at the hospital where the physicians are who treat him.

Mr. TABER. I think that is so, very largely; but I think the great saving that would come as the result of this new departure would be the placing of somebody of business experience in charge of the management of the hospitals instead of having doctors in charge of them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes more.

I think this is a thing to be considered seriously. The doctor should perform the medical work in the hospitals but should not have to perform the administrative work.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas and Mr. HOEPEL rose.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. I quite agree with what the gentleman has said. It is a matter I have recommended and urged at various times before different committees, that rather than have a high-salaried doctor in charge of the administrative work of such an institution, a retired Army officer should be assigned at a salary, we will say, of approximately $125 per month, as provided in this bill. In one soldiers' home alone, that I know of, a saving of $5,000 a year would be made in the office of the commandant. When this is multiplied by the number of soldiers' homes and hospitals there are throughout the United States, it will mean a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. TABER. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. I was going to ask my colleague this question: A moment ago mention was made of the fact we are reducing the appropriation by $34,000,000. This is not because of the consolidation, closing down, or discontinuance of the regional offices.

Mr. TABER. I do not understand that it is.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Under the act of 1924 creating the regional offices the power is given the Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau here in Washington to discontinue them any time he may see fit.

Mr. TABER. That is my understanding.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Even if the $34,000,000 should be added to this bill, that, within itself, would not continue these offices or any one of them.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; it would not. Not only that, a large portion of the $34,000,000 is for other items than field-office items. A large portion of it is for administration in the District of Columbia. A large portion of it is for hospital expense, which it is thought will not be needed in the future.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. It is estimated that something like 200,000 service-connected cases will be discontinued under the repeal of the presumption clause. If the President desired to change his regulations to allow these veterans and their dependents to receive benefits, where would he get the funds with which to pay them, inasmuch as the appropriation is eliminated? Could he take the money from some other source and use it for this purpose?

Mr. TABER. He would not have to change any appropriation anywhere, because there is carried in this bill as an appropriation for pensions the item of $231,000,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. To what page is the gentleman referring?

Mr. TABER. Page 26 of the report. This amount is practically two fifths of the total that was carried in the last bill. That and a lot of nonservice pensions are included, and there would unquestionably be enough money in this $231,000,000 to carry it through until Congress came back here again.

Not only that, if he wanted to he could transfer a small amount from the other expenses of the Veterans' Bureau to tide them over.

There is not any question in the world but what there is money enough there to pay everything that may possibly be put on up to the time the Congress gets here, and the gentleman does not know, I do not know, and I do not believe anybody can give any accurate estimate of what these pensions are going to be until after there has been some kind of try-out under the regulations.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. At the time the economy bill was before the House for discussion was it not specifically stated that it was proposed to cut the veterans' appropriations for compensation and pensions about $400,000,000?

Mr. TABER. I think I made the statement when the conference report was finally passed that it would be about $350,000,000 on compensation, and as I understand it the cut in that item is $360,000,000.

Mr. HEALEY. Three hundred and sixty million dollars now?

Mr. TABER. Yes; the cut on compensation and pensions.

Mr. HEALEY. So what has been done by these regulations is exactly what was started out to be accomplished.

Mr. TABER. It is exactly what we were told would result from the economy bill which was presented to us in the early part of the session.

Mr. HEALEY. And the gentleman made that statement previously to the Members of Congress?

Mr. TABER. I made it here on the floor.

I am now going to discuss the legislative features of the bill, with some of which I am in full accord.

Section 5, on page 52, relates to the operations of this particular bill. This is necessary to prevent certain further impoundments that might result. We have reduced the appropriations down to the point where the 15 percent reduction in pay is taken care of.

Section 6 is the contract section. I am going to discuss this a little while, because I do not favor this section.

This section gives the President authority to cancel contracts at any time when he feels that the full performance of the contract is not required in the public interest and that modification or cancellation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States; and it further provides that whenever he does this the United States shall become liable in damages for every bit of damage that the contractor shall suffer as a result of the cancellation.

There are a lot of such contracts. This provision relates entirely to transportation contracts. It might hit an ocean mail contract, it might hit an air mail contract, it might hit a star route contract, or it might hit a contract for railway mail service. I think there is already reserved in all of these contracts sufficient power to enable the President to reduce any expense that ought to be reduced in connection with them, and where this reservation exists it is unnecessary to cancel the contract.

I am not going into the railroad mail or the star route contracts, because I do not believe that in most cases anything of this kind will take place, because I do not believe there would be any inducement to anyone to try to do anything of this kind.

The air mail and the ocean mail contracts come about in this way: The Air Mail Act was passed with the idea of developing the aviation services throughout this country. A large number of contracts have been entered into. If any of these contracts were illegally entered into, the President or the executive heads of the different departments have the right to cancel the contracts and do away with them without the Government being liable in damages to anybody, and this is the way they ought to be done away with, and not as a result of a cancellation pursuant to this provision where the Government becomes liable in damages. [Applause.]

If these air mail contracts are improvidently entered into and not improperly entered into, the Government has a reservation in these contracts which permits the Government to cut down on the expense of the contracts, and it can cut down on these expense items to such an extent as to bring them within appropriations which have been made by Congress or it can cut them down where the service that is required is of such inconsequential character that it does not justify its continuance. Now, is it not far better to go along in this way and cancel them within the provisions of the contract than it is to break such contracts? When you break contracts, see what the result is. I am afraid we are leading ourselves into something when we break them and permit the contractor to recover damages against the United States.

You know what happens when a man has a claim against the Government. He goes to the Court of Claims and gets the highest possible speculative damages. The Government is the biggest mark of any defendant in any lawsuit that ever is brought. I cannot for the life of me see any possible saving in this kind of operation.

If it were proposed, and the facts were presented to us, that there are contracts which had been entered into in some improper way and these contracts were legal and valid, I should be the first one to propose that any powers that were necessary to get rid of them be given, but there is no such situation presented here. We are just putting ourselves in for something and putting the Government in for something, and there is no excuse at all for this sort of thing. It is not a question of saving money; it is a question of letting the Government in for a dose of medicine, and I do not propose to go along with this kind of operation.

The gentleman from Texas, when discussing the rule on Monday, said that there were a number of different contracts which justified this provision in the bill. Every one of them, he said, was illegal. If they are illegal, why should we put a provision like this in the bill? They ought to be abolished by the Government because they are illegal and not in such a way that the Government becomes liable to the folks for damages.

Look at what they will do and how they will work it. A man has an ocean mail contract. It is abolished by the Government. He is entitled to collect damages. What will he say to the Court of Claims? He will say that if he was allowed to go through with the contract and finish it up he would have been able to develop a trade route which would have been profitable, and he will have the Government where he can squeeze it for the greatest amount of speculative damages that may result from that operation.

Now, I do not want to let the Government into such a deal. The air mail contract, if you work it under this provision of law, is going to result in the same kind of speculative damages against the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that airships, as well as ships, have been built under these contracts?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

I think it is sufficiently clear as to what the situation is, and that such a provision ought not to be in the bill.

When we come to this provision I am going to offer a motion to recommit if I can be recognized, and I believe that I am entitled to recognition, to get rid of this provision, and I hope the House will vote against the retention of any such provision.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman answer one or two questions?

Mr. TABER. I will, if I can.

Mr. HOEPEL. Is it not true that this section will permit the President to repudiate the enlistment of men in the service?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. HOEPEL. I understood that the provision was to abolish contracts between persons and the Government.

Mr. TABER. No; these are transportation contracts only covered by the bill.

Mr. HOEPEL. This will permit the President to reduce the compensation of enlisted men from 5 to 2 cents a mile.

Mr. TABER. I do not think so. This would not permit any alteration of contracts of that character.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I will.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Do you feel the contracts already made were for the best interests of the Government?

Mr. TABER. I frankly say that I do not know anything about these contracts.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman is not willing to give the power to the President to abrogate the contracts, what does he suggest in its place? Does the gentleman think that illegal contracts ought to be retained?

Mr. TABER. There has not been a case where such a situation has arisen. There have been a few cases where the chairman of the committee said the contracts were illegal. I do not want an illegal contract abolished under the provisions of this bill so that they can come back and collect from the Government. I do not want to see the Government mulcted in damages.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman has heard a number of Members get up here and criticize the contracts made by the Post Office Department and mention not one but half a dozen.

Mr. TABER. I have not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then the gentleman could not have been present at the time.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Probably the gentleman from Missouri can give specific instances of these contracts.

Mr. TABER. Perhaps he can tell of some illegal contracts.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman said there was a provision in the contract for abrogation by the Government. Is not it a fact that the contract provides that the Postal Department has the right to curtail the service?

Mr. TABER. It does.

Mr. JENKINS. Suppose a contract has been entered into, such as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] stated. There has been much discussion here about some illegality in contracts. Suppose the Post Office Department has entered into a contract with an air mail contractor that is clearly illegal. Whose duty is it to abrogate that contract or to take steps to set it aside?

Mr. TABER. The Postmaster General, the Attorney General, the Comptroller General, or the President of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS. Any one of them can do it?

Mr. TABER. Any one can initiate this proceeding.

Mr. JENKINS. And the gentleman maintains if they do take those steps to abrogate those contracts as null and void, a contract that has been entered into that is illegal, then there will be no responsibility on the part of the Government? How could this proposition which the gentleman has been talking about throw responsibility on the Government if the contract were null and void ab initio?

Mr. TABER. It could not if the Government proceeded on the null and void theory; but if the Government goes to work to get rid of its contract in this way under this act—and the only cases they have referred to here they tell us are illegal—what inference can be drawn except that, if they get rid of them through this provision, it would make the Government liable? What is the use of this legislation unless there is something which we should get rid of that is legal? They have not called our attention to anything which they said was legal which they wanted to get rid of.

Mr. JENKINS. I am very much inclined to follow the gentleman on every subject, especially on this, but I cannot, for the love of me, see how, if a contract is null and void and the Government refuses to operate under it, the Government could be held responsible.

Mr. TABER. Suppose a contract were null and void in fact, but instead of the Government proceeding upon that theory in court, it proceeds upon the theory that it is valid, and under the provisions of this law abrogates it, that act, ipso facto, makes the Government liable in damages. That is where the trouble is. Let them proceed under the law as it is now, and get rid of them, without paying any damages, instead of going ahead and allowing them all kinds of speculative damages under such a provision as this.

Mr. JENKINS. If the Government is a party to a contract and stands by and permits the other party to go on and perform, then the Government ratifies all of it, and it should be responsible in damages. If the Government is going to renounce the contract, it should do it before the other party starts upon its performance.

Mr. TABER. That is true, unless there is fraud or illegality in connection with the initiation of the contract.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am of the impression that every important contract entered into by the Government has a cancellation clause in it.

Mr. TABER. A great many of them do, but I would not say there was a cancellation clause in these two particular types of transportation contracts.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The air mail contract has a cancellation clause in it for willful neglect on the part of the contractor to perform his part of the contract, and that only.

Mr. TABER. I think that is correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Only for willful neglect to perform.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then the ones that I have in mind which usually occur in construction contracts do not apply in this instance. In most of the contracts that I have seen there is a distinct provision allowing the Government to cancel the contract if the best interests of the Government are thereby conserved, and then, of course, it settles damages thereafter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In the foreign-mail contracts there is a clause that the Postmaster General or Congress can cancel them by paying 1 month's extra pay. For that service this legislation would not be needed.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS. For what length of period are these contracts?

Mr. TABER. Four or five years, as a general rule.

Mr. BUCHANAN. For the gentleman's information they are generally 10-year contracts, but under recent arrangements all of them expire in 1936. I refer to air mail contracts.

Mr. BROOKS. During that period, if conditions change and the Government can prove it is not necessary to have the airplane, does the gentleman think there will be any damages collected against the Government?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKS. With a cancellation clause in the contract?

Mr. TABER. Certainly. With most of the rest of the provisions in the bill with reference to legislation, I am in accord. With reference to the provision permitting charges to be increased, I am afraid it is pretty broad. I think that should be done, so far as it relates to the Post Office Department, by legislation of a specific character. I think that with reference to such a thing as Government insurance or anything of that kind we ought not to attempt to monkey with it. With some minor provisions of an administrative character, where charges are not sufficient which the Government is receiving, I think we ought to go along.

Most of the rest of the provisions I am in accord with. I am not going to attempt to explain them, as I intended, because I ought not to take any more time. A large number of them include a limitation on flying pay and a provision for furloughing army officers, and applying the provisions of the Economy Act to places where it does not now apply.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman discuss section 8, the Civil Service retirement section?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I shall be glad to discuss it for a moment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Let me ask the gentleman a question to start him. I cannot find anything in the language of this section, the way in which it is drafted, to indicate that it contemplates any new, substantive law, in the way of Civil Service retirement.

If you will just permit me to boil the language down to a sentence, it reads as follows:

Whenever any employee who has an aggregate period of service of at least 30 years is involuntarily separated from the service for reasons other than his misconduct, such employee shall be entitled to an annuity.

I understand it is under this language that the administration will be given all the power it has to involuntarily separate employees from the service; and if that is the case, why does it not say so?

Mr. TABER. No; that is not so. As I understand it, the Government has the power to separate them now. This is simply a provision which permits those who are separated from the service, if they have had over 30 years' service, to receive retirement pay. That is the sole object of paragraph (a) of section 8. I think it is perfectly clear that it does accomplish that. They are not entitled to receive this retirement pay now unless they have reached the age of retirement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has again expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield myself 2 additional minutes in order to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am seeking information on a matter that requires a great deal of questioning. I understand from the gentleman's answer that a Civil Service employee can now be involuntarily separated from the service by administrative or Executive order without cause.

Mr. TABER. Provided it is required in order to bring the service within the appropriation or within the requirements of the Government. That is, if his services are not any longer needed, they can get rid of him now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is the law now.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And section 8 is predicated upon the existence of that law at this time?

Mr. TABER. Yes. Section 8 is an item that is in the interest of the employee, because it does give to those who have over 30 years' service, if the retirement happens to land on them, the opportunity of receiving the $1,200 a year retirement pay, less the 3½ percent which we take out.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This was substituted for the arbitrary separation proposition?

Mr. TABER. Yes; it was. It makes it necessary for affirmative Executive action to get rid of any employee.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But is not this the fact, in its actual operation, that it will be determined as a matter of favoritism rather than efficiency?

Mr. TABER. I hope not. I do not have any intimation of that character. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has again expired.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include in the extension extracts from congressional reports and committee hearings and also some statements of former Presidents of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I have asked for this time in order to discuss one of the particular features of the bill, to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has directed your attention. It is one of the legislative provisions in the bill, which reads as follows:

Whenever it shall appear to the President, in respect of any contract entered into by the United States prior to the date of enactment of this act for the transportation of persons and/or things, that the full performance of such contract is not required in the public interest, and that modification or cancellation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, on or before April 30, 1935, to modify or cancel such contract.

The act then provides for just compensation in the event of cancellation. This language includes ocean mail contracts; and by reason of the position which I hold by courtesy of this House as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, and by reason of my service on that committee at the time the provision for ocean mail contracts was written into the law, I feel that some discussion of that subject should be in order.

Permit me to say that while I feel there are objections to this particular language, I am not going to undertake to point them out, because to point them out might be construed as interposing opposition to the provision. Notwithstanding the effect that this language might have, and some doubt as to its wisdom, if I can become reconciled to other provisions of the bill, I shall not permit this paragraph in the bill to cause me to vote against it.

There have been so many speeches made by gentlemen just as patriotic and just as devoted public servants as I should like to be, and perhaps more intelligent than I, that I feel I should bring to the attention of this committee some particular features with respect to these contracts.

Again and again we have heard that the ocean mail contract is a fraud, measured in the terms of the mail that is carried. I want to submit here and now that a consideration of the hearings before the committee in 1928, a consideration of the report that was filed with the bill at the time, and which came as a unanimous report from the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, and in view of the hearings that were subsequently had, ocean mail was never intended to be measured in terms of mail carried. It was intended as one of the considerations for the transfer of Government lines to private operation, in order to carry out the purpose that was distinctly written into the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, and reaffirmed in the act of 1928, that America should have a merchant marine of the most modern type and the best equipped ships for the purpose of carrying the major portion of America's goods in the commerce of the world. [Applause.]

Let me remind my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle that it was under the masterly genius, the splendid inspiration, and the noble leadership of one of the greatest men of time, Woodrow Wilson, that an attempt was made to restore the American flag upon the seas. [Applause.]

The act of 1916 was written. Then came the World War. It is my solemn conviction, deliberately stated, that if America had possessed in 1916 an American merchant marine capable of conversion into armed cruisers or similar instrumentalities of war, the German Government would never have embarked upon its policy which eventually led this country into war. I believe we would have escaped that awful, awful struggle, with the price we paid in men, in money, and in economic depression in the world today. [Applause.]

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. I wish to go on record as heartily in favor of what the gentleman has stated. May I ask him of what utility are ships without trained men?

Mr. BLAND. I quite agree with the gentleman, and that is the next step we must take.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND. You men of the South felt the need of a merchant marine in 1914 when you were compelled to put on your campaign to buy a bale of cotton. What was the trouble? Ships of the belligerent powers were withdrawn from the seas. Your cotton was piled up on the docks. The terminals of this country were congested so that even in New York, with its splendid facilities, for miles and miles outside those yards commerce was accumulated and unable to go upon the water because America had no merchant marine to carry that commerce upon the seas.

You saw it again about 1924, when, by reason of conditions in the world, the ships of the foreign powers were withdrawn from our commerce. But America had the ships that she had built at an expenditure of $3,500,000,000, and she threw them into the trade. Then they were laid up. The testimony which came out before the committee was that those ships at that time saved to the American farmers of the Middle West, the grain men of the Middle West, $600,000,000. This saving came about by reason of their ability to take advantage of the opportunity to send their commerce upon the seas and reach the markets of the world at the most opportune time. Again in 1926, when the ships of foreign powers were not available to carry our goods, what did we do? We threw these ships out upon the seas and again two or three hundreds of millions of dollars were saved to the farmers of this country.

All these matters will be set forth fully in my extension of remarks.

It has been estimated and testified before our committee that the rates on the commerce actually carried from 1922 to 1931, freight sales plus passenger rates, aggregated about $900,000,000 annually, and because of the fact that America had a merchant marine ready to carry that commerce and did carry 30 percent of that commerce, the sum of $300,000,000 was saved annually to the United States to be expended in the United States. Otherwise this money would have gone abroad.

There was further testimony that freight rates in this country would have increased 20 percent if it had not been for the presence of the American merchant marine.

The point I make is that you cannot have an American merchant marine today without these aids. The committee which unanimously reported the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 providing ocean mail pay said:

Your committee believes that in reporting this amendment they are responding to the desire of the American people. In our view there has been no time within three quarters of a century in which the country has been so interested in an American merchant marine, so anxious that the Congress should provide the ways and means for restoring to the American ship that prestige which was once the Nation's pride. Your committee offers this bill for your consideration in the confident belief that, if administered to the extent of the authority given and in accordance with its purpose, shipbuilding within the United States will be stimulated, new and modern ships flying our flag will appear upon the seas, interest in our ships will be stirred, a new loyalty will be aroused in American shippers, and we shall have accomplished much toward the restoration of American supremacy upon the seas. This report is not the thought of any party or any section of the country represented upon your committee. All members have striven to compose differences and to reach agreements.

Further in the report this statement is made:

It is further accepted as beyond doubt that the American people are ready and willing to pay such amounts as may be reasonably necessary to give to the United States the size and character of merchant marine required to meet these public expectations. This report, therefore, will contain no argument upon matters which we conceive to be generally understood and beyond dispute. It will be confined to a description of the bill itself and an estimate of the expenditures involved.

Let me read also the following statement:

The difficulty in the United States always has been the inadequacy of the payments authorized, a failure to aggressively and continuously adhere to the policy, and an unwillingness to make contracts for a substantial term of years. This latter consideration is of the very first importance. It is quite out of the question to expect the building of new and expensive ships unless there can be some surety given to the owner, under a contract for a term of years, that the vessel is to be used for mail purposes.

This title is basically a revision of the 1891 Mail Act. There is no departure in principle from that act, but it increases the classification of the ships and the compensation to be paid.

The first section of the title defines the ports between which it is intended that mails may be carried under contract. Generally speaking, it may be said that vessels moving between ports where competition by foreign flagships is lawful are eligible for contracts.

Then we conclude with the statement:

Your committee members have faith in the legislation presented to you. It gives to the American ship greater aids than have been provided by any legislation within three quarters of a century. We believe its enactment means the building of new vessels of greater speed than any now flying our flag; that it will revive the shipbuilding industry; that it will stimulate an increased use of American ships for American cargoes; that it will give us a larger measure of industrial and commercial independence; that it will provide us with naval auxiliaries for the day of stress; and that it will carry to all the world notice of our settled purpose to retain upon the seas that which we now have and of our determination in due process of time to build and maintain a merchant marine of a size and efficiency commensurate with our national interests and our national dignity.

Just let me make this one statement. Later investigation, as I will show in quotations from hearings before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, led to a statement by that distinguished gentleman, the former chairman of my committee, Mr. Davis, of Tennessee, than whom no more bitter opponent of monopolies existed in this Congress, to the effect that the purpose of this act and the direct mail contract was the disposition of our ships and the maintenance of essential trade routes.

Former Postmaster General Brown stated that in the administration of that act he had conceived that to be the purpose, and this splendid gentleman of whom I have spoken said, "I agree in that view." The quotation will be put in my extension of remarks.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I understood the gentleman to say that by reason of the existence of the merchant marine the farmers are getting lower freight rates in the United States. I should like to know how the gentleman reconciles that statement with the fact that agricultural products only represent 10 percent of the volume of freight handled by the railroads and yet they pay 20 percent of the gross receipts of the railroads.

Mr. BLAND. I shall not undertake to deal in particulars or in any minutia with respect to that matter. I will say there have been times, and the time will come again, when the grain men of the West and the cotton producers of the South will have need to use our shipping, if they are not using it at the present time, and unless there is the strong arm of an American merchant marine there to control the rates you will see that the foreign nations of the world will be increasing rates.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when foreign nations are today entering into agreements, Great Britain with France, Great Britain with Argentina and with other nations, and with every foreign nation in the world entering into agreements that mean the curtailment of American business and a reduction of American commerce, are you willing to trust your commerce to the delivery wagons of these competitors? [Applause.]

This is the question that presents itself to us now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Virginia 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is making a very important speech and as I understand it, every word he has uttered so far would indicate a desire for a continuance of existing conditions for the protection of the American merchant marine.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and I want to tell the gentleman this. I am going to put in my remarks the language of the patron saint of the Democracy of America, Thomas Jefferson, and the first President of the United States, George Washington, who, in their utterances, predicted the very condition that existed in 1916 and stated that unless we protected our navigation interests and protected our merchant marine we would be at the mercy of our foreign competitors. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I agree with the gentleman, and, with that in mind, does not the gentleman seriously believe that this language should be stricken from the bill?

Mr. BLAND. There has been much said about fraud. I do not believe that fraud or corruption enters into this matter. I think there have been mistakes, but, with all that, I have such an abiding faith in the honesty and the devotion and the courage and the patriotism of the present incumbent of the White House that I am going further than ordinarily I would go. [Applause.]

Exercising the privilege granted me of extending my remarks in the RECORD, I call attention to the following excerpt from the message of President Washington to Congress in December 1790:

We should not overlook the tendency of a war, and even of preparations for a war, among the nations most concerned in active commerce with this country, to abridge the means, and thereby at least enhance the price, of transporting its valuable productions to their proper markets. I recommend it to your serious reflections how far, and in what mode, it may be expedient to guard against embarrassments from these contingencies, by such encouragements to our own navigation, as will render our commerce and agriculture less dependent on foreign bottoms, which may fail us in the very moments most interesting to both of these great objects.

In 1793 Jefferson, referring to navigation, said:

Its value as a branch of industry is enhanced by the dependence of so many other branches on it. In times of general peace it multiplies competitors for employment in transportation, and so keeps that at its proper level, and in time of war, that is to say, when those nations who may be our principal carriers shall be at war with each other, if we have not within ourselves the means of transportation, our produce must be exported in belligerent vessels, at the increased expense of war freights and insurance, and the articles which will not bear that must perish on our hands.

In 1793 Jefferson said:

But it is as a resource of defense that our navigation will admit neither neglect nor forbearance. The position and circumstances of the United States leave them nothing to fear on their land board, and nothing to desire beyond their present rights. But on their seaboard they are open to injury, and they have there, too, a commerce which must be protected. This can only be done by possessing a respectable body of citizen seamen and of artists and establishments in readiness for shipbuilding.

Mr. Madison, in 1794, said:

To allow trade to regulate itself is not, therefore, to be admitted as a maxim universally sound. Our own experience has taught us that, in certain cases, it is the same thing with allowing one nation to regulate it for another. * * * A small burden only in foreign ports on American vessels, and a perfect equality of foreign vessels with our own in our own ports, would gradually banish the latter altogether.

In 1809 Mr. Jefferson wrote:

It is essentially interesting for us to have shipping and seamen enough to carry our surplus produce to market; but beyond that I do not think we are bound to give it encouragement by drawbacks or other premiums.

Mr. Chairman, criticism is frequently directed at the small volume of mail carried, and the charge is made that the pay is out of proportion to the mail carried. The answer is that the mail pay was never predicated upon the volume of mail carried. It was never intended that ocean mail pay should be measured by the mail tonnage. It was intended as a means of establishing and maintaining essential trade routes in the interest of American commerce and of providing merchant ships as instrumentalities for defense of the Nation in time of war.

I shall not attempt now to discuss specific contracts. Time would not suffice; and in the objections that might be urged to a few contracts we should lose sight of the fundamentals.

The big question is, Shall America have a merchant marine, and how can it be secured and maintained? The answer given in 1928 was by the enactment of the so-called "Jones-White Act", and it has demonstrated its worth. That measure was nonpartisan. There were no political lines when the bill became law. After years of effort to provide an American merchant marine in private hands it was the only solution which the Congress could find for the problem. If it is to be abandoned, then we ask that its opponents submit to us a better solution. All interested in an American merchant marine will welcome any plan that may be submitted. Certainly the answer does not lie in Government ownership and operation. We have tried that, and the heavy burden on the American people led to the enactment of the Jones-White Act.

When the World War came, in August 1914, the American merchant marine had declined below Norway, below Italy, and below Japan. With a foreign trade more than one tenth of the world's business in a year we possessed a merchant marine capable of transporting 8.9 percent of it. We had registered for deep water only 810 steamers of 666,593 gross tons and 469 sailing vessels of 234,616 gross tons. At the outbreak of the war the steam tonnage of the world among the other principal nations stood as follows:

	Number of vessels	Gross tonnage
Great Britain.....	10, 123	20, 523, 706
Germany.....	2, 090	5, 134, 720
France.....	1, 025	1, 922, 286
Italy.....	637	1, 430, 475
Japan.....	1, 103	1, 078, 386
Austria-Hungary.....	433	1, 052, 346
Russia.....	747	851, 949
Belgium.....	173	341, 025

Many men here recall the dangerous days of the World War. The demand was ships, more ships, and then more ships—ships to bridge the seas. America answered. She had few ships. She was carrying but 8 or 9 percent of the world commerce. She had fallen to the lowest point in her history as a sea-faring nation. She had trusted her trade to foreign bottoms. Though she had 5,000 miles of seacoast and was entitled to a fair portion of the world's trade in her own interest and for her own defense, she carried in her own bottoms practically nothing. Her cargoes were carried to the markets of the world in foreign vessels. The American merchant trusted to competing nations to carry American goods in the delivery wagons of his competitors. American merchants did not have their own delivery wagons for more than an infinitesimal part of their own goods. Discriminations were practiced, and American salesmen found difficulty in effecting American deliveries, but we could do nothing about it.

We did not even have sufficient American bottoms to furnish necessary colliers, food ships, and other auxiliaries to accompany the battle fleet in its cruise around the world in the administration of former President Roosevelt. If anything had happened, these might have been marooned in some distant port for want of supply ships. We were subjected to the ignominious spectacle of a maritime Nation with a battle fleet flying the American flag accompanied by, and dependent upon, naval auxiliaries and supply ships flying foreign flags.

We did nothing about it. We held inquiries, and congressional committees held exhaustive investigations throughout the Nation, but no merchant ships were provided, and American goods still went abroad in foreign vessels—British, German, French, Austrian, Italian, Japanese, Norwegian ships; and those other countries carried our goods, and the grain farmers of the West, and the cotton farmers of the South, and the merchants and manufacturers throughout the Nation were dependent upon these carriers.

What happened? At the first sound of war these ships were recalled to other services, or driven from the seas, or freight rates rose to prohibitive heights. Is there a man here who has not heard of the urge throughout the land to "buy a bale of cotton" and save the farmers of the South? Our warehouses were overflowing; our docks were piled high with cargoes; our terminal yards were congested; and our railroad tracks for miles beyond these terminals were used for storage purposes, for the sole reason that there were no ships to carry these cargoes or rates were prohibitive. Throughout the world the demand for these goods existed, but the means of transportation was lacking.

The enormous and prohibitive freight rates tell the story. The figures recently quoted by Senator WHITE, of Maine, in one of the newspapers are appalling. It is said that cotton jumped from 35 cents per hundred pounds to $11; wheat from 8 cents a bushel to a maximum of $1.36; flour from 10 cents a hundred pounds to $1; and general cargo rates increased to 10 times their normal level.

Who paid the price? The farmer whose grain and cotton and other products could not be moved at reasonable rates, and whose sales even when made were much reduced in volume. The same was true of the manufacturers, and the merchants, the exporters and the importers.

There was never a truer statement than that made by former President Roosevelt in a message to Congress when he pointed out that for the spread of our trade in peace and for the defense of our flag in war a great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensable.

When the demand came for ships, we had a few shipyards, and we built ships, bought ships, confiscated ships, and established new yards at enormous cost. We built ships of wood, of steel, of concrete—anything that would float—good, bad, and indifferent. We spent $3,500,000,000 and the war closed with a fleet of 2,314 vessels of all types, constructed under the supervision of the Shipping Board. In addition, interned enemy vessels were seized, others were chartered, commandeered, purchased, or requisitioned, so that, at one time or another, the Board owned 2,546 vessels of 14,703,717 deadweight tons.

In order to accomplish this result, the Board had become the owner in whole or in part of 71 shipyards, repair yards, machine shops, and other industrial plants connected with shipbuilding.

At the close of the World War our merchant marine problem became one of getting these ships into private hands and relieving the Government of their operation.

Then came the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, when Congress declared:

That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best-equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, insofar as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be obtained.

Provision was made for the sale of ships, and for the establishment of essential trade routes, the vessels to be operated by the Board if sale could not be made to private persons.

In providing for sales and to the end that all ports and communities should be equitably served it was provided that preference in the sale or assignment of vessels for operation on such steamship lines should be given to persons who are citizens of the United States who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines, if the Board was satisfied of the ability of such persons to maintain the service desired and proposed to be maintained, or to persons who were citizens of the United States who might be then maintaining a service from the port of the United States to or in the general direction of the world market port to which the Board had determined that such service should be established.

Provision was made for the creation out of sales of a construction loan fund for loans to aid private citizens in the construction of vessels of the best and most efficient type for the establishment or maintenance of service on lines deemed desirable by the Board. The loans were to be not more than two thirds of the cost.

Under the act of 1920, 38 services were established to various ports of the world, and they were operated under various agreements whereby the loss fell upon the Government, and appropriations for these losses amounted to 40 and 50 million dollars annually. The ships had been hastily constructed for winning the war, and were slow and inadequate to the purposes of world commerce. Practically no ships were constructed. Some sales were made, but with the increase of competition and depressed conditions payments were not completed. The American-borne trade declined from 51 percent in 1921 to 44 percent in 1923, 34 percent in 1927, and barely 32 percent in 1928.

In the meantime the American shipbuilding industry continued to decline to such extent that of 7,900,000 tons of sea-going vessels of 4,500 gross tons and over constructed in the world between January 1922 and August 1927, the United States built only 309,000 tons. By March 1928 only 2 percent of the world's construction was in our shipyards.

Great Britain and other maritime nations were building modern ships. Between 1922 and 1928 nearly 800 newly built foreign ships were put into our trade. The situation was that Great Britain alone had 1,034 ships of a speed of 12 knots and faster, while we had 180. She had 158 ships of 16 knots speed—we had 51. She had 37 of 18 knots speed, and we had 12. She had 16 of 20 knots speed, and we had 5.

Germany, despite her financial condition, had placed $12,000,000 at the disposal of German steamship companies as loans, which were to represent a 50-percent contribution toward the shipbuilding program of the individual ship-owners.

France in 1924 guaranteed a loan of $10,000,000 for a 25-year period, the loan being at 7 percent, the 7 percent to be paid not to the Government but to purchasers of these debentures, and American bankers handled the loan.

The evidence before the Committee on Merchant Marine, when the hearings on the Jones-White Act were held, contained a statement to the effect that it was reported in the French press that the Government was drawing up a bill to be presented to the Chamber of Deputies providing for a system of subsidies to the French merchant marine in the form of loans at low rates of interest to companies laying down vessels in French shipyards.

The Netherlands in 1921 began advancing $400,000 per year to the Holland-South African Line for a period of 5 years, without interest, unless it should develop that the company earned a surplus.

The evidence before the committee showed that Japan since 1889 had paid construction and operating bounties which in 1910 reached the annual sum of $7,386,000, in spite of their cheap labor and cheap production, and was then proposing a $75,000,000 loan fund, one half for construction and one half for operation bounties, for vessels to run to the west coast of the United States. It was shown that in 1927 Japan loaned 30,000,000 yen to the Tokyo dockyards in order that they might have proper facilities for keeping their great trans-Pacific ships in first-class shape.

Among the lines so subsidized were the North American Line to Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles; South American east coast, with stops on homeward trip at New Orleans, Galveston, Cristobal, and Los Angeles; South American west coast, with stops at Los Angeles; Australian route, African East Coast Line, South Seas Java Line, and China coastal service.

The evidence was before the committee of the direct financial aids by Great Britain in the way of postal subventions, Admiralty subventions, and colonial subventions. The committee knew of the loan made in 1902, through the Admiralty, to the Cunard Line, for a period of 20 years, of all the money required to build the 25-knot ships the Lusitania and the Mauretania, amounting to $12,653,000, at 2¾ percent, and that in addition a 20-year naval subvention of $730,000 per year had been given them, to which the post office had added a 2-year mail contract for $300,000.

At the time of these hearings, Commissioner Plummer, of the Shipping Board, than whom no better-informed man on this subject lived in America, called attention to the fact that these payments for the Lusitania and the Mauretania were such that they would repay the loan and interest, and he said that if the Lusitania had not been sunk there would have been left a $5,000,000 profit to that line.

Information was given as to subsidies, subventions, bounties, or mail pay granted in many other cases by Great Britain, and that in 1921 Great Britain had begun its trade-facilities loans with $121,000,000, which had been increased until at the time of the hearing that fund was $365,000,000. It was shown that this fund was to be used primarily for the purpose of causing ships to be built in English yards, and that if a man came to the British yards and placed a contract for ships to be built there the Government would lend him 85 percent of what the vessel was to cost.

The hearings disclosed that under the Trade Facilities Act of 1921 the British treasury was authorized to guarantee, on such terms as it deemed best, the payment of the interest or principal, or both, of any loan negotiated by a government, a corporation, or a body of persons required as capital for the manufacture or purchase of articles which would permit employment in the United Kingdom, the total amount so guaranteed not to exceed £25,000,000.

It was shown that the British treasury guaranteed a loan of £2,300,000 for 7 years to the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. for the construction of two fast steamers, a loan of £1,000,000 for 7 years to the Union Castle Mail Co. for mail steamers to South Africa, and £200,000 for 7 years each to the Lamport & Holt Line for ships to South America and to the Glenn Line for its Asiatic service.

It was shown that in further extension of its trade our British cousins had developed something rather unique in international trade, and yet in harmony with the Trade Facilities Acts. This was the "Export Credits Act", whereby the Government appropriated $126,000,000 so that if the English merchant was selling goods abroad he could raise money on his bills of lading so as to use his money over and over while he was giving the foreign buyer whatever long-time credit the buyer might need. It was shown that this was proving a very effective encouragement to British business.

The hearings disclosed that the British Government had for many years provided for a reserve force of officers and men to be available to meet the emergency of war, the number provided for in 1923-24 being 35,200, of various ranks and ratings, and appropriations for that purpose amounting to £572,800.

Evidence was introduced that Spain had changed in 1908 to construction bounties of $1,850,000 and navigation bounties of $500,000 per year; that in 1925 she had provided for replacement of her ships with modern tonnage and that she had appropriated $11,254,000 per year in construction and navigation bounties to that end. It was shown that Spain's trans-Atlantic line of 35 steamers would receive $4,500,000 annually, and that this company agreed to build or purchase between 1928 and 1938 15 new steamers of between 7,000 and 8,000 tons gross.

Chile was shown to have passed a direct subsidy law, which went into effect in January 1928, whereby the President of the Republic was authorized to invest a sum of 2,000,000 pesos annually for subsidizing national navigation companies that had maintained regular services through the Panama Canal for more than 3 years.

The evidence disclosed that Italy granted construction bounties, tariff bounties, and construction, repair, and alteration bounties, with aids to useful lines and requiring vessels of certain speed to be used, so that a certain number of sailings should be maintained, and contracts to be for 5 to 10 years. "Useful lines" were those connecting Italy with the commercial centers of the world. "Indispensable lines" connected Italy with her islands and colonies, and they received a fixed subsidy for 20 years. In the budget of 1926-27 the amount fixed for these aids was $7,035,050 and for useful lines $3,725,425, which represented an increase of $2,659,965 over the appropriations for the year 1923-24.

The need for an American merchant marine, privately owned and operated, was considered most carefully, and it was shown that 4,085 foreign-flag vessels of 19,000,000 gross tons carried more than 66 percent of our foreign trade. More than 20 percent of these vessels had been built since 1921. At the same time 1,675 American-flag vessels, of 7,000,000 gross tons, carried less than 34 percent of our foreign trade, less than 4 percent having been built since 1921, and not a single common carrier for foreign trade having been built in this country since the war.

It was testified that at the end of 1927 Germany, Italy, Holland, France, Sweden, and Denmark, in addition to Great Britain, each in the order named, were building more tonnage than the United States, while the United States stood a poor eighth in ships under construction.

One witness, speaking of the American fleet as it existed then, said:

The ships you have are virtually all practically of a type; there is not any use for them now in particular, because they are not diversified in design and type. Ships are just as different as people. In the dead-weight carriers you have a fleet, I might call them, of unskilled laborers; these ships carry dead-weight cargo. If you had enough cotton to carry out of the Southern ports, or enough coal to carry out of Virginia and Alabama ports, and enough wheat to carry to keep your whole outfit going, they might be utilized; but these ships are all of a type—pretty good ships but too many of a kind. It is just as if you were operating a railroad and had an overplus of coal cars but not enough passenger cars, baggage cars, and box cars.

The differential in construction costs and operating expenses were considered, and the necessity for mail pay aids in providing for the establishment of a merchant marine, the construction of new ships, the transfer of Government routes to private owners, and the conversion of existing ships into better ships more modern in type, with increased speed, better suited to meet the competition of foreign lines, and to furnish the auxiliaries needed for the Navy in time of emergency. The need for Government aid was conclusively shown, and the answer was ocean mail pay and construction loans at low rates of interest.

The background of the Jones-White Act shows beyond any peradventure that the mail pay provided in that act was intended to aid in the establishment and maintenance of essential trade routes, the construction of modern ships, and the permanence of a merchant marine. The hearings, the report, the debates, and all the facts demonstrate that this pay was not designed as compensation for mail carried.

The problem before the Congress involved the replacement of American ships. They were being operated at the enormous cost of approximately $40,000,000 annually, and were wearing out. The time was in sight when, after all this expense, this country would have no merchant marine. The bill which came from the Senate looked to replacements at Government expense, and the House committee substituted for that bill a bill that would provide for transfer of the American fleet to private hands and would secure permanency. Quotations already made from the committee report sustain this contention.

That the purpose of ocean mail contracts was to provide sales of established routes and the maintenance and permanency of the American merchant marine was further shown in hearings held before the House committee in January 1930, when the subject of ocean mail contracts was under consideration and Postmaster General Brown was on the stand. The Honorable Ewin L. Davis, former chairman of this committee, asked Mr. Brown his general views on the subject. Mr. Brown said:

You see we have passed on every application for an ocean mail contract that has been placed on file since I have been in the Post Office Department; but there have been a number of routes, a number of lines, which the Shipping Board, I think, contemplate selling, some perhaps are in the process of sale, and those problems have not come up to us yet; because, of course, as you know, we do not consider the award of an ocean mail contract to anybody but the private operator. If this answers your question, we do not think that the test of any route is whether or not any great amount of mail flows over it; we think the test is whether it is an essential trade route rather than an essential mail route.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, I concur in that view myself.

Italics mine. Again, when Secretary Lamont was on the stand, Mr. Davis said:

Mr. Secretary, I assume that you were named on the interdepartmental committee, as Secretary of Commerce, because it was recognized that a very important feature of this matter was the carriage of our commerce.

Mr. LAMONT. No doubt, Judge.

Mr. DAVIS. In other words, it was recognized that there was not involved solely the question of the transportation of our mail?

Mr. LAMONT. No; I am sure it was the general problem of building up a merchant marine.

Italics mine. Again—

Mr. BRIGGS. And unless those lines can be made attractive in some form or another, you cannot sell the lines to private purchasers; is not that true?

Mr. LAMONT. That is true.

Italics mine.

Mr. BRIGGS. And one of your purposes in selling them is to get them in private hands and relieve the Government of the losses it is sustaining there.

Mr. O'CONNOR (Chairman of the Shipping Board). Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. But at the same time to make it possible for the purchasers to carry on those services and to carry them on with sufficient experience to make them profitable, enduring, and permanent; is not that true?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; and let them have a contract with the proviso that they will replace. That has gotten away from us in a couple of cases. That is probably off of the question, Mr. Chairman, but in practically every case except two, I believe, we have insisted on them building ships for replacement.

Mr. BRIGGS. In other words, that is carrying out the purposes of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the purpose.

Mr. BRIGGS. That contemplates the merchant marine should be kept up to date and modern.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. And assure permanency.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Italics mine. This testimony was in accord with the concluding paragraph of the report submitted with the bill in 1928, which has been inserted previously.

THE MERCHANT MARINE ACT OF 1928 SUCCESSFUL

As a result of this legislation, all trade routes with the exception of two or three have been sold to private owners. Forty-three contracts have been executed, resulting in the building of 42 new vessels—15 having been built under the 1920 act—and the reconditioning of at least 40 vessels. This has meant work during the past 3 years for 40,000 persons. The benefit to labor in this country will be seen when it is recalled that for every dollar spent 80 cents has gone to labor in the shipyards or allied interests. The benefits have gone to every State of the Union.

Not less than 200 major industries are involved in the manufacture of materials used in shipbuilding. In furnishing the raw materials and in the process of converting them into finished materials and equipment every State in the Union contributes. The expenditures made in the production of these materials and equipment constitute approximately one half of the total cost of a ship. The labor expenditure in the construction of a ship constitutes at least 80 per cent of its total cost—half in the shipyards and half in the plants of allied industries.

When considering the importance of the American merchant marine to this country attention should also be called to the fact that just before the war our shipping was earning in ocean trade about $35,000,000 a year, and was spending for supplies, wages, and other purposes in this country about $26,000,000. In 1931—a very low, subnormal year—our shipping earned no less than $187,000,000 in freight carrying and spent about $141,000,000 in this country for supplies, wages, and other items of operation.

This act has meant the expenditure of $214,000,000 in round figures, of which private companies buying these ships and relying upon the good faith of the Government in granting mail pay and providing construction loans at low rates of interest have contributed out of private funds the sum of $66,250,000 in round figures. The United States has a first lien on all ships for the moneys loaned for their construction and may seize them upon default, but the moneys contributed by its own citizens will be lost.

The United States has in these ships an equity of approximately $160,000,000, the payment of which can only be secured by the continuance of existing contracts with the owners.

It has been demonstrated that all maritime nations of the world give aid in one form or another to their merchant marine. Certainly in America, with increased cost of construction and operation, the merchant marine cannot be maintained without Government aid. That subject was exhaustively investigated in 1927, and the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 was the answer.

OBLIGATIONS ASSUMED BY SHIPOWNERS

The mail pay provided in the act means more than the carriage of mail. It provided ocean mail service on essential trade routes for specified periods, with fixed sailings, and the replacement of ships with vessels of modern type.

What obligations were assumed by the shipowners in return for mail pay? These obligations were so tersely stated by Senator WHITE, of Maine, in an article recently written by him that I take the liberty of adopting the substance of his summary. They are:

First. That the ships under contract shall sail on the schedule specified carrying whatever mail offered.

Second. That the ships shall be American owned and American built.

Third. That they shall be maintained in the designated service for the life of the contract without deviation therefrom.

Fourth. That the contractor should build in American yards new tonnage as required by the contract.

Fifth. That those new ships shall be built on plans and specifications approved by the Navy Department.

Sixth. That the crews shall be two-thirds American.

Seventh. That these ships shall carry mail messengers for the Post Office Department without charge.

Eighth. That these ships may be taken over by the President in the event of national emergency at their then cost without any appreciation in value by reason of the emergency.

These obligations impose greater burdens upon the shipowner than would follow ordinary construction, but in return the Government has always a reservoir of ships for use in time of war. The ships are so constructed that they may be armed if need be and converted rapidly into instrumentalities of national defense.

The reduction in armed vessels for war makes of greater importance the possession of an adequate merchant marine. Today, if all the navies of the world were sunk the merchant marine of each country would constitute its navy, and the nation possessing the largest merchant marine would possess the biggest navy.

It is of the greatest importance to consider that while, under the Merchant Marine Acts of 1920 and 1928, we have built 57 ships and reconditioned and rebuilt 40, France has built 56, Japan 67, Germany 79, and Great Britain 601.

OCEAN MAIL PAY HAS SAVED MONEY FOR THE GOVERNMENT

Only by means of the ocean mail pay has the Government been able to dispose of its merchant ships. As shown in a recent editorial in Marine Age, the total expenditure for mail service for the fiscal year 1932 was $22,431,791, and the mail postage revenues from these vessels were $5,182,000, or a cost to the Government of $17,249,791, which after all was not a loss, for the operating expenses of the Government-owned ships from 1921 to 1926 had averaged $40,430,000 a year, so that by an expenditure of $17,000,000 in round figures the Government had saved $23,000,000 per year.

NO LOSSES TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

In 1924 a select committee was appointed to consider Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet operations, policies, and affairs. The majority report was written by Hon. Ewin L. Davis, former chairman of the House committee. He answered in the following language the claim that the sums spent for an American merchant marine constitute a loss to the American people:

As a matter of fact there have been no losses to either the Government or the American people when all the facts are properly considered. The advantages and benefits have far outweighed the expenses incurred in maintaining our important foreign trade routes, even though it is conceded that it might have been done more efficiently and more economically. This fact was graphically and cogently illustrated by the occurrence last year when the western grain farmers of the United States were unable to market their grain abroad for lack of available ocean tonnage. At that time a most serious situation confronted the agricultural interests of the United States, due to the fact that there was an exportable surplus of grain amounting to between two hundred and three hundred and fifty million bushels for which no market had up to that time been found and the presence of which in the United States operated to demoralize the domestic market and reduce the price of wheat to $1 a bushel and less—far below the cost of production.

It was apparent that when the demand for American wheat did arise, if the wheat could be delivered in foreign markets promptly, the result would be relief from depression and a rapid enhancement of price and increased returns to the American wheat grower. The problem was solved by utilizing Shipping Board vessels. And while it is estimated that the actual expense in operating such additional vessels amounted to something less than a million dollars, yet the price of grain by reason of such movement increased more than $650,000,000.

Mr. Davis said further:

This is but one of the many instances of the value of the American merchant marine. In fact, had it not been for the American merchant marine at the close of the World War, the United States would probably have paid out in increased ocean freight rates alone more than the total cost of the Government fleet. It was the Shipping Board which brought about, through the control of its tonnage, constant reductions in ocean freight rates which inured to the benefit of American producers, industries, and shippers. This tremendously important fact cannot and should not be overlooked in estimating what the American merchant marine is worth to the American people. The Government-owned fleet has, in fact, been a valuable asset rather than a millstone about the necks of the American people as some would have the Nation believe.

The select committee made recommendations as to the future disposition of the ships then owned by the Government, and the majority report written by Mr. Davis said:

So far as our existing trade routes and services are concerned, we favor a definite, unequivocal declaration that they will be maintained and vigorously operated either by the Government or by private American citizens. We favor a continued and permanent operation by the Government until such time as those ships and services can be sold to responsible American citizens under an unconditional guaranty of continued and unimpaired operation in the same services and under the American flag.

Italics mine. Constituting the majority who submitted the above report were four of the ablest Members this House has ever had, the Honorable Ewin L. Davis, of Tennessee; William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, at present with us; Tom Connally, now in the United States Senate from Texas; and Hon. Henry Allen Cooper, of Wisconsin, who served here with distinction until his death a few years past.

One of the last services rendered by the Honorable Clay Stone Briggs, of Texas, was when he appeared before the subcommittee in connection with this legislation. I miss him more than words can express. He has left a void which cannot be filled, and his going has added to my burdens beyond measure. I went to him for counsel and advice, and he never failed me.

Mr. Briggs called attention to the indisputable fact that the average freight bill the United States pays out for ocean freight is $750,000,000 to $900,000,000 a year, and in the operation of American ships Americans have been getting about one third of that; that is, from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 in payments here at home, used in support and maintenance of our enterprises at home and in the employment of labor.

The records of the Shipping Board show that from 1921 to 1930 the payments to American vessels for the carriage of our foreign water-borne trade averaged $300,000,000 per annum, or a total of $3,000,000,000 for the 10-year period. If we had not had American ships in which to carry American commerce this huge sum, about equaling the total war cost of the American merchant fleet, would have been paid by Americans to ships of foreign countries and the money would have been spent abroad instead of in the United States.

The possession of a large number of merchant ships under the American flag has resulted in a saving of ocean rates to American commerce, including not only in the movement of cotton, grain, and other agricultural, but also manufactured products as well, of at least $150,000,000 annually, averaged for each of the years since the close of the World War in 1918, or a total saving estimated by experts at approximately $2,000,000,000 for the period indicated.

In testimony before the Merchant Marine Committee, it was asserted that but for the possession and operation of the American ships an increase of at least 20 percent in ocean freight rates would have been levied by foreign lines upon American commerce.

When it is remembered that the producers, manufacturers, and shippers of the United States have been paying an ocean freight bill of approximately $900,000,000 a year since the World War, it is readily seen that a 20 percent increase or an added ocean freight bill of $180,000,000 a year would be no inconsequential or insignificant tribute upon American commerce.

CANCEL MAIL PAY AND WHAT FOLLOWS

Without Government aid at present the American merchant marine cannot survive. Foreign countries are sparing no effort to undermine and destroy the American merchant marine. They know that with its loss the existing fleet will return to the Government and that the Government will be compelled to pay out enormous sums for operation or will tie up the ships. Even if operated, replacements would not follow. When the ships should wear out, foreign countries would regain control of the seas and levy tribute at will. American commerce would be at their mercy.

As Mr. Briggs wisely said in his last appearance on this subject:

If the American merchant marine should be abandoned, it would not only subject the farming and manufacturing interests of the United States to an enormous increase in ocean freight rates with destruction of our ability to carry our commerce to every port of the world, without regard to ships of other nations, and would not only deprive America of a revenue of ocean freight receipts of from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 annually and our Navy of all auxiliary vessels, but would likewise result in the loss to the United States of loans upon new ships of approximately $150,000,000 and of many millions more in unpaid amounts of purchase money still due the United States in the sale of its lines to private interests.

The purchase money still due for lines sold aggregates $26,283,133.74, while the loans on ships rebuilt and reconstructed amount to $133,283,440.37, or a grand total of $159,566,574.11. These moneys are secured by a first lien on the ships, but if seized by the Government the contribution of $66,250,000 made out of private funds will be lost.

Among the other results which may flow from cancelation of ocean mail contracts are the following:

First. Foreign lines will immediately seize the opportunity of taking over the services from which lines are withdrawn or on which sailings are reduced, and this they will have no difficulty in doing with their large amount of idle tonnage.

Second. The shippers and merchants who have supported the American-flag services will feel that faith has been broken with them. Their good will may be considered as irretrievably lost, for, having been abandoned by their Government, they cannot be expected to turn again to the American flag. One of the greatest handicaps which the American merchant marine has suffered has been doubt in its permanence.

Third. The foreign lines will undoubtedly pursue a rate policy such as they have pursued in the past, which will give them the utmost benefit in revenue irrespective of the damage which that policy may mean to our foreign commerce, and such a policy will add many millions in freight charges which our foreign commerce will have to bear.

Fourth. Suspension or cancelation of services must necessarily result in the destruction of shipping agencies which have been built up during the past 14 years, both here and abroad, and which were so sadly lacking when our services were first established; the loss of this trained personnel may be considered as a deathblow to the American merchant marine.

Fifth. If the vessels are taken over by the Government and operated by it, the cost will far exceed the ocean mail pay.

Sixth. If the vessels are taken over by the Government and not operated, a considerable portion of the cost of the present ocean mail pay must be expended in placing them in lay-up, preserving the vessels and their equipment, and for repairs which will be inevitable before the vessels can be placed in operation again.

Seventh. The abandonment of our present services will stop the development of port facilities in the interest of the most economical movement of our foreign commerce such as is now being done under the declared policy of our Merchant Marine Act.

Eighth. The abandonment of these services will affect the livelihood of American seamen and their families; they will be thrown out of work with little chance for reemployment, as foreign lines employ crews of their own nationalities.

Ninth. The abandonment of these services will mean the loss of millions spent in this country for repairs, ship supplies, equipment, stores, and food; will demoralize all services and business established on the faith of continued service; will reduce by millions the buying power of the Nation; will create unemployment and distress in the home life of our licensed officers and other ship personnel, as well as the shore personnel; and will make it impossible for decades, if not for a century, to establish an American merchant marine.

Tenth. The suspension or cancelation of these services will remove the greatest and most beneficial factor in stabilizing freight rates. We are now in position to have a part in the fixing of these rates and to force reasonable rates through this Government's control over its own shipping. Moreover, under the Merchant Marine Acts of 1916, 1920, and 1928 we may prevent deferred rates, retaliations, discriminations, or unfair practices, and compel filing of reports, rates, and full memoranda of facts, all of which will be lost without an American merchant marine under our regulation. Retaliatory tariffs at present operating against American commerce would certainly not invite us to surrender existing instrumentalities for our defense, commercial or political.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE AS MUCH ENTITLED TO PROTECTION AS ANY OTHER INDUSTRY

The American merchant marine is engaged in international business and is in direct competition with the world. If industries at home are entitled to protection, by all the more reason should the merchant marine which operates in direct competition with foreign ships be entitled to protection. We are extending relief to banks, railroads, insurance companies, industries of all kinds, agriculture, and almost every line of trade. By what process of reasoning then may we deny relief to the merchant marine and surrender in these troubled times one of our greatest instruments of national defense?

The ocean mail contracts have a maximum life of 10 years only, and if renewed these contracts can be made for shorter terms and for smaller amounts. Some of the contracts do not cover so much as 10 years. According to most of these contracts new ships must be built and so the merchant marine will be kept modern.

If the merchant marine is assured of permanency, Americans will patronize it more freely, and with that patronage Government aid may be reduced.

Complaint is made by some foreign countries that Government-supported ships are taking from them business to which they are entitled. The claim is untenable. We are carrying now only thirty-odd percent of our own trade; that is, of our exports and imports. We declared in 1920, and reaffirmed that declaration in the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, that it was necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of our foreign and domestic commerce, that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States. No fair-minded nation or individual can deny that such an objective is reasonable.

NATIONAL ADVANTAGES OF AN AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

First. By an adequate merchant marine our country is placed on a more equal footing to compete in the world's markets to enable us to expand our foreign trade.

Second. Our country may obtain a fair share in the revenues derived from the vast carrying trade. These revenues of American ships constitute an important item, among the so-called "invisible items", toward a balance of our international trade in our favor.

Third. An adequate merchant marine makes available ships necessary for national defense to serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency at the minimum cost to the Nation.

Fourth. An adequate merchant marine enables the United States to be represented in international trade conferences and have a voice in the making and controlling of ocean freight rates, thereby protecting our foreign commerce from discrimination and combination which would impose onerous freight rates.

Fifth. An adequate merchant marine provides employment for American labor in an essential American industry by the building and repairing of ships in American shipyards—a specialized industry which requires the steady employment of skilled artisans to produce ships at the minimum cost, thereby making available a sufficient number of ship building and repair establishments with a trained personnel to meet a national emergency.

Sixth. An adequate merchant marine furnishes employment for American labor and establishes a nucleus for a trained sea-going personnel indispensable to our national defense.

The charges made in foreign countries against our merchant marine activities are without foundation in reason or fact. The United States, in its shipping activities during the last decade, has built less new merchant tonnage than any of the principal maritime nations, with the exception of one whose tonnage practically equals that of the United States, Great Britain outbuilding us 9 to 1 in tonnage and nearly 13 to 1 in number of new ships.

Although our ocean-going merchant marine is only one half the size of the British, and that part of our merchant marine which engages in international trade one sixth the size of the British, the United States has scrapped more in tons of ships during the last decade than has Great Britain or any other country.

American ships engaging in the foreign trade of the United States, in volume of tonnage carried, are matched by British-flag vessels.

Of vessels of 15,000 gross tons and over built by the six principal maritime nations during the past 10 years, out of a total of 95 ships of 2,209,000 tons, this Nation's share is 11 vessels of 226,000 tons.

Of vessels built for the same period of over 25,000 tons each the United States has not built, nor is building, any; while Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany have built or are building 18 of nearly three quarters of a million tons, some of which have speeds up to 30 knots and are about 70,000 tons in size.

In 1922 the Washington Arms Conference resulted in the United States sacrificing naval supremacy. The United States scrapped 850,000 tons of vessels built and building, which constituted the cream of the Navy. We scrapped twice as much as the British and more than the British and Japanese combined. The Geneva Conference accomplished nothing, and at the London Conference the United States again made concessions.

We must not now scrap our merchant marine, but should continue building to a point commensurate with the position we now occupy as a world power. We have rights as a maritime nation, and we must maintain and preserve them.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the Federal Trade Commission appropriation, the last bill that was passed by Congress reduced the appropriation of the Federal Trade Commission almost one half million dollars under the present appropriation. It was thought at that time that the Federal Trade Commission was not performing its duties in compliance with the law creating the Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission was organized at the request and upon the insistence of President Wilson. He made a campaign in 1912 against trusts and monopolies. One of his statements was that private monopoly is indefensible and that a Federal Trade Commission should be organized, not for the purpose of encouraging and promoting monopolies or trusts, but for the purpose of destroying monopolies and trusts, and protecting the people against them.

CREATION OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The original act creating the Federal Trade Commission was a good law. It was well-meaning and for a long time was carried out in a very satisfactory manner, but in 1925 the procedure of the Federal Trade Commission was entirely changed. Instead of its continuing to be a commission that would safeguard the interests of the public and protect the rights of the people against monopolies and trusts, it commenced a course of procedure which resulted in the organization of trusts and monopolies.

TRUST-ORGANIZING BODY

May I invite your attention to the fact that the Federal trade practice conference work that has been conducted by the Commission for the last 3 or 4 years is nothing more than a trust-organization work conducted by an agency of the United States Government.

On different occasions I have cited to the Members of the House specific instances where the Federal Trade Commission brought members of a group of one of the industries together and where they aided and assisted the members of this group in framing rules and regulations which had for their declared purpose the fixing of prices that the consumers of America must pay. This has been done in more than a hundred cases. This was done in the face of the fact that the Federal Trade Commission had no power on earth to prevent the charging of an unreasonable price. The public was not protected in any sense of the word.

COMMISSION VIOLATING LAW

I do not believe that any commission should have the right to do this. It is not legal work that they are conducting; it is illegal work they are conducting. I do not believe, as just one humble Member of this body, that our antitrust laws or our antimonopoly laws should be weakened in any sense of the word. [Applause.]

On the other hand, I believe they should be made more rigid, more strict, and should be more diligently enforced.

I do not care who composes a commission sitting here in the city of Washington, that commission cannot conduct the affairs of the people all over this Nation in a satisfactory manner and properly protect the rights of the people. It is not possible, and during the last 4 years we have witnessed a time when not one person in the United States has gone to jail for violating the antitrust laws or the antimonopoly laws; not one person has paid a fine because he violated these laws. If I am wrong about this, I want you to speak up. I have been watching the newspapers and the different reports, and yet I have been unable to find where one person has paid one dollar of fine or served one hour in jail during the last 4 years because he violated the antitrust or antimonopoly laws of this country. A few wrists have been very gently slapped with a very small velvet hammer.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is not that circumstance due to the fact the Federal Trade Commission issues an order to desist to the corporation or combination that offends, and requires them to discontinue such practices?

Mr. PATMAN. It means the Federal Trade Commission has kept them out of the courts and has let them go ahead and violate the laws. The Federal Trade Commission has no more right to issue a cease-and-desist order and enforce it than I have, or the gentleman from New York.

The members of the Federal Trade Commission do not have the power and authority they claim to have. They have been exceeding their authority; have, in effect, been using the United States mails to defraud; and have been guilty of malfeasance in office. I hope the President makes a clean sweep in the reorganization of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. GRIFFIN. If they desisted, then there was no further mergers or violation.

STRONGER GRIP ON THROATS OF PEOPLE

Mr. PATMAN. They merely use the Commission to get a little stronger grip on the throats of the people. The Federal Trade Commission has hindered the enforcement of the antitrust and antimonopoly laws instead of assisting in their enforcement. This Commission has acted against the rights of the people instead of for their rights; it has cooperated with and assisted law violators instead of trying to prevent law violations. Big monopolies and trusts do not fear contests in the courts to determine if they are in or out of the twilight zone; they fear criminal prosecutions. If we really want honest-to-God enforcement, we must start with the criminal laws.

If you permit a merger you throw people out of work, and as you throw people out of work business loses customers; farmers cannot sell what they produce and factories cannot sell what they manufacture. Therefore, the farmers and wage earners lose buying power. The more mergers you have the more employees are out of a job, and the more customers you lose. You have got to restore buying power.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1932

Now, I want to call the attention of gentlemen to a plank in the Democratic platform of 1932. It reads:

In this time of unprecedented economic and social distress the Democratic Party declares its conviction that the chief causes of this condition were the disastrous policies pursued by our Government since the World War, of economic isolation, fostering the merger of competitive business into monopolies, and encouraging the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at the expense of the public.

May I suggest to my Democratic friends that if we do anything to encourage monopolies, mergers, combinations, or weaken the antitrust laws, I believe we will be going in contradiction to the promises of our platform of 1932.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman read the Democratic plank on the antitrust law on the next page?

Mr. PATMAN. I have not that before me just now. Will the gentleman please find it for me in this book?

Mr. McFARLANE. I will find it for the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. Instead of making the laws weaker we should make them stronger; instead of enforcing them through a bureau, we ought to have the investigations conducted by a grand jury, and by those who have a right to take them into the courts of this country and put them before a jury, and if they are guilty send them to jail, the penitentiary, or fine them.

Now, what chance would the consumers in this country have if all the power was left to a board of five members in Washington? I can give you a specific instance.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have found the plank in the Democratic platform.

Mr. PATMAN. Here it is:

We advocate the strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws, to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices, and revision thereof for the better protection of labor and the small producer and distributor.

HELP INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

In other words, we want to help out the independent business man. We want an individualistic system. We do not want monopolies. We do not want trusts. We want small business institutions in every town. Let us have competition; let us have the people at work. We want different small business concerns instead of having a few large monopolistic concerns doing the business of the country.

The ideal situation, we are told, would be to have one grocery system in each little town, one department store, one garage, one place where automobiles are sold, and one establishment only for the handling of each class of merchandise. But if you do that, you will destroy our country. You want to put the people to work—they are anxious to work—and when you do you will restore our buying power. If people do not have the buying power they cannot purchase. A few large bankers who use the credit of this Nation free are now in control of the large industries. Are we going to reward them for the substantial part they have contributed toward this panic by giving them a new, firmer, and more profitable grip upon the throats of the American people?

If mergers, monopolies, and trusts continue as they have the past 5 years, it will not be 5 years before practically all jobs will be dispensed and practically all capital invested under the supervision of a handful of men in New York City. They are running and ruining the country now; let us not legalize their wrongful acts and further encourage their greed. Let us give the plain folks a chance, the ones who build our country in time of peace and save it in time of war.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE

I believe that the present antitrust and antimonopoly laws should not be in any sense of the word weakened or impaired; that said laws should be strengthened and rigidly enforced; that instead of continually investigating violators by commissions without power to punish, which stand in the way of proper enforcement and never result in more than a mild wrist-slapping, the Department of Justice and all United States attorneys throughout the Nation should be instructed to file and diligently prosecute both criminal and civil actions against all offenders; that we encourage an individualistic system for industry, including the operation of independent business establishments by the owners thereof; that trusts and monopolies be curbed by proper criminal laws rigidly and strictly enforced, to the end that small and independent producers and distributors may be permitted to pursue their business without destruction.

STRUGGLE OF 50 YEARS

Therefore, it is not in the interest of the general welfare; it is not in the interest of our country that we have further mergers or monopolies, or that we permit anything to be done that may weaken or in any way impair the Sherman or Clayton Acts.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not true that the present antimonopoly laws are the fruitage of 50 years' struggle on the part of the American people against monopoly and unfair control of economic and business forces of this Nation?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

REDUCTIONS FOR VETERANS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want now to refer to the veterans' part of this bill. The largest reduction in this bill is for veterans. In fact all of it except $7,000,000 is on account of veterans—a reduction of $460,000,000. When the economy bill was passed, very few contemplated that the men having service-connected disabilities would receive much of a reduction. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] made a very fair and interesting statement this morning, but I think he left the impression that a large number of service-connected cases would receive substantial increases under the terms of this bill. I suggest that the number of increases will be very, very small. They will be the exception rather than the general rule. On the other hand, my investigation discloses that men who have service-connected disabilities, who will remain on the pension rolls, will continue to receive just about 50 percent of what they have received in the past.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Carrying out what the gentleman says, the preliminary survey up to the point where it was reached last Monday at the Fort Snelling regional office revealed that the 470 cases reviewed received a compensation aggregating $16,000 in pensions; 78 were removed altogether, and the remaining three hundred and eighty-odd will receive a total of $6,000 as against the present $16,000. That bears out what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman. There are 365,000 service-connected cases. The gentleman from Virginia will take issue with me. He will say that some of these cases are not service-connected; but they are service-connected, because the Congress has heretofore said they are. After hearing the best medical testimony on that, this Congress said by solemn legislative act that those cases are service-connected disabilities, and told those men to cease and desist from further presenting proof of their service connection; that it would be wholly unnecessary in the future. After we told them that, and 8 long years have expired and the proof is no longer available or has been destroyed or the witnesses have died, we come along now with a legislative act and strike off 160,000 of them and solemnly declare again that their disabilities are in no way connected with their military service. Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious proposition; and I asked the gentleman this morning the question as to whether or not these cases would be reviewed by the administration by classes or groups or whether individual cases would be passed on. That is very important. The President has the power if he wants to, but I am sure that he will never exercise it—to pass on individual cases—he could not afford to do it; he could not pass on individual cases, and they will have to be passed on by classes and groups.

In the Economy Act that was passed, and under this act, the veterans that have been placed on the pension roll by private act, by special act of Congress, receiving compensation are reduced only 15 percent. The reason they are receiving the pension is because they did not come under the general laws. Some of them had dishonorable discharges, some of them had deserted from the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps during the time of the war and were not entitled to pensions or compensation, but Congress put them on the rolls anyway. They are allowed to stay on the rolls. Under the economy bill they were not touched, not one dime taken from them, and under this bill they are compelled to take a reduction of only 15 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in this day of storm and stress something should remain firm and secure. The pledged word of the Government of the United States should be as solid as Gibraltar. Yet this bill carries at least six legislative provisions which will bring uncertainty and fear in great areas of employment and industry. I agree with every word stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]. He has made an eloquent and unanswerable plea for the merchant marine as a great American program for the public welfare. Having agreed to his argument, I feel it is impossible for me to support a measure which would have the effect of completely destroying our merchant marine if the powers it gives are exercised by the Executive.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Not now. I go farther and state that when the Government contracts with an individual, the Government certainly must take on the same obligations as the individual. When the Government makes a contract it certainly should not plead its sovereign right and refuse to carry out the obligations which rest on the other party to the contract. When the American citizen makes a legal contract with the Government he ought to be assured that that express agreement will be carried out to the letter. The provision in this bill which completely nullifies that fundamental right on the part of the citizens is unjustifiable and should not have the approval of Congress.

I want to take up the air mail situation, which has been referred to by my friend from New York [Mr. TABER], the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, having this bill in charge. The Congress of the United States during the last 8 years has established a policy, has written legislation, as to the method of encouraging commercial aviation through air mail contracts. Under the law contracts have been entered into by men who have invested millions to prove their good faith. We have built up a great, new industry in this land. Five hundred million dollars have been invested in aviation. There are 6,000 employees directly employed by the scheduled air transportation companies. Their average pay is $2,000 a year, which means a pay roll of $12,000,000 a year. There are 1,200 trained pilots ready for their place in national defense. If the Government had to maintain these pilots it would cost $6,000,000 a year. Mr. Chairman, the contracts which have led to these developments are more sacred than contracts between private individuals, because the Government is protected by many express restrictions in the contract itself.

We heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] speak about there being only one reason for which these domestic air mail contracts can be canceled. The gentleman is vastly mistaken about that. We have hedged those contracts about in a dozen ways, and the contractor must meet them or the contract can be canceled.

I hold in my hand a contract made by the Post Office Department with air mail contractors. This is a route certificate granted under the law in return for the surrender of an original contract.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will let me finish my statement.

This is a route certificate which is given a contractor when he surrenders his original contract. That original contract was entered into first by competitive bidding. It was made for a 4-year period. It required certain fixed payments to the contractor. Then we passed an amendment to the Air Mail Act providing for certain changes, and providing that if the contractor would surrender voluntarily the contract that he held, a valid, written, and legal contract, we would issue him a route certificate, which would extend for a period not to exceed 10 years, including the 4-year term. The term of these route certificates will expire on the 6th day of April 1936. All contracts are now route certificates. The contracts have been transferred into the new contract known as a "route certificate." In that certificate, which is held by American citizens, investing in American airplanes and equipment, employing American workers, there are many express provisions as to how those contracts must be carried out. For instance, it does not merely require that if the contractor willfully refuses to carry out the regulations of the Post Office Department, it shall be canceled, but it contains a provision like this:

Now, therefore, pursuant to the authority in me vested by the provisions of a law of Congress, _____ shall have the right, so long as he complies with all the rules and regulations issued by the Postmaster General, for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting mail operations to advances in the art of flying and passenger transportation, to carry mail over the route hereinafter set out, or any modification thereof, at rates of compensation to be fixed herein.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the contractor fails to come up to the modern requirements of the aviation industry, as specified by the Department, this contract may be canceled. If he refuses to carry out such rules or regulations laid down by the Postmaster General, he may have his contract canceled. If he refuses to accept the compensation provided, there is also provision for cancellation.

There is another provision in this contract signed by this contractor engaged in this new industry, as follows:

Upon 60 days' notice to the carrier, the Postmaster General, from time to time, may modify such route by extension or extensions, prescribe the schedule therein and stops thereon, and determine the mileage upon which compensation is to be based.

In other words, the Postmaster General can call in a contractor and change his contract, and in many instances this has been done. The transcontinental air mail line, known as "the Transcontinental & Western Air Express", held a valid contract requiring that 70 cents a mile be paid to them for the night mail service. They gave that up and took a rate of 35½ cents a mile, because the Postmaster General required them to make that reduction. As a result they were compelled to put on 57 percent more mileage on their route for less money than they received under their former contract. This company transports 750 pounds of air mail across the continent in 24 hours at 35½ cents a mile.

Still further, these contractors must furnish aircraft and equipment approved by the Post Office Department or lose their contracts. The contracts may be canceled if any third person was employed to solicit or obtain the contract. It may be canceled if its estimated rate included any commission or brokerage. It is clearly stated in the contract:

And it is understood that a breach of this condition shall constitute adequate cause for the cancelation of this certificate by the Postmaster General.

Mr. Chairman, under the laws as passed in Congress, and under bids that were accepted and contracts legally made, there is abundant opportunity to cancel every contract where there is any reason for it. I submit to you that if there is any contract where there has been fraud or corruption, it of course is void from the beginning, and all the Postmaster General has to do is prove there has been fraud or corruption in connection with the contract, and he will not have any difficulty in annulling it.

I have not heard anyone attempt to prove that any of these air mail contracts have been fraudulently made. I have heard it said that the last Postmaster General gave extensions which went over the appropriations provided by law. I helped to write into the law the provision that the Post Office Department could not obligate the Government for more than was appropriated by Congress. We had an appropriation for 1933 of $19,400,000. If the Postmaster General gave a contract which runs over that amount, then that contract can and should be discontinued at once. But to attempt to argue from that that all the contracts made for the $19,400,000 appropriation are therefore subject to cancelation is foolish and ridiculous.

The extensions costing over the amount appropriated cannot be upheld and they can easily be removed from the operation of the air mail system. However, every dollar of the actual appropriation is subject to obligation by the agent of the Government acting in compliance with the act of Congress. Any other decision is unthinkable.

Now, what is going to be the result of wholesale cancelations? Suppose the Postmaster General and the President indicate that they are considering the cancelation of these contracts. There are orders placed right now from these air mail operators for over $5,000,000 worth of airplanes and equipment. Do you believe, if this measure even passes the House, that those men will go ahead and make that investment in new equipment when they may lose contracts upon which they had built their plans?

What about the 1,200 pilots who have been trained at the expense of the air mail operators? What uncertainty will be their lot as they face the future?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I was interested in what the gentleman stated about extension of air mail contracts. Is it not true that all air mail contracts have been extended until 1936 and that such extensions were made shortly before close of the last administration?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Those are the route certificates issued under the law. They expire April 6, 1936.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not also true that the average cost to the Government is about 61 cents per mile?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; that is not quite true. It is about 50 cents on the basis of the entire mileage of the system. The pay at one time was even lower than that, but it is now about 50 cents. The law itself provides a maximum of $1.25 a mile.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I make this statement, if the gentleman will permit: I was down to the Post Office Department a few days ago and secured what I thought was authentic information from officials in that Department. But assuming that 50 cents is correct, I am of the opinion that such a price is outrageous. For example, I have in mind a small, independent air line that has been operating in southwest Oklahoma very efficiently for the past 2 years. It has first-class equipment approved by the Department of Commerce. I think it might be of interest to the gentleman and to the country to know that this short air line has been unable to receive any consideration of its application to secure an air mail contract at 10 cents per mile.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understand; but let me say to the gentleman that if this provision goes through, no company will have an opportunity to get any kind of a new contract for carrying the air mail of the United States. Why? Because the purpose of this provision is to cancel existing contracts and to bring the cost down under a system which will be destructive of the present service, to say nothing of new service.

I may say to my friend that the Post Office Committee went into a thorough investigation of this matter. We formulated legislation that was introduced in the last session and is now pending in this session. We started hearings in this session. One object of this effort was to give independent operators who never have had a chance to get a contract, but who desire to carry the mail, an opportunity to do so, and at the same time produce revenue to pay the cost of the service. We provided that opportunity in the bill. After we had started the hearings we received word that we should delay the hearings on the proposed legislation until this provision in this bill could be brought in for action.

In other words, a fundamental plan for the air mail on a basis of mail carried per mile will produce every dollar of revenue that will be paid to the operators. We have the legislation now pending in committee. Why should we destroy all this constructive program by a provision in this bill to permit cancelation of all the contracts without any legislation to build the system on a better basis?

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, it is a foolish policy which would take a great industry which has been built up to an amazing point in a period of 8 years and throw into it utter uncertainty and chaos, with all the results that will flow from such unwise action.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman has given his opinion of how domestic air mail contracts under the certificate plan may be modified under existing law. Is there anything under existing law that will permit a modification or cancellation of ocean mail contracts?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Under the ocean mail contracts, in the contract itself, as was stated by the gentleman from New York, there are provisions by which they can be modified, curtailed, and, if necessary, canceled.

I may say to the gentleman there is no necessity for bringing in an abrogation clause here permitting the canceling of contracts and making the Government liable to damages as a result of such cancellation.

Mr. ARNOLD. By the terms of the ocean mail contracts they can only be modified or canceled by mutual agreement. There is nothing which permits the Government to cancel them.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York read the provision from the ocean mail contract. I have read provisions from the domestic air mail contracts.

The Government is hedged about with all kinds of protection. Congress has not been unmindful of proper safeguards for the Government. We have written into these contracts so many restrictions that it makes one wonder how the American citizen who becomes a contractor can carry out the contract at all. He gives bond to guarantee his performance, but there seems to be no guaranty that the Government will fulfill its agreement. However, to put in a direct cancellation provision makes the Government liable for full damages as a result of such cancellation. I cannot understand why it should be suggested that this Congress, after having laid down policies as to ocean mail and as to air mail and having persuaded Americans to invest millions of dollars in reliance upon the Government's good faith, that now, without any warning, we should permit cancellation of all these contracts. It is not fair. It is far better, I may say to the Committee, to use the powers now contained in these contracts. If any of them have been gained by illegal methods they are subject to immediate annulment. If the service is not needed, it may be curtailed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman kindly advise the committee what the deficit on air mail contracts was last year?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, although it opens out another angle. The actual deficit in the air mail last year, counting revenues of $9,000,000, which is the estimate that every person really acquainted with the subject agrees to, would be $10,400,000. The new legislation that we have proposed aims to deal with an appropriation of $15,000,000, which was granted in the last session of Congress, for the fiscal year 1934. Under that legislation I confidently believe the actual subsidy would be less than $5,000,000 for the year.

We can operate this Air Mail Service almost in its present entirety, under constructive legislation, at a cost of $5,000,000 a year above revenues received, and we can preserve the industry and in 5 years' time be paying not a single penny of subsidy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am sorry, I cannot yield further.

I have pointed out what can be done by legislation which can be passed by the 1st of July. If there is a real desire to deal with the air mail system on a constructive basis, why should we not consider the legislation which has been under hearings in the Post Office Committee and enact it into law?

The Postmaster General could use its provisions for eliminating unjustified extensions and bring the Service within the appropriation of the Congress. It would make possible a self-sustaining Air Mail Service.

This can be done and should be done. There cannot be constructive action from the operation of this cancellation clause in this bill, and it should be rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, the Senate has just agreed to the conference report on the farm mortgage-currency expansion measure and has receded on amendment no. 33. This finally disposes of all legislative action necessary to the passage of the bill and sending it to the White House. In view of the importance of the measure, I desired to make this announcement to the House at this time. [Applause.]

This bill contains the currency feature.

I am convinced that a controlled expansion of the currency will not only materially increase farm prices but that it is essential to complete national recovery. The dollar is supposed to be a measure of value—a medium of exchange.

We often speak of using dollars to purchase commodities. That depends upon which side of the bargain the trader is located. One man uses money to purchase wheat. The farmer uses wheat to purchase money. When one borrows money to be repaid in the future it is essential to fairness that the value of that dollar remain substantially the same, measured in the terms of the general commodity price level.

Here is where the hitch comes. Translated into farm commodities, the dollar is worth twice what it was worth a few years ago. The private debts of America run into staggering billions. It is impossible to pay these debts with dollars of the increased value of today. Yet the obligation rests not only upon the farmer but upon other producers and upon manufacturers to pay these debts with greatly appreciated dollars. This is responsible for a great deal of the grief and stagnation from which the country has been suffering.

The strange part about this whole situation is that the debts we owe, we owe to each other. Not a dollar is owed abroad. Yet both agriculture and commerce have been chained and almost destroyed by the high-priced dollar.

The credit of the country has been so greatly contracted that the only practical way to offset it is through an adequate supply of money on a sound basis.

Currency and credit are like other commodities. When they are plentiful they are low in price. When they are scarce they are high in price.

Of course, no one wants printing-press money. On the other hand, no thinking person wants money so high priced that it becomes a hindrance rather than an aid to commerce and exchange.

Foreign countries have, by revaluing their unit of money on a lower basis, practically destroyed the market of the surplus farm products of America.

Any expansion should be properly controlled. Germany went to the extreme by increasing the volume of currency to such an extent as to practically cancel all debts. This was her deliberate purpose. For the last 3 years we have been going to the other extreme by contracting currency and credit to such an extent as to make payment of debts practically impossible. France, on the other hand, took the middle position, revaluing the franc on such a basis as to make payment of debts possible and yet at the same time increasing to a reasonable degree the farm and general commodity price level.

Through a reasonable increase in the volume of the currency, which can be kept on a sound basis, the prices of farm commodities can be materially increased, debts can be paid, and conditions restored.

Money is the lifeblood of the nation. One might have a perfect body, but if he had only half enough blood, he would suffer torture. On the other hand, if he had too much blood he might suffer from high blood pressure. If he has a sufficient amount of blood, his health conditions become ideal.

Properly controlled expansion of the currency merely means restoration to the normal flow of commerce and trade—a restoration of commodity prices to the point where they would be fair to everyone. Such a step is essential to the proper working out of the different steps in the President's program for national recovery.

For more than 2 years I have been urging action of this character as the way out of the tragedy. If this action had been taken earlier I feel that many other steps that have been taken in an effort to bolster up waning conditions would have been found unnecessary.

The action of the President in approving the amendment granting authority to restore the currency to a proper basis assures its passage and has already had a very fine effect on the general commodity price level. The Speaker designated me as head of the House conference committee to consider this currency amendment along with the other features of the bill. The conferees felt that action of this kind was necessary in this emergency. I believe the entire conference committee was in agreement on this subject. We therefore urged the adoption of a rule which provided that the House concur in the Senate amendment. This action was taken by the House.

This measure, embodying as it does the farm-mortgage refinancing provisions as well as the currency program, is generally considered to be the most important and far-reaching legislation ever presented to the American Congress. The Senate and House have now agreed on all of the provisions of the bill. It will be sent at once to the White House for Executive action thereon.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I discussed the other day, in the adoption of rule for this bill, the provision for the cancelation of transportation contracts. I am not going to say much more about that subject except to read from a domestic air mail contract that was actually executed. I shall read the provision with respect to the power of cancelation. This is section 15 of the contract:

This certificate may be canceled by the Postmaster General at any time for willful neglect on the part of the holder to carry out any rule, regulation, or order made for its guidance, notice of such intended cancelation to be given in writing by the Postmaster General and 45 days allowed the holder in which to show cause why the certificate should not be canceled.

This settles beyond question that the only manner or method by which an air mail contract can be canceled is by willful neglect on the part of the contractor to carry out his duties under the contract.

Let me show you the situation that exists. I am not going into the legality or illegality of contracts entered into by Postmaster General Brown or the legality or illegality of his action in entering into these contracts, because I went into that yesterday, but here are the circumstances:

There are 23 of these contracts. When we passed the law providing for this service and intending to subsidize it—and we are subsidizing it—we passed it based upon the proposition that the only air mail routes that should be established were air mail routes that would ultimately become self-sustaining.

The purpose was to encourage and build up air navigation. Now, it is the opinion of the present Post Office Department that some of these routes that have been established will never become self-sustaining. If the Postmaster General says, "Here is a route that ought to have become self-sustaining, but experience has demonstrated it will never become self-sustaining", is there any use for us to go on and subsidize this route for 3 more years when it is evident that the route will never become self-sustaining?

Certainly, the Congress will not approve a policy of subsidizing an air mail route that will never become self-sustaining, because that would contemplate a continual subsidy for such a route.

This cancelation section merely gives the President the power to have these contracts reviewed, including a determination of which ones will become self-sustaining and which ones will not be self-sustaining, and to cancel or modify such contracts as he thinks best. Remember that these contracts extend for 3 more years.

There is another proposition involved. Twenty-three domestic air mail routes have been established. As originally established, they may have been 1,000 or 500 miles, but they have been extended from time to time and some of the extensions consist of much more mileage with more cost to the Government than the original contract route, and many of these extensions were unjustified and ought never to have been granted. The Postmaster General is now seeking to know his rights of cancelation over these extensions, but he comes up against the terms of the contract and the law.

The Postmaster General has submitted to the Comptroller General for decision the question as to whether he has the right to cancel extensions of an established route. The Comptroller General has had the question before him for more than 3 weeks and has not decided. This provision will clarify the matter.

Oh, gentlemen, I am talking to both sides of the House. Have you no confidence in the wisdom and the judgment and the fairness and the justice of the Post Office Department and the President of the United States? Can you not trust the judgment of the President of the United States and trust his honor and his integrity to deal intelligently with this question? I shall not go into this particular matter any further.

I am not going to discuss all of these 13 legislative provisions. I would be pleased to discuss any one or more of them that the Members are interested in or that they want to have explained. As I told you the other day, all of them are either for administrative efficiency or for the granting of authority in the saving of money to the taxpayers. While I am on the question of savings, the maximum approximation of the amount that the legislation on this bill can save is $165,000,000, and when I give this approximation, it is the maximum saving, in my judgment, that could be accomplished.

Under the 30-year retirement feature, which is set forth on this chart [indicating], there could be a saving of $30,000,000 a year if all the employees with 30 years or more service were retired and no one appointed to any of the vacancies.

Under the section providing for administrative furlough in the departments and authority to modify rural carriers' equipment allowance, a maximum of $20,000,000 might be saved.

There is a section which provides that the President may increase the charges for services rendered by and for things being sold by the Federal Government up to the actual cost to such services or articles to the Government. That might reach $100,000,000, including some of the charges in the Postal Service.

Take the Agricultural Department. We have a law which provides that the individual can procure the service of Government experts to certify to the class and soundness of perishable fruit and vegetables. So far the Government has lost 35 percent of the amount expended.

We have a law for the branding of meat for the benefit of the packers. We have been getting back only 55 percent of the amount expended on that service. We are providing the expert services of Government employees, and why should not those who get the service pay the actual cost of that service to the Government?

Now, as to the furlough of Army officers. If they furlough as many as 4,000, the amount saved will be $9,500,000. It saves two million and a half for each thousand men furloughed. I do not say they will go to the extreme, but any less than 4,000 will save a proportional amount.

Now, as to the modification and cancelation of transportation contracts. We have just been discussing that. We are appropriating $19,460,000 for this fiscal year, and more than that has been obligated under these domestic air mail contracts.

We are appropriating, for the next fiscal year, only $15,000,000. Something has to be done to permit the Department to hold the expenditure within the $15,000,000. This provision gives the President the power to reduce or modify the contracts, and eliminate ones that he feels should not be continued.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Do not the contracts provide that on 60 days' notice the Postmaster General may increase, diminish, or modify the service above described and make such alteration in compensation of the carrier as he may deem proper? Is not that ample power?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. That has been resorted to. The Postmaster General has requested it, and has received it from some and has not received it from others.

Mr. TERRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. TERRELL. How much did the gentleman say the Government had lost from the inspection of fruits?

Mr. BUCHANAN. A loss of 35 percent of the amount expended.

Mr. TERRELL. We have a general inspection in our State by the Federal Government affiliated with the State. We pay the Federal Government $1 a car and we expect that covers the cost.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It lacks 35 percent of doing it.

Now, in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin as to the power vested in the Postmaster General. It is like the power vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate freight and passenger rates. The courts have read the "rule of reason" into all these contracts. They have read the rule of reason into it, and hold that the rates cannot be reduced below the point where the contractor would have a reasonable profit upon his investment. You have 23 air mail contracts. You cannot maintain all of them and allow the carrier or the contractor a reasonable profit on his investment. What can you do? You must pick out those that will never become self-sustaining and compromise them or otherwise make adjustment as between the Government and the contractor and abrogate the contracts. Then you can by the exercise of this power make adjustment of rates and bring the expenditures within the appropriations.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The contract providing that the Postmaster General may curtail the service by increasing, diminishing, or modifying the service; can the gentleman tell me the cases on which he relies when he says that the rule of reason must apply to the language of the contract?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Supreme Court is full of them.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Can the gentleman tell one of them?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not recall the names.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I am asking in good faith.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Supreme Court is full of them. They hold that the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot reduce freight rates below an amount where the carrier can make a reasonable profit on his investment.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Because that is the statute?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; that is the Supreme Court.

Mr. TABER. But this is a contract, a contract reservation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand it is a contract; but it is a public service, just like the carrying of freight and passengers. Why do you want to force in continuation for 3 more years air mail contracts that can never become self-sustaining at the expense of others that can become self-sustaining? It is contrary to the interest of real air transportation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman familiar with the legislation that the Post Office Committee, under the leadership of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], has worked out to do the thing that he is asking to have done here?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the Post Office Committee has worked out a bill that will do the thing I am advocating, and if the gentleman will guarantee that the bill will pass both branches of Congress, then I would be willing to forego this legislation, so far as domestic air mail contracts are concerned. I am trying to help out the President's program. However, this cancellation authority covers ocean mail contracts and foreign air mail contracts that are not covered by the bill the gentleman refers to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. I want to get some information with reference to the expenses of carrying on the Federal Trade Commission. The bill carries $920,000 for that Commission. From the gentleman's investigation of that activity, does he not believe that could be reduced by at least half, and yet leave the Commission where it can function just as well as it is doing now?

Mr. BUCHANAN. To be perfectly frank with the gentleman, my individual opinion is that $900,000 is entirely too much. I think it could not be cut in half; but I understand that there are some special investigations to be conducted, that the administration wants to have conducted, of highly important matters, and, therefore, very reluctantly I agreed to the $900,000 in deference to the administration.

Mr. GLOVER. Is not that the reason that has been assigned every time for keeping these amounts up?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not informed on what has happened every time, but I am telling the gentleman about this.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the new securities act imposes a great deal of work upon the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What about this efficiency rating as compared to the apportionment of various States? Has the gentleman discussed that yet, or is he going to discuss the question of discharging employees from different States?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Since the gentleman has brought it up, I shall discuss that now, and that will probably take the remainder of my time. The President requested the right to retire Government employees who had served 30 years or more under the terms of the Civil Service Retirement Act, and that will give them an average annuity for life of between $1,100 and $1,200. Nearly all of them are old. A survey has shown that in the service there are 22,000 employees who have served 30 years or more. The evidence before my committee showed that it is almost impossible that anyone who has served 30 years or more would ever be dismissed from the service by reason of a surplus of employees. Let me illustrate that. Here is an actual grade shown on this chart of 32 employees in the Civil Service Commission. The efficiency record has been placed in column 1 of this chart. When you come to separation from the service on this chart, you start from the bottom of the list; that is, the ones on the bottom must go first. That [pointing] is the efficiency rating alone. That shows you how the separation should be accomplished.

Here are four 30-year men down here. So far as married couples are concerned, where both husband and wife are in the service, under the Economy Act one must go. The "e's" represent those from States that have an over-quota. That is the plan upon which separation from the service ought to be conducted. In other words, I am in favor of the apportionment law when it comes to appointment, but when it comes to separation from the service there ought to be but one test, and that is the capability and the efficiency of the employee, if you want economy and business methods in Government. Therefore, I favor this plan.

Here is the present system in the second column. You start from the bottom in the compulsory separations from the service. The 30-year are all at the top of the list and would be reached last. In fact, the hearings show that out of 100,000 employees only thirty-three 30-year men would be compulsorily separated from the service when separation became necessary.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That is, provided they use the same method of efficiency ratings that the regulations now call for, but not have the ratings changed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am talking about the present regulations.

Mr. TABER. The present regulations the President can change, however.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that. Now, this system grew up under an Executive order issued by President Coolidge. That order provided that in establishing ratings for separation from the service there should be longevity credits added to the efficiency ratings. For the first year of service an employee got one-tenth of a point for longevity added to the efficiency rating; for the second year two tenths; for the third year three tenths, and so on up to nine tenths, and then for the tenth year, one point; and for every year thereafter 1 point, until it reached a maximum of 25 points that could be added to the efficiency rating. That efficiency record is the actual efficiency record, and together with the donated longevity points, constitute the separation rating. That presents this sort of a case: Suppose you and I had two horses, and we wanted to test which one was the faster. I would say to my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], "I will give you a quarter of a mile start. We will run a mile, and if I do not win, your horse is better."

Now, is that not ridiculous? What did that Executive order do? It stamped out the stimulus of ambition to excel in the heart of every Government employee who had not served 30 years. It crushed all hope that they could by efficient service gain a steadfast footing at every step and mount to a high station of importance unto themselves and service to the Government.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. THOM. The gentleman assumes that everybody here has been in Congress, but that is not the fact. We would like to understand the present system. Let us have it explained.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Very well. This—column 1—is the actual efficiency rating based upon efficient service alone. In the present system—second column—there is carried forward the actual efficiency rating, plus 25 points donated for longevity, for every man who has served 30 years or more, which makes their separation rating, the rating on which separation from the service is based—119, 117, and so on.

Suppose an employee in the service who has served 9 years made a rating on actual efficiency in the discharge of his duty of 90, and suppose another employee who had made an actual efficiency rating in the discharge of his duty of only 70, or 20 points lower in his service record than the man who served 9 years. Who would go out of service under Mr. Coolidge's order and under the system now in force? The man whose efficiency rating was only 70 points would stay. Why? Because you add to his actual efficiency rating 25 points for longevity, giving him a separation rating of 95. The man who had a rating of 90 on his efficiency record would have  $4\frac{1}{2}$  points for longevity added for the 9 years' service and he would have a separation rating of 94.5. So the inefficient man would stay in the service and the efficient man would go out of the service.

The present separation system is a legally created monopoly in behalf of the man who has served 30 years or longer to perpetuate himself in service until he reaches 70 years of age, regardless of efficiency. I feel confident the Executive order granting these unjust credits for longevity will be abrogated so that real efficiency can prevail.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Is there any way we can make that new system apply to Congress?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, I am inclined to think the voters control that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I think so, too.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And I am inclined to think they did control it in the last election.

I want to talk to you a little more about Government employees. This is the most complicated question before our committee, and it caused me to make an extensive research into the employment problem and the governmental problem that has arisen thereby.

Do you know that in 1932 the Federal Government had 1,102,000 employees, including the military services? Do you know that in 1912 that same Federal Government had only 375,000 employees, or an increase in 20 years of 300 percent? If the 375,000 do not include military personnel, the percentage of increase is in excess of 200 percent.

Do you know that in 1932 the number of employees in the States and local units of Government was 2,306,849, and that in 1912 there were only 555,000 such employees, an increase in public employees in States and local units of 1,756,000, or over 400 percent? Why?

I read in the United States Daily an estimate, which may not be entirely accurate, but it is substantially so, that there were in 1931 4,000,000 public employees in the Federal Government, State governments, and local units, with a pay roll of $5,000,000,000 annually. Let us analyze that. On the assumption that we have 120,000,000 people, divide 4,000,000 into that and it makes 30. One employee for every 30 people, including men, women, and children. Divide that 30 by 5, which constitutes the average family in this country, and it makes 6. One public employee in the United States on the backs of every 6 families in the United States. One Government employee. The average salary would be $1,200. One thousand two hundred dollars on the back of every 6 families in the United States. Divide the $1,200 by 6 and we have $200, a charge for the salary of employees as a tax burden upon every family. Can we stand it?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman explain why there has been this enormous increase in the number of Federal employees within this short period of time?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, people blinded with prosperity, the philosophy that the resources of the country could afford it. Demands were made from every section of the country upon Congress for this service, that service, and the other service, until the Federal Government became the agency to render every character of service requested by all groups of the people.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of my committee yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the chairman made it clear that these were not all Federal Government employees, but included in the group were Federal, State, county, municipal, and employees of all forms of government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The number of employees in the Federal Government increased between 200 and 300 percent.

Mr. MILLARD. While those in other forms of government in this country increased 400 percent?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; they increased 400 percent.

Mr. HASTINGS. So it is not alone the Federal Government which has increased the number of its employees but every form of government has increased the number of employees.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I understood the gentleman to say that the number of Government employees had increased 300 percent in 20 years. It strikes me that the gentleman should comment on the fact that during that time we went through the World War, when the Government had three times as many employees as it has now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; but I am basing my statement upon the number of Government employees in 1932. We ought to have the courage to reduce the number of employees and get back upon a normal basis. That is what I am pleading for now, that we get back upon a normal basis.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman, but when the gentleman says we have increased the number of Government employees 300 percent in 20 years, does he not think he should comment on the fact we went through the World War when we had three times as many employees as we have now?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I concede the fact, but I have not time to comment on every factor that may be thought of.

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Has the gentleman the figures as to the number of employees at the close of the World War, not counting the personnel of the Army and Navy?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I have not those figures.

Mr. PARSONS. Has the gentleman the number we had in 1932?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have given those.

Mr. PARSONS. I should like to make a further statement, that the cost to the Federal Government in 1915 was only about $700,000,000 a year as compared to a present cost of $4,000,000,000. So I think if the gentleman will investigate the figures he will find we have as many Federal employees today as we had at the close of the World War, not counting the personnel of the Army and Navy.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In reply to that question I may state to the gentleman that the salary roll of the Federal Government is about $1,042,000,000. In 1916, just before the war, the total revenue collected, including the Postal Service, was only $1,094,000,000 from all sources, and the total of all expenditures was $1,034,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It matters not whether these employees are Federal, State, municipal, county, or other public agency. They are a tax burden upon the American people that constitute these governments, and we should start a campaign to reduce the number of employees in the Federal Government at least 25 percent. It can be done without material injury to any legitimate function of the Federal Government. Thus we will set an example for the States, counties, and municipalities of the Nation.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Where will these employees go if the Government dismisses them?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They will go out into private industry and try to get jobs just like 12,000,000 unemployed people are now trying to get employment.

Mr. DUNN. Would not the effect of it be that many of them would be going on their knees to ask some charitable organization for assistance?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That might be the case for a while, but recollect that we are now beholding the dawning of a new day and prosperity is going to come to this country before 2 years go by.

Mr. DUNN. I cannot see that.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman think it would be a better policy to advocate the dismissal of surplus Federal employees in better times rather than in times like these when there are 15,000,000 people out of work?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think not. The gentleman asks if I think it would not be better to wait until we have prosperous times before dismissing employees. In the first place, you are not inclined to dismiss them when you are prosperous, because it was during those times that we took them on. In the second place, we are in such a tragic financial condition that industry will collapse, and bankruptcy will face us, if it does not overtake us, unless we start out now and inspire industry and business with the hope, with the reasonable hope, that we are going to curtail these public expenses, that city, State, and Nation are going to reduce taxation and ease the burden on their shoulders.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Has it not been the policy of the Government in the past 2 or 3 years to advocate to private industry the employment of additional help in order to alleviate the situation? If that is so, does not the gentleman think the Government will set a bad example by dismissing all surplus Federal employees?

Mr. BUCHANAN. How in the world can industry prosper, how can it escape the bankruptcy now facing it, unless we decrease the burden upon it? How can this be done without reducing the number of employees and other expenses, a principle for which the President in the White House stands, and for which I hope and pray he will continue to stand until this Government gets upon a sound economic basis.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a question of which is the lesser evil, whether it is best to increase unemployment by discharging these men now or whether the Government should sustain this additional expense a little longer until most of the 15,000,000 people now unemployed get back to work?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think that the welfare of our country and its people is more important than jobs for a few thousand individuals, and that we should bend every effort and let no chance go by to bring about recovery in the entire Nation and not consider separately the welfare of a few individuals. This is one thing that is the matter with our country now. We refuse to sacrifice a little personal interest for the public good. [Applause.]

I have talked long enough, and I am going to conclude. I want to remind the historians of this House, however, of the French Revolution and what brought it on. The Crown had 15,000 retainers who were paid out of the public treasury. This character of employment increased and increased until the amount paid out of the public treasury amounted to one fourth of the income of the country. The rural or agricultural element revolted and brought on the French Revolution, and the streets of Paris were red with blood.

According to the statement of some national economic organizations and the United States Chamber of Commerce, the expenses of Federal, State, and local units of government in our country amount to $14,000,000,000. Multiply this by 4 and you have more than the present income of the United States. In other words, this total amounts to one fourth of the income of the American people, the same as it was in France at the time of the revolution.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. That statement, I believe, is incorrect, for the reason that a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, composed of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], as chairman, and two other gentlemen, made an investigation and discovered that all the expenses of all the different governments, National, State, and local, aggregated less than $11,000,000,000 a year instead of $14,000,000,000, as the gentleman indicated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is refreshing, and I thank my colleague for the information, but assuming it is $11,000,000,000, if you will multiply that by 4 you still have about the amount of the income of the United States.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will yield, the income of the country is estimated at only $38,000,000,000 last year, and therefore $11,000,000,000 would be more than 25 percent of our total income.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think that is somewhat high.

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that the latest estimate of the national income is from thirty-one to thirty-two billion dollars.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I beseech you gentlemen, on both the Democratic and Republican sides, to lose no opportunity to grant every request of the President for the necessary authority to enable him to administer the executive departments to bring about economy in Government. So far as our judgment approves, let us support every measure that we think will bring relief to our country and bring us out of this depression; and when we emerge from the depression then it will be time enough to consider extending additional services to the people at the expense of the Government. This is what is the matter with us today. The people are demanding too much service of the Government. They have lost their initiative and have reversed the old principle that the people should support the Government and the Government should not be used to support a few of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee that has had this bill under consideration, I wish to address myself to some of its legislative proposals, particularly the item to give the President the right to cancel contracts.

We of the minority believe this provision is unnecessary. I have examined most of the contracts, and under their terms we believe the Postmaster General has the right to modify any one of them and in any way he sees fit.

As far as abrogation or cancellation is concerned, if there is anything improper in any contract, the power is now reserved in him to cancel it. If there is anything fraudulent in any one of them, he can cancel it. However, as far as a contract made in good faith under the terms of an act of Congress is concerned—and I may say that the acts of Congress involved went through this House with the support of both parties on a nonpartisan basis—we believe that during this time of depression, uncertainty, and business nervousness it is unwise for the Congress to declare by law, and herald the fact throughout the country, that the President may cancel a contract made in good faith under the terms of an enactment of the Congress itself.

We believe that the future prosperity of this country must depend upon confidence, and there is nothing that shakes confidence so much or creates so much uncertainty, nervousness, and fear, as a provision of this kind that will be continually hovering over the heads of American citizens who have made a contract in good faith with their own Government.

Therefore, we are sorry to see this legislative proposal in this bill. I have discussed the matter with the Comptroller General, and I believe that if the Director of the Budget or the Postmaster General had consulted the Comptroller General, they would have also agreed that this provision is unnecessary.

I do not expect that any valid contract, made in good faith, is going to be canceled. I cannot believe that. I have faith in the President of the United States and am sure that he believes in our air mail development and our merchant marine development. I do not for one minute believe the President is going to cancel a valid contract made in good faith between the Government and one of its own citizens. I have confidence that the President will uphold our merchant marine policy and protect our merchant marine.

The able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has discussed the air mail contracts. I do not believe there is a man in the United States who is more familiar with the development of the Air Mail Service than the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I had intended touching somewhat on the air mail situation, but after listening to his very able speech, I shall narrow my address to the question of the development of our merchant marine under the Merchant Marine Acts of 1916, 1920, and 1928. I want to emphasize some of the general background and the need for these contracts we are now discussing.

It is very interesting to note that of the first 11 acts passed by the Congress of the United States, 5 of them related to shipping and the development of shipping. We were then a maritime nation. Let me say here and now that our foreign trade, imports and exports, is the greatest prize to be sought after by those nations who have ships upon the sea.

In 1796 we carried 92 percent of our own trade. Between 1796 and the Civil War we carried 77 percent of our import and export trade. We were in those days a maritime nation.

The Civil War came on and destroyed our shipping. After the Civil War the people were interested in the development of the West, and shipping languished. So that after the Civil War, up to the time of the World War, we carried on an average only 10 percent of our foreign trade. The foreign ships carried the other 90 percent of our exports and imports.

Before the World War we had several warning signs of what the lack of merchant ships might mean. For example, during the Boer War, England, who carried the most of our exports and imports, withdrew her ships because of her troubles in South Africa. The result was that freight rates went sky-high. We had no means of keeping them down, and our farmers and manufacturers suffered because we had no ships.

In the Spanish War we had to buy foreign colliers and freighters to supply our own Navy and Army. When President Roosevelt sent the battleship fleet around the world in 1908 we had to go to Great Britain and charter colliers and freighters to furnish the fleet with coal and supplies. Think of it! Those were warning signs of what it meant to be without shipping. But we did not heed them.

Then came the World War. We had only 19 ships in the foreign trade of the United States. Every country withdrew its shipping from our trade routes. The ships that were carrying our export and import trade for us were used for war purposes. We had no ships to replace them, and the consequence was that the produce of the farm and the factory piled up in the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newport News, Charleston, Savannah, the Gulf, and the Pacific, and was spoiled, rotted, or damaged on the docks, and our people suffered huge losses. Freight rates again rose to unprecedented heights. At the outbreak of the World War freight rates on American goods rose as follows:

Cotton per hundredweight, from 35 cents to $11.

Flour per hundredweight, from 10 cents to $1.

Wheat per bushel, from 8 cents to $1.36.

General average: Tenfold increase.

This resulted in a paralysis of our commerce, at disastrous loss, because we had no ships to handle it.

We had not learned the lessons of the period between the Civil War and the World War. The beginning of our merchant-marine policy is largely due to President Wilson. In his first message to Congress in 1914, realizing the situation, President Wilson said:

How are we to build up a great trade if we have not the certain and constant means of transportation upon which all profitable and useful commerce depends? And how are we to get the ships if we wait for trade to develop without them? The Government must open these gates for trade, and open them wide; open them before it is altogether profitable to open them, or altogether reasonable to ask private capital to open them.

And again, in his message in 1915 he said:

Moreover, we can develop no true or effective American policy without ships of our own—not ships of war but ships of peace, carrying goods and carrying much more: creating friendships and rendering indispensable services to all interests on this side of the water. They must move constantly back and forth between the Americas. They are the only shuttles that can weave the delicate fabric of sympathy, comprehension, confidence, and mutual dependence in which we wish to clothe our policy of America for Americans.

In 1916 the first Merchant Marine Act was passed. It was followed by the acts of 1920 and 1928. Of course, you all know the great cost of building ships during the war. I have no criticism to make of that act of the Democratic administration.

Three billion five hundred million dollars were spent for ships to supply our own army and our allies overseas. They were not ships that could compete after the war. They were built hurriedly for war purposes. If one ship made one round voyage, it was justified. If it could get across the seas and back with a cargo of food for our allies and ourselves, it was justified; but it cost us $3,500,000,000. If we had learned our lesson and had had a merchant marine, the war cost for additional ships would have been under $1,000,000,000.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Why is it that our American-operated ships cannot compete with the English and other foreign ships?

Mr. BACON. I intend to take that up, and I will answer briefly now and perhaps refer to it again. It is for three reasons. First of all, the American ships cost more to build, and, second, the American ships cost more to operate. Take, for example, an actual case, an American freighter of 8,000 tons and a British freighter of 8,000 tons, both boats built the same year. The American freighter cost $95 per dead-weight ton, while the British freighter cost $57 per dead-weight ton, or a capital difference in this case in favor of Great Britain of $317,680. The American ship in actual operation costs $81,000 more a year to operate than the similar British ship. Thirdly, in spite of that differential in favor of the foreign ship, almost every foreign country grants a subsidy to their shipping.

Mr. PARSONS. What is the reason for the difference in cost? Is that in the wages paid in the shipyard?

Mr. BACON. Absolutely; and let me say right there that we pay our workmen—and I am glad we do—a higher wage than do the British, not only in the shipyard but all the way back to the steel mill or wherever the material that goes into the ship comes from. I ought to say also that over 200 major industries are interested in the building of ships we build, in addition to the actual shipyard that puts the ship together. Approximately 90 cents out of every dollar spent in building ships goes to labor.

Mr. PARSONS. And I suppose the same causes may be given for the difference in operating cost.

Mr. BACON. The same is true. For example, under our wise laws, we require certain accommodations for the men on American boats, for the sailors and crew. This increases the cost of the vessel. On this same boat that I was talking about, it cost $271 a month more to feed the crew of the American ship than the crew of a similar British ship. As far as wages are concerned, it costs $1,758.32 a month more in wages for the American crew than for the British crew.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that most foreign ships are now propelled by motor, while the United States continues to use steam, and that that increases the cost?

Mr. BACON. That is partially true and was one of the reasons for the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, since which we have built some modern Diesel ships.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield with pleasure to my old Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. EDMONDS. Notwithstanding the fact that we spent three and a half billion dollars in actual money on these ships, the profits made on the ships in carrying the merchandise for Americans were also spent. The total expenditure of the Shipping Board, in order to get out of the trouble that we were in at the time of the war, was over $5,000,000,000.

Mr. BACON. That is correct.

Mr. EDMONDS. I might add that the food is regulated by law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman stated the importance of our merchant marine as a part of our national defense?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman brought that out. On that very point I might say that under the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 the boats that are built that carry this subvention—and it is purely a subsidy and was so intended by Congress on both sides of the aisle when the bill was passed—cost more by reason of the very exacting requirements of the Navy Department when they are built. They are all built for auxiliary war purposes in case of trouble.

At the Washington Arms Conference in 1922 we agreed to surrender our naval supremacy in capital ships and scrapped 850,000 tons of naval vessels building and completed. From then on the competition for naval supremacy was transferred, so far as foreign countries were concerned, to the building of merchant marine tonnage suitable for auxiliary service. The World War had proven the value of fast merchant ships that could be converted into cruisers. Immediately after the arms conference in 1922 England, France, Germany, and Italy started the building of superliners of 25,000 tons and over, with high speeds, for the sole purpose of having them available for war-time cruisers. Sixteen of these superliners have been built and two are now building. These ships are not economical for peacetime trade purposes and must all be supported by heavy government subsidies. We have built none of these superliners and therefore are far behind European countries. Thus we have in effect further sacrificed our naval supremacy, whereas concealed foreign navies have been built under the disguise of merchant marine.

One of the primary reasons for the passage of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 was to enable us to build useful merchant marine boats that could be used as naval auxiliaries in time of war. Though we have not built the fast superliners, we have built a number of boats that will be extremely useful to our Navy in time of trouble. So at least, as a result of this act, we will not again be put in the humiliating position of having to buy foreign freighters and colliers to supply our fleet as we did during the Spanish War, and we will not again have to charter British colliers and freighters to supply our Navy should it go on an extended cruise as was the case in 1908. Not only were these foreign colliers necessary but they carried foreign coal because in contracting for them it was also required that foreign coal be used, and we were placed in an extremely humiliating situation.

It must not be forgotten that overseas communication in time of war is as important as overland railways. We have had too many examples showing that dependence upon foreign merchantmen is ruinous to our trade and commerce in times of crisis. I have already referred to the predicament we were in during the Boer War, the Spanish War, and the World War. Let me cite another instance: Two years prior to the passage of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, when we did not have an adequate merchant marine, there occurred in Great Britain the famous coal strike of 1926. British boats, upon whom we had depended to carry our foreign trade, were withdrawn from service and the freight rate on wheat, as an example, went up 100 percent because we were not in a position to fill the gap caused by the withdrawal of these British ships.

Not only is a merchant marine necessary to our Navy in times of national emergency but also the Americans who are trained in the merchant marine are a valuable adjunct to our Navy in time of war. As a result of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 thousands of young Americans have gone down to the sea in ships. Many of the officers of our merchant marine service since 1928 have become Naval Reserve officers. Let me illustrate from our past history: In 1812, our merchantmen were supreme on the seas and we carried 90 percent of our import and export trade. Five hundred and seventeen American merchantmen were added as auxiliaries to our Navy and were known as privateers. They captured 1,300 prizes of a total value of over $39,000,000 and materially aided the success that we had on the seas during our war with Great Britain. It is essential that we train intelligent Americans in our merchant-marine service so that in time of trouble they may again be available for our national defense.

Mr. PARSONS. Just one more brief observation. I judge from the way the gentleman is reading from his notes that he has the figures with reference to the cost of American and British ships divided up into the various elements that go into the operations. I should be very glad if the gentleman would put that in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. I shall be very glad to put them into the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to insert them as a part of my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. We have had much discussion about recent air mail contracts and merchant-marine mail contracts. Does the gentleman not believe that it is partly the fault of Congress that we have not safeguarded the importance of those contracts by requiring the approval of the President or the Department of Justice before the contracts are put into operation?

Mr. BACON. I am not as familiar with the air mail contracts as I am with the merchant-marine contracts. I have examined them, and as far as the merchant-marine contracts are concerned, they are checked by the Shipping Board as well as by the Post Office Department. No contract can be made by the Postmaster General that has not the approval of the Shipping Board first.

Mr. GLOVER. Ought it not to have the approval of the Department of Justice, which is capable of passing on such contracts?

Mr. BACON. I think you will find that the legal staff of the Government is used in the making of these contracts. I repeat, that under the very terms of the contract they may be modified. I will make this prediction, that even should this provision remain in the bill, if the Postmaster General wishes to cancel or modify any of the contracts, he will proceed under the terms of the contract itself rather than to take advantage of this provision, because this provision will result in a heavy charge to the Government in speculative damages. I prophesy now that if any contract is to be modified the Government will proceed under the original contracts rather than under the terms of this provision in the bill, because by so doing he will save the Treasury a large sum of money.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I am favorable to Government aid to our merchant marine not only as a matter of taking care of our trade in peace times but as a matter of national defense.

Mr. BACON. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. PARSONS. But does the gentleman not believe it would be better to handle it through some other agency, rather than have the subvention charged up to the Post Office Department, creating a deficit from year to year, which puts that Department in a bad light before the country?

Mr. BACON. I think there is a great deal in what the gentleman says. Of course, it is frankly a subsidy, without which we could not carry a portion of our trade in American ships. If we do not carry a reasonable share of our foreign commerce in American vessels, we will be at the mercy of foreigners as far as freight rates are concerned.

I want to further answer the gentleman from Illinois. The mail subvention was used because the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 was an extension of the Mail Act of 1891. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] has fully explained this today in his able speech. I quite agree with the gentleman that it might be well to frankly pay the subsidy without reference to the mail at all, but mail pay does form a convenient vehicle for doing it, and I suppose that was in the mind of Congress when it passed the bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In further answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS], by the act of June 6, 1930, this Congress provided that all costs for air mail above the amount paid for direct transportation should not be charged against the post-office deficit but set aside in the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BACON. I think that answers the question.

Now, may I proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BACON. I do not believe I have to convince the American Congress of the need of controlling our own export and import trade. For example, in 1929, I found that 54 percent of our cotton was exported, 41 percent of our tobacco was exported, 33 percent of our lard, 18 percent of our wheat, 36 percent of our copper, 34 percent of our kerosene, 40 percent of our typewriters, and 25 percent of our sewing machines were exported in our foreign trade. One sixth of the entire products of American farms goes to overseas markets. Do we want to turn the carrying of that American freight over to foreigners? The reason why it is important not to was stated by Mr. Thomas Jefferson in this way:

The marketing of our productions will be at the mercy of any nation which has possessed itself exclusively of the means of carrying them, and our politics may be influenced by those who command our commerce.

Thomas Jefferson warned the country, and it is a warning that is as apt today as it was then, and one we should heed.

It is of the utmost importance that the Members realize the relation of our merchant marine to our export trade and the importance of our merchant marine to our shippers, whether the shipments come from the farm or the factory. Our ships, flying the American flag, are our best salesmen in foreign ports. American ships carrying American goods will inevitably find new markets because it must be clear to all that foreign ships will always favor the goods of their own country in competition with American goods. The establishment of new trade routes to new ports always develops fresh markets and increases our export trade. I think therefore that the following table will demonstrate the truth of what I have just stated:

Comparison of American merchant marine in 1914 with 1927, showing increased sales

Trade	Number of ships engaged in—		Volume of commerce with
	1914	1927	1914	1927

Percent of increase in trade between 1914 and 1927

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Let me go on for a minute, please.

As I said, our foreign trade is the great prize to be contended for by the shipping nations of the world.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I cannot yield for the moment.

Forty-two nations are now bidding for our import and export trade. Forty-two nations! Of course, Great Britain is the principal nation. Great Britain carries today 30 percent of our import and export trade. We carry 30 percent of our import and export trade—or, to be absolutely accurate, it is 30½ percent. So today Great Britain and ourselves carry an equal amount of our import and export trade. Yet, not being satisfied with 30 percent of our trade, Great Britain is continually agitating for a greater percentage.

Mr. Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, a cabinet position corresponding to our Secretary of Commerce, in February 1932 blamed the plight of the world shipping on the subsidized overbuilding of foreign countries, particularly the United States. Mr. Runciman said that the United States had three times as much tonnage as before the World War. He said:

I have underestimated the extent of the American mercantile marine, but I was thinking of those ships that were fit for trade. [Laughter swept the hall at this remark.] If you count them all in, the Americans have nine times as much as in 1913, and a very costly luxury it has proven. I know in some quarters it is regarded as very dangerous to say anything about America at the present time. I hope I shall exercise my native caution in not going too far, but I believe that much of the misfortune which has befallen the cargo fleets of the world comes from overbuilding, and that those who went the farthest have done the most harm.

I deny that, as far as the United States is concerned. Attacks are being made in England against our merchant marine by others that I could quote. What is the record? From the end of the World War until 1927 foreign countries built and placed in the American trade 800 new ships. We built and put into our own trade exactly none. Who has been doing the overbuilding that Mr. Runciman talks about? During that same period 18 ships of 25,000 tons and over, running up to 30-knot speed, have been built or are building by the marine nations. Sixteen of them for the American trade. Those ships are uneconomical to run. They do not pay. They were built entirely for the purposes of the Navy, and Great Britain wants more of our trade to support her own naval auxiliaries. We have built no boats of 25,000 tons or over. We have built but two ships of about 20,000 tons, the Washington and the Manhattan. Both these ships are comfortable cabin ships of 21-knot speed and are economical to run.

So I again deny the charge that Mr. Runciman hurls at this country that we have been the cause of the depression in world shipping. On the contrary, I think England is more to blame for it than anyone else.

The life of a ship is 20 years. The surplus of shipping in the world today is about 14,000,000 tons. There are 14,000,000 tons of ships over 20 years of age. Therefore, if the old and worthless ships were scrapped, there would be no surplus of shipping. We have not one of these boats over 20 years of age. Most of the boats over 20 years of age were sold by Great Britain to smaller countries for practically nothing. Why did not Great Britain scrap them? Since 1921 we have scrapped more ships than we have built. How, therefore, could we have caused the existing surplus shipping?

Everything that Mr. Runciman says applies to England, and not one of the things he says applies to us.

Since 1921 Great Britain has outbuilt us 13 to 1, and mostly with boats to go into our trade. Today Great Britain carries 60 percent of her own trade, 45 percent of the world trade, and 30 percent of our trade. What more does she want?

Now, I want to show you why the nations wish to carry our export and import trade. In the first place, it is the largest trade in the world and in 1929 almost equaled $5,000,000,000. In the second place, we pay out annually in freight rates $900,000,000.

Mr. PARSONS. To foreign ships?

Mr. BACON. No; not all of that is paid to foreign ships. We pay $600,000,000 to foreign ships and we pay $300,000,000 to American ships—or did in 1929, 1930, and 1931. If we had only carried 10 percent of our commerce in our boats as we did before 1914, our share of the freight rate would have been $90,000,000 and the foreigners' share would have been $810,000,000. The money we pay to American ships comes back into this country and is spent here and means employment for our own citizens, whereas the two thirds which we pay to foreigners is money that goes abroad and does us no good at all.

Had we then remained at the pre-war level of our carrying trade, 10 percent of our commerce, we would have lost in shipping revenue the difference between $3,000,000,000 and $900,000,000, or $2,100,000,000 during the years 1921–30.

Mr. PARSONS. It helps by just that much to hurt our own shipping.

Mr. BACON. Even during this last year of depression we paid $200,000,000 in freight rates to our own people, which money stayed at home, and about $500,000,000 to foreigners.

I think we must be very careful and watchful to protect the merchant-marine policy of the United States.

Let me say in closing that it is not very expensive to pay $20,000,000 in subsidy if for this subsidy we get $200,000,000 in freight rates for Americans, money which is spent in our country and means employment of Americans.

If we do not continue these subsidies it means that our large freight bill will go abroad and that not 1 penny of it will return, because today there is not a single American line which can possibly exist without these mail contracts.

We have built up 38 trade routes from 60 American ports to 550 European ports. Because of the development of American shipping from Gulf States to the ports of the world, the freight rate on cotton has been cut 50 percent. Is not this subsidy to our merchant marine worth while, therefore, to the cotton growers of this country? They would have had to pay 50 percent more if it were not for our ocean mail contracts. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein some tables and figures I got from official sources.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Labor. For the past 2 weeks we have been listening to representatives of the various gigantic organizations in America. I wish to call to the attention of the House a very important question which I asked every witness who appeared before the Committee on Labor.

I asked these representatives of the various industries if they had an age limit. Practically every one of them informed the committee that they had an age limit and that the age limit was 45 years.

If this bill is enacted into law it will throw many men out of employment and there is not a line in the bill which states that these people who are to be deprived of employment will be aided by the Government. In other words, they will be compelled to go to supposed charitable agencies and ask for assistance. Mr. Chairman, this is not economy.

It is stated that our Government is in debt about $15,000,000,000. May I say to the Members of this House that this sum of money is, to me, very insignificant when compared with the total wealth of the United States. The United States is capitalized on the surface at $400,000,000,000. Yet we say we have to economize because we are in debt $15,000,000,000!

May I also call to the attention of the members of this committee the fact that no man ever possessed sufficient intelligence to be able to estimate the value of our natural resources. I do not hesitate to say that our natural resources are worth not billions of dollars but trillions of dollars. Therefore there is no necessity for our Government to deprive men of work. It is not economy to say to our employees, especially the soldiers on whom this Nation has depended and must depend, that they must give up their jobs and go to some charitable organization for assistance. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am in disagreement with the committee as to the adequacy of the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission.

If this House would carefully study the activities of the Federal Trade Commission and the results that Commission has obtained, there is no doubt in my mind but that a great majority of the Members would view this situation as I do and demand that a sufficient appropriation be made to permit the Commission to carry on the important investigations.

There are 42 pages covering the hearings on the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission. The committee required the officials of the Commission to go into detail regarding their activities in the past and what they desired to do in the future; and if one will read the hearings, he will be convinced that this agency of the Congress has spent every dollar appropriated in a way that the public will benefit financially by its activities.

The amount carried in the bill will enable the Commission to complete some of its investigations that it has been working on for several years, but I want the House to know that the hearings show the appropriation will not enable the Commission to close the investigation of public utilities. Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars is allowed for this purpose, while the officials in charge say that it will cost $345,000 to complete the work which will include the report.

The Bureau of the Budget recommended $900,000 for the Commission, and the Committee includes this amount in the bill. The bill that was vetoed carried $1,081,500, over $500,000 having been added by the Senate after the House had reduced the appropriation to $500,000.

I know there are a number of Members who are not satisfied with the way the Commission has been carrying on, that is in reference to issuing complaints. I do not blame them, for I know of several cases where I feel the Commission has erred in this respect. I predict that in the cases I refer to the Commission will not be able to make a case, but it is costing my constituents thousands of dollars. In this phase of its work the Commission in recent years has been paying too much attention to the little fellow, who should be protected, rather than going after the big fellow. Regardless of that, however, I want the economic division to carry on its investigations.

Nine hundred thousand dollars is a reduction of $546,000 in comparison with the present appropriation. In the previous year the Commission suffered a reduction of $300,000. They are faced with a situation where they will not be able to properly carry out the laws Congress directs them to enforce. The reduction simply means a decrease not only in money but in efficiency.

In 1932 the Commission had 511 employees. In 1934 it will have 291, a reduction of 220 employees.

The most important investigation the Commission has ever made was the investigation of the power companies. The value of these utilities is estimated at $20,000,000,000. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been investigating the railroad companies for a period of 15 years. The railroad companies have a value of around $25,000,000,000. No less than $50,000,000 has been spent by the Interstate Commerce Commission in this work, while the Federal Trade Commission has completed its work, or is about to complete it, in 4 years at a cost of $1,225,000. Forty volumes have already been published. The investigation so far shows illegal and unfair practices, most of which have been discontinued and, as a result, millions saved to consumers.

Read what the Commission submits to the committee in regard to the investigation of utility corporations:

RESULTS TO DATE OF THE INVESTIGATION OF UTILITY CORPORATIONS

In this investigation the Commission has exposed the propaganda of the utility corporations through colleges, schools, governmental agencies, and the press. It has disclosed the use by many of the utility concerns of the most unreliable and inaccurate forms of accounting. It has shown an extensive padding of costs to operating companies through exorbitant fees charged for alleged services by holding companies, such fees amounting in some instances to 12 percent of the cost of all additions, improvements, and replacements, and giving to the holding companies profits of over 100 percent at a cost to the operating companies of millions of dollars. It has exposed capitalization of the earnings of subsidiary companies. It has shown the padding of earnings statements in order to promote the sale of securities. It has shown an inflation of capitalization by deliberate appreciation or write-up of assets of more than $1,500,000,000 in the concerns that to date have been put in the record, upon nearly all of which securities of some kind have been issued and sold to the investing public. These elements enter into the determination of the base upon which the rates which consumers pay are established. It has disclosed retention of control of a large number of operating companies by a small group through control of the common stock of holding companies and the issuance of nonvoting or preferred stock to the public.

As a direct result to date of the Commission's investigation many of the utility information bureaus in the States for the preparation and dissemination of propaganda have been abolished. The joint committee here in Washington, a national propaganda agency, has been whittled down to nearly nothing. The dissolution of the National Electric Light Association has been announced, as has also the intended abandonment of all propaganda activities. The Edison Electric Institute, newly organized, has announced a program of financial reform, which, according to the statement of those in authority, is a direct result of the Commission's inquiry, and if carried out will save the country hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

Many of the utility companies have already reversed numerous improper entries and practices and have largely reduced or abolished so-called "management and service fees." Many concerns have reduced substantially the amounts of appreciation or write-ups (watered stock). One concern upon which public hearings were recently held had, at the time the Commission analyzed its records in preparation for the public hearing, $102,000,000 of write-ups or appreciation. When the public hearing was held, this appreciation had been reduced to $30,000,000. In a large number of instances rates to consumers have been reduced following the Commission's investigation and exposure of the elements that had been incorporated into the base upon which the previous rates had been established. These changes have resulted in direct savings to the public of millions of dollars. One company has stated that $2,600,000 had been saved in 2 years by residential customers as a result of a reduction by it in rates after the Commission's investigation. The Commission's reports have been made the basis of rate investigations by numerous State commissions.

This investigation is one of the largest ever undertaken by any governmental agency. It involves investigation and study of the practices, organization, relationship, conduct, and management of gas and electric utility corporations throughout the United States. The organization, management, and relationship of many of these corporations are very complicated and complex. Some of the holding companies have as many as 250 to 600 subsidiaries and affiliates. In order to trace the growth, development, and relationship of these corporations, it is necessary to review their records for periods of from 10 to 20 years.

I want to see this investigation completed and the proper report filed. In speaking before the committee, Judge Bane said:

One reason for urging the continuance of this work is the fact that the Commission is receiving, I might say, almost daily, scores of letters from investors, from business houses, and from Members of Congress urging the Commission to investigate other utilities groups that they have not yet taken up, to determine whether there are any more Insulls or Forshays among them; and to prevent, particularly in the gas field, the development of the same kind of conditions that have been found to exist in the course of our investigation of utilities in the electric field.

The gas situation is a new thing; it is just beginning, and we have not yet been able to scratch that field. We find that very nearly the same groups that control the electric field are getting into control of the gas field. That means, first, the entire elimination of competition between gas and electricity in the generation of power; and, second, it means that if these men did this kind of what you might call "high financing"—if you want to use a generous term—if they did that in the electric field, that there is at least a fair possibility that they will engage in the same things in promoting gas companies.

One of our reasons for wanting to continue this, particularly in reference to gas, is to prevent the same kind of financing in the promotion of gas companies that we have found in connection with electricity.

Let me also call to the attention of the House the fact that in the course of this investigation the Commission found and disclosed tax evasions that are many times the total cost of the utility investigations to date. If nothing else was developed, I say the money has been well spent when it will bring to time those who would defraud the country and States of the taxes that should be imposed upon them.

The Commission can on its own motion start investigations. It needs money, however. Three such investigations have been suggested by the Commission. One of the resolutions adopted is as follows:

FINANCIAL PRACTICES OF CORPORATIONS

Resolved, That the Commission undertake as soon as present work and appropriations available permit an inquiry into (1) the facts regarding the form, adequacy, and accuracy of published financial reports made to stockholders and others by corporations engaged in interstate commerce, excluding banks, common carriers, and public utilities; (2) the effects of the financial practices of corporations prior to and since the stock-market collapse of 1929, including the volume and extent of corporation call loans; issuance of bonds and preferred stocks accompanied by stock-purchase warrants or rights to subscribe; profits and losses of corporations from operations in the stock and bond markets; stock and script dividend issues of corporations; overexpansion through reinvestment of earnings; officers' salaries and bonuses; participation of officers and directors in underwriting and syndicate operations in securities of their corporations; and purchases from and sales to their corporations of securities or other property; (3) the facts regarding concentration of the voting control of corporations through nonvoting and management stock and the effects thereof on the financial practices and methods of corporations; (4) all other financial practices or methods affecting the public, all with a view to determining whether the Commission shall recommend to the Congress any changes in or additions to existing laws.

This investigation in which millions of our citizens who lost billions in the stock crash are interested can be handled for less than $100,000. Did they get the money? No; it was not allowed by the committee nor the Director of the Budget. I note in the hearings where the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] said it would be a very important investigation and should be made. Then again the Commission desires to make a much-needed investigation into the effect of the antitrust laws on industries using natural resources primarily. It also desires to investigate into certain general competitive practices that the Commission is continually running into.

I do not blame the Appropriations Committee for staying within the Budget recommendations, but I do feel this is false economy. The value of this Commission cannot be underestimated. The benefits in dollars and cents that result from its work run into large figures. State commissions that cannot secure information from corporations operating within its boundaries have secured facts as a result of the utilities investigation that in many instances have resulted in reduction in the price of electric energy.

While the House does not seem to be awake to the value of this Commission, there are certain Members in the Senate who are, and who, I think and hope, will demand that adequate moneys be appropriated to carry on the important work the Commission is doing.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Jenkins].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is generally conceded that with the exception of the inauguration of Lincoln no Presidential inauguration was attended by so much tenseness as that of Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt. His inauguration was also attended by probably the largest crowd that ever attended any inauguration. All thinking people among us felt that the signs of the times were ominous. Immediately following the inaugural ceremony the President called his Cabinet together. The inauguration was on Saturday. On the next day (Sunday), over the radio, he made his announcement that from Monday morning all the banks in the United States would be closed and all building-and-loan companies and insurance companies would be restricted in paying out money. On the following Thursday, while every bank in America was closed, while the people of the Nation were quietly, patiently, yet fearfully waiting some ray of hope, this Congress convened in special session at the call of the President. Without waiting for the organization of the Congress, and hardly waiting for the election of a Speaker, and without waiting for the naming of standing committees, the President sent up his first message to Congress. His message increased the tenseness of the times and challenged all to stand by and assist the chosen leader in the great battle against this dreaded enemy of the human race everywhere—depression. He said:

The Members of the new Congress will realize, I am confident, the grave responsibility which lies upon me and upon them.

He asked that his banking bill be passed immediately. The purpose of this bill, according to its title, was—

To provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking.

The bill further provided that—

Congress hereby declare that a serious national emergency exists and that it is imperatively necessary speedily to put into effect remedies of uniform national application.

The House, having only been partially organized a few minutes, and not having even appointed a Committee on Rules, upon the motion of Mr. BYRNES, the Democratic leader just selected, and with the sanction of Mr. SNELL, the Republican leader just selected, agreed unanimously to an immediate consideration of this banking bill previously prepared by the direction and according to the wishes of President Roosevelt. Mr. SNELL in his speech approving of this speedy action said:

The house is burning down and the President of the United States says this is the way to put out the fire.

Under the spell of a tenseness that pervaded the whole country and moved the whole people to thoughtfulness, and under a deep sense of trying to do their duty, the Members of the House unanimously, so far as the RECORD shows, voted in favor of the bill and gave the new President his first vote of confidence. The country approved this action, for again was established the fact that when the emergency presents itself it is promptly met by Congress and the people. Immediately following this passage of this bill by the House it was messaged to the Senate, where on the same day it was passed and became a law as soon as the President could sign it. All this was on Thursday. On Friday the President sent Congress another message. He thanked Congress for its prompt action upon his request of the day previous, and implored Congress to proceed with the same dispatch to pass another bill the title of which is as follows: "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government." Immediately following the reading of the President's message the Democratic floor leader moved that the Speaker be empowered to appoint a committee of five to prepare and introduce a bill in line with the President's message. This committee was immediately appointed and immediately introduced a bill which had been prepared at the White House under the direction of the President. This bill, under the pressure of an emergency, was brought up for consideration the next day, Saturday. In order to bring it up in preference to other bills previously introduced, it was necessary for the House to take some affirmative action in that direction. To accomplish this the Democratic floor leader introduced the following resolution, which passed by a large vote:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of H.R. 2820, a bill to maintain the credit of the United States Government, and all points of order against said bill shall be considered as waived; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Economy, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage.

It will be noted that this resolution bound the Congress to the consideration of this bill and nothing else; that the bill could not be debated except for 2 hours, and could not be amended or substituted in any way. The bill came on for passage before any copies were available and before none but a few who may have helped the President draw it knew its provisions. Its title, "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", carried an appeal to the patriotism of all Congressmen. If it was a question of maintaining the financial integrity of the Nation, none would refuse to assist in its passage. With every bank in the United States closed, with the new President pleading for immediate action, with his statement that "the very stability of our Government itself is concerned", and with his promise to deal justly by all if given this great power, the Congress was moved to act and to pass this proposed legislation.

The President stated:

If the Congress chooses to vest me with this responsibility, it will be exercised in a spirit of justice to all, of sympathy to those who are in need, and of maintaining inviolate the basic welfare of the United States. I ask that this legislation go into effect at once.

Again he said:

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose financial policy. We must avoid this danger. * * * We must move with direct and resolute purpose now. * * * I am not speaking to you in general terms. I am pointing out a definite road.

The President's friends claim that this message is one that will rank with the great state papers of American Presidents. Be that as it may, it was considered by the Members of Congress as a "cry in the wilderness", and out of a sense of patriotic duty the cry was heeded. Those Members of the committee appointed to report this bill who addressed the House, and who probably had had a chance to read it, sponsored it and pleaded for its passage. They no doubt were honest in their purpose, but subsequent events have shown that they were not clear in the presentation of the facts or else did not know all the facts or the intention of the President and those whom he expected to carry out the authority that was to be intrusted to him by that legislation. Few, if any, Congressmen will now claim that the reduction in veterans' compensation as provided in this bill are in line with the discussions of the bill on the day of its passage. Mr. McDUFFIE, the gentleman from Alabama, the chairman of the committee reporting the bill, than whom a more sincere speaker cannot be found among our Membership, said on that occasion:

This bill, if enacted, will not be an act on your part to take a dime from a single worthy ex-service man. You are simply placing the responsibility on a great man who is willing to assume it. Your vote for this bill simply shows your willingness and your desire to cooperate with him, believing, as I know you believe, that he meant what he said in his message when he said, "If the Congress chooses to vest me with this responsibility, it will be exercised in a spirit of justice to all"—

And so forth.

Mr. TABER, the ranking Republican member on this committee, who is always sincere in what he says, said:

I am going to first explain this bill a little bit so everybody who has not gone into it himself or had opportunity to do so will know something about what it is. In the first place, it makes no definite change in the provisions for veterans except that it wipes out some of the presumptions.

By way of justice to Mr. TABER, however, he proceeded further to state his position clearly and courageously, but one could not conclude from his eloquent address that even he thought that such a great portion of the reduction necessary to balance the Budget would come from the veterans. Mr. MCGUIN, another member of the committee, and a Member who always speaks his convictions clearly, evidently did not believe that the President would reduce the allowances to the veterans as this appropriation bill shows he intends to do, for in a colloquy with Mr. BROWNING, of Tennessee, the following appears in the RECORD:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling for this sweeping provision, that I consider a slaughter of the disabled service men of the United States, to pass without protest. The argument has been made that the President is going to be fair, and I am the last one in the world who would impugn his motives. There are several different classes adversely affected here that ought to have consideration. In the first place, this is going to wipe out every presumptive service connection, and this means that the presumptive tubercular boys are going to have to go. This means that those that are on $50 a month, who have had the patience to make the fight to reach an arrested condition and have hanging over them the sword of Damocles of reactivation, will have to go back to work and break themselves down again.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. I have just 4 minutes. This means these boys who undertook to make the fight alone, without any aid from the Government, until their witnesses were gone and their proof absolutely destroyed, and then came forward and asked the Government for $12 a month, are going to be cut off because they are under a disability allowance, and we need not fool ourselves about it. All the presumptive cases and all the disability-allowance cases are going to be discontinued at once. I think this is the meaning of the proposed law.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not want to indulge in a misstatement.

Mr. BROWNING. I think that is the meaning of the law.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is not in the bill.

Mr. BROWNING. The power is there and the gentleman knows it is there. [Applause.]

Mr. MCGUIN. Does the gentleman think his President will do that?

Mr. BROWNING. I think the President will exercise all the power he has asked for in this bill. [Applause.] There would not be any need of his asking for it if he did not expect to exercise it.

Mr. WOODRUM, of Virginia, who at that time at least could be considered as the spokesman for the President and also a member of the committee appointed to report this bill, said on the day the bill was voted upon:

Let me ask this: Who has a right to say that Franklin D. Roosevelt will not deal kindly, gently, and sympathetically with the disabled soldier? In God's name, if a man ever lived, if a man ever occupied a place of authority who is in a position to have his big heart go out in sympathy to the men who are disabled and who are down and out, who have suffered and who are in trial and tribulation, it is the man who now sits in the White House. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to trust the President to deal kindly, gently, and justly with the veterans that I represent.

When the bill was under debate it was brought out that the maximum reduction from veterans' pensions and allowances and veterans' administration generally would be $275,000,000. Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, in his remarks says:

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] brings up the old cry about balancing the Budget. Are you going to balance the Budget at the expense of the disabled veterans? I might as well tell you now that the limit of reductions for World War veterans alone under this scheme is $275,000,000. Some gentleman near me says $279,000,000.

I have recounted the various steps in the passage of this bill at the risk of being tedious, the better to show the temper of the House when the bill was voted upon. From proceedings one must conclude that it was the belief of the membership of the House that the veterans would be given justice. I think Mr. GRIFFIN, of New York, expresses the general opinion of the House membership when he said:

There is no danger to be anticipated to the men who really made sacrifices in defense of our flag. I believe their interests are really safer in the hands of the President than they have been in the Veterans' Bureau. Let us take the pathos out of this thing. This measure does not threaten the veteran who is disabled. It does not menace the widows or the children of veterans who have been disabled. It gives discretion to the President to modify, qualify, reduce, amend, and change methods of administration in connection with the pension laws that have worked so unsatisfactorily in the past. In other words, it will take the graft and unfair discrimination out of veteran allowances, rationalize the distribution of the benefits, and dispense even-handed justice to all who are entitled to consideration.

There is no question but that there was room for great economies in the administration of the various activities of the Government dealing with the veterans. The cost of maintaining the Veterans' Bureau was mounting to gigantic proportions, and the time for calling a halt had arrived. Many veterans were drawing disability pensions and at the same time holding positions with the Veterans' Bureau at large salaries, while their less fortunate and more disabled comrades were forced to beg on the streets from lack of employment and from failure to prove their claims for disability. The hospitals were overrun by veterans who were not as deserving as many who failed to get hospitalization for lack of funds or friends. Fraud and misrepresentation in some cases had also helped in erecting the mountain of expense that had reached to such proportions as to threaten the financial safety of the Nation. Preparation for war and the afterexpense of war was greater last year than the total income of the Government. A reduction was inevitable. Just how to make it was a problem.

A maximum of economies desired might not be easily effected from the sources that I have just enumerated, but to this might have been added a percentage reduction and to which, if not too large and if applied scientifically, the veterans would not object seriously. I think this would have been as much as was intended by the Membership of the House when the bill was voted upon. When a pension is once granted it carries an implication that the Government recognizes the justice of the veteran's claim, and the veteran feels a relationship has been established between him and the Government that will continue while he lives. To withhold this pension is bound to strain this relationship. If the withdrawal reduces the veteran to a state of one who must seek charity, it is an act of far-reaching consequences. To compel them to contribute more than their share is as much of an injustice as it is for them to demand and receive more than their share. The veterans have been standing for greater economies in the administration of veterans' affairs by the Government. They have opposed fraud and misrepresentation in procuring pensions. They have favored adequate relief for the service-connected disabled in preference to all others. The Veterans' Bureau had recently effected many reductions in the pensions of World War soldiers, but this reduction was probably not scientific. No doubt a scientific plan of reduction could have been evolved that would have saved the Government millions of dollars and still would not have wrought havoc with the homelife of many veterans. This could have been done if the maximum amount to be saved would have been kept at $275,000,000. But when it was raised to the sum of $460,000,000 the difference of $185,000,000 would come mostly from the pensions of the veterans. The original estimate of $275,000,000 could have been largely saved from the overhead expenses and from the other sources heretofore mentioned by me. What could not thus have been reached might have been reached by a percentage reduction of all pensions now being paid. This would work many hardships, but it would not put complete discouragement into the lives of so many veterans. Many veterans have built the future course of their lives and the lives and welfare of their families upon the certainty of their pensions. They were taught to rely upon the certainty of their pension whether they had any contractual right to do so or not.

Those Congressman who voted to give the President the right to make reductions in Government expenditures had a right to expect that the President would do it justly and scientifically. The President, on the other hand, should feel that his authority to handle the situation is only commensurate with what was the evident intention of Congress when it voted him this authority. A too drastic reduction is bound to be accompanied by much distress. Economies effected at the expense of great distress to one group in order to furnish charity to another group requires the wisdom of a Solomon to know whether any advantage is gained by the change. I consider a pension as a testimonial of a thankful nation to its defenders and not as charity. But if a withdrawal of a pension will reduce one of the Nation's defenders to the status of one depending upon charity, then the Nation has shifted its obligation over onto the State and local communities and made a charity seeker out of one who theretofore had been proudly self-sustaining in part at least. This cannot be condoned by the establishment of reforestation camps. Under our system of government it was intended that the States and local communities should care for all matters of charity as they do all civic and State matters. The people are sovereign and the Government is the creature of the people. The people reserved to themselves the right and duty of looking after the home and local welfare of themselves and their neighbors. The care of the Nation's veterans is a national matter and is a legitimate function of the National Government. Before the National Government is expected to do charity for the people for whom the State and local governments are primarily responsible, it should see to it that it has not neglected those for whom it has responsibilities to keep from the charity lists. It was the duty of the President in these days of deficits and reduced Government revenues to cut the national expense to the limit. He received the unstinted support of the membership of the House of Representatives in his program. The limit reaches only to where justice ends and injustice begins. Justice ends when he takes from one to whom the Government has heretofore acknowledged an obligation and gives it to another who has a right to look to the State and local authorities. He has the duty to cut from any group for the best interest of the country, but when he makes a cut in the interest of economy and to balance the Budget, it requires an explanation, when before receiving the benefits of that cut he proceeds to add to the expenses of the Government by many new ventures and plans much more than he has saved on the first process. It is not real economy to save one dollar and spend two while the one is being saved.

Under the regulations issued by the President, or those upon whom he is depending for the carrying out of this pension reduction, it is very evident that the amount to be saved was the real object and that the manner of saving it was not given as much consideration. The fairness and the justice and the sympathy that the President was expected to exercise is not seen in this plan. The balancing of the Budget was the paramount object. There is a line of diminishing returns in dealing with human feelings and human misery, just as there is when dealing with income taxes or property rents. No doubt the President prefers to do justice than to do injustice. When the human misery occasioned outweighs the advantages derived from the money saved, then the saving should cease. It is quite as important that the Government be for the people as that it be of the people.

It was also unfortunate, if not unfair, to link a pension-reduction bill with a salary-reduction bill. There was no more reason for linking the reduction of pensions with a salary reduction than there would have been for linking the pension-reduction bill with the reduction in shipbuilding or with the reduction of any other governmental expense, unless it would have been of some advantage in bringing Members to the support of the bill, because many of them had indicated that they would be willing to vote a reduction in their own salary in an effort to balance the Budget. This was a factor in the passage of the bill, although I do not think it was as important a factor as the framers of the bill anticipated when they attached the salary-reduction bill to the pension-reduction bill. I am still hopeful that the President may yet issue such instructions for reductions as will be in line with the intention of Congress when the bill was passed. The Spanish-American War veterans are put to a great disadvantage in proving service-connected disability. The President recognizes this fact, for in regulation no. 12, issued by him after persuasion of those who had recognized the injustice that might be done to this class of veterans, he says:

And whereas it is realized that veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer rebellion, and the Philippine insurrection who have heretofore received a pension, having in mind the period of time which has elapsed since the cessation of hostilities, will be at a decided disadvantage in endeavoring to secure evidence showing that their injury or disease was incurred in line of duty in the active military or naval service.

And whereas it is realized that those widows, children, or dependent parents of deceased veterans of the World War who have heretofore received compensation under the presumptive provisions of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, will likewise be at a disadvantage in endeavoring to secure evidence to show that the injury or disease from which the veteran died was incurred in line of duty in the active military or naval service:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by said law, the following regulation is hereby promulgated: Veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, and every widow, child, or children, dependent father or mother of a deceased World War veteran who were in receipt of pension or compensation at the date of enactment of Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, shall be entitled to continue to receive a pension under this act at the rate being paid them on the date of enactment of Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, it being presumed that the injury or disease causing the disability or death was incurred in the line of duty in the active military or naval service during either the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer rebellion and Philippine insurrection, or the World War; but such presumption shall be rebuttable, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be reviewed all such claims; and where on the basis of medical judgment or affirmative evidence it is determined that the injury or disease causing disability or death was not incurred in the line of duty in the active military or naval service to discontinue payment of pension as of the last day of the calendar month during which such determination is made.

If the Pension Department interprets this regulation 12 in the light of the intentions of the House and the Senate when the bill was under discussion, many veterans who now fear the consequences of a drastic cut in their pensions will rejoice when they find they will still be permitted to remain on the rolls for a good portion of their former pension. But if this regulation no. 12 proves to be a false hope, and if the Department places such an interpretation as will make it null and void, then the veterans will be justified in feeling that they have been trifled with. Personally, I want to see the Budget balanced and the credit of the Nation maintained and the greatest economy possible practiced. But I maintain that when the President requested this transfer of authority from the legislative to the executive branch of the Government he assumed it with the same responsibility to the people that the Congress owed, and with the responsibility of not carrying his Executive authority beyond the certain reasonable intention of the grantors of the authority. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I discussed briefly the subject of air mail contracts. Since that time I have had opportunity to look up the law and I want to make a few observations on the same subject today.

When the Watres Act, H.R. 9500, was reported to the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MOREHEAD] and I objected to its passage. We pointed out in our minority report that—

Under the provisions of section 4 of this bill the Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts by negotiations without advertising or considering bids. This provision making the Postmaster General a law unto himself eliminates competition and is nothing more than an outright subsidy in the interest of this industry. While we favor and have in the past voted for liberal appropriations and liberal legislation in the interest of the development of aeronautics, we believe this legislation is a step in the wrong direction and some limitations and safeguards should be written into the bill before it becomes a law.

As a result of the stand we took at that time and as a result of the general opposition that developed in the House against the bill, it was returned to the committee. If you will take the time to look up the record, you will find that the then Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the late lamented Mr. Wood, of Indiana, condemned in no uncertain terms the demands of this bureaucrat seeking as he was dictatorial powers over this industry. The bill was recommitted to the committee and the suggestions contained in our minority report were written into the new bill and H.R. 11704 was then reported to the House and later enacted into law.

The difference between the two bills is that the bill which finally passed provided that the Postmaster General should not award contracts by negotiations without advertising for bids; that is, that specific section granting such power was omitted from the bill which we passed, and therefore there was at least a direction by the Congress that the Postmaster General advertise for bids.

This language was also contained in the bill that was passed:

After July 1, 1931, the Postmaster General shall not enter into contracts for the transportation of air mail between points which have not heretofore had such service unless the contract air mail appropriation proposed to be obligated therewith is sufficient to care for such contracts and all other obligations against such appropriation without incurring a deficiency.

The Postmaster General only advertised for two contracts in all the services that were given out during his administration, and on March 2, with a deficiency inevitable, the Postmaster General extended many services without advertising for bids.

Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment that a number of the air mail contracts are illegal.

If I were writing this bill, in view of the embarrassment in which the present administration finds itself, I would direct the President to draw the line as of March 4 and analyze every contract entered into by the former Postmaster General. Those that would not stand the test would be eliminated, and aviation would have a real new deal.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MEAD. I will be pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am sure my chairman will do me the courtesy of stating that I joined with him in the opposition to the original bill suggested by Postmaster General Brown, and suggested some of the amendments, and when we did finally pass the bill, it provided that contracts carrying amounts above the appropriation were illegal, and that this applied to those that went over the appropriation carried by the appropriation bill.

Mr. MEAD. That is true. I thank my colleague.

The Postmaster General had no business issuing contracts for any new services unless he was positive that there were appropriations sufficient to cover them. The Department is forced to cut the mail pay on every air mail line for the month of June to keep within the appropriations.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has always taken the proper stand in these matters. The gentleman and I have worked shoulder to shoulder for honest air mail legislation for the past 4 years. We wrote the law, but Mr. Brown wrote the interpretations, and you could not recognize one by the other.

If you will take the time to read our report on the Air Mail Service and the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], you will find in them a fair solution of this problem.

I am tired of hearing men talk about the sacred rights of contracts. Why should not they take a reduction at this time? The employees in the Federal service have been called upon to make a sacrifice. Some have been reduced as much as 25 percent. Why not cut the subsidies? Is there anything sacred about them?

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not true that section 6, the legislative provision in the bill about which our friends complain so bitterly, gives the President of the United States the right and power to review those two classes of contracts and where he finds there has been fraud or whenever the full performance of the contract is not required in the public interest he has the right to cancel or modify the contract?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. WOODRUM. And the person who has a legitimate honest contract has no reason to fear or complain of the examination of his contract?

Mr. MEAD. In my judgment, anybody that has a legal contract that is for a service in the public interest will be for this bill and will have nothing to fear.

Now, I want to discuss the legislative proposals. On page 50, section 2, provides that the head of every bureau, agency, or independent establishment shall, unless in his discretion the interests of the Government will not permit—

Purchase or contract for articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States—

And so forth.

That provision may be necessary because of the independent offices provided for in this bill. However, such a provision is already contained in title III of the Post Office Appropriation Act and repeated again in the Revenue Act of 1932.

Page 52, section 4, provides that—

No part of the appropriations may be used to pay any increase in the salary of any officer or employee whose position has been reallocated to a higher grade since June 30, 1932, by the Personnel Classification Board or Civil Service Commission.

When the bill goes to the Senate this section should be amended and made more specific. As it is now written it may affect promotions recently made by Cabinet officers. The assignment of an employee to a more responsible position should not come within the scope of this section.

Section 5 provides that provisions of the last Economy Act requiring impoundment of appropriations shall not operate to require such impoundment under appropriations contained in this act. This is necessary because the Budget estimates were based on the saving which was made in the last appropriation, and the impounding feature does not apply to the Post Office Department, because that would result in a double reduction.

On page 52, section 6 authorizes the President, on or before April 30, 1935, to modify or cancel contracts for the transportation of persons and/or things whenever the full performance of the contract is not required in the public interest and modification or cancelation will result in a substantial saving.

Right at this time, under the present Post Office administration and for the first time in my experience, a real effort is being made to reduce the appropriations necessary for the various contract services. In the days to come, when we are restoring the salaries of our employees, this will have a very helpful effect; heretofore it had been the policy to reduce the employees, to make them stand all the burden, which was unfair. Contracts, subsidies, and leases are now being scaled down by the Department and millions are being saved.

The retirement feature of this bill has been criticized and commended. It is an improvement over existing law and an improvement over the plan which was suggested by the Director of the Budget. Under the bill as written by the committee we retire the employees at an annuity of $1,200 a year. Under existing law they might be retired at about $700 a year. The committee treated this question with a degree of liberality that deserves our commendation. They changed the so-called "compulsory retirement" to a selective retirement, and from the utterances of the Postmaster General and others in authority, I believe it will be administered in a humanitarian way and that no serious injury will result to the employees in the service. Forcing 20,000 employees out of the service would ruin the retirement law. It would provide no additional work opportunities, because of the injunction against the filling of vacancies. A 30-year optional retirement with a reduction in the age at which retirement is compulsory would be fair to the majority of our employees.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, there is carried in this bill now pending before the House an appropriation of $800,000 for the expenses of the Tariff Commission. Something that happened yesterday in London, and has been whispered about on Capitol Hill for the past 48 hours, may make that appropriation unnecessary. Let me read a short extract from the news dispatches from London this morning:

Great Britain's acceptance of the American "tariff truce"—

That is a new title which has been adopted by the so-called "Young Turks" surrounding the campus up on the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue—

Great Britain's acceptance of the American "tariff truce" proposal was transmitted to Washington today, with word that all nations to attend the World Economic Conference will be asked by the League of Nations to join the armistice to make it effective at once.

Prime Minister MacDonald, addressing the House of Commons, disclosed not only the British Government's decision to cooperate with Washington on a tariff truce, but also revealed certain other negotiations, etc.

Then the dispatch goes on to something that has no relevancy here.

A little further down the dispatch refers to Norman H. Davis, the American ambassador at large. He is the American ambassador at large most of the time, and the rest of the time he is talking for J. Pierpont Morgan. Everybody knows that:

Norman H. Davis, the American Ambassador at large, tonight telegraphed Washington the text of the "tariff truce" proposal upon which he agreed with Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade of the British Cabinet.

Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon, who spoke in Commons on the necessity for such an agreement, will forward draft of the proposal to the organizing committee of the World Economic Conference which will meet Thursday to accept it formally.

For the past 48 hours there have been whisperings on Capitol Hill about a very, very important message that has just been prepared by Dr. Moley for the President. That message is on Capitol Hill now, and it applies to the very substance of this bill. The idea of the message, which was disclosed on yesterday, is that the President is going to request the Congress to give him authority to appoint a commissioner, a lord high executioner of the American protective tariff, to attend this economic conference in London.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. In a moment. Think of that, my friends from Ohio and Illinois and New York and other great manufacturing States. This commissioner is to be clothed with authority to make agreements with foreign nations for increasing or lowering American tariff rates without respect to the Constitution and without respect to the advice and consent of the Senate. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. My friend doubtless has overlooked the fact that we are having general debate on an appropriation bill, and that the debate is to be confined to the bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. But I am talking about the bill. The bill carries $800,000 for a Tariff Commission, and I am talking about the tariff.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is not debating this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will leave that to the Chair.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is making a political speech, and if he continues I am going to make a point of order against it, although I do not want to do that.

Mr. BRITTEN. But if the gentleman will listen to my language attentively he will find I am confining myself exclusively to the tariff and any changes which may be made in our tariff structure.

Mr. WOODRUM. The only question on the tariff in this bill is the appropriation for the Tariff Commission.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course.

Mr. WOODRUM. Let us not have any politics in this. We are trying to legislate for the good of the country. Let us wait until we get this behind us.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman fully in everything he says, and I am talking solely about the tariff, which, with its flexible clause, comes directly under the Tariff Commission from time to time. There is an appropriation carried here for $800,000. If the gentleman is afraid of my disclosing something which Dr. Moley has written, I have no objection to his shutting me off.

Mr. WOODRUM. How much time has the gentleman?

Mr. BRITTEN. I only have 10 minutes, but I will be glad to conclude in 5, if the gentleman wants me to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Go ahead.

Mr. BRITTEN. The subject is tender to those gentlemen on the other side who are always jumping through the hoop at the snap of the whip at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. I appreciate that. [Laughter and applause.] With 150 new Members here who have not yet had a chance to make a speech or offer an amendment to anything that has transpired in this House for 2 months, because it is all done under gag rule or under direction from the White House, there should be some opportunity to talk about the effect the coming economic conference may have upon our industries. No initiative can prevail on that side of the House because you are so curtailed, so hamstrung on every piece of important legislation which comes up. Surely the gentleman will not object to my talking about the Tariff Commission when $800,000 is carried in this bill for its continuance.

If the White House proposal is to be seriously made, and I am sure it is, I think the country ought to know that the present administration is intent upon clothing someone, call him what you please, with authority to go to London in attendance at this economic conference, and there, in collaboration with the representatives of other nations, revise the tariff rates for the United States of America. That is what this means. This has been whispered around Capitol Hill for 48 hours, and last night the "tariff truce" or trade armistice was flashed from London. It substantiates the Moley proposal which the President is going to sponsor. A distinguished southern Senator has the proposed Presidential message in his pocket right now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman want the House to understand that we must get our information as to what is transpiring down at the White House from London?

Mr. BRITTEN. Indirectly, yes; in this instance, because this special ambassador is a very superior and supreme person.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. I always yield to my friend.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We get our information here via London via the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. I thought the gentleman was going to say "via London via Great BRITTEN." [Applause and laughter.] That is the only reason I yielded to the gentleman, and then he fell down on me. [Laughter.] Still they say the Irish are witty.

Now, I think the country ought to be apprised in advance of the presentation of this Presidential request, because the industries of Ohio, of Alabama, New York, and Indiana, and all the great manufacturing States, will suffer very severely, if not be completely annihilated, if we clothe any individual, I do not care who he may be, with authority to go to London and negotiate with governments treaties that affect our tariffs, up or down. If that is true, why do we need $800,000 in this bill to sustain the Tariff Commission? That is the duty of the Tariff Commission and of Congress.

Where a rate is to be changed within a 50-percent radius, the flexible clause of the tariff act provides that the Tariff Commission shall do that very thing. But if Norman Davis or some other representative of Pierpont Morgan or the President is going over there to make international agreements, or perhaps one of the college professors now playing around the campus at the White House [laughter], I do not think the Senate will ever agree to them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Perhaps he will send Ezekiel.

Mr. BRITTEN. No. He is too valuable. We will keep him here. But no matter who he sends over there, I do not think the Senate will agree.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] yield me 2 minutes? [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. I yield the gentleman from Illinois 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am satisfied, my friends, that this message has been written and that it is on Capitol Hill; that it is being held in the other body for an opportune moment for its presentation. Yesterday or last night was the first information we had that the British had finally agreed to the tariff truce; but they have only agreed because they think they can do to us in a commercial direction what they have done to us in direction of the merchant marine—wipe us off the face of the earth. Ramsay MacDonald, Herriot, and the rest of them, who came here looking for bargains a few weeks ago, went away from here empty-handed, with all due credit to our President. They had nothing on him. They did not baffle him or frighten him or deceive him, because he knew diplomacy as it is practiced in the old world, and that is the reason they went away empty-handed. That is the reason there was some doubt about London accepting this so-called "truce." But the Senate will never approve that kind of legislation. However, the House will approve it.

I maintain that when that message comes from the President, and your great leader, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, JOE BYRNS, gets on the floor as he did yesterday and put across that resolution about which there was considerable argument—when he takes the floor and says the administration wants this, and he points his fingers at you fellows, you will jump through, every one of you. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has again expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks; and I will promise not to bring in any politics.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman does not delete any of the colloquy I had with him.

Mr. BRITTEN. I never could; that was too good.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will insert in his remarks the source of his authority for the message being on the way.

Mr. BRITTEN. Everything that comes here has a certain sauce attached to it. Most of it has come down from the White House. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. BOYLAN. No. The gentleman claimed to possess authentic information.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, the gentleman said "source." I thought he said "sauce." [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I shall address my remarks for a few minutes this afternoon in reference again to the matters contained in this appropriation bill affecting national defense.

The bill contains an item in reference to the maximum rate of flying pay. It has been set in the bill as $1,440 per annum.

The Military Affairs Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, recently conducted rather exhaustive hearings at which the Chief of the Air Corps, General Foulois, was present. He gave his opinion on this very subject and presented this rather voluminous brief [indicating]. I want to call attention to what this may do to the Air Corps. General Foulois said:

The phraseology is such that the maximum amount which can be received will be $1,301.67, so long as the administrative fur-loughs are continued, rather than the maximum of $1,440. The provision will affect 621 Air Corps officers, and in addition 101 Army officers out of the Air Corps.

The reduction of pay, he says, is applicable to 165 Army Air Corps first lieutenants, 329 Army Air Corps captains, and 127 in the higher grades of the Army Air Corps.

What is the reason for this flight pay? Exhibit I of this document shows the great number of fatal accidents in the Air Corps. Last year there were over 80. This exhibit gives the various kinds of accidents.

May I call attention to the fact that this plan has been talked of: Instead of increasing the aviation pay 50 percent, as is now the law, to have the Government itself carry the insurance for this extra hazard.

It was the opinion of our committee at least that it was more satisfactory from the standpoint of the Air Corps officer and of the Government itself to pay this 50 percent in addition to the base pay.

General Foulois practically told our committee that if this legislative provision were enacted into law it would practically destroy the efficiency of the Army Air Corps, and I have not heard his statement successfully disputed.

For a moment I wish to touch on a comparison of the average pay received by the Army officer, the Army pilot, as compared with the pay received by commercial pilots.

The average pay of Air Corps officers with flying status is $334.18 per month.

The lowest rate paid by commercial companies, that paid by the United States Airways, is $362.50 per month, and the pay of commercial pilots runs all the way up to $682 per month.

Mr. HASTINGS. How much is that per hour?

Mr. GOSS. I have not got the various rates per hour paid by commercial companies figured out.

Mr. HASTINGS. I mean in the Army.

Mr. GOSS. We have to have a total of at least 100 hours.

Mr. KNUTSON. One hundred hours a month?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; and that varies, I may say to the gentleman, depending on the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HASTINGS. How does an officer qualify for Army flying pay?

Mr. GOSS. I do not know how this particular matter was calculated. I may say it was sent up from the War Department as an official document to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. I may state for the information of the gentleman that the usual procedure has been that they must have 4 hours in the air on 10 hops, but most of these men fly 40, 50, or 100 hours a month.

Mr. GOSS. This provision will affect every officer who flies, from the brigadier general right down to the second lieutenant.

Let me call attention to the fact that the officers of the Air Corps are risking their lives daily far beyond the risk taken by any commercial aviator. Men sitting on the floor of the House have seen these Army Air Corps maneuvers where pursuit planes go up and have their dog fights, the bombers' attack, and various kinds of planes maneuver. The commercial flier simply takes off the ground and goes in a straight direction. Commercial fliers are not required to fly in tight, close formation.

Let me further call attention to the fact that nearly 100 officers lost their lives last year in this risky business, yet today we are giving the right to abolish all flight pay. The maximum allowed is $1,440, or, as I said, a little over $1,300 actually with the furlough.

I think the members of the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee will agree that General Foulois has done a splendid job during the last 2 years in cutting down surplus flying and limiting flight pay to those entitled to it.

Now, we know that the Navy feels that a maximum of $1,440 is sufficient to keep their Air Corps in existence.

One of the reasons is that they have so many enlisted men and junior and senior lieutenants in the Navy flying whose base pay would not come up to $1,440, and, therefore, there are very few officers in the Navy affected by this flight pay, but I am willing to take the word of the Chief of the Air Corps of the Army when he says that this will destroy their efficiency.

Mr. DARDEN. If the gentleman will permit, the statements of the naval officers who appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee do not bear out the gentleman's statement in that respect.

Mr. GOSS. The hearings show they did not oppose the $1,440, which is what I have just said. I do not understand why that was unless it was because they have so many enlisted men and junior officers flying that they are not affected.

Mr. McFARLANE. I may say for the gentleman's information that in the hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee the naval fliers very seriously objected to that provision in the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, yes; the fliers do object to it, but Admiral Upham is the man who does not seem to care about it. I was present at the hearings before the gentleman's committee and listened to what Admiral Upham said. Of course, the men in the service are not satisfied.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Do I understand that Admiral Upham is an Air Service officer and a flier?

Mr. GOSS. He is not an Air Service officer. He flies and draws Air Service pay, but, of course, he is not in the same situation as General Foulois, and I may say that there is a difference between the Air Service of the Army and the Air Service of the Navy, and a great difference.

Mr. TABER. Admiral Upham does not get flight pay. He refused it.

Mr. GOSS. Well, he is entitled to it.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Let me go along just a minute because I have a document in front of me which has not been published, which I want to refer to. I was hopeful that the document that I am going to speak of now might have been made available to the House while this bill was under discussion. It is a rather lengthy statement by the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, General MacArthur. We called him before the Military Affairs Committee in order to find out what effect certain provisions of this bill might have toward destroying or further reducing national defense, and, in my judgment it has already passed the irreducible minimum, and we are at a very dangerous point even without the adoption of these provisions.

I asked General MacArthur what would be the effect on the Army of reducing our officers by 500, 1,000, 2,000, and so on, up to 4,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. GOSS. I asked:

In your opinion, what would happen if the Congress saw fit to reduce the number by 1,000 officers or more?

And General MacArthur's reply was this:

I believe that we now have fewer officers than are needed, and to make myself clear, you will have to give me 5 or 10 minutes to go into the proper background to answer that question.

Then he goes on and mentions the 18,000 officers provided under the National Defense Act, and then the action of the Appropriations Committee cutting this number down to 14,000 and now to 12,000. He feels that the very last item of reduction in respect to the Army should be the Army officers. He very clearly pictures this in his statement; and, by the way, I may call attention to the fact that the Military Affairs Committee, as soon as it has the opportunity, is going to print this whole document, so it will be available to the Members and so they may know what is happening to national defense from these various attacks that we get in these bills that are coming before us.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How does this bill affect such services, under the National Defense Act, as the citizens' military training camps, the reserve officers' training camps, the federalized National Guard, and so forth?

Mr. GOSS. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. General MacArthur told our committee that we now have 12,000 officers in the Regular Army, and if the President's program on reforestation is completed, this will require a maximum of 4,000 officers. This means 1,200 camps throughout the country with 3 officers per camp. This would mean that 4,000 Regular Army officers would be taken off of duty in this country and at foreign posts, and I want to point out to the gentleman that last year it was brought out very clearly, when the Army appropriation bill was before us, that even a reduction of 2,000 officers would paralyze the C.M.T.C. and the R.O.T.C., and also a lot of the work that the National Guard is doing, especially where there are Regular Army officers on duty.

Eventually, with these provisions being carried out, the committee has not definite information about the effect. The Bureau of the Budget could not tell us, but, eventually, the United States Army in continental America will only be twice the size of the police force of New York City, where they have 21,000 policemen.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit me again, I cannot tell from a reading of the bill or the report whether the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the citizens' military training camp will be cut out or not.

Mr. GOSS. I will tell the gentleman how they can get at that. In the provision here there is the right accorded the President to furlough officers of the Army at half pay.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; I read that in the bill.

Mr. GOSS. And I have already quoted the Chief of Staff as saying that the 12,000 officers we have, outside of the officers required to do the work in connection with these reforestation camps, have been reduced to an irreducible minimum to carry on the activities of the Army as we have been doing in the past, which, of course, included a program for the citizens' military training camps and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the Organized Reserves. He is very clear on that point, as the gentleman will see from his statement.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. According to information received from some quarters, the President is prepared to cut down or cut out some of these activities.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. GOSS. For one, I am absolutely opposed to cutting down any more in the national defense. [Applause.] I want to go on record as saying that I would favor an increase instead of cutting down. This pinch-penny saving in time of depression may turn out to be a form of extravagance in case of war.

I want to quote what President Roosevelt said and what another very able gentleman said who was Secretary of War under General Jackson.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert those quotations in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

General MACARTHUR. Before I get through, let me say that night before last I read in local periodicals extracts from statements by two men who have bulked large in the history of this country. These statements are so pertinent to this discussion that I am going to ask you to bear with me while I read them. Each was written in the aftermath of a war, one in the aftermath of the Spanish-American War, the other in the aftermath of the War of 1812. The first one was by the President of the United States, President Roosevelt, and he said this:

"Again and again in the past our little Regular Army has rendered service literally vital to the country, and it may at any time have to do so in the future. Its standard of efficiency and instruction is higher now than ever in the past. But it is too small. There are not enough officers, and it is impossible to secure enough enlisted men. We should maintain in peace a fairly complete skeleton of a large army. In particular, it is essential that we shall possess a number of extra officers trained in peace to perform efficiently the duties urgently required upon the breaking out of war."

"For years prior to the Spanish War the Secretaries of War were praised chiefly if they practiced economy; which economy was directly responsible for most of the mismanagement that occurred in the war itself—and parenthetically be it observed that the very people who clamored for the misdirected economy in the first place were foremost to denounce the mismanagement, loss, and suffering which were primarily due to this same misdirected economy and to the lack of preparation it involved."

The other was a report by the Secretary of War, Mr. Eaton. This was nearly 100 years before Mr. Roosevelt made his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Eaton was General Jackson's Secretary of War.

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the husband of the famous Peggy.

General MACARTHUR. Yes. He said:

"It is not the policy of the country to retain, in time of peace, a large military establishment, particularly numerous soldiery;

but it is of the utmost importance to educate and retain a body of officers sufficient for all the labors preparatory to war, capable of forming soldiers, of supplying them, and putting them in motion in the event of war * * *."

With reference to the War of 1812, he asserted:

"The voice of the whole country was for war, and we plunged into it without a proper organization of the Army, or any of those preparations which it was our duty to make, and which an ordinary degree of foresight must have demonstrated to be necessary and, having committed the blunder, we neglected the only means by which the disastrous results of our measures could have been averted."

"In place of calling forth the intelligent, well-instructed officers of the old corps, and employing them where their talents and acquisitions would have been useful to the country, the higher ranks of the Army were filled, for the most part, by men selected rather for their political influence than their military fitness."

"The consequence was that we had no discipline or subordination in our corps, no accountability in the administrative departments, no well-digested plans for operations, no combination or concert in the movement of the different armies; but the strength and resources of the country were wasted in puny and unsuccessful efforts or objects, and presented the singular spectacle of a powerful nation invaded and defeated at all points."

The National Defense Act corrected those conditions. It has been in effect now about 13 years. With its passage the United States, for the first time, could look forward with assurance of success in the eventuality of war.

Mr. GOSS. When we came out of the last war we had 18,000 officers to carry out the national defense. We now have 12,000. We had 280,000 enlisted men and we now have 125,000, including 7,000 Philippine Scouts.

Can it be that men in this House who were here during the war have forgotten about the extravagance that took place in this country as the result of our unpreparedness? If there are any that were here under the Spanish War, can they forget that same thing? History repeats itself.

If it was not for the equipment and matériel of our allies in the World War, we could not have gone over there. Every man in the House knows the effect of undermining the national defense of our country. National defense is one of the most precious things that we have, and every man ought to be for its preservation. Without a national defense, and a strong arm back of it, we would have no country.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Shall we prepare to fight successfully a war here in our own country to repel attacks, or shall we prepare to fight a war in foreign countries across the seas?

Mr. GOSS. For my part, I would prepare adequately, in accordance with the best military tactics, to fight it here.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right, but fighting it here is an entirely different thing from fighting it abroad.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; but I will say that we are not prepared to fight it here.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think it is unfair that enlisted men of the Regular Service should be expected to train men in the reforestation camps?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And be paid for that at the rate of $17 a month, while the reforestation men are paid $30 a month. The Regular Army enlisted man is allowed 34 cents a day for food, whereas the reforestation man is allowed 54 cents a day for food.

Mr. GOSS. Absolutely.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Another thing manifestly unfair is that our disabled war veterans have been cut under the severe regulations to almost nothing, or have had their entire compensation taken away without even having a hearing, whereas these reforestation boys, if they are injured or sick, will be given a dollar a day, plus their maintenance, which is 54 cents a day, while ill, and if they become permanently ill or disabled and have to leave the service, they still come under the provisions of the Employees' Compensation Act and will be given a monthly pension which in some cases will be greater than the pension payment which is given for the same disability to regular soldiers of our peace-time service.

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In some instances they will receive a higher rate of compensation than our disabled World War and Spanish War veterans who have battle scars and who have been reduced under the drastic cuts of the President's administrative regulations.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; and I am sure the gentleman remembers the address delivered here on the floor the other day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], when he brought that fact out in a letter from a sergeant.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Exactly. They have robbed Peter to pay Paul. They are going to pay Paul in some instances, but they have certainly robbed Peter. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the rates of compensation that civil employees are paid under the United States Employees' Compensation Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, and I shall not, to ask our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts to put in her remarks whether she favors lowering the pay of the boys in the reforestation camps or raising the pay of the soldiers.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the soldiers' pay should be raised.

Mr. BLANTON. And would she do that permanently?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the pay ought to go back to the old rate.

Mr. GOSS. Before we talk about the pay of soldiers, let us get the soldiers.

Mr. BLANTON. When did the lady reach that conclusion?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have thought that for a long time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend her remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Under permission to extend, I submit the following:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION,
Washington, May 4, 1933.

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: In accordance with your verbal request, I take pleasure in forwarding herewith a brief statement showing the benefits provided by the compensation law applicable to civil employees of the United States. I do not know whether this statement is in sufficient detail to serve your purpose, but if you desire further information concerning this law I will deem it a privilege to furnish it to you.

The compensation rates shown in the attached statement are those provided by law. However, the bill H.R. 5389, which includes the appropriation for the payment of compensation benefits during the fiscal year 1934, provides for a temporary reduction in compensation rates. It is proposed in this bill to reduce these benefits to the same extent as the reduction in the pay of officers and employees of the United States recently promulgated by the President. The effect of this temporary reduction will be to reduce the maximum compensation from $116.66 to $99.16 per month and the minimum rate from $58.33 to $49.58 per month.

Very truly yours,

WM. McCAULEY, Secretary.

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MONEY BENEFITS PAYABLE TO BENEFICIARIES UNDER THE EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION ACT OF SEPTEMBER 7, 1916

Disability compensation

For total disability: 66½ percent of the monthly pay received at the time of injury, subject to a maximum compensation rate of $116.66 per month and a minimum rate of $58.33 per month, unless the monthly pay is less than $58.33, in which case the injured person is entitled to compensation at the same rate as the regular monthly pay received when working.

For partial disability: 66½ percent of the loss in wage-earning capacity due to the disability, but in no case to exceed maximum compensation of $116.66 per month. There is no minimum rate for partial disability.

Duration of payment: Disability compensation is payable during the continuance of disability causing a loss in wage-earning capacity.

Computation of monthly pay: Monthly pay includes, in addition to the cash wage at time of injury, the value of subsistence and quarters received from the employer as a part of the employee's remuneration, but overtime pay is not taken into account.

Death compensation

Allowance for dependents: To widow or wholly dependent widower, 35 percent of monthly pay of deceased employee until death or remarriage. And, in addition, for each child under 18, 10 percent of monthly pay until death, marriage, or reaching the age of 18.

To one child under 18, if there is no widow or dependent widower, 25 percent of monthly pay.

To each additional child under 18, 10 percent: To be divided among the children equally; to be paid until death, marriage, or reaching age of 18 to child's guardian.

If there is no widow or dependent widower or child under 18: To 1 parent, if wholly dependent, 25 percent; to 2 parents, if wholly dependent, each 20 percent; to parent or parents, if partly dependent, proportionate amounts, to be determined by the commission. To be paid for 8 years, or until death, marriage, or ending of dependency.

If there is a widow or dependent widower or child under 18, dependent parents will be paid so much of above percentage as added to payments to widow or widower and children will not exceed 66½ percent of monthly pay.

If there is no widow, widower, child, or dependent parent: Brothers, if wholly dependent on deceased, to 1 person, 20 percent of monthly pay; sisters, if wholly dependent on deceased, to 1 person, 20 percent of monthly pay; grandparents, if wholly dependent on deceased, to more than one person, 30 percent, share and share alike; grandchildren, if partly dependent on deceased, to 1 or more persons, 10 percent, share and share alike. To be paid for 8 years or until death, marriage, or reaching age of 18 or, as regards grandparents, until they cease to be dependent.

Computation of monthly pay: Monthly pay includes in addition to the cash wage at time of injury the value of subsistence and quarters received from the employer as a part of the employee's remuneration, but overtime pay is not taken into account. The deceased employee's monthly pay for computing this compensation shall be considered to be not more than $175 nor less than $87.50, but the total monthly compensation to all beneficiaries cannot exceed 66½ percent of the monthly pay unless the monthly pay is less than $87.50. In no case can the total monthly compensation exceed the monthly pay.

Medical service furnished in case of injuries: For all injuries sustained on or after September 7, 1916, while in the performance of duty, including diseases proximately caused by the conditions of employment, whether resulting in disability or not, reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies, unless refused, and transportation to place of securing them if necessary. Services and supplies must be furnished by United States medical officers and hospitals if available; if such services are not available, then by private physicians designated by the Compensation Commission.

Burial expenses payable in case of death: Burial expenses not exceeding $200, and transportation of body of employee whose home is in the United States, dying away from home station, or outside of the United States, if relatives desire it.

Compare this amount with the $75 which is allowed to the World War veteran—

PAYMENT OF PENSION FOR DISABILITY OR DEATH INCURRED DURING PEACE-TIME SERVICE

I. (a) For disability resulting from personal injury or disease contracted in line of duty or for aggravation of a preexisting injury or disease contracted or suffered in line of duty when such disability was incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service other than in a period of war service as provided in part I, the United States will pay to any person thus disabled and who was honorably discharged from such period of service in which such injury or disease was incurred, or preexisting injury or disease was aggravated, a pension as hereinafter provided, but no pension shall be paid if the disability is the result of the person's own misconduct.

(b) For the purposes of paragraph I (a) of part II hereof every person employed in the active military or naval service for 6 months or more shall be taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service, except as to defects, infirmities, or disorders noted at time of the examination, acceptance, and enrollment, or where evidence or medical judgment is such as to warrant a finding that the disease or injury existed prior to acceptance and enrollment.

II. For the purposes of part II, paragraph I (a), hereof, if the disability results from injury or disease—

(a) If and while the disability is rated 10 percent, the monthly pension shall be $6.

(b) If and while the disability is rated 25 percent, the monthly pension shall be $12.

(c) If and while the disability is rated 50 percent, the monthly pension shall be $18.

(d) If and while the disability is rated 75 percent, the monthly pension shall be $24.

(e) If and while the disability is rated as total, the monthly pension shall be $30.

(f) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, has suffered the anatomical loss or the loss of the use of only 1 foot, or 1 hand, or 1 eye, the rate of pension provided in part II, paragraph II, (a) to (d), shall be increased by $10 per month.

(g) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, has suffered the anatomical loss of both hands, or of both feet, or of 1 hand and 1 foot, or is so helpless as to be in need of regular aid and attendance, the monthly pension shall be $50.

(h) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, has suffered the anatomical loss of both hands and 1 foot, or of both feet and 1 hand, the monthly pension shall be $75.

(i) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, is blind in both eyes, having only light perception, the monthly pension shall be $87.

(j) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, is blind in both eyes, having only light perception, and has suffered the anatomical loss of 1 hand or of 1 foot, the monthly pension shall be $100.

(k) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, has suffered the anatomical loss of both feet and both hands, or is blind in both eyes, having only light perception, and has also suffered the anatomical loss of both hands or of both feet or of 1 hand and 1 foot, the monthly pension shall be $125.

III. The surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father of any deceased person who died as a result of injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service as provided for in part II, paragraph I hereof shall be entitled to receive pension at the monthly rates specified next below:

Widow but no child.....	$22
Widow and one child.....	30

Mr. Chairman, I do not see how I can vote for this independent offices appropriation bill, with its many injustices. I realize, of course, the Democrats, who are in control of the House, doubtless have the necessary votes to pass any piece of legislation which the President wishes to have become law. With that in mind, I sent to the President a letter on May 6, which is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., May 5, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Anticipating the enactment into law of the independent offices appropriation bill, now pending, I am taking the liberty of offering a suggestion with reference to the administration of section 8, subsection A, of the bill.

This section, as you know, indicates possible selective retirement of certain employees in the classified Federal Civil Service who shall have performed 30 allowable years in such service without regard for the age of such employees.

I feel that to retire such employees without due consideration of their efficiency and without regard for their domestic responsibilities and financial obligations would undoubtedly cause distress and embarrassment which may be avoided, in great measure, by your humane administration of the powers which have been entrusted to you.

Many organized groups have long advocated the enactment of a 30-year optional retirement amendment to the Civil Service Retirement Act. It is confidently felt that a considerable number of Federal employees would avail themselves of the opportunity of retirement, thereby retaining in the Federal service other employees whose retirement would be a hardship to their dependents and themselves, and which retirement would also embarrass them with regard to certain contracts assumed on the understanding, as provided in the law, that they would be retained until the stipulated automatic age.

I am pleased to suggest that before any general program may be put into effect all Federal employees who are desirous of being retired shall be accorded the privilege of so doing, having had 30 years or more of allowable service.

Your favorable consideration of my suggestion will be, I feel fully assured, a most satisfactory solution of the operation of the retirement problem, as it will accomplish the desired economies with a minimum of hardship and possible injustice.

Yours very sincerely,

EDITH NOURSE ROGERS.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, because of the wonderful explanation of the bill to the House by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], I shall not go into the details of the bill. I will not tire you, because I think you are as familiar with them as I am. I just want to take a few minutes of your time to speak of the highlights that occurred to me while sitting here listening to the debate. The always-entertaining gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTON] told us about some mysterious whisperings that emanated from the White House; and as he told us about those whisperings, my thoughts went back to another day when he proclaimed to the country, after an interview with the President at the White House, that the President would sign a beer bill. Later this was denied by the White House. I do not know where he got that information, but possibly it was from some mysterious Billy Patterson. And I am wondering whether his information about the mysterious whisperings about tariff revision is the same kind of information that he gave us about President Hoover signing a beer bill. Of course, you gentlemen know that we cannot appropriate on mere whisperings, we must have concrete propositions before us. We have to appropriate for the needs of the departments.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. I observe that we have been legislating here a good deal on imagination. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. That might be due to the fact that the gentleman, from what I have seen of him, possesses a very vivid and fertile imagination, and gives it full play; but as I say, we have to appropriate on concrete matters, we cannot appropriate on whisperings. Of course we are always glad to be informed, instructed, or amused, no matter from what source the amusement or the instruction may come. I was greatly surprised when the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], got up and commenced to be fearful about the validity of contracts. I have a warm personal affection and regard for him. I know he is one of the most staid, able, and conservative Members of the House, and really, I think, in making his speech, from what I know of him, he had his fingers crossed.

Mr. TABER. Oh, if the gentleman will yield, I never was more earnest in my life. I hate to see the administration getting into such a mess as it will with section 6 of this bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Of course, we know that. We know the gentleman is generous, but at the same time we also know that he is trying to prepare a record for another day. [Laughter.] Then the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] got up and said that the American merchant marine is going to the bowwows, going to be destroyed, that everything that has been done in 20 years is going to be wiped out at once.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh, not now. After I finish my statement I will yield. Page 52 of the bill provides:

Whenever it shall appear to the President, in respect of any contract entered into by the United States prior to the date of enactment of this act for the transportation of persons and/or things, that the full performance of such contract is not required in the public interest, and that modification or cancellation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, on or before April 30, 1935, to modify or cancel such contract.

What is there in that that gives the power to the President to destroy the merchant marine?

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman, in all fairness, knows that in my opening remarks I said that I had complete faith in the President of the United States that he would not destroy the merchant-marine policy of the United States.

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh, yes; but after that platitude the gentleman spoke about the British vessels, how they build so many more vessels than we do and how it costs them less to do it, together with a mass of statistics that would go to show that by the very passage of this bill the President of the United States would have the power to destroy our merchant marine. How ridiculous a statement; how utterly inane, when the same President, who has been Assistant Secretary of the Navy, a man who has been tied up with ships all his life, a man who is a student of American history and American traditions, a man who comes from an illustrious line of American forbears, by the slightest word or innuendo, to attribute to that distinguished man, the mere thought of doing anything to harm the American merchant marine.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. I only wanted the gentleman to be fair with what I said. I have no expectation that the merchant-marine policy in any way is going to be destroyed by the President of the United States. I have every confidence in him.

Mr. BOYLAN. Then why the necessity of the gentleman's speech?

Mr. BACON. I simply wanted to give a history of the development of the merchant-marine policy and give full credit to President Wilson for starting it, and I think the gentleman will agree with me there is nothing partisan in anything I said.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, what was the purpose of the gentleman's speech? The only deduction that could be made from it was that some hidden power in section 6 of this bill would give the President authority to cripple our merchant marine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOYLAN. Of course, if the gentleman was just speaking for the RECORD, I have no objection to that. Of course, I know the party on that side of the House is woefully in want of something to put into the RECORD; and if it will comfort them in any little degree or give them any satisfaction, I have no objection to that, but I do not want it coupled up with the splendid bill that our committee has brought in here. We, as your stewards, have brought in this bill, in order to carry out the policy of our Government. We believe the bill does this.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman, of course, knows that in the merchant marine two terms are used, "stewards" and "mess attendants." Which one was the gentleman? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, I should like to be a steward.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman were to attend the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. BRITTEN], he would have to be the latter, would he not?

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman from Chicago has the reputation of being an excellent host. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to go into executive session.

Mr. BOYLAN. But, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing for the RECORD to give my distinguished friends on the left any little publicity they want, but do not say, "Oh, he is a fine fellow, a wonderful man, the best President we ever had, but he is going to destroy the merchant marine. He is going to put it back where it was 20 years ago." For, you know, our able and energetic President yields to no man in this country in devotion to and preservation of its best interests.

Now, we are faced with a serious problem. Our country needs our very best services. It needs every bit of power and intellect and judgment and discretion that we have to take us out of the condition in which we find ourselves. We are not going to get out of the depths; we are not going to reach the heights, unless we unite as one man behind the distinguished, able, and energetic President who has accomplished more for the good of the country in 8 weeks than has been done in the last 12 years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, more than a dozen series of orders and regulations affecting changes in veteran payments have been issued by President Roosevelt under the authority given him by Congress, and it is no mean task to correlate and interpret them. Several months may elapse before we can clearly appraise the full scope of the cuts which they involve. It is already clear, however, that while many of the changes fall strictly within the declared purpose of the "act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", as the popularly known Economy Act was entitled, not a few of them go way beyond and are quite at variance with the pledges made by the President when he asked for this authority. The President promised "to provide substantial justice" to the veterans, and "to care for those who suffer in their country's defense, and for their widows and orphans." Those who stood by the President when he asked help in saving the Government from what he described as "the road to bankruptcy" never imagined that the authority he asked for would be used to cut down ruthlessly the benefits given to those who were actually disabled in the war. I do not believe that the President himself had any such thought in mind. He has a generous heart and understands from personal experience what physical handicaps mean. Since his orders do not take effect until July 1, I cannot but hope that he will see fit to revise some of the orders already promulgated.

So far as the World War veterans are concerned, not only are all permanently war-disabled cut 20 percent but the majority of them are subject to a still further cut through the grouping of all disabilities into five percentage groups, within which each veteran is to receive, in place of compensation proportioned to his disability, the minimum compensation of his group. This means for men actually wounded on the field of battle or whose health was irretrievably destroyed in the war a slash of from 30 to 50 percent in what the Government has hitherto provided for them. Some of the men who suffered amputation will find their compensation slashed by a third or a half, and I venture to say that the American people, when informed, will disapprove of such economies at the expense of the victims of the war. Such treatment is cruel and indefensible and does not accord with the President's assurances when he asked Congress to grant him power to make necessary economies.

As for the President's orders concerning the Spanish War veterans, without attempting to defend the general policy of paying pensions for non-service-incurred disabilities, the fact remains that for the greater part of a generation the Spanish War veterans have been receiving disability pensions regardless of whether or not the disability was attributable to war service. Today, thirty-odd years after the war ended, it is harsh of a sudden to require these veterans to furnish evidence that they were disabled as a result of their service in that war. Most of the doctors who treated them are dead. Many of their comrades who were familiar with the facts are also no longer living. Many of their records have been destroyed. I hope the President will also see his way clear to relieve the anxiety of these rapidly aging veterans, as the number concerned is relatively small and the total savings involved not very important.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, on Friday, March 11, President Roosevelt sent to Congress a message on the state of the Union, wherein he called attention to the deplorable condition of the country's finances and the imperative need for bringing the Government's expenditures within its income. To do this he asked for extraordinary powers which he deemed necessary to meet the greatest emergency to confront the Republic since the dark days of the Civil War. It is only fair to say that many Members of Congress, Democrats and Republicans, were at heart against the granting of what amounted to almost dictatorial power, but realizing the gravity of the situation they reluctantly voted to vest President Roosevelt with the power he sought, for they realized that the welfare of the Republic was at stake.

Few, if any, are satisfied with the regulations issued under which all pensions and compensations are being reviewed.

I personally know of a considerable number of very worthy service-connected cases that have been stricken from the compensation rolls, which is clearly in violation of the assurances given us by the majority leaders, as well as by the President, that the act would be leniently administered; that no injustices would be done. I want to take this occasion to assure those affected that if these injustices are not corrected I shall introduce the necessary legislation to fully protect the interests of these worthy cases.

The Republic cannot afford to deal niggardly with those who have served it in times of stress, and at the same time I realize the necessity for greatly reducing the operating expenses of the Government. Since 1914 the increase in cost of government, national and local, has grown to such proportions that we are now paying about 30 percent of our income in taxes.

I have consistently fought unnecessary and excessive public expenditures, and in so doing have but lived up to pledges of economy that I have repeatedly made to those whom I represent. I shall continue that policy. I hold that all expenditures should be well within our income. To spend more would ultimately result in national bankruptcy. Since the depression set in the Federal Government has gone into the red approximately $5,000,000,000, which is about $5 for every minute since the dawn of the Christian era. With all our wealth and resources we cannot stand a thing like that indefinitely. It had to be stopped and stopped at the earliest possible date. Mr. Roosevelt took the only course that was open to him in asking Congress to pass the Economy Act. At that time we naturally assumed that it was the beginning of an economy program that would quickly result in balancing the Budget.

With agriculture and industry at low ebb, with 12,000,000 out of work, with local governments at the end of their resources, we cannot afford to spend a single dollar unwisely. The so-called "Farm Relief Act", which recently became law, changes the whole economic picture in that it definitely embarks us on a program of currency inflation. Under the provisions of that measure the President will be empowered to issue up to three billions in greenbacks. If that is to be done, then, I say, let us use that money in paying the veterans their bonus. I can think of no better way in which to get this money more quickly into active circulation. There have been a number of relief measures introduced in this and preceding Congresses, but none of them offer the opportunity to relieve suffering and want as does the paying of the bonus under present conditions. The money would be spent for food and clothing and to pay pressing debts. That in turn would stimulate business and raise the price levels as no other plan that has been proposed. It would also relieve the pressure on local relief organizations, which have about reached their limit. Heretofore I have opposed the payment of the bonus because I did not know where the money was coming from, but now that means have been provided for payment, it will give me genuine pleasure to vote to pay the veterans at this time, for I can think of nothing that will give a more equitable distribution of the new money and thereby afford relief that will be Nation-wide. I am sure that the House will agree with me that it would be much better to use the new currency for this purpose than to spend it on unnecessary projects, such as public buildings, Muscle Shoals, and Boulder Dam, which are purely local in their nature and the maintenance of which will constitute a perpetual charge upon the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated today, there will be a serious deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, in the Postal Department as the result of excess contracts for air mail transportation. The appropriation amounted to $19,460,000, and it is estimated that the expenditures will exceed that by $1,500,000. For the year 1934 the appropriation is fixed at $15,000,000, and on the basis of present contracts and present operations the deficiency will amount to approximately $5,000,000. So the seriousness of the situation must be apparent to all, and quite naturally we must concede the necessity of curtailment of operations, or the cancelation of contracts or curtailment of pay. Any department of this Government which exceeds its appropriation as fixed by the Congress, except under most extraordinary circumstances, must meet with condemnation on the part of all American citizens. I do not hesitate to condemn the practice which has grown up in the past of exceeding by hundreds of thousands of dollars; yes, millions of dollars, appropriations set up by Congress.

I shall be just as free in my criticism of the present Department if the $15,000,000 appropriation is exceeded next year. In February and March of this year the Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, entered into some additional contracts. As a matter of general public policy, the letting of contracts by an official on the eve of his retirement from office must be condemned. In one of them my district happens to be vitally interested—the route across Lake Michigan from Milwaukee to Detroit. I am hopeful that the Department may see fit to continue this service, but may I say that if the Department in developing its policy, its necessary policy of curtailment, sees fit to cancel this contract the people of my district will be in perfect accord with that action despite the fact it will mean a serious handicap to the users of the Air Mail Service in Wisconsin.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I believe the particular contract to which the gentleman has alluded was under negotiation with the department for quite a long while before it was finally awarded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Oh, the gentleman is entirely correct.

On Monday the chairman of this committee read the law on the subject, and it was read again today by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]. It declares those contracts illegal where the specific appropriation has not been set up for the contract.

So we can group these contracts into two classes: One, illegal contracts, if they are illegal, and the distinguished chairman of the committee says they are; and, two, legal contracts.

The question arises as to whether or not this authority, this power grant, is necessary to give the right and the power to cancel these contracts. I wish to read the provisions of the air mail contract in question which I am reliably informed is common to all these contracts whether ocean mail service or air mail service. The language I speak of is contained in paragraph 7 of the contract and reads as follows:

Upon 60 days' notice to the carrier the Postmaster General may increase, diminish, or modify the service above prescribed and make such adjustments in the compensation of the carrier as he may deem proper.

Now, let me proceed and read the language of the bill to show you how similar it is in some respects:

Whenever it shall appear in respect of any contract entered into by the United States prior to the date of the enactment of this act for the transportation of persons and/or things that the full performance of such contract is not required in the public interest and the modification or cancelation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States, the President is hereby authorized in his discretion on or before April 30, 1935, to modify or cancel such contracts.

In other words, it is not intended as a clause providing merely for cancelation of a contract but a provision for modification as well, and in this connection I wish to refer again to the language that was used here by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when he stated that this provision of the contract could not be enforced because of the rule of reason laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the interstate-commerce cases.

May I call attention to the fact that this is a contract entered into between the United States, through the Postmaster General, on the one hand, and with the carrier on the other hand. Absolutely no rule of law, no rule of reason can interfere with the changing and the modification of the service, the curtailment, or even the question of compensation. The fact of the matter is it has been done in the past and I think it will be done by the present Postmaster General in order to bring the expenditures of the Department during the fiscal year within the appropriation. He has the power and the authority, and I take it he will exercise the authority to place these contracts upon a pro-rata basis, as has been done in the past, or he may upon 60 days' notice curtail service in order to reduce expenditures to make them come within the appropriation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In connection with the gentleman's statement may I say an aviation company I know of is interested in a short air line from Oklahoma City to Wichita Falls in my district, the Reed Air Line. They have submitted to the Department that they can carry this air mail across there for 10 cents a mile, and they have been in this service some 2 years. As I understand it, the average mileage cost for flying air mail is 61 cents. I believe this is correct. Why should we not cancel and modify these contracts if the Government is being euchred out of its money in any such fashion?

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I say with regard to the gentleman's question that different situations arise in different sections of the country.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is true.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know there are places in the United States where a subsidy is not needed, but how continuous could our service be if it depended upon the power of the service itself to earn a profit? There could not be any continuity of service across the continent, and it must follow as night follows day that in some parts of the country the service naturally will not pay its way.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. HOEPEL. If the gentleman's contention is correct, I see no reason why we should not get Congressmen for $5,000 a year instead of $8,500.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, I do not want to take the time to answer that question.

Now, as I say, there are two classes of contracts, illegal contracts, as the chairman has designated them, and legal contracts.

My only objection to this provision is that the moment you put into effect a provision of this character there arises a state of uncertainty. Congress should above all things else establish a permanent policy with reference to its national defense and its Air Mail Service. If you cancel all or most of these contracts, what guarantee can we give with power of this kind granted for continuity of service or permanency of policy when new contracts are entered into?

I submit to you, in all fairness, that it is a serious question, a matter of fundamental policy, and a matter of the permanency of a policy, and this is my objection to a provision of this character—the uncertainty that must, of necessity, exist once you clothe any individual with such power.

I wish to say, in conclusion, that I have no fear about clothing the President with this power. I have voted him powers on many occasions since I have been in the Congress, so that no one need be disturbed about my argument against this provision on that score; but I submit that every time we grant a power of this character, whether it is granted to the President or to an administrative agency, there is bound to arise the uncertainty which may demoralize the service and prevent a healthy development of this important branch of our Government service. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss paragraph (b) of section 8 of the bill under consideration. Section 8 is known as the 30-year employees' retirement provision.

Paragraph (b) is as follows:

In making reductions of personnel due regard shall be given to the apportionment of appointments as provided in the Civil Service Act.

In this connection I invite your attention to the third paragraph of section 2 of the act of January 16, 1883, being "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States." This third paragraph is as follows:

Third, appointments to the public service aforesaid in the Departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

The report of the Civil Service Commission shows that there are approximately 33,000 Federal employees in the city of Washington. Of this number the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland, Iowa, and Vermont combined have a total of 16,033, or approximately one half of the entire number.

Delaware is entitled to 74 and has 74; New Hampshire is entitled to 145 and has 145. Each has its quota.

With the permission of the House I place these figures in the RECORD, which show the total number each State is entitled to and the number each has and the number in arrears:

I call your attention to the fact that Virginia is entitled to 659 and has 2,273, or an excess of 1,614 appointments. Maryland is entitled to 444 and has received 2,112, or an excess of 1,668.

Examining the other States, I invite attention to the fact that Texas is entitled to 1,584, has received 433, and is in arrears 1,151, or has received only 27 percent of her quota. My State of Oklahoma is entitled to 651, has received 196, and is in arrears 455, or has only 30 percent of her quota.

Members of the House may examine the list and ascertain for themselves the discrimination against their respective States.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Does that include all States?

Mr. HASTINGS. It includes all the States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. HOEPEL. Is it not possible to balance that apportionment with all these patronage jobs the Democrats are soon going to hand out?

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from California is as well advised about patronage as I am.

You will note that the paragraph quoted from the Civil Service Act was approved January 16, 1883, more than 50 years ago. During all of this time an opportunity has been given to even up the Federal employees in the District of Columbia from the several States.

When it became known a few days ago that paragraph (b) of section 8 was reported in this bill it was severely criticized by the local press. By permission of the House, I am inserting an article from a recent issue of the Washington Post which clearly shows that paragraph (b) has teeth in it, and if it is finally retained in the bill it will be effective:

OVERQUOTA THREAT REMOVED FROM BILL—APPORTIONMENT CLAUSE NOT TO BE FACTOR IN MAKING FEDERAL DISMISSALS

By Robert C. Albright

The "apportionment clause" in the independent offices bill yesterday was rewritten to remove grave threat of dismissal of thousands of Federal employees from the District and overquota States it was authoritatively learned last night.

A redraft of the clause was prepared at a special meeting of the independent offices appropriations subcommittee, and will be presented to the full Appropriations Committee tomorrow before the measure is taken to the House.

As reworded, the clause places apportionment last in the list of considerations that would guide Civil Service Commission officials in making separations from the Government service. This was said virtually to nullify the effect of apportionment as a factor in dismissals.

With revision of the clause the subcommittee has removed virtually all of the "dynamite" from the bill, so far as it affects Federal workers.

Earlier the committee had rewritten the 30-year retirement provision, former center of the fight on the bill, so that it compels the retirement of nobody unless President Roosevelt issues orders setting aside existing seniority ratings.

At the same time they inserted a provision for "rotative furloughs", which amounts to mere continuation of the old law, aside from the fact that department heads will have the authority to discharge as well as furlough.

Yesterday's revision of the apportionment clause came at an extended session with officials of the Civil Service Commission.

The special subcommittee session followed disclosure in the Post that 10,582 Federal workers claiming District residence and hundreds from the overquota States of Virginia, Maryland, Iowa, and Vermont would be the first persons discharged under the new law.

As the clause is rewritten, subject to the approval of the full committee, efficiency, seniority, and marital status all must be considered first in making dismissals.

This means only when employees' ratings are identical, after considering efficiency, seniority, and whether both husband and wife are employed in the Government, would the apportionment rule be applied. And no case has been found yet where such ratings were identical in a given office.

Your attention is called to the fact that there was a reported revision or redraft of paragraph (b), which the above article from the Washington Post says would take all the teeth out of the law and therefore render it ineffective. I call your attention to it in order to emphasize the importance of not amending this provision but insisting upon its being finally retained in the bill as written.

It has been argued that there is a difference in selecting employees from the several States and in reducing them, and that apportionment should govern in the one case but that it should not govern in reducing the number of Government employees.

My opinion is that from every State of the Union the quota can be obtained and the Civil Service Commission and the heads of the various departments here in Washington should be required to see that the intent and purpose of the Civil Service law regarding apportionment among the States should be observed.

I urge upon the Members of the House not to be deceived by arguments that there may be difficulty in the administration of this act. Of course it can be done. The language of paragraph (b), section 8, is plain, and there is no difficulty in its interpretation. It is a clear command that—

In making reductions of personnel due regard shall be given to the apportionment of appointments as provided in the Civil Service Act.

This, of course, refers to the third paragraph of the act of January 16, 1883, above quoted.

There was a good reason for the apportionment of Federal employees among the States. It was not only to give them an opportunity for service to their Government, but to enable men and women from every section of the country to come to Washington and in that way come in close contact with their Government and be in a position to advise the people back home with reference to their Government; how it is administered, and how and why legislation is enacted for their benefit.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman thinks the reduction should be made in accordance with that provision; in other words, the States that do not have a quota now should not lose as many as the States who have the full quota?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct, and that is what this paragraph (b) is intended to in part accomplish. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in the latitude of general debate on the independent offices appropriation bill in order to make some brief observations on the proposed abolishment of the press service of one of the independent establishments—the Federal Radio Commission—and that I might have an opportunity to pay a merited tribute to an old friend of the fourth estate, G. Franklin Wisner, who organized that bureau and who has made it a very unusual instrumentality of public service.

I know I reflect the unanimous sentiment of the press gallery of Congress, where I served for 28 years, and of the National Press Club, of which I at one time had the honor to be president, and of many Members of Congress, also, when I say that the proposed outright abolishment of the press service is an evolution of government that passeth all understanding. I have no criticism of the Radio Commission, which undoubtedly is seeking to do its duty; but I cannot agree that the abolishment of its press bureau is necessary or advisable.

"Economy did it", says someone. Well, if that is the answer, I can only say that some very strange acts are performed in the name of economy. I am committed to the strictest economy, to cutting out useless agencies by the roots, and to the wholesale consolidation of agencies that overlap and waste money; but I can think of a thousand agencies that should be removed from the structure of government before the press service of the Radio Commission should be touched, if you ask my idea of the order of priority.

Why do I say this? Because radio is a new science; because it is a technical subject; because it is destined to be one of the biggest things in the world; because I know the might of publicity, and for these reasons it is highly important to the future of radio, as well as for the convenience of the press and Members of Congress, that it shall have a press service that will be responsive to the national demand for information about radio and capable of giving out correct factual and interpretive information. Only on such a true and solid foundation can the future of radio be builded so that it will be firm and secure.

Radio owes a great deal to Mr. Wisner, who as its press and publicity promoter has accompanied it from its cradle into its swaddling clothes and through its short-trousers career to its present robust estate. As a former Washington correspondent of 14 newspapers, I know whereof I speak. Every hour of the day and night he has been at the service of the Washington correspondents. His exhaustive knowledge of radio has enabled him to answer all questions in terms of understandable English, shorn of technical obfuscations. He has been a mainstay of Members of Congress, who constantly call him over the telephone for information on an infinite variety of radio topics which is promptly and satisfactorily forthcoming. His office is a feeder of radio information to newspaper bureaus, press associations, news services, and radio magazines. It replies to queries received from all over America from individuals, companies, and groups large and small that want accurate information about radio. Specialized radio writers are continually visiting the bureau to secure information from Mr. Wisner, and he is constantly writing illuminating and informative articles for leading magazines, periodicals, and newspapers setting forth striking phases of the work of the Radio Commission, all as a day-by-day part of his public service and without extra compensation.

As a member of the press gallery, I served shoulder to shoulder with Mr. Wisner, and I know him to be an indefatigable worker and a splendid gentleman. Of course the fact that a man is an indefatigable worker and a splendid gentleman is no excuse in itself for keeping him in the public service if he is no longer needed, but I am sure I speak the sentiments of my fellow newspapermen when I say that it is their universal feeling that the demobilization of the Radio Commission's Press Bureau is a calamity to all of them. It is not entirely the loss of Mr. Wisner, much as they esteem him, but it is the loss of this very important and specialized service and all that it means to the newspapers and the public and to the future of radio. That is the real tragedy. Every Washington newspaper correspondent knows of numerous department and bureau press services that probably could be abolished and economies could thus be effected without injury to the public service and they do not understand why those bureaus should be spared and the one that many believe is the most important and useful of all, upon which the well-directed development of radio so largely depends, should be sacrificed on the altar of economy. It is not common sense, that is all.

Some of the Washington correspondents have placed in my hands a copy of a petition they are filing today with the Federal Radio Commission, and I conclude my remarks by quoting the text of that petition, as follows:

We, the undersigned, accredited members of the press galleries of Congress and the White House Correspondents Association, having learned of the proposed abolition of the press service of the Federal Radio Commission and the dismissal of its director, G. Franklin Wisner, protest that such action neither accords with so-called "economy plans" of the Commission nor with the best interests of efficiency.

Radio being so highly technical a subject, it has always been a great help to us to have one central source of information in the Federal Radio Commission. This has obviated the necessity of constant contacting of individual commissioners or members of the Commission staff. It has also operated to assure accuracy of the news emanating from the Radio Commission, which is one of the chief sources of news among the independent offices of the Government.

Some 100 newspapers are operators of broadcasting stations, while hundreds of others are vitally interested in radio developments. Moreover, the growing use of the short waves, particularly by Press Wireless, Inc., means that newspapers must continue to keep well apprised of the developments in radio. To have hundreds of correspondents occupying the time of individual commissioners to secure authentic information would mean a loss of time to them that would greatly impair the efficiency of the Commission.

Mr. Wisner has been of inestimable aid to us almost since the Commission's inception. He is an experienced former Washington newspaperman, whose appointment to his present post we originally urged. We now urge his retention and the continuance of the press service as formerly.

This is signed by George Holmes, manager of the Washington bureau of the International News Service; Raymond Clapper, head of the local United Press bureau; Kenneth Clark, head of the Universal Service here; and nearly 100 leading correspondents, including George Durno, president of the White House Correspondents Association; Raymond P. Brandt, president of the National Press Club; Charles G. Ross, president of the Gridiron Club; Theodore Alford, Kansas City Star; Theodore C. Wallen, New York Herald-Tribune; Robert D. Heinl, Washington Post; Martin Codel, editor Broadcasting Magazine; Sol Taishoff, Consolidated Press; George Manning, General Press Association; James P. Hornaday, Indianapolis News; Harry G. Gauss, Chicago Daily News; Fred W. Perkins, Washington Daily News; Russell Kent, Birmingham News; Paul Wooton, New Orleans Times Picayune; and scores of others, all of whom are very much concerned over the proposed abolishment of the Radio Press Service. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR].

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I think it is apparent to everyone here that this bill has some very important legislative provisions which do not properly belong in an appropriation bill. I want to call the attention of the new Members of the House to the fact that this should not be taken as a precedent to be followed by the Appropriations Committee hereafter. All of the legislative sections in the bill should have been thoroughly considered and approved by the appropriate legislative committee and recommended to the House.

Certain of these provisions are going to destroy—it is within the possibility—some of the best features of our Government service. I have in mind the Postal Service, which more than any other governmental agency reaches the home of every citizen and is practically self-sustaining. Under the provisions of the pending measure it is contemplated that the major economies shall be effected at the expense of the Postal Service and the veterans.

In section 9 (a) the President is authorized to suspend or reduce the allowance to rural mail carriers for equipment maintenance. I want to say to you it costs each rural carrier approximately $400 annually to operate and maintain his equipment. These carriers have already taken, under the Economy Act, a substantial cut in the equipment allowance. A survey conducted by the Post Office Department a couple of years ago disclosed that the equipment allowance paid at that time fell short by about 2 cents per mile of meeting actual operating costs. In some sections of the country costs have been slightly reduced by improvement in roads, but these have been scattered and for the most part on through highways. Other expenses, wear and tear, have been about the same.

Now it is proposed that the entire equipment allowance may be suspended at the option of the President. Surely that would impose hardship and injustice on the 40,000 rural carriers of this country, a burden greater than any other Government employees are asked to bear. If given an opportunity, I will move to have the word "suspended" taken out of the bill. I cannot believe, despite the seriousness of the depression, that this great Government is going to require these carriers to pay a bonus for the privilege of carrying the mail.

There is another item pertaining to postal matters which I wish to call to the attention of the House. On postal legislation, I usually follow the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] or the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], both of whom are highly informed on postal problems and sympathetic to all branches of the service. During my service here they have usually agreed on postal legislation. I regret that in the present instance they are not in accord.

I want to touch briefly on the section of the bill relating to air mail contracts. One of these contracts happens to be in my State, North Dakota. I refer to the Bismarck-Billings route. This is the only section of the United States which has had no air mail service heretofore.

Every other part of the United States has had some air mail service. North Dakota and Montana are traversed by four transcontinental railroads, but have not had air mail service. It is true that feeders have been sent up from Omaha and Salt Lake City into part of this territory, but those feeders do not carry along the regular channels of trade. We want service with the Twin Cities, which is the natural trade center for all of that country. A contract extending the St. Paul-Bismarck air mail line to Billings was entered into on March 2 last. That air mail contract was approved by the Postmaster General largely due to the efforts of the late distinguished Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh. Senators Walsh, Nye, and Shipstead, together with Representatives from these three States had been working on this proposal for some time, and one of the last official contacts had by Senator Walsh before his resignation as Senator was with the Postmaster General on this matter.

This contract is of great importance to the people of this territory, and I think it should not be abrogated. The House would have had all this information, would have had other information on the legislative features of this bill if the matter had come from the appropriate legislative committee in a position to give study to the subject. The committee would come in then and recommend proper legislation. I do not wish in any way to take prestige from the Committee on Appropriations, for I have the honor but recently of becoming a member of it; but I do say that it would be much better for the legislation, and for the proper functioning of this House if the Committee on Appropriations would confine its efforts strictly to matters of appropriations, and leave the field of legislation to the committees charged with that duty.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Speaking about the equipment of the rural carriers, there are three kinds of roads in the United States—the macadam road, the hard-surface road, and the country road. As I understand it the rural carriers get their pay by mileage, on the same basis.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Is it not a fact that a rural carrier on a paved road will possibly make 75 miles and get paid for 75 miles a day, when the man on a bad road can make only 25 miles?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ALLGOOD. And the equipment of the man on the bad road wears out much more quickly.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is why the matter should be studied in the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I know that the gentleman from Alabama is in sympathy with the rural carriers and is anxious to see justice done them. Therefore, I am sure he will agree with me as to the desirability of reference of the question to the Post Office Committee.

In the northern part of the United States, during the last year, we have had 5 months of winter weather, and at times the roads have been almost impassable. It has cost the rural carriers close to 15 cents a mile to operate. I earnestly urge that before any further reductions are forced upon rural carriers a careful study by actual investigations in the field be made, to the end that these loyal workers of the Government are fairly treated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS].

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, the several national problems confronted in this bill that are subject to debate are great and important to defense, commerce, economy, and human needs, but I feel it is my duty to convey to you some information which interests Puerto Rico. Indeed, you are now discussing complicated national problems that are of tremendous interest to many millions of people; the veterans' situation is one of these complicated problems, in view of the economies imposed by this bill. And in regard to this question, I desire to state that the veterans of Puerto Rico hope to receive the same treatment and care just as the distinguished gentleman [Mr. Woodrum] has announced this morning will be given to all veterans of the Nation.

Reference is made in section 13, page 57, of this measure to the "economic bill", "to maintain the credit of the United States Government", to extend its provisions to Puerto Rico and imposing the 15 percent reduction in the salaries upon all officials in Puerto Rico, whose salaries are fixed by an act of Congress.

The organic law of Puerto Rico, approved by Congress on March 2, 1917, fixes the salaries of the Governor, attorney general, commissioner of education, auditor, and others, as well as those of the five justices of the supreme court, which are appointed by the President. The salaries of all officials of the island appointed by the President are paid out of the revenues of Puerto Rico in the same way as the salaries of all insular officials not appointed by the President as shall from time to time be directed by the legislature. If the legislature should fail to make an appropriation for such salaries, then the salaries fixed shall be paid without necessity of further appropriations.

As I said before, section 13 of this H.R. 5389 proposes the extension of the 15 percent reduction in the compensation to all officers and employees of the insular possessions, which is now fixed by acts of Congress and which is not subject to reduction under the provisions of title II of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States", approved March 20, 1933.

The Legislature of Puerto Rico has not the power to make reductions in the salaries of the officials, which have been fixed by the organic law, approved by Congress. This act not only fixes the salaries of the officials but the way in which such salaries should be paid. The salaries which are going to be affected by virtue of this section 13 are as follows:

The Governor, $10,000; heads of the executive departments, attorney general, treasurer, interior, labor, agriculture, health, and auditor, each receive $6,000; the executive secretary, $5,000; the public service commissioner, $6,000. Besides these officials of the insular government, there are: The chief justice of the supreme court who receives $10,500, and the four associate justices who get $10,000 each. The Federal Government has also several other officials whose salaries are fixed by the organic law—the judge of the District Court of the United States, the district attorney, and the marshal—all appointed by the President.

In connection with this section 13, I have to mention the fact that the Legislature of Puerto Rico, for the last 3 years, has made reductions affecting almost 6,000 officials and employees of the insular government, including 4,000 teachers and 800 policemen. These reductions have ranged from 5 to over 25 percent. Some injustices and sufferings have been imposed upon many families for this.

The Governor of Puerto Rico, exercising the authority that is given to him by the organic law, and invoking new interpretations rendered by the attorney general of Puerto Rico, has reduced the budget outside of the legislature over $1,000,000 in the salaries of the employees and service of the insular government. Such reductions of salaries, as I say, have reached the proportion of over 25 percent in some instances, with the natural protests on the part of those who suffered the consequences.

But the Governor and the legislature have no power to reduce the salaries of the officials fixed by our organic law, approved by Congress.

Of course, I should like to have this section 13 amended in such a way that it would grant power to the Legislature of Puerto Rico to fix the reduction of salaries of these insular officials in the same way as the other officials and employees of the insular government of Puerto Rico, in view of the fact that all of them are paid from the revenues of Puerto Rico.

I know, and I have been advised by the chairman of the committee, that this cannot be done in this appropriation bill.

It is my duty, and I desire to inform you that before the presentation of this act the officials of the insular government, to which I have referred, and whose salaries are fixed by Congress through our organic act, had requested the governor—and, I think, he himself has suggested—that their salaries should be reduced as it was done with the salaries of other insular officials.

As I say, I should prefer, and the people of the island would desire, to have these salaries of the officials reduced through the authority and power granted to the legislature and the Governor.

From other sources I have received the suggestion that these salaries of the high officials of Puerto Rico should not be reduced, because small salaries will diminish the opportunity to have the best talent and capable officials employed in the service of the island and its people. That may be true, especially if we consider that some of the corporations in the island pay to their local managers and lawyers salaries that range from fifteen to thirty thousand dollars a year, and more than that.

Permit me to inform you that the Annual Report of the Governor of Puerto Rico for 1932 states that the appropriation act approved by the insular legislature has reduced the salaries and wages of the insular officials and employees to the extent from 10 to 15 percent, and was again reduced $1,000,000 by the Governor in the exercise of the power conferred upon him by the organic law, and reduced again by the Legislature of Puerto Rico in 1933, all this without having the authority and possibility of reducing the salaries of the officials fixed by Congress. In accordance with the same report the Governor says, as follows:

The financial condition of the insular treasury at the close of the fiscal year was satisfactory, beyond all expectations.

Unfortunately, while the financial condition of the insular treasury is satisfactory and thousands of dollars of taxes were canceled or condoned, we have yet over 200,000 children of school age without accommodation. This bill contains a clause that helps the vocational education in the mainland, the Territories, and Puerto Rico.

The insular government is composed at present of the following officials and employees engaged in the public service, including the Governor, the legislature, and the departments, who receive the following compensation: About 6,011 Puerto Rican-American employees, $6,579,748, and about 233 employees continental Americans, $409,585.75. Of this total employees, over 4,000 are school teachers and over 800 police.

And before I finish this statement, let me say this: In reducing the public services of the government of Puerto Rico, we are losing opportunities to increase our schools, that need rooms and teachers for over 200,000 children, and also the services of health, sanitation, labor, and the fostering of agriculture and industry.

The most vital problem requiring immediate attention and assistance of Puerto Rico, as in the mainland, are our financial and economic conditions, education, and unemployment, prevailing among the thousands of the suffering producers of Puerto Rico, which are very critical, not only due to the world-wide and national economic depression but especially to the recent floods and hurricanes that badly injured the poor masses of the people as well as the business in general.

The great relief and economic rehabilitation program set forth by the President in behalf of the people of the mainland should be extended fully to Puerto Rico.

Nothing, I believe, would stimulate more the building of a sounder, healthier, and happier community of American citizens in the Caribbean than to extend your entire relief and rehabilitation program to the people of the island, whose increasing welfare would insure a constantly growing market with every prospect of enlarged incomes for American business and further revenues for both the insular and Federal Governments. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, 5 minutes, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have been watching the procession of speakers this afternoon, and with each succeeding speaker I have noticed there has been a diminution in the number who remained in attendance. I recall a state occasion where there were a lot of extra-fine speakers, and when they got down to the next to the last speaker there was only one man remaining in the audience. Everybody else had gone. The speaker turned to him and said, "Kind sir, I want to thank you for your patience and fortitude in remaining here to listen to my speech." He said, "Hell, man, don't thank me. I am the next speaker." [Laughter and applause.]

Anyway, I am going to thank all of the 39 Members, less than 9 percent of the total Membership of the House, who have remained here faithfully on duty to listen to the discussion of the various component elements that go to make up this appropriation bill, involving over $500,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman should like a larger audience, I will make a point of no quorum.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, thank you.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. It might be as one of the other speakers described his audience as being "large and enthusiastic", one as being large and the other as being enthusiastic.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota. I do not believe in that kind of hypocrisy.

Now, I am going to leave with you one thought tonight, and I want to preface it by reading from the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] on the economy bill, on page 177 of the first bound copy of the RECORD:

Let me ask this: Who has a right to say that Franklin D. Roosevelt will not deal kindly, gently, and sympathetically with the disabled soldier? In God's name, if a man ever lived, if a man ever occupied a place of authority who is in a position to have his big heart go out in sympathy to the men who are disabled and who are down and out, who have suffered and who are in trial and tribulation, it is the man who now sits in the White House. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to trust the President to deal kindly, gently, and justly with the veterans that I represent.

Now, I will subscribe to that. I think the man in the White House, who is strapped with iron braces, and who has known every kind of physical anguish and pain, would give the veterans a better deal than they will get under this bill, the supplement to the economy bill. But the fact is that Mr. Roosevelt does not know what is in the bill or in the regulations. [Applause.] He does not have time to find out, as a matter of fact.

Now, do you think you will get any sympathy from General Hines; from Mr. Hiller, his assistant; from Mr. Douglas, Director of the Budget; and from Mr. Roberts, who helped write the economy bill and some of these other veteran provisions? Certainly not. You will get as much sympathy out of an iceberg as you will out of those gentlemen, because their traditional policy has been to set themselves up against the veteran. [Applause.]

Let me leave this thought with you: Look in the Executive regulations of the economy bill, and you will find that on a rating of 10 to 24 percent disability a man gets a 10 percent rating, or $8 a month. Is any Member of Congress willing to surrender 24 percent of his physical fitness for a paltry $8 a month? Ask yourselves that question. Yet that is what you are asking the veterans to do. Would you surrender 49 percent of your physical fitness for $20 a month? Or 74 percent of your physical fitness for $40 a month? Or 99 percent of your fitness for $50 a month? Ask yourselves that question. It is a very personal matter. Now, go back and examine the Presidential regulations and see how drastic they are. There was a presumption of fitness on the part of a soldier when he went into the Army.

It does not make any difference whether he had incipient T.B., halitosis, or flat feet, or anything else; if it was not noted in the record when he enlisted, the presumption is that he was physically fit, and you know that in the hysteria that went with the World War many men were incapable of military service at the time they enlisted and yet managed to enter the Army. Disabilities were not noted in their records. Such disabilities were aggravated in the service, yet they were presumed to be physically fit according to the new regulations and are precluded from all benefits. Why, even men who were color blind got by the examining boards. You have all had experience. Yet, presumed to be fit. So that presumption is set up against him.

So far as the non-service-connected ratings are concerned, look at the regulations. It provides for $20 only when a man has been permanently disabled or is totally disabled. Examine the rest of it, and you will see the same thing. I will elaborate on that tomorrow when we read the bill for amendment, because there is something vital here that should be brought to the attention of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allotted for general debate having expired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment. The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BULWINKLE] having resumed the chair, Mr. McCLINTIC, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 5389, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H.Con.Res. 18. Concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of H.R. 3835, to strike out the word "basic" where it appears in subsection (3) of section 8.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3835) entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power", and recedes from its amendment numbered 83, excepted to by the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 5081) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development", disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SMITH, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. McNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGIONAL AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place two letters in the RECORD, in order that the Members may have information of the methods and operations of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation in the State of Idaho, one from Chase Kearn, agricultural extension agent of Franklin County, and the letter of E. R. Underhill, secretary-treasurer of the Corporation at Salt Lake City.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE IN AGRICULTURE AND HOME ECONOMICS, STATE OF IDAHO,
Preston, Idaho, May 6, 1933.

COMPTON WHITE,

United States Representative, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing, herewith, a copy of a letter received by one of our farmers relative to a loan on livestock contemplated by the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. I might say that in January I assisted this man in making his application, in which he asked for $260 and offered as security 6 head of good dairy cows, and 2 yearling heifers.

It is possible, of course, that the security offered is inadequate, and I am not presuming to say what shall or shall not be the policy of the loan organization set up by the Government and designed to assist farmers, which organization is failing miserably to meet the purpose for which it was created.

I contend that if the property offered is inadequate, the man should have been so instructed; and that to require, first, a mortgage on all livestock and feeds on hand; second, a crop mortgage on all crops to be grown in 1933; third, an agreement affecting your pasture and grazing land, to secure a loan of a miserable $260, is an insult to any intelligent, self-respecting man.

My attention, today, is called to another letter received by an applicant who wanted a loan of $550 and offered, by way of security, 15 first-class dairy cows and 20 head of 2-year-old steers and heifers. In order to get the loan the man has been asked to offer as security 20 head of dairy cows, 30 head of 2-year-old steers and heifers, 15 head of yearlings and calves, 40 head of sheep, all feeds now on hand, and a mortgage on feeds to be grown during 1933 and a waiver on his reserve right.

It occurs to me that the institution is not actually designed to relieve any bad situation among the livestock men, nor do I believe that it is functioning to that end. The requirements for obtaining money from the institution are more severe than those of the average banker ever were, and the delay and trouble incurred in securing the loan more than offsets any value realized from the lower rate of interest.

I am transmitting this information to you because I believe you will be interested in knowing just how this emergency institution is functioning or failing to function in relieving livestock owners under the present depressed conditions.

Very truly yours,

CHASE KEARL,
Agricultural Extension Agent.

REGIONAL AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATION
OF SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH,
Salt Lake City, Utah, March 23, 1933.

Mr. DON P. WHITTLE,
Preston, Idaho.

DEAR MR. WHITTLE: Your application for a loan of $260 for 1 year at 6½ percent interest has been approved by our loan committee for the amount requested, with the following conditions:

1. A first mortgage on all your cattle and the hay and other feed now on hand.
2. A crop mortgage on all your crops grown in 1933.
3. An agreement affecting your pasture and grazing land.

Kindly indicate on the enclosed copy of this letter whether or not you wish to accept the loan and return your answer to this office as soon as possible.

Very truly yours,

E. R. UNDERHILL,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a letter I wrote the President of the United States upon this bill on May 5 last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTELLIGENT NATIONAL PLANNING—A NEW POLITICAL ALINEMENT BY THE ORGANIZATION OF FARMERS, WORKERS, AND VETERANS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including some remarks of Howard Y. Williams on questions of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, under permission granted to extend my remarks I am including a portion of the address delivered by Howard Y. Williams, national director of the League for Independent Political Action, before the Central Labor Union of Marion, Ohio, April 12, 1933.

Our national election of 1932 constituted in many ways a revolution in American politics. That over 6,000,000 voters in a 4-year period should change their allegiance from the Republican Party to the Democratic was an unheard of event. It was meant to be a vote to the left for more radical action. If the leaders of the Democratic Party believe that it was a vote for them, they are greatly mistaken. Most of these voters cast their ballot with their tongues in their cheeks. They were certain that they did not want more of the Republican administration. They were not sure that the Democratic administration would do the necessary job, but they were willing to give it a trial. If the Democratic Party fails in this crisis, I believe that it will pass out of the picture within 10 years as a factor in national politics. A new united Farmer-Labor or People's Party will result, and the conservatives will be forced to unite probably with the Republican Party, which is essentially the conservative stronghold.

What do the progressive voters of this country want? It has been my privilege within the past few weeks to attend a number of State and national conventions of rank and file progressive groups. I believe that you could bring leaders of such gatherings together anywhere in the United States and the program adopted would be much the same. Liberals over the country are practically united on what they regard as necessary to get us out of this depression. What they need is organization.

A SUPREME PLANNING COUNCIL

Our industrial order is breaking down. No amount of patching will save it. "Rugged individualism" and rampant competition must go. They are the marks of a horse-and- buggy age. A nationally planned economy must take their place. Some form of a supreme planning council must be adopted to control production, capitalization, credit, and the distribution of national income. The experience of a city like Detroit must not be repeated. It has the darkest future of any large city in the Nation. It is built around the automobile industry, which is at least three times overcapitalized. There is an investment in machinery and buildings for which the country has no use, but upon which it must try to pay dividends. No wonder automobile companies in that area have been paying their workers 10 and 15 cents an hour. Ignorant of this overcapitalization, Detroit overbuilt itself, extending sewers, water mains, and pavement into territory for which under the present system it now has no possible use, but upon whose improvements the city must pay heavy interest charges. Thousands have moved away, leaving their homes for sale and their investment worth very little. What is true of Detroit and automobiles is equally true of other cities and radios, shoes, and most of our other industries, overcapitalized from 2 to 10 times.

We need a supreme planning council to prevent such crazy unplanned development. Progressives do not want private planning, industrial planning, or the Swope type of plan, which means the building up of huge cartels of industry which would become more powerful than the Government itself. We want social planning. Upon any planning council must sit not only the industrialists but the farmers, workers, and consumers. Any planning that is done must be in the interest of the many and not the few.

The second great need of America is for a more equitable distribution of our national income. In these last years, through the control of land, machines, government, and credit, a few individuals have acquired such wealth as kings never dreamed of. While the Mellon family alone has over $12,000,000,000, over 17,000,000 men and women walk our streets penniless looking for jobs.

STOP SLOW STARVATION

In this emergency we must bring about this more equitable distribution of income by adequate relief. We must stop this slow starvation business in America. In Marion, Ohio, I recently found the unemployed getting 1 day's work a week, 6 hours at 35 cents each, or $2.10 upon which a family of five must live for a week. At Zanesville, Ohio, an unemployed family of 3 gets $1.25 a week, grading up to $2.98 for a family of 12. Imagine such a family sitting around a meal where the food costs slightly over 1 cent a person. Such conditions exist all over America. We ought to have $3,000,000,000 this year from the Federal Government to give adequate relief, including rent, electricity, gas, heat, and incidentals—not as charity, but as justice, that which government owes its citizens.

WAR AGAINST POVERTY

But what the people really want is not relief, but work. Private industry is unable to furnish jobs. The Government becomes responsible. Not less than $8,000,000,000 will adequately meet the emergency. The only cure for unemployment is employment. We must put several million jobless at work on roads, river drainage, reforestation, and especially upon slum clearance to rid our large cities of their awful tenements. These workers would spend their wages for food, shelter, clothes, automobiles, etc. Other people would get jobs, and we would get out of the deep ditch in which we find ourselves. Let us not say this is impossible. If our Government could raise over $25,000,000,000 in Liberty-bond sales during the war and spend over $50,000,000,000 in a war to make democracy safe in Europe, surely it can spend $8,000,000,000 in a war against poverty at home. The war sums went for destruction. An expenditure for public works would be a constructive investment which would bring returns. Three billion dollars would have done the task 2 years ago. It will not make much of a ripple today. We must have at least $8,000,000,000 for public works.

Unemployment insurance must be won at this time. If the need is not seen now, when will it be? Any government that really means to serve the people will inaugurate such protection at once.

Adequate old-age pensions would take almost 2,000,000 aged persons from the employment field. No expenditure that we could make would be as economical as this.

We must take the 2,000,000 children now in industry out of the factories and mines where their whole lives are being stunted and shriveled by this premature experience at hard work and put them into schools. This would be another step to relieve adult unemployment.

The 30-hour week with no reduction in the weekly wage must come. Machinery is displacing man. If today we were to attain the maximum production of 1929 at the former schedule of hours, there would be an army of over 5,000,000 permanently unemployed. Technological development demands the reduction of hours per day and days per week, so that jobs can be given to all.

The soldiers' bonus should be paid at once to all unemployed veterans and those having financial difficulties on the farms. This must be a part of the general plan to meet unemployment.

CHANGE THE DIRECTION OF WEALTH

Revenue to meet such a program should not come from any form of sales tax. A sales tax is a tax on poverty. It compels the overburdened poor to care for the poor. If the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few, which was one of the prime factors in causing the depression, is to cease, then such projects must be financed by higher income and inheritance taxes on wealth in the higher brackets and resort to a levy on capital wealth if necessary. The direction of wealth would be changed and it would flow back again into the pockets of the many where it would furnish purchasing power and build permanent prosperity.

After getting wealth into the hands of the unemployed our other task is to build larger incomes for those who do work. One of the tragedies of the depression has been the ruthless slashing of wages. The progress of 50 years has been destroyed. Women are forced to work in sweatshops at $1.80 and $2.10 a week. A social worker in southern Illinois told me her community gave an average of 40 cents a week per person for relief. When I asked why they did not do better, she replied that if they paid more, families would get more from relief than by working. Even before 1929 great numbers, if not a majority of the American workers, were receiving an insufficient income. They could not purchase in sufficient quantities what they produced, and the economic crisis was the result. Trade unionism cannot protect the workers with this army of unemployed present. The Government must regulate wages and hours of labor. It will either do this, or slavery of a new type will appear in America.

JUSTICE TO FARMERS

Farmers must also get a better share of the wealth which they produce. Slavery is that form of society in which men work for nothing. Many farmers have been worse off than slaves. They have actually paid for the privilege of working, borrowing to pay taxes and overhead. Farm income has been reduced almost 50 percent in 10 years, while farm taxes in that same period have increased over 250 percent and farm bank failures over 470 percent. We must lower this unjust burden of taxation by a replacement income tax. We should radically reduce the tariff to enlarge the world market upon which the farmer sells and give him a better price for his product, at the same time lowering the price of the manufactured article he purchases. The high protective tariff is nothing but a means of exploitation for the few. No longer does it maintain the American standard of living. No outstanding economist will defend it. It should go.

We must give farmers added assistance in the development of cooperative marketing and purchasing agencies. Too much goes to middlemen. In Michigan farmers have been receiving less than 2 cents a quart for milk, while the consumers pay 8 and 9 cents a quart. Farmers should get the cost of production, about 4 cents, and the consumers should not pay more than twice that amount. We will probably have to make milk a public utility to protect farmers and consumers. The Frazier bill for refinancing farm mortgages is necessary to stop foreclosures and evictions.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF MONOPOLIES

If we are to prevent future panics, we must nationalize the banks and extend the public ownership and operation of all the means of public transportation and communication, of public utilities and natural resources. It has been the control of these huge monopolies that has made possible the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few. The electrical utilities alone stole over $500,000,000 from the American people last year through extortionate rates and unfair charges. Next to the banks they constitute the greatest racket in this country. The bootleggers are amateurs compared to this crowd. A friend of mine in Tacoma, Wash., which is under public ownership, used 2,249 kilowatt-hours of electricity at a cost of $16.55. On Long Island, N.Y., that same amount under private ownership costs $114.45. Adding 3 mills a kilowatt-hour to the Tacoma bill because it uses water power, while Long Island uses steam for generation, there would still be a difference of $91.15, which the Long Island company stole from its consumer. It means that millions of homes in America are deprived of this servant for washing, ironing, refrigeration, etc., because it costs too much. Think of what cheap electricity would mean in happiness to our people. The same is true of telephones, railroads, and other utilities. The incentive for huge profits is too great to trust banks and public utilities in private hands. Their determination to hold on to these monopolies is one of the greatest sources of corruption in government. As long as the private company does the public's work, there is bound to be corruption. Put banks and public utilities into the control of the public, and corruption in government to a large extent would almost immediately disappear.

A UNITED FARMER-LABOR PARTY

All these measures, however, will prove of little value unless we can substitute for the present system of greed and profit a new order—a united Farmer-Labor Party—based upon human welfare. It is this kind of use of government in which our Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party and the League for Independent Political Action (with its headquarters at 112 East Nineteenth Street, New York City) are interested. We should be glad to see the Democratic administration forget patches and poultries and undertake the building of this new society based upon the principles of cooperation, public ownership, and democratic management, in which politics would be used in a creative and constructive way to secure for everyone a fair share of the good things of life. We feel that President Roosevelt has his face in the right direction. We question whether the conservative groups that control the Democratic machine in so many States will permit any such program. We do not believe that those who have power and wealth will yield except under pressure. We believe that that pressure must come by the organization of workers, farmers, and veterans on the industrial and political plane. We are determined to apply that pressure in a democratic fashion by means of a united Peoples or Farmer-Labor Party that will see to it that no individual sits down at the table of prosperity and has a second helping until every man, woman, and child has had a first helping to the good things of life.

30-HOUR WEEK BILL

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a report from the Committee on Labor on the 5-day 30-hour week bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are there any minority views?

Mr. CONNERY. None that I know of.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman amend his request to include the filing of minority views at the same time?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be amended in that way.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any intention of bringing the bill up this week?

Mr. CONNERY. If I have anything to say about the matter, it will be brought up as soon as possible. I know nothing about that whatever. I am going to report it to the House and then see what the leadership wants to do with it.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me the bill ought to be before the House and the House should have an opportunity to go very carefully into the report before the bill is acted on. If it is intended to bring it up before Monday, I shall object to the report being filed as late in the day as this.

Mr. CONNERY. I may say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned I have no particular desire for it to come up tomorrow. It could not come up tomorrow, in any event.

Mr. TABER. We may be through with the independent offices bill by 3 o'clock, and if we are, it could come up.

Mr. WOODRUM. I can assure the gentleman it will not come up tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Goss, for 2 days, on account of death in his family.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 555. An act to authorize the acquisition by the United States of the land upon which the Seneca Indian School, Wyandotte, Okla., is located; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 727. An act for the relief of Francis N. Dominick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1256. An act granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Kansas and Missouri for the acquisition, maintenance, and operation of a toll bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Kans., for the construction and maintenance of connections with established highways, for the incorporation of such bridge in the highway systems of said States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1425. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 48. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans.;

H.R. 1596. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Pee Dee River and a bridge across the Waccamaw River, both at or near Georgetown, S.C.;

H.R. 4127. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Waccamaw River near Conway, S.C.; and

H.R. 4491. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of an overhead viaduct across the Mahoning River at Struthers, Mahoning County, Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 11, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(Thursday, May 11, 10 a.m.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, for the fiscal year 1933, amounting to $21,000; a proposed authorization for expenditure from Indian tribal funds, amounting to $10,000, together with drafts of proposed provisions pertaining to existing appropriations under several departments, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FUNCTIONS OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 59)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, information relating to the various functions, annual costs and personnel, etc., of the Commission, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Johnson-Brown Post, No. 1736, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Alexandria, La., protesting against reductions in appropriations for military projects or any action tending to impair the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, requesting that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation make all reasonable haste in approving applications for loans to be made for the purpose of slum-clearance projects and the providing of housing for the low-income group, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of John Karachon, of Newark, N.J., praying for certain relief on account of injuries sustained while working with the Lidgerwood Manufacturing Co., of Newark, N.J., which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the county judge and precinct commissioners of San Jacinto County, and the commissioners court of Tarrant County, in the State of Texas, endorsing the program of President Roosevelt and urging the inauguration of a public-works program to provide highway construction in the State of Texas, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Veterans' Expeditionary Force, signed by George Alman, commander, for the Veterans' Expeditionary Force Committee, New York City, N.Y., praying for the passage of legislation providing for immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates (bonus) of ex-service men; the restoration of disability compensations, allowances, and pensions; the immediate remedial relief of the unemployed and farmers, and the making of an appropriation for adequate shelter and food for the veterans while in Washington on a march, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Forty-first Associate Council, National Society, United States Daughters of 1812, at Washington, D.C., opposing the recognition of the Soviet Government of Russia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of Plaquemine, La., endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts State Union of Women's Clubs, comprising 1,600 women, in convention assembled at Haverhill, Mass., protesting against all injustices to the Negro race, denouncing the treatment and trial of the so-called "Scottsboro boys" in Alabama, denouncing the Ku-Klux Klan and the alleged segregation of over 350 Negro employees in various departments of the Government, etc., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., favoring the passage of legislation directing the Postmaster General to issue a special series of postage stamps of the denomination of 3 cents commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization as an American citizen and appointment as brevet brigadier general of the Continental Army on October 13, 1783, of Thaddeus Kosciuszko, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

TREATMENT OF JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the City Council of Cambridge, Mass., condemning the persecution of, and alleged atrocities committed against, members of the Jewish faith in Germany, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Boston, Roxbury, and Worcester, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the persecution of Jews in Germany, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I also present a number of telegrams which I have received from various organizations in Pittsfield, Mass., namely: Troop 13, Boy Scouts of America; Pittsfield Zionist Organization; Young Women's Hebrew Association of Pittsfield; Branch of Pittsfield Jewish Congress; Hebrew Alliance of Pittsfield; Junior Hadassah of Pittsfield; Jewish Working Men's Circle of Pittsfield; Young Men's Hebrew Association of Pittsfield; Talmud Torah of Pittsfield; Hebrew Ladies' Aid Society; Pittsfield Chapter of Senior Hadassah; Zionist Organization of Pittsfield; and Pittsfield Mazrachi Organization; also, from the Jewish National Workers' Alliance, Branch No. 170, and Women's Branch No. 39, Fall River, Mass.; and from the Greater Boston Women's Association of American Jewish Congress, Boston, Mass., protesting against the atrocities committed against the Semitic race in Germany. I ask that these telegrams may be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have here a telegram from the Indianapolis Chapter of Hadassah, signed by Mrs. Louis B. Goulden, its president, protesting against the treatment of the Jews in Germany, which I ask may be incorporated in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., May 8, 1933.

Senator ARTHUR ROBINSON,

Washington, D.C.:

We earnestly request you in the name of liberty and justice to urge the United States Government to protest to Germany in the name of the American people against the outrages and cruel discrimination being perpetrated against the Jews in Germany.

INDIANAPOLIS CHAPTER OF HADASSAH,
Mrs. LOUIS B. GOULDEN, President.

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY RELATIVE TO SMUGGLING OF WATCHES

Mr. WALSH presented a letter from the president of the Waltham Watch Co., of Waltham, Mass., relative to investigations made by former Commissioner of Customs Eble and special agents of the Customs Bureau in connection with the entering of watches into the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALTHAM WATCH CO.,
Waltham, May 1, 1933.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We call your attention to a situation important to the watch manufacturers of the United States. There are about 10,000 unemployed men and women in this industry.

Investigations by former Commissioner of Customs Eble, by special agents through Nathaniel G. Van Doren and John W. Roberts, have been going on for several years.

These investigations have repeatedly disclosed an organized conspiracy between Swiss watch manufacturers and their agents in the United States and Canada and confirm the suspicions of American watch manufacturers and customs officials, resulting in many convictions.

For instance:

Evidence of collusion on the part of Government employees at the appraisers' stores in New York City.

Undervaluations, as in the case of Bulova Watch Co., $45,000 fine, and Benrus Watch Co., $100,000 fine, both of New York City. (1933.)

Smuggling of Swiss watches into the United States from Canada found through seizures made at Rouses Point, October 1930.

Three thousand Swiss watches smuggled in stationery in August 1932.

Swiss watch movements, smuggled in cases marked "Chocolates", August 1932.

Approximately 25,000 Swiss watch movements smuggled in bales of rabbit skins, October 1932.

Swiss watch movements smuggled in various other ways. For example, Paul Rabkin, July 1930.

Bootlegging of watches and their parts from Switzerland amounts to a loss of revenue to the United States Government, estimated at from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year, and it is estimated this vicious practice prevents the yearly sale of from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 American-made watches.

In Switzerland the industry is subsidized by the support of efficient horological schools and by loans of very considerable amounts of money.

The policy of the Government to sell at auction watches seized by the Customs is tending to break down the American industry, for they seldom bring at auction a sum equal to the duty they should pay and their destruction would prevent flooding this market and thereby supply employment to our workmen.

If the Customs could be permitted to compel all watches be numbered and certificates required, showing each watch imported had paid the proper duty, it would protect the buyer as well as the American producer.

The collusion said to exist between the Swiss makers and their domestic distributors might well be a fit subject of conversation between the Swiss Minister and the Department of State.

This appeal is made to you, even in these busy days, because of its great importance to a concern, long existing in your district, and, as you know, capable of employing many thousands of people.

With assurance of high regard, sincerely yours,

F. C. DUMAINE, President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1129) to amend sections 361, 392, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, and 412 of title 46 of the United States Code, relating to the construction and inspection of boilers, unfired pressure vessels, and the appurtenances thereof, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 61) thereon.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1518) providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 62) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 510) to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 63) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LONERGAN:

A bill (S. 1650) amending section 74 of the Judicial Code (U.S.C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 147); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 1651) for the relief of the estate of Anton W. Fischer; to the Committee on Claims.

FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SYSTEM

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill to establish a Federal credit union system. I present a statement in explanation of the bill which I have prepared and ask that the statement may be printed in the RECORD at this point and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal credit union system, to establish a further market for securities of the United States and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. SHEPPARD and ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the bill, is as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY A BILL TO AUTHORIZE THE ORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNIONS AND FEDERAL CENTRAL CREDIT UNIONS

Definition: A credit union is a cooperative bank organized within and in each case limited to a specific group of people, self-managed by officers chosen by and from the specific group in meetings in which each member has a single vote, operating under as strict supervision as do other forms of banking, supplying its members with (1) an excellent system for accumulating savings which enables them (2) with their own money and under their own management to care for their own short-term credit problems at normal interest rates, with all of the resultant earnings reverting to the members as dividends on their savings in the credit union and as surplus. No one outside the specific group can have anything to do with the specific credit union directly or indirectly.

History: The first credit union was organized at Flammersfeld, in Germany, in 1848. The plan spread rapidly from Germany throughout the world. In 1909 Massachusetts enacted the first credit union law in the United States. Since then 37 States have enacted similar laws. In 1932 Congress (Public, No. 190, 72d Cong.) enacted a similar law for the District of Columbia. There are approximately 2,000 credit unions in the United States, with over 300,000 members and resources of better than $50,000,000. There is nothing new, strange, or experimental about the credit union.

Record during depression: While these credit unions all operate subject to annual examination by State banking departments (in the District of Columbia under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency) and are managed by the working people and small farmers who compose them, they have come through 3 years of extreme depression with practically no failures, establishing the finest record ever established by any form of banking in times of similar stress.

Samples: There are, for example, over 300 credit unions composed of postal employees in as many post offices; there are 28 credit unions of employees of the Rock Island Railroad, and credit unions on over 20 other systems; the Municipal Employees' Credit Union of the City of New York has over 14,000 members and resources of $2,000,000, with a perfect banking record for 15 years; there are 16,000 employees of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. who have over $2,000,000 in their eight credit unions; members of the American Farm Bureau, the National Grange, the Farmers' Union, the American Legion, etc., are organizing successful credit unions. There are many fine credit unions operating within church parishes, etc.

The bill provides that credit unions of the sort carefully developed by much experience with the administration of the State laws may be organized anywhere in the United States under Federal supervision. The first part of the bill follows closely the method of credit-union organization and operation provided for the District of Columbia by Public No. 190, Seventy-second Congress. There is nothing in this part of the bill which develops any new form of practice or procedure. Its importance is that it would enable a rapid credit-union development at a time when as never before in our history the need for such development is very great. Part II of the bill, also following good credit-union procedure, provides for the possible organization in each State of one central credit union under Federal jurisdiction. This would accomplish two purposes: (1) It would supply credit unions with a central depository under their own control and operating under good credit-union practices which would constitute a further and important safeguard for credit unions now often curtailed in their opportunity for service by the failure of their banks of deposit. The central credit unions provided by this bill would be so restricted that they would avoid automatically many of the banking practices which have resulted in bank failures. Further, it many times happens that a large credit union accumulates greater resources than needed for its small loans demand while another credit union in good condition in the State has a larger demand than it has resources. The Federal central credit union would make it possible to keep all credit-union funds operating for the credit relief of credit-union members. This bill is offered as a substantial contribution to a better banking system for average city workers and farmers. It would greatly stimulate the spread of a form of cooperative banking which has met every test of the depression successfully.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

Mr. SHEPPARD. I also introduce a bill to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act. I desire to have printed in the RECORD at this point and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the bill an explanation of the bill which I have prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1640) to amend section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act by authorizing Federal Reserve banks to receive deposits from credit unions was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. SHEPPARD and ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the bill is as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY A BILL WHICH SEEKS TO AMEND THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT IN SUCH FASHION AS TO PERMIT CREDIT UNIONS TO DEPOSIT IN FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS AND UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS TO BORROW FROM FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

In 37 States of the United States, under the supervision of State banking departments, and in the District of Columbia, under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency, credit unions operate in accordance with State laws and an act of Congress. Each credit union is a cooperative society organized within a specific group of people, self-managed, functioning under the same rules as State banks, supplying its members with (1) an excellent system for saving money, which enables them (2) with their own money and under their own management to take care of their own short-term credit problems at normal interest rates. The need for such service among the working people and small farmers, who compose the credit unions, is, particularly in this time of great stress, obvious. There are approximately 2,000 credit unions, well spread throughout the United States, and their number is rapidly growing; they have over 300,000 members and resources of better than $50,000,000. While self-managed and composed of men and women hard hit by the depression and operating under the examination of State banking departments, they have come through the depression to date with practically no failures, establishing an unexcelled and rarely equalled record for honest and efficient management. Each credit union does its banking business through a bank of deposit, and during the depression the credit unions have had to absorb serious losses due to the failure of banks. This bill seeks to give credit unions the protection which would be incidental to the right to deposit in the Federal Reserve banks; it also seeks to give a credit union a right to borrow from a Federal Reserve bank to the amount of its deposit in said bank plus the par value of securities of the United States, which it may hold and offer as security for its loan together with an assignment of its deposit. The enactment of this bill will assist a great many credit unions, which are now seriously disturbed by the condition and curtailment of service of the banks with which they have done business.

AMENDMENT TO THE POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM ACT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Further, I introduce a bill to amend section 4 of the Postal Savings System Act, and I ask that a brief explanation of the bill which I have prepared may be printed in the RECORD at this point and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1641) to amend section 4 of the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing the Postal Savings System, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. SHEPPARD and ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the bill is as follows:

STATEMENT TO ACCOMPANY A BILL WHICH SEEKS TO AMEND THE POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM ACT IN SUCH FASHION AS TO ENABLE POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS TO ACCEPT DEPOSITS FROM CREDIT UNIONS

Credit unions are accumulations of the small savings of working people. The Postal Savings System was created to afford a method whereby small savings could be effectively protected. During the depression it has many times developed that a credit union has greatly needed a safe depository in order to be able to carry on its normal business. This bill extends the use of the Postal Savings System to credit unions for that purpose.

GASOLINE-TAX BILL—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GORE and Mr. LONG each submitted an amendment and Mr. TRAMMELL submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H.R. 5040) to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S.Res. 77) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate and the President pro tempore be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills of the Senate or House of Representatives during recesses or adjournments of the Senate during the first session of the Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I understand, this resolution is similar in language to the one that we adopted each year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. We have heretofore had similar resolutions. The purpose of the resolution is to make it unnecessary for the Senate to remain in session from time to time, when it has no other business to transact, in order to enable the Vice President or the President pro tempore to sign bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJUSTMENT OF VETERANS' COMPENSATION

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement issued at the White House and published in the Washington Post of May 11, 1933, setting forth some modifications of the rules which are going to be put into effect with reference to veterans' compensation.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As a result of conferences between the President, the national commander of the American Legion, Louis Johnson, and the Director of the Budget, the following conclusions have been reached.

As a result of the application of the veterans' regulations, it now seems that the cut in compensation of service-connected World War veterans with specific injuries has been deeper than was originally intended. The regulation and schedules in this respect will, therefore, be reviewed so as to effect more equitable levels of payment. Careful study also will be made of the other regulations and their effects.

By reason of the burden incident to rerating, and in order that undue hardship will not be imposed upon veterans in their application for adjudication of their cases, regional offices of the Veterans' Administration will not be closed, as has been reported, except where it has been clearly demonstrated that regional facilities are not necessary.

It is not contemplated that Government hospitals will be closed pending a careful, studious survey of the entire hospital situation. This, of necessity, will require considerable time.

These conclusions are in line with the President's original statement that the regulations and schedules would be drafted so as to effect the most humane possible treatment of veterans truly disabled in war service.

STEPHEN EARLY.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH BEFORE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on Saturday evening, April 29, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] delivered an address before the American Society of International Law at the Willard Hotel. The Senator from Utah was introduced by Mr. Scott, president of that society. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the Senator from Utah and also the introductory remarks of President Scott.

There being no objection, the address and the introductory remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS OF PRESIDENT SCOTT

President SCOTT. The second speaker of the evening, ladies and gentlemen, was to have been Senator PITTMAN, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. We thought we would have a symposium of the treaty-making powers, the power that negotiates, the Secretary of State, may I say, who proposes, and the chairman of the Senate committee or the body under his direction, but we are distressed to hear that Senator PITTMAN was called away. You have had the pleasure of hearing the Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, which, if not a coordinate body, a treaty-making power, nevertheless holds the purse strings so that if the House be not satisfied with the terms of the treaty, the money to execute the agreement is not forthcoming.

We had thought that we would learn here tonight from practical people the way the affairs of the Nation should be conducted, and we have real concern, however, that the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate could not be with us.

Senator THOMAS of Utah, a newcomer to the upper branch of the Legislature, is with us, and while he will not replace the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, he will speak in his behalf. Senator THOMAS makes a very special appeal to us. He is one of our very oldest—I cannot say exactly he was cradled in the Society of International Law but I can say, however, that he has been for years past a regular member, regular in his attendance, and on various occasions he has been present at the meetings of the conferences of teachers of international law and related subjects. He is a member of the executive council of the American Society of International Law, and more than that, a member of the executive committee. So I think I have made my claims clear that he is really one of our own, and that you may see what one of our own really looks like when he lives at a distance from the Capital of his country and grows up with the growing far West. I have the pleasure of introducing to you Senator THOMAS of Utah. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF HON. ELBERT D. THOMAS, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF UTAH

Senator THOMAS. Dr. Scott and ladies and gentlemen, I am in no sense worthy of a place on this program tonight, and in about 2½ minutes I shall prove to you that I am ill-prepared for such a place. I am glad that Dr. Scott did not introduce me as an outright substitute. I have been a substitute so many times in my life that I am frightened whenever anyone suggests it, for I have even gone through the experience of having a chairman announce: "I am sorry to have to present to you tonight as the speaker, ELBERT THOMAS."

President SCOTT. We are happy to hear you.

Senator THOMAS. As a substitute I must confess to you that I was never the first thought of anyone. Both my mother and my father thought in terms of a girl, and then when I got down to the time of marriage I am sure I was not the first thought of my wife, but I am happy to report to you that I was accepted as her last thought, and trust that I may remain that—but I suppose I had better not dwell on that subject.

I am going to talk to you from a text for a moment or two. In your readings from Oppenheim's International Law you will remember that he sets out several morals of history which he accepts as canons in the development of international law. In his fifth moral he says something like this, that "a progress in the development of international law wants time to ripen."

It is that thought which I would leave with you tonight. The question as to how things are going to ripen is extremely important to us who are dealing with international-law concepts. Shall the law develop in the spirit of its letter? that is, in a spirit of litigation, of contest; or shall it develop or be developed in a spirit of growth, recognizing its constant evolution? It is, of course, the latter spirit that we all hope to see recognized, and for its ultimate consummation we may wait. In the accomplishment of a real genuine growth of that sort may I not add something to what has been said tonight about neighborliness. The countries of the world are now, from force of circumstances, whether we wish it or not, neighborly both in time and space. Shall we not accept neighborliness of spirit also? We are neighbors in fact; can we not be neighbors in attitude? I like this concept of neighborliness, and we, I am sure, want to follow President Roosevelt's lead and be good neighbors. This may be accomplished in reality if we recognize the advantages of true neighborliness. To recognize the existence of a neighbor is one thing; to fight or persecute a neighbor is still another thing; to forbear with him is a thing quite different; and to tolerate him is still something else; but to appreciate him means real neighborliness and a very, very much greater thing.

If I could hope to become prophetic, I would pray for the time when, as a result of the nationalistic spirit that has grown up in the world, we may through generation after generation of international law develop an attitude and a spirit which may be called the spirit of appreciation, because much of progress depends upon this fundamental attitude. It is the way that we are going which counts quite as much as the place at which we arrive; and, surely, in all of these nations of the world, we must be able to find somewhere among every people an honest striving and an earnest determination to attain that thing for which we ourselves are striving.

I am sure, Mr. President, that no one has a more genuine feeling for you and for our aim than that which I may designate tonight as a spirit of true neighborliness through appreciation of our neighbors. I may illustrate this point by quoting to you a Japanese poem: "There are many trails which lead to the top of the mountain, but when once the summit is gained the same moon is seen." Are there not in other nations and in other countries those who are climbing up their various trails, attempting to attain the heights of true appreciation who will meet with us at the top and enjoy with us the attainment of a view of our accomplishment? Surely, we will find when we gain the summit of this mountain of international law that many others traveling different trails will view the same moon of our desire. [Applause.]

President SCOTT. Ladies and gentlemen, you can see what may happen to a far westerner if he joins early the American Society of International Law—he speaks with an unclouded dignity and grace, and clothes, if you please, his after-dinner remarks with such names as Oppenheim and his 10 resolutions, only laying before us, fortunately, one of the same, instead of the Ten Commandments.

I think, however, while your commendation is a refutation of his modesty, I nevertheless feel that he has been in a way unfair to your presiding officer of the evening. He seemed to intimate that he was the forgotten man, discovered on the mere occasion of the absence of the regular speaker on the program. Ladies and gentlemen, this is not so. I had prepared for you what I hoped would be the surprise of the evening, if not that of your lives; that is, after the regular program had been exhausted, that he should be called upon inadvertently as the child wonder of the American Society of International Law, an illustration of what may be made of a Utah man if he be caught young and if he limit himself to one wife, even though he is not accompanied by her on this occasion.

IMPROVEMENT OF BUSINESS CONDITIONS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the New York Times of May 10, entitled "Recovery in the Markets", together with a survey by the Associated Press indicating the revival of industry and showing the response by industry to the request of the President for increase in the wages of the American workingman.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, May 10, 1933]

RECOVERY IN THE MARKETS

No doubt it will be disputed hereafter whether the turn for the better in trade and prices was primarily a result of "inflation talk." Speculators have admittedly been busy, since Congressional debate on the inflation bill, in bidding up prices, on the ostensible theory that fiat-money issues would quickly follow the gold embargo. But prices were already rising for other reasons. Whatever the dominant cause, the fact of emphatic recovery is beyond dispute. Dun's index of commodity prices makes the rise in the average during April 4½ percent, the largest monthly advance in a dozen years or more, and the average works out about 1 percent higher than a year ago. Wheat has not only risen 30½ cents a bushel from the year's low price and cotton $43 a bale, but both commodities are selling substantially higher than a year ago. The Times's stock market "averages" have advanced 26 points from the low figure of March 2, and are now one third higher than a year ago.

These are largely the indications of the speculative markets, and in the matter of staple prices our impending wheat crop shortage has been a potent influence. But the indexes of actual trade have pointed in the same direction. Yesterday the Iron and Steel Institute reported April's steel production in the United States to have reached not only the highest monthly total in a year, but for the first time since the depression began, to have exceeded the output of a year ago. Thus far in May it has increased further, although steel production usually slackens at this time. Even more to the purpose is the fact that loadings of freight on the railways, which in the 4 past months had decreased 14½ percent from 1932, show for the closing week of April a decrease of less than 3½ percent.

The initiative for better business must have occurred before the talk of currency-tinkering began. The movement of recovery which began in the middle of March, has reflected the confidence restored by the Government's effective measures to surmount the banking crisis. Yet the numerous directions in which the present showing is better even than that of a year ago give reason for belief that, apart from the removal of immediate apprehension, a new spirit of confidence is beginning to prevail.

There were signs that a turn for the better was at hand even before the shock of the banking "moratorium" brought everything to a halt. The recovery which started last June, which affected primarily the course of commodity prices and the stock exchange and which continued longer than any similar movement since the depression period began, was sufficiently emphatic to show that "deflation" was spending its force. We can now see that the check to that recovery last autumn resulted from misgiving over the bank position. Insofar as that fear has been removed, this season's resumption of the recuperative movement would be natural.

If the business community thought that the wilder inflationist proposals would be adopted, such a resumption of the upward turn would have been improbable—except perhaps for the activities of speculators. The program outlined in some of the congressional speeches would wreck any industrial system. Even now much will necessarily depend on the manner in which the sweeping administrative powers over the currency are exercised. Despite the present evidences of better feeling in the industrial domain, there is a sufficiently trying period still ahead of us. But the inference reasonably to be drawn is that we have seen the worst of the reactionary movement, as has usually been the case in the fourth year of our major economic depressions.

[By the Associated Press, May 10, 1933]

American workmen marched back to their jobs by the hundreds yesterday—and many of them read notices at the door that wages were up 10 percent.

Encouraged by orders piling up and by price advances for their products, many employers decided to share the profits with their employees.

One company, Planter's Nut & Chocolate of Suffolk, Va., announced pay envelopes for lower-paid employees would be padded by 20 percent effective today.

There were several dozen other firms that added 5 or 10 percent to wages, or else planned doing so as they called back hundreds of employees dropped as long as 2 years ago, reinstated night shifts, or reopened long-closed departments.

Steel mills, barrel factories, automobile plants, rubber companies, clothing manufacturers—all of them were among firms that greeted pick-ups with screaming whistles that called men back to work.

Among the concerns that boosted wages: Supreme Shirt Co. of Philadelphia, 10 percent; Armstrong Rubber Co., 10 percent.

Monday E. L. Cord announced a 5-percent increase for his companies and the Norfolk Tire & Rubber Co. a bonus of 5 percent on weekly wages.

Many of the employers referred in announcing pay roll increases to President Roosevelt's admonitions in that respect and to the $3,000,000,000 public construction plan to revive business as completed by his advisors.

Here are some of the firms adding employees:

Commerce (Ga.) National Manufacturing Co. called back several hundred and began operating its mills at night; two barrel stave factories at Barboursville, Ky., added night shifts; the Briggs & Stratton Corporation increased operations from 3 to 5 days a week; the Magazine Ceramic Industry of Chicago estimated 10,000 men went back to work in glass, porcelain, enamel, pottery, and allied industries since April 1.

The A. C. Spark Plug Co. of Detroit added 200 men to help catch up with orders; the Washington Mill at Lawrence, Mass., of the American Woolen Co., reopened after being idle a year; tobacco companies at Richmond, Va., announced they had recalled 150 men, and small wood mills at Tonahawk and Muscoda, Wis., opened after being long closed.

From across the sea came reports that England's unemployment decreased 80,000 persons in April. Building, tailoring, and road building were some of the industries accelerated.

Increased operations in the steel industry—considered one of the most reliable of business barometers—provided good cheer in a dozen industrial sections of America. Automobile manufacturers were ordering steel and a publication of the industry predicted "a buying panic" was possible.

GREENVILLE, May 8.—More than 9,000 employees in 20 Piedmont South Carolina textile mills were given 10 percent wage increases today, reflecting better business conditions and "appreciation of the loyalty" of the workers.

Mills here and in Greenwood, Ninety-six, Woodruff, Renfrew, Liberty, Simpsonville, Easley, and Fountain Inn were affected by the increases.

Meanwhile, other mill officials were adding workers to the factory rolls while still others contemplated "wage adjustments."

Over the week-end the Greenwood, Mathews, Papola No. 1, and Grendel mills at Greenwood and the 96 mills at Ninety-six announced the increase effective today.

Today the additional announcements were made by the Brandon Corporation here for the Brandon and Poinsett mills here; the Renfrew at Renfrew; and the Brandon Corporation plant at Woodruff. The Woodside mills, with plants here, in Simpsonville, and Fountain Inn and the Easley mills, with 2 plants at Liberty and 1 at Easley, also jumped their employees' pay.

ORDERS PILING UP

Late today officials of the Victor Monaghan mills said their five plants would immediately increase wages of employees, but the amount of the increase was not specified.

The Woodside and Easley officials, in announcing the increase, said:

"This increase is not based so much on earnings but to show our appreciation for the loyalty of our help. They stood by us without a murmur, and we planned to remember them as soon as we could do so. We are doing that now, and on the prospect of better times we can announce this wage increase."

Officials of the Judson mills here said a number of employees had been recalled to work during the last few days and that orders were piling up.

W. J. Bailey, of the Clinton mills, said, when asked about wages in his mills: "We will have to wait and see how long this prosperity lasts. We only hope that it is not a flash in the pan. It looks like the genuine thing, but only time will tell."

Mill managements in other sections said business is improving.

30,000 GET RAISES

For the first time since 1929 announcements of wage increases today dominated the business news.

Half a score of concerns employing a total of 30,000 to 40,000 men have notified their employees in the last 24 hours of increases ranging from 5 to 10 percent. The announcements were made almost immediately following President Roosevelt's address of Sunday night in which he appealed for the cooperation of industry to increase purchasing power.

5 PERCENT BONUS

NORWALK, CONN., May 8.—Employees of the Norwalk Tire & Rubber Co. were notified today that they will receive a 5 percent bonus on their weekly wages. The company's announcement said:

"The Norwalk Tire & Rubber Co. announces a plan with a view to aiding the President's program of increasing purchasing power, whereby they will pay their workmen a bonus of 5 percent on their weekly earnings. This plan becomes operative simultaneously with the recent 5 percent advance in tire prices."

PAY UP 20 PERCENT

NORFOLK, May 8.—More than 2,000 men will have their wages increased by from 10 to 20 percent in the 26 mills of the Colombian Peanut Co., it was announced today.

The increase, inspired by President Roosevelt's appeal for higher pay in industry, was made effective as of May 1 and restores employees of the company to predepression salary and wage levels.

RAISED IN DELAWARE

WILMINGTON, DEL., May 8.—A general wage increase of 7 percent, effective next week, will be given 500 employees of the Standard Kid Co., it was announced today.

The company, a division of the Allied Kid Co., last January divided a $10,000 bonus among its employees.

BOOST AT DETROIT

DETROIT, May 8.—Officials of the American Store Equipment Co., with branches and subsidiaries in Detroit, Muskegon, and New York, announced today that all employees are to be given a 10 percent increase in pay.

BROKERS HOIST WAGE

NEW YORK, May 8.—J. S. Bache & Co., New York brokers, informed employees today that they will receive a 10 percent pay increase.

410 EMPLOYEES RAISED

UNIONTOWN, PA., May 8.—A 5 percent wage increase for the 410 employees of the Berkowitz shirt factory will go into effect immediately, officials announced today.

SHIRT FIRM PAYS MORE

ALBANY, N.Y., May 8.—More than 2,000 employees of the Artistic Shirt Co. are to receive 10 percent pay increases, effective today, it was announced by company officials.

The firm has plants in Albany, Troy, Kingston, and New York City.

[From the New York Times, May 11, 1933]

Unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation increased 23,572 tons last month to 1,864,574 tons on April 30, it was announced yesterday. It was the first gain reported by the company since October 1932.

Since the company's backlog is traditionally one of the most important barometers of trade, the rise was regarded in Wall Street as one of the most convincing indications of the improvement in the economic situation in the country in the last month.

In view of the sharp expansion in production last month, the rise in unfilled orders was gratifying to steel authorities. The entire steel industry increased its output to more than 24 percent of capacity, compared with about 15 percent in March. The United States Steel Corporation's rate of output was somewhat less than the average for the entire industry, but its gain was extremely rapid in the month, steel experts believe.

JOB REVIVAL SITUATION

By the Associated Press

American workmen marched back to their jobs by hundreds yesterday, and many of them read notices at the door that wages were up 10 percent.

The magazine Ceramic Industry, of Chicago, estimated that 10,000 men had gone back to work in glass, porcelain enamel, pottery, and allied industries since April 1. The A. C. Spark Plug Co., of Detroit, added 200 men to help catch up with orders; the Washington mill of the American Woolen Co., at Lawrence, Mass., reopened after being idle a year; tobacco companies at Richmond announced they had recalled 150 men, and small wood mills at Tomahawk and Muscoda, Wis., opened after being long closed.

Increased operations in the steel industry—considered one of the most reliable of business barometers—provided good cheer in a dozen industrial sections.

SHOE PLANT ON FULL TIME

BINGHAMTON, N.Y., May 9, 1933.—George F. Johnson, an executive of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co., told the Binghamton Press today that unfilled orders would put all factories of the corporation in Binghamton, Endicott, and Johnson City on full time and capacity production schedule for the better part of the summer.

TIRE WORKERS TO GET 10 PERCENT MORE

WEST HAVEN, CONN., May 9.—A 10 percent rise in all wages and salaries, with the prospect of more, was announced today by the Armstrong Rubber Co., tire manufacturers. James A. Walsh, the president, said the concern was working 24 hours a day to fill orders.

5 PERCENT BY DRESS CONCERN

PHILADELPHIA, May 9.—Biberman Bros., Inc., dress manufacturers, announced a 5 percent wage increase today for the concern's 600 employees.

STAVE PLANTS ADD NIGHT SHIFTS

BARBOURVILLE, KY., May 9.—Night shifts have been added by two barrel-stave manufacturing plants here to keep up with orders for beer-barrel staves.

350 GET JOBS AT LAUREL, MISS.

LAUREL, MISS., May 9.—The Masonite lumber byproduct plant here started operating at full capacity today after partial operations during the past week and following several weeks of complete idleness.

12½ PERCENT RISE AT AKRON

AKRON, OHIO, May 9.—P. W. Litchfield, president of the Good-year Tire & Rubber Co., said today that salaried employees in the general offices, who were cut 12½ percent when working hours were shortened sometime ago, were being restored to their former pay basis.

The Seiberling Rubber Co. announced that the factory was working at capacity 24 hours 7 days a week.

The General Tire & Rubber Co. last week went on capacity schedule.

AUTO ACCESSORY PLANT EXPANDS

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 9.—S. F. Briggs, president of the Briggs & Stratton Corporation, manufacturers of automobile accessories and motors, announced today the concern had increased its operations from a 3-day to a 5-day week basis, in line with the greater output in the automobile industry.

[From the News, Washington, D.C., May 9, 1933]

CHICAGO, ILL., May 9.—Effective tomorrow, all employees of the 11 companies controlled by the Cord Corporation will receive a straight 5 percent increase in wages, E. L. Cord announced today. The wage increase applies to 10,000 workers in 25 States.

In his announcement of a new program of expansion, Cord declared that President Roosevelt's recovery program "is well on its way toward its goal."

The increased wage compensation will affect the employees of the American Airways, Aviation Corporation, Auburn Automobile Co., Lycoming Manufacturing Co., Stinson Aircraft Corporation, Duesenberg, Inc., Spencer Heating Co., L. G. S. Devices Corporation, Columbia Axle Co., Central Manufacturing Co., and Limousine Body Corporation.

UNIONTOWN, PA., May 9.—A 5 percent increase in wages was placed in effect at the plant of the Berkowitz Shirt Co. here today, less than 2 weeks after striking employees had won cancellation of an order inflicting a 10 percent wage reduction.

BURGETTSTOWN, PA., May 9.—Resumption of mining activities in the Avella district collieries today called 900 coal miners back to their jobs.

[From the Journal of Commerce, May 11, 1933]

BUSINESS INDICES SHOW UPTURN

The general level of business activity, as reflected in leading indices, will again show an improvement over the corresponding week in 1932, preliminary indications show.

Electric power output for the first week of May was one half of 1 percent above last year. Car loadings remain somewhat below the 1932 level, as coal operations have not yet caught up, but the drop for the first week of May may be less than 2 percent.

On the other hand, such indices as steel production are showing a decided expansion, which will tend to place the level of general activity well above that of last year.

ADVANCE IN STEEL ORDERS

The rise of 22,752 tons in unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation is significant. It represents the first rise in such orders since last October. In the second place, it has been usual in recent years for a substantial drop to be shown in the total of unfilled steel orders during April, incident to higher operations and a seasonal decline in the placing of new commitments.

Further expansion of steel operations this month reflects a continued inflow of new orders to date. Another rise in unfilled orders for May is doubtful, however, because of the rapid rise in the rate of operations and seasonal influences. Rail orders could change the situation.

NEW PURCHASING POWER

Concrete evidences of the creation of new purchasing power as a result of recent price advances and expansion of industrial operations continue to come to hand daily.

Current compilations place the indicated increase in the purchasing power of the farmer, resulting from recent price advances, at approximately $1,000,000,000. This would be outside any additional funds that might reach the agricultural population as a result of the application of the farm bill.

Increase in steel operations of about 100 percent from the levels of several weeks ago will provide a corresponding expansion of income to workers in the steel plants. In many other industries reports of increase in working hours, advance in pay rates of employment of new workers point to increased buying power.

"THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS", ARTICLE BY FRANK R. KENT

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in this morning's Baltimore Sun is a very readable article entitled "The Great Game of Politics—the Last Ace", dealing with the emergency and especially the legislative program now before the Congress. I ask that the article from the pen of Frank R. Kent may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, May 11, 1933]

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS—THE LAST ACE

By Frank R. Kent

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Since Mr. Roosevelt's speech, the reassuring financial note of which was very well forecast by those observers in close White House touch, interest centers upon the bill for industrial regulation, which is scheduled to be presented with administration support in a day or so.

With this measure, it is said, the full Roosevelt legislative program will have been revealed. No further general legislation is to be presented at this session. The professors will rest their massive minds. Having covered the fields of finance, agriculture, transportation, and industry with bills embodying their theories for the remaking of our national life, they have little to do now save oversee the proper execution of their plans and await results. And whatever the trepidation among others, this, it may be said, they do with the utmost confidence.

It is quite clear that when—which will be shortly—the administration proposals are finally through Congress we will be launched upon a new era.

The legislative body will have transferred to the executive branch unrestricted and practically unlimited power to operate the country, and it will have enacted laws extending Federal supervision and control over every form of human activity outside of the professional classes. In effect, our system of government will have been largely remade and the national direction greatly changed. When the entire program is grasped it is an astounding picture, one which no man visualized 2 months ago, and of which there was scarcely a hint in either the Democratic platform or the Democratic campaign.

There is sound ground for asserting that while some of the things, such as the original farm relief bill and the grandiose Muscle Shoals-Tennessee Valley scheme, were in mind before inauguration, neither the President nor his professional advisers had any notion of the extent to which we would be carried when he took office. It was the bank crisis that presented the opportunity, made it all possible, and, perhaps, rendered it necessary. Such, at any rate, is the argument. The elevator was on the bottom. The country and Congress were badly scared. It was a chance in a thousand for the enactment of a program, and no one will contend that the chance has not been fully seized. The interesting part is that it has been achieved with the enthusiastic, if not wholly comprehending, support of the people, and a minimum of criticism. Only in a few isolated instances has a statesman or a newspaper had the hardihood to speak out clearly in opposition. Public sentiment has been and is behind the President, and so are the professors.

And now, the last card for the grand-slam bid is about to be dealt in the form of the industrial regulation bill. It was at first called the Wagner bill, and able Senator WAGNER, of New York, was its sponsor, but the professors and a good many others have now aided in its preparation and it is greatly expanded. The 30-hour week Black bill is to be sidetracked to make way for this far more comprehensive measure, the trend of which is toward a true socialization of industry, by which private ownership and operation will be retained, but Federal supervision and planning established. The provisions of the bill have not yet been disclosed, but those best posted say it is designed to encourage industry to organize, regiment, and regulate itself under governmental supervision, as to production, wages, and hours of work.

It is regarded by some as a companion piece to the farm relief bill and is held to be equal to that measure in its scope and potentialities. The action of industry toward self-regulation is to be voluntary, but it will be made very much to its self-interest not to be recalcitrant. To put the plan in full operation, it is said, will require a good many years, but once launched upon this experiment there can be no retracing of steps until it has been fully made. Mr. Roosevelt meant this proposal when, on Sunday night, he spoke of the Government's seeking not control but a "partnership" in business. It is the last card in the new deal—but it is an ace.

CARE OF VETERANS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD an article from the Dayton Journal of May 7, 1933. It contains a picture of a disabled veteran discharged from the Dayton Hospital in his underwear. The clothing which he had been wearing in the hospital had been taken from him. I will read just one short paragraph from the veteran's statement:

Next, the Government told me I would have to turn in the only clothes that I have in the world. I told them in there [pointing to the quartermaster's building] that if I did I would have to go home in my underwear, and they told me that they could not help that—that "orders is orders."

I ask that the entire article may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Dayton Journal, May 7, 1933]

VETERAN TURNS IN SUIT UNDER NEW UNITED STATES RULING—LEAVES SOLDIERS' HOME SANS OUTER GARMENTS, THUS COMPLYING WITH LETTER OF THE LAW

"Orders is orders. You will have to take them off," and off they came, as can be seen in the above photograph taken at the National Military Home Thursday afternoon. The picture shows P. M. Long, 3214 Courtland Avenue, as he appeared after turning in his suit of clothes given him by the Government when a resident of the home.

"So this is the 'new deal' we heard so much about", he commented bitterly as he posed reluctantly for a picture.

"Well, I was one of those who demanded a change, and I got it—I ought to be satisfied," he added.

"First, the Government notifies me that my $24-a-month pension for 75 percent disability was cut to $12 a month, and then I was notified that I would receive my last pension check of any kind on the last day of May.

"Next, the Government told me I would have to turn in the only clothes that I have in the world. I told them in there [pointing to the quartermaster's building] that if I did I would have to go home in my underwear, and they told me that they could not help that—that "orders is orders."

With that, he summoned what dignity he could and walked through the drives past Government buildings until he neared the Anderson gate, where a sympathetic motorist stopped and offered to take him home. Otherwise, he had planned to continue walking through the city.

As he walked, he held his head high, never glancing to the right or to the left, nor did he seem to hear the few comments made in his passing. One resident of the home shouted:

"I'll never do that. The Government will never get this suit from me." But Long, in his underwear, shirt tails flying in the breeze, strode on without answering.

For some time there have been reports that the officials of the home were requiring discharged residents to turn in their clothing, and that in several instances these men had left the home grounds in their underwear.

Col. Fred Runkle, governor of the home, said that the order was issued by the Veterans' Bureau at Washington in compliance with the provisions of the National Economy Act, which order stipulates that any man not entitled to residence at the home must turn in all clothing issued him by the Government.

"I do not know anything about any men going out of here without their clothes," he said, "for I know that they are given a reasonable length of time to look around and get relief from some other source, but the clothing must be turned in in all such cases."

It was a more elaborated statement of the curt "orders is orders" statement given Long by the employee in the quarters-masters building.

PROVISIONS OF LAW

The law provides that any man eligible for the home either as a resident or as a "sleeper out" who gets $6 a month or more is not entitled to clothing and must turn in what clothes he has issued him by the Government, the governor said.

In Long's case, he is still classed as getting $12 a month, although he draws his last check May 30. It is presumed that because he drew $12 on April 30 he should have been able to provide himself with clothing.

"How can you do it with a wife and three children and not enough to eat?" he asked this writer. "I can't pay rent and have not done so since last fall. If it was not for the good nature of my landlord, I would have been out in the street before now."

Mr. BYRNES subsequently said: Mr President, this morning the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] had inserted in the RECORD an item from the Dayton (Ohio) Journal making certain statements with reference to the management of the military home at that place causing a veteran there to leave the home in his underwear. The newspaper story, with the picture of the soldier, justified the statement of the Senator from Indiana. It impressed me as rather unusual that a photographer should be on hand to take the picture of the soldier, and so I made inquiry of General Hines' office as to the story. I learned that the Veterans' Administration had investigated the case and I now ask unanimous consent that, immediately following the publication of the newspaper story submitted by the Senator from Indiana, there may be printed the report submitted after investigation by the manager of the home at Dayton, Ohio, and also the report of General Wadsworth, who has been in charge of the homes for a number of years. These reports set forth the facts with reference to the manner in which the veteran left the home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina state, in a word, just what the facts are?

Mr. BYRNES. I am very glad to say that the Veterans' Administration reports that this ex-service man went into a clothing store and stated:

That he wanted to turn in some clothes. Some newspaper cameramen—

According to the report which I am reading—were standing near the clothing store and had been waiting approximately 20 minutes. Long went into the clothing store and turned in his clothes. The clothing clerk who works behind the counter did not note that Long did not have on any trousers because he could not see below the counter and had no reason to believe that he was in this condition. Long did make some statement that he was going to turn in his shoes and did not have any others and the clothing clerk told him he would not accept shoes from a member and let him go out without shoes. He immediately left and as soon as he stepped outside of the clothing store his picture was taken. He walked down through the camp for some distance and it is understood that his picture was taken twice more; whereupon he was picked up by an automobile and taken out of camp.

LXXVII—203

The report goes on to state that the bulletin which is attached and the regulations provide that no soldier shall be allowed to leave the home without clothes if he is in need, but that this man did not ask any official of the home for clothes and the cameramen who had been waiting for some time for his arrival at the store left with him after his picture was taken, and the story was published in the Dayton Journal of last Saturday. General Wadsworth's statement and the statement of Mr. F. C. Runkle, who is in charge of the home, are quite plain, and I think will satisfy every person who reads them, that there was no justification for the story which was published in the newspaper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES VETERANS BUREAU,
Dayton, Ohio, May 9, 1933.

From: Manager, V. A. Facility, Dayton, Ohio.

To: Director, National Homes' Service.

Subject: Member Perry M. Long turning in clothing.

This has reference to the case of Perry M. Long, a sleep-out member of this home, who turned in his clothing and whose picture appeared in the Dayton Sunday Journal of May 7 sans outer garments.

Immediately after this happened it was thoroughly investigated, and it was found that Perry M. Long, according to our records, receives an income of $24 per month disability allowance. He is a sleep-out member and is still a member of the home and has not yet been examined to determine his eligibility under the new law. On Thursday, May 4, Long went to the company commander and asked him for his roster card, stating that he wanted to turn in some clothes. Some newspaper cameramen were standing near the clothing store and had been waiting approximately 20 minutes. Long went into the clothing store and turned in his clothes. The clothing clerk, who works behind the counter, did not note that Long did not have on any trousers, because he could not see below the counter and had no reason to believe that he was in this condition. Long did make some statement that he was going to turn in his shoes and did not have any others, and the clothing clerk told him he would not accept shoes from a member and let him go out without shoes. He immediately left, and as soon as he stepped outside of the clothing store his picture was taken. He walked down through camp for some distance, and it is understood that his picture was taken twice more, whereupon he was picked up by an automobile and taken out of camp.

It is very apparent, since the photographers were standing by waiting, that the whole affair was planned beforehand for publicity purposes. Attached is a bulletin issued at this station on April 22 explaining the new regulations concerning clothing for members of the home. It will be noted in this bulletin that it plainly shows that a man may have clothing when necessary for the protection of his health, or for sanitary reasons, or because of special need in any case. Long made no appeal to the company commander or any of the officials of the home. It was also pointed out in the attached bulletin that if a member wants to keep his clothing he must fill out form P-11 and submit it to the adjutant, who will make a check of the records and submit it to the manager for his approval or disapproval. Long did not comply with these instructions in any manner. He made no effort to retain his clothing, but simply turned them in of his own volition.

The statement attributed to the manager in the Sunday paper is misquoted and misleading, in that the manager explained the conditions of the new law but pointed out that in no case would a member be caused to leave the home without sufficient clothing. We have adopted the policy at this station that a member of the home either comes within a new law or the old law, and that in either case he would be allowed to retain clothing when it was a special need. As stated above, this particular case has been investigated thoroughly, and it was apparently done for no other purpose except for publicity.

Unsubstantiated rumors come to us that others are going to do likewise, but so far this is the only case that has developed, except one man who went to the mess hall without shoes, although he had shoes in his locker, and stated he was doing it to help out the Government economy program.

F. C. RUNKLE, Manager.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY,
Dayton, Ohio, April 22, 1933.

(Bulletin No. 22)

CLOTHING FOR MEMBERS OF THE HOME

The manager is in receipt of instructions as to the new regulations governing the issue of clothing to members who are eligible to be members under the law. They are published for the information of all concerned.

Clothing will be furnished beneficiaries in Veterans' Administration facilities only under the following conditions:

(a) When necessary for the protection of health or for sanitary reasons.

(b) When the beneficiary is in receipt of less than $6 per month from any source; or when the manager of the facility personally authorizes the furnishing of clothing because of special need in any case.

Clothing can be issued only under the above conditions. Those members who do not come within the foregoing regulations and who have clothing in their possession must turn them in to the clothing storehouse. Captains of companies will make arrangements with the clothing clerk so that this procedure will be carried out promptly.

All of those members who have clothing and come within the foregoing regulation must fill out form P-11 if they want to retain the clothing now in their possession. Captains of companies and hospital stewards have been supplied with these forms. They will furnish members of their companies or hospitals with these forms if they want to retain their clothing. Captains of companies or stewards must stamp or write the number of their company or the name of their hospital on each form. After the form has been filled out, it will be forwarded to the adjutant, who will check the records and submit to the manager for his approval or disapproval. They will then be returned to the company or the hospital, who will take them to the clothing clerk as the authority for the member retaining the clothing. After the clothing clerk has made notations on his cards as to the date of approval for the issue, the forms will be sent to the adjutant's office for file in the member's jacket. The captains of the companies and the stewards in the hospitals will complete this work by May 15, 1933.

Any member who does not now have clothing, who comes under the foregoing regulation, and who desires to draw clothing, must fill out one of the forms mentioned above and then the procedure will be the same as outlined above.

F. C. RUNKLE, Manager.

MAY 10, 1933.

From: Director of National Homes.

To: Assistant Administrator.

Subject: Conditions at V. A. Home, Dayton, Ohio.

Recent newspaper publication concerning the depriving member P. M. Long of clothing, stated that this member had been required to give up his clothing; that he had been taken to the storehouse and stripped of his outer garments, and there was published his picture in underclothing.

When this matter was brought to attention, I wired the manager, as follows:

"Wire immediately full details concerning taking in clothing of P. M. Long, covered in Sunday's Herald, especially the matter quoted as your statement concerning turning in of clothing. Are you giving careful consideration to needs of the individuals and allowing them to take clothing under paragraph 145 H.R.

WADSWORTH NATIONAL HOMES."

Have just received report which reads as follows:

"Re radio May 9. P. M. Long, a sleep-out member with income of $24 per month per our record, voluntarily turned in his clothing without contacting his company commander or anyone else concerning retaining it. Statement in newspaper misquoted. Careful consideration is being given to needs of the individual and allowing them to take clothing under paragraph 145 H.R. Long is still a member. Letter follows.

RUNKLE."

From Captain Salisbury, commissary of subsistence at the Dayton Home, who came here yesterday on special duty, I have obtained further information concerning this incident.

It was a carefully staged publicity stunt. This member, on his own volition, went to the storehouse and hastily cast off his outer garments and left the building. A newspaper photographer was stationed outside and took his picture. The member, in the newspaperman's car, then proceeded to the home gate where additional pictures were taken and the extravagant publications followed.

The survey of members is being carried out in accordance with instructions, giving members affected due notice and giving a liberal interpretation to paragraph 145 H.R., which allows the manager to permit needy members being discharged to take away clothing.

C. W. WADSWORTH.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5040.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 5040) to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation of the bill now pending before the Senate. I trust that Senators who desire to listen to the explanation will withhold any questions until I shall have concluded my explanation, and then, if I can do so, I shall be glad to explain further any parts of it that may be desired.

It will be noted that the first part of the bill pertains to the gasoline tax which was imposed in the 1932 act at the rate of 1 cent per gallon. That tax would expire on June 30, 1933. The committee provides in the first section of the bill an extension of that tax for another year. It is to be hoped that by that time the Federal Government can withdraw from participation in the tax on gasoline.

Section 2 of the bill deals with changes in the postal laws. It fixes the rate on drop letters for the fiscal year 1934 and provides that the present rate of 3 cents shall be reduced to 2 cents. That is not optional with the President. That is fixed by the mandate of the Congress.

As to other powers that are granted in that section of the bill, the President is given authority, after survey and investigation, either to reduce or to increase postal rates, having in view economies and a balancing of postal receipts and disbursements. There are only two limitations upon those powers. One is that he may not fix a rate below 2 cents on first-class mail matter and the other is that the 2-cent rate as fixed shall apply to drop letters.

As to the other provisions of the bill, it was found in the application of the gasoline tax of 1932 that certain dealers were discriminated against and that sometimes a tax was unjustifiably imposed upon them. Upon recommendation of the Treasury Department we have cured such defects in the act. We made the tax applicable to all those things embodied in the manufacturer's so-called "limited sales tax." For instance, where a dealer buys from a manufacturer and the tax is passed on from the manufacturer to the dealer, the dealer will not now have to pay the tax where he sells the gasoline to another manufacturer, but the second manufacturer will pay it. I would not have Senators get the impression that there are two taxes to be imposed. It is only imposed in the last instance.

The bill changes also the application of the tax so that political subdivisions, States, counties, highway commissions, and so forth, are made exempt from the payment of the 1-cent gasoline tax. It was found in certain cases that a manufacturer had sold gasoline to a dealer, and when the dealer had sold it to some political subdivision, a State or county, or municipality, they had paid the tax and there was no recourse for the political subdivision to obtain a refund. We have incorporated in the bill a provision that enables the dealer, where the tax has been passed on to him and he sells the gasoline to a political subdivision of a State, to apply for and obtain a refund of such tax.

These are the administrative changes recommended in order to eliminate any discrimination in collecting the tax. There is another provision incorporated in the bill that affects lubricating oil, which is put in the same classification as gasoline in the matter of the elimination of the discriminatory provisions of the law in the collection of the tax.

There is also a provision that deals with fuel oils and ship's stores and sea stores. It was found that many of the vessels which carry on the foreign trade heretofore had bought their fuel oil in this country, but since the passage of the tax act they have changed their practice and are filling their tanks abroad in the ports of foreign countries, and we are losing that trade. A provision is recommended by the committee that in the case of fuel oil, ship's stores, and so forth, as involved in this class of foreign trade, the tax shall not be imposed. It will be seen from a reading of the bill that it does not apply to coastwise vessels at all, but only to those engaged in foreign trade.

Mr. President, the last provision of the bill deals with the electric-energy tax. It will be recalled that when the bill was before the House to extend the gasoline tax for another year an amendment was offered upon the floor of the House and was adopted by a very large vote, changing the method of taxing electric energy. I am telling Senators nothing new when I remind them that we had a fight here in 1932 over the imposition of this tax. The Senate imposed a 3-percent electric-energy tax, and it was finally adopted, to be collected from the consumer of electric energy. We applied that only on domestic and commercial energy; that is, electric energy used in stores and dwellings that are classified as commercial and domestic. There was no tax in the 1932 act imposed upon energy employed in industry.

The House adopted an amendment that took the payment of the 3-percent tax from the consumer and placed it upon the power companies, or at the source, so to speak. The committee had a great deal of discussion over that amendment. It was a very difficult problem to solve because many power companies appeared before us by their representatives and said they would be put out of business if such a provision were incorporated in the bill. A subcommittee was appointed to study the matter and report. The subcommittee reported to the full committee and we discussed it several days and finally have adopted and recommended to the Senate a provision for a tax of 2 percent on commercial and domestic energy, to be collected at the source from the power companies, reducing the House proposal in that respect from 3 percent to 2 percent. Then we have recommended an industrial electric-energy tax of 1 percent to be collected from the consumer. The Treasury estimates that there will be very little loss, if any, in revenue from the adoption of this procedure. We felt that such a provision was fair.

Again, we approve and recommend an amendment which makes the tax operative on September 1 of this year. The new tax will go into effect at that time. It was believed by the Committee on Finance, in the case of some of the smaller companies which said they would be driven out of business by virtue of a 2-percent tax upon them, that it should be provided that they might appear before the public service commission of their respective States and let the commission pass upon the question of whether the tax should be passed on to the consumer. The law will not go into effect, under the recommendations of the committee, until September 1.

That is a brief explanation of what the bill contains; and I shall now be very glad to answer any question any Senator may desire to propound.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the tax on electric energy will not go into effect until September 1?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. In the meantime the companies may apply to the State commission to have that tax transmitted to the consumer?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; or for an increase in their rates, as they may be advised.

Mr. BORAH. What changes were made in the House text with reference to that provision?

Mr. HARRISON. The House bill put a 3-percent tax on commercial and domestic energy, payable by the power companies and to take effect at once. The change has been made as I have previously pointed out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As I remember it, last year, when this question was before the Senate, the Senate voted to impose a 3-percent tax on electric energy and charge it to the producer and not to the consumer. Then the matter went to conference and the Senate conferees, in spite of what the Senate had done, agreed to let the consumer pay it. I presume they felt that they had reason for doing that, although the responsibility was finally laid at the door of some Member of the House, and so the tax was to be charged to the consumer. Some of us believed then that it should have been charged to the power companies. A large majority of the Senate believed that. Evidently the House has rectified that provision to a certain extent and now proposes to charge the tax to the producer.

I understand the Senator to say that the Senate Committee on Finance has reduced the 3 percent to 2 percent?

Mr. HARRISON. On commercial and domestic energy.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And the charge will now be levied against the producer rather than the consumer?

Mr. HARRISON. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. One percent will be charged the consumer of industrial energy?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. In that connection may I say that there was no tax on industrial energy in the 1932 act?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There was none?

Mr. HARRISON. No; there was none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am asking the Senator for information because I know he is very familiar with the subject. I have had a number of inquiries with reference to a 1-percent tax to be assessed against electric railways. Does the Senator call that industrial energy?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I think that is industrial energy.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I did not get the purport of the delegation of power to the President with reference to postal rates. Does that cover second-, third-, and fourth-class rates?

Mr. HARRISON. That is covered by section 2 of the bill.

Mr. FESS. Does it extend to all classes of mail matter except first class?

Mr. HARRISON. To all classes of mail. He had the power during the fiscal year 1932 to increase or reduce, with the limitations which I pointed out.

Mr. FESS. The rates put into effect would cease at the end of the fiscal year 1934?

Mr. HARRISON. The law would expire on June 30, 1934.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, going back to the question of the tax on electric energy—

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Senator from Ohio want to ask another question?

Mr. FESS. I will wait until the Senator from Idaho concludes. He may ask the question which I have in mind.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the bill provides that the entire tax on electric energy may be charged to the consumer?

Mr. HARRISON. No.

Mr. BORAH. Why not?

Mr. HARRISON. I say it may not. After the law goes into effect, before the 1st of September, and even after the 1st of September, if some power company should apply in the Senator's State or in my State to the public service commission, and that commission thinks it should be passed on to the consumer, they would have the power to order or permit that to be done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? The proposed legislation does not deal with that subject at all?

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It imposes the tax of 2 percent on the power companies?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that; and then it postpones the time of operation in order to give the power companies an opportunity to be heard before the Commission as to passing it on.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the reason for fixing the date as September 1, may I say.

Mr. FESS. Is any power given to the President here to increase the rate of the gasoline tax?

Mr. HARRISON. None at all; oh, no. We just extend the present 1-cent gasoline tax for another year. That is all that is done with that matter, except that we have cured some of the discriminatory provisions, as I pointed out to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Then the impression that we are continuing the 3-percent tax is incorrect; it is reduced from 3 to 2 percent on domestic use and 1 percent on industrial use?

Mr. HARRISON. We are reducing the tax on commercial and industrial energy from 3 percent to 2 percent and putting it upon the power company.

Mr. FESS. And adding 1 percent—

Mr. HARRISON. And adding 1 percent on industrial energy, to be collected from the user or consumer.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator recur to section 630? That section relates to a tax imposed upon fuel supplies, ships' stores, sea stores, and so forth, and provides that this tax shall not be collected on such stores used on war vessels either of the United States or of a foreign country. That is right; is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Then it goes on and refers to these stores and supplies used upon vessels employed in the fisheries or in the whaling business, and so forth. I take it this exempts from the tax only those stores used on American ships.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] offered this amendment, and I should like to hear his interpretation of that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the idea is this:

At the present time, ships under the American flag or foreign flags, engaged in the various services mentioned here, all have opportunity to buy their fuel oil at foreign ports, and since we have put a tax on that oil they have all been doing it. At the present time we are not getting any revenue out of vessels engaged in these services. We will not get any revenue out of them if this section passes; but Americans will get the business of selling to them, which at present is prevented by the imposition of the tax.

Mr. WHITE. To repeat my question, are foreign vessels employed in the fisheries or in the whaling business exempted from the tax on the use of these articles?

Mr. REED. I think they would be, and they ought to be, because at present they are buying their supplies abroad; and not only do we get no tax, but American suppliers do not get any of the business.

Mr. WHITE. Of course there are no foreign vessels engaged in trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. WHITE. The inclusion of that clause led me to believe that perhaps this second portion applied only to American ships.

Mr. REED. No; I should not so construe it. The reason for putting in ships plying between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States is that those ships touch, or can touch, at foreign ports, and can there pick up foreign oil tax-free.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator the origin of this suggestion?

Mr. REED. The origin was with some of the oil companies. Having received the suggestion from these companies, and feeling unable myself to detect any "joker" that might be in it, I submitted it first to the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and next to the Treasury Department, and was told by both of those authorities that the amendment seemed to them to be a proper one, and they saw no defect in it.

Mr. WHITE. Was it submitted to anyone having a special interest in the shipping of the United States? Was it submitted to the Shipping Board?

Mr. REED. No; I do not think it was, so far as I know; but I should think they would be very anxious to have it adopted. At the present time the trans-Atlantic liners which used to buy all their fuel oil in New York and other American ports are buying European oil in European ports, enough to carry them on the round trip. We are not only getting no tax out of those vessels but we are getting no business out of them.

Mr. WHITE. That relates to vessels in the North Atlantic trade.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. WHITE. But what about other vessels?

Mr. REED. I am told by one of the Senators from California that this will be very helpful to them in enabling them to sell to the trans-Pacific trade.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, it is an entirely new suggestion so far as I am concerned, and I do not know that I have any very definite notions about it. I am just suspicious about it; that is all.

Mr. REED. What suspicion has the Senator?

Mr. WHITE. I am not sure that I like to see foreign ships and American ships put on precisely the same plane respecting this matter.

Mr. REED. Well, at the present time neither of them is buying any American oil. We want to get that business.

Mr. WHITE. Is that an entirely accurate statement?

Mr. REED. No; I think that is probably too sweeping. I should say that the vast bulk of the business has been lost. There may be exceptions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this provision imposes any additional tax on American shipping?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; it does not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see how they could object, if it does not impose any additional tax on them.

Mr. REED. I do not see where they could have any objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Why should vessels engaged in whaling and the fisheries be exempt? They do not necessarily touch at foreign ports; do they?

Mr. REED. Because they can very easily do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where?

Mr. REED. Take a ship that goes whaling to the south Pacific Ocean: It can pick up its oil in a hundred places.

Mr. CONNALLY. I see no reason for exempting all the fishing industry and the whaling vessels when we make our coastwise vessels engaged in commercial pursuits pay this tax. I see no reason why a vessel doing business between the Atlantic and the Pacific, going through the Panama Canal, all of which is our territory, should be exempt from this tax.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; on the contrary, the whole Caribbean Sea is not our territory by any means.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Panama Canal is under our control.

Mr. REED. The Panama Canal is; but those vessels are in a position to pick up foreign oil, and we want to get the business for American producers.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not quarreling with the part with reference to foreign commerce; but I do not see any reason why we should exempt the fishing people and the whaling people from the payment of the tax.

Mr. REED. The whalers, I think, clearly ought to be exempted, because all of them go into foreign waters. The fishing ships may or may not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where would they buy oil if they were going into the South Polar or Antarctic region? There are no oil stations there.

Mr. REED. They pass a hundred ports at which tankers from Persia could fill them up, and in which tankers are situated that would be glad to have the business.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, when the farm relief bill was first introduced in the preceding Congress and also in this Congress, I strenuously objected to and voted against what was known as "the allotment plan", because it provided that the processing tax which should be levied for the purpose of raising the price of agricultural products should be automatically added to whatever tariff was existing on those articles. I said then that I believed it was a false principle, for I have always stood against a high protective tariff as interfering with reasonable commerce between this country and other countries.

When the bill came up in the present Congress, I opposed that provision because it was endorsing the Smoot-Hawley tariff and adding to it a greater tariff, in that it imposed on top of that tariff the processing tax. I never have voted for such a proposal, and I did not vote for this bill for that specific reason—that I did not believe it was in accord with the best interests of this country, and certainly not in accord with the Democratic principles that I have been taught and believe to be the correct principles of our Government.

This morning I find that I am vindicated in my Democratic stand, if the reports in the newspapers are correct. I read:

ROOSEVELT AGAINST IMPORT FARM TAX—PRESIDENT THINKS UNITED STATES SHOULD PRACTICE TARIFF TRUCE AS WELL AS PREACH

Keeping to the spirit of his proposed world tariff truce, President Roosevelt believes the United States should forego for the present the levying of an import tax on major agricultural products as provided in the new farm relief bill.

This was made plain yesterday at the White House, where it was also said the President did not believe it would be necessary to apply the import taxes before June 12, when the truce would expire.

America's first move at the world economic conference meeting on that date, it was made clear, will be to propose a new tariff truce to last as long as the conference itself.

The President's stand against using the power in the farm bill to increase the tariff while the preliminary truce is on ended considerable uncertainty.

Import taxes under the bill would be levied in an amount equal to the processing taxes provided on domestic wheat, cotton, corn, hogs, rice, tobacco, and dairy products. The processing tax is intended to give the farmer a greater return for his produce.

Here is the vindication:

The President's attitude was seen as indicating that the United States will "lean over backward" in avoiding any increase in the barriers to world trade.

Mr. President, I stood on this floor and pled with my Democratic colleagues not to forswear their righteous and ancient doctrine and endorse the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, which everyone here who went on the hustings during the last campaign vigorously protested against, and then come here and vote to endorse that bill and add twice the existing amounts to it. As a Democrat, I would not vote for the farm relief bill in spite of the fact that it had excellent provisions in it—2 of them par excellence; 1 my own, which was, of course, the greatest, and the other was the inflation provision. Yet I was perfectly willing to cast my vote even against these provisions, because they had embedded in them the spirit of destruction which has led us to our present situation.

Now, thank God, we have a President who sees the danger of this selfish attitude on the part of a great Nation like ours—the danger involved in erecting barriers between America and the rest of the world, and shutting out the trade of the world, and leaving us here with our great exports without a market, leading to reprisals on the part of all the other nations of the earth.

Now, there is to be a conference, to get the great sisterhood of nations together, to bring about that amity in trade relations which will make it possible for the United States to deal with the other nations of the earth on the basis of justice and international righteousness. Yet we here voted to include in the farm relief bill a provision under which—in order to help the farmer, for whom I have stood for 24 long years in this body, in an effort to aid them—we were going to invoke domestically the very principle against which from time immemorial the Democratic Party had fought.

Mr. President, I am glad to see that the position I have taken has been vindicated by the very logic of circumstances. We have called the nations of the earth together in order to bring about an agreement that will make the relations of the nations more amicable. Intolerable and inexcusable has been the tariff barrier that has been erected. Now the President, after the bill is passed, and is now ready for him to sign, recognizes, as every true Democrat recognizes, that we cannot live alone, and we dare not declare, at the behest of the great corporations, and those who can fix their prices and mulct the American people, that these corporations shall be left the lords of the destiny of the masses of the American people.

Mr. President, I want to reiterate that I was in favor of the farm relief bill, but I was not going to take the splendid sugar coating around that poisonous thing and swallow it, and I did not, and as long as I am a member of this body I will never vote for a high protective tariff. A man's loyalty to principle is shown by his willingness to make a sacrifice for it; and if he is not willing to make a sacrifice for it, he has no principle, political, or otherwise.

I am glad to see that we are now in the very dawn of an era which undoubtedly will witness the turn of the tide. A new era has come. The spirits of the people are already uplifted because they believe the dawn of a new day has come, and in the very first streaks of that dawn is a recurrence of the old Democratic principle that we shall not have a tariff embargo as between this country and other countries. I am glad that my democracy is vindicated.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5040) to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Mississippi for a moment? There is one provision of the pending bill in which I am intensely interested; that is, the portion relating to the tax on electrical energy for domestic or commercial consumption. May I ask the Senator has the mode of the payment of the tax been changed by this particular measure?

Mr. HARRISON. It has been.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask these questions merely that we may get the facts straight, because ultimately, not immediately, we doubtless will argue the proposition here.

As I follow subdivision (a), in line 12, on page 6, a tax of 2 percent is levied upon all producers of electrical energy.

Mr. HARRISON. A 2-percent tax is levied on the producers, so far as domestic and commercial energy is concerned, not as to industrial energy.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should have added that, so far as domestic and commercial consumption is concerned, 2 percent is levied upon all producers. Subsequently, in subdivision (a), on page 7, line 5, a tax of 1 percent is levied upon the users—

Mr. HARRISON. Of industrial energy alone.

Mr. JOHNSON. Upon energy used in other than domestic or commercial activities, a tax of 1 percent is levied.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Historically, because I know the Senator's familiarity with the facts, I want to get of record exactly what has transpired in the past.

The Senate has gone on record in the past emphatically in favor of what we termed the Howell amendment, by which a 3-percent tax was sought to be levied upon privately owned electrical companies. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Subsequently, when the conference was held upon the bill, that provision of the measure was stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true. In conference the tax was imposed upon the consumer and not upon the producer. That was in 1932.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator recalls that in the original amendment presented by the late Senator Howell, and adopted by the Senate, privately owned companies were the ones charged with the payment of the tax.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The Howell amendment, in its original form, as I recall it now, imposed the tax on the producers, but they only made them pay it where there was a net profit. That provision, at the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, was stricken out, and the tax was put upon gross receipts, without respect to net profits.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted the facts straight, because during the day unquestionably we will have for argument the provisions which are here presented.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator has stated the facts of history.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Under subsection (a) on page 7, the tax is levied on the users of electrical energy for industrial purposes, as I understand it.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. That tax applies only to such energy as is sold. I was wondering whether that provision went far enough to levy a tax on industrial energy used by the producer, such as a producer of electrical energy which is operating a street-railway system and using large quantities of electricity. That power would not be sold, and I was wondering how the tax would be collected on that energy.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say to the Senator from Georgia that I have an amendment, which I shall offer, to tax the use of electricity by those who produce it at the same rate as though they bought it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I see no other way whereby we can avoid discrimination against a purchaser who is not a producer.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that there was a good deal of discussion of that point in the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment. I have been detained from the Senate in attendance on a meeting of a conference committee and have not been here this morning, so I am not sure that I am offering the amendment at the right place, but I am going to offer the amendment and let it be on the table.

As I understand, the committee would strike out subsection (a) on page 5 of the bill. I do not understand that the amendment added afterward applies to that subsection alone. It applies to some other language. I am wondering whether I cannot offer a substitute for subsection (a) of section 5, on page 5, reading as follows:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold, payable from net income, but not otherwise.

That is the language of the amendment offered by my late colleague, Senator Howell, as I understand it, at the time we had up for consideration the last revenue bill. It went into the bill in that form, as I understand it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The former colleague of the Senator from Nebraska offered the amendment in the form in which the Senator from Nebraska now states it. The carrying out of that provision would have meant adding a 9- or 10-percent profit tax above the 13 $\frac{3}{4}$ -percent tax that is now being paid, or was then being paid, above any other corporate net income. On the floor of the Senate it was amended so that the 3-percent tax was a gross tax, regardless of net income, and that was the way the Senate finally passed it.

Mr. NORRIS. The words "payable from net income, but not otherwise" were stricken out?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to get it in the exact form in which the Senate adopted it and put it into the measure. Will I get it that way if I leave out the words "payable from net income, but not otherwise"?

Mr. COUZENS. I think so; but may I make a suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator's purpose would be accomplished if the Senate should disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. No; as I understand it, the House text applies to municipally owned plants as well as to privately owned plants. The language in which Senator Howell offered the amendment, and the language which I think was left in the bill as we agreed to it on a roll-call vote, 61 yeas to 19 nays, applied only to privately owned plants.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not sure of that; but there is no change in this measure as it passed the House from the bill that was passed by the last Congress, except that it transfers the payment from the consumer to the producer. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. I can give the Senator the exact language of the amendment as offered by the late Senator from Nebraska, Senator Howell.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to offer the language as it was finally agreed to and put into the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator has not the language before him, I have it here and can read it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the Senator read it?

Mr. HARRISON. The original language of the Howell amendment was as follows:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical-power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold, payable from net income but not otherwise.

As the Senate adopted it, the amendment read:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical-power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the only change made was to strike out the words "payable from net income but not otherwise"?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the form in which I want to offer it. As I understand the bill from the study I have been able to give it in the limited time since I have been on the floor here, that is different from the House text. The House text would impose the tax upon all electrical energy, whether sold by private companies or municipally owned companies.

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I think I can accomplish what I want to accomplish by offering an amendment to the House text. As I understand it, it is in order to amend the House text which the Senate committee undertakes to strike out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest to the Senator that the first amendment, on page 2, seems to be a clerical amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Then my amendment would not be in order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to be compelled to be absent this afternoon on account of the meeting of a very important conference committee, from which I cannot possibly absent myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 20, after the word "that", to strike out the words "for experimental purposes" and the comma, so as to read:

Sec. 3. (a) Section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and the following: "Provided, That such additional rate shall not apply on or after July 1, 1933, to first-class matter mailed for local delivery."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as an amendment to the House text—I think it will come in on page 5, after line 7, after the word "sold"—I will move to insert "by privately owned operating electrical power companies", so that it will read:

There is hereby imposed on electrical energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator does not need to put those words in.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator offers his amendment to the committee amendment, on page 7, his purposes will be served, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. We have a right to amend the House text before we vote on the committee amendment; and if the House text should be amended and we wanted to keep it in the bill, we would vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I state to the Senator that I cannot see any objection to offering the amendment on page 6 to section 615½, which begins about the middle of the page; and, to avoid any confusion, I ask unanimous consent that it may be offered to that part of the amendment recommended by the Senate committee.

Mr. BORAH. It does not seem to me that it would make sense there. Where is it the Senator proposes to insert the words?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will find the place on page 6, in the amendment reported by the committee, reading:

There is hereby imposed upon electrical energy sold on or after September 1, 1933, for domestic or commercial consumption—

And so forth.

That is the provision which, I think, the Senator from Nebraska desires to amend.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator from Mississippi is in error, because if the amendment should be placed there it would be practically equivalent to adopting the committee amendment fixing the rate, respectively, at 2 percent and 1 percent. That is the part that I want to protest against the Senate adopting. So if the Senator from Nebraska wants to offer the amendment, I think he has indicated the proper place, where it will not be confused with the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Michigan misunderstood me. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was offering the amendment as a substitute for the entire amendment reported by the Senate committee. Of course, the committee amendment divides the proposition into two parts. If the Senator from Nebraska offers the amendment to the committee amendment, it will be as a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. I am just a little bit in doubt as to whether there is one committee amendment or several. If I can offer my amendment as a substitute for the entire committee amendment on this subject, I should like to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee amendment pertaining to the tax on electrical energy runs from page 6, line 12, down to the end of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I have just been handed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] an amendment. I do not know whether he has offered it.

Mr. DILL. I have not as yet offered it.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants to offer the amendment, and it will accomplish the purpose, I am perfectly willing to let it go that way and to have it offered as a substitute for the entire committee amendment. However, I think it would accomplish the purpose if I offer the language I have read here in lieu of the committee amendment. So as a substitute for the committee amendment I offer this language:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold.

I believe that will meet it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator limit his amendment so as to make it a substitute for that part of the committee amendment which deals with electrical energy? The first portion of the committee amendment deals with the sale of ship supplies, and has nothing whatever to do with electrical energy.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to amend the provision having to do with electrical energy, on page 6.

Mr. REED. If that is understood, very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the portion of the bill to which the amendment applies.

Mr. REED. As the Senator from Nebraska stated his amendment I did not so understand.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield the floor, if desired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume, regardless of whether the 3-percent tax is paid on electrical energy used for commercial and domestic purposes, or whether it is divided, 2 percent on electricity used for those purposes and 1 percent on electricity used by industry, what the Senator is trying to drive at is to limit the tax to energy produced by privately owned companies?

Mr. NORRIS. Sold by privately owned companies.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that it makes no real difference so far as the Senator's purpose is concerned, whether we put his amendment in the provision as to 2 and 1 percent or as to 3 percent, as proposed by the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I am offering it as a suggestion—and the suggestion seemed to me to be a good one—as a substitute for the committee amendment if it can be agreed to as a substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. That changes the set-up of the amendment. The Senator will understand that the committee proposes for the House language a substitute, which is the same as his amendment, except for a little difference in language. Instead of a 3-percent tax on electrical energy we have divided it so as to provide a 2-percent tax, payable by the producer of energy in cases where it is used commercially and domestically, and 1-percent tax when used industrially, the tax to be paid by the consumer.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to strike them both out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. NORRIS. My amendment, if agreed to, as I understand, would strike out both of those provisions. Is not that right?

Mr. BARKLEY. It would strike both of those provisions out; it would eliminate them, put the entire tax upon commercial and domestic users, and leave industrial users free of taxes. Is that what the Senator wants to do?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I wish to strike that out also; and that is in the committee amendment, as I understand.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand this is the difference: The committee has made certain recommendations. A tax of 2 percent on commercial electrical energy to be paid by the producer and a tax of 1 percent upon industrial electrical energy to be paid by the consumer. The Senator offers in lieu of that a substitute putting a 3-percent tax on commercial, domestic, and industrial energy sold by privately owned institutions.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COUZENS. And to be paid by the producer.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. That would have the effect of putting in the bill the exact language, word for word, which the Senate put in the bill which was passed a year ago.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. May I suggest that when we passed the act of 1932 it did not include manufacturing use? If the Senator means what he just said, he wants to extend the field from private, domestic, and commercial use to manufacturing use. I do not think the Senator intends to extend the field, and if he does intend to extend the field I shall have to object, as I objected in the committee to imposing this tax upon manufacturing plants for the reason that it brings about an unfair competitive condition which the Treasury and the Finance Committee have always tried to prevent. In other words, it places a tax on the little fellow who is compelled to buy electrical energy, while the large companies which produce their own electrical energy are exempted. The Senator, I am sure, does not want to accomplish that.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think that the provision which the Senate adopted last year was wrong in any particular?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I think it was exactly right.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am trying to bring about—to insert the same language in the pending measure which the Senate inserted in the bill pending a year ago.

Mr. COUZENS. I think Senators on the other side are confusing the issue, because they want the Senator to offer his amendment to the committee amendment, while the committee amendment takes off the 3-percent tax and makes it 2 percent on electrical energy used commercially and privately, the tax payable by the producer, and imposes a tax of 1 percent on energy used industrially, the tax to be paid by the consumer.

Mr. NORRIS. I propose to strike that out.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I want the Senator to do, but the Senator from Mississippi wants the Senator to offer the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not think it fair for the Senator to say that we want to do what he has indicated. I merely made a suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, and I am not criticizing him at all.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator wants to get the issue before the Senate so that he can move to strike out section 6 beginning on page 6, line 10, and running to the end of the bill, and inserting his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I want to do. I seek to strike out the committee amendment and insert the language that we put in the bill of last year. It seems to me that would accomplish what we want, and we will then have in the law, if it remains in that form, the same provision that we had in the bill which we passed last year and sent to the House, but which went out in conference.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Virginia, if he wants to ask me a question. I am ready to yield the floor, if the Senator wants the floor.

Mr. GLASS. I simply want to ask for information, and either the Senator from Nebraska or the Senator from Mississippi may be able to give it to me. What is there in the proposed bill that requires the payment of this proposed tax by the producer rather than by the consumer? The Senator will recall that when the revenue bill in 1932 was before the Senate, the Senate adopted an amendment providing that the tax should be paid by the producer, but the bill was altered so as to provide that the tax should be paid by the consumer; and the Senate conferees yielded that point, although the Senate overwhelmingly voted to require the tax to be paid by the producer. I recall very distinctly, as perhaps the Senator from Nebraska does, that the Chairman of the Finance Committee stated textually—I have sent for the RECORD to verify my recollection of it—that under the provisions of the bill it would be impossible for the producer to pass the tax on to the consumer. As a matter of fact, that is exactly what the producer has done, and it has cost the consumers of this country $60,000,000 to pay the tax.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is mistaken in the narration of what actually occurred. As I remember, this is what happened: The Senate put on the bill that had come from the House—there was nothing of the kind originally in the bill—but the Senate put on the bill the so-called "Howell amendment", which I have now offered as a substitute. That amendment went to the House, together with all other amendments adopted by the Senate, and was sent to conference. The conferees brought back the provision that is now in the law. The House acted on it only in the conference report, and the law now specifically provides that the tax shall be paid by the consumer. That is what I am trying to get away from by this amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and that is what I should like to get away from.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the adoption of my substitute will bring that about.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to correct an error I made in the colloquy with the Senator from Nebraska. I stated that when the Senate originally adopted the electrical energy tax in 1932 it did not include energy used for manufacturing, for the reason, as I thought at the time, that such a tax would create an unfair competitive condition. However, I find I was in error; that as the Senate adopted the amendment it included all electric energy, whether used for manufacturing or for commercial or domestic purposes. The conferees, and I think properly so, eliminated the tax on electrical energy consumed in manufacturing.

Mr. NORRIS. The conferees eliminated it all.

Mr. COUZENS. I mean they eliminated that feature of the tax; they eliminated the tax on electrical energy sold to manufacturing plants and left the tax on electricity used commercially, that is by stores and on electricity used for domestic purposes, and placed it, as the Senator knows, on the consumer.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COUZENS. I made the statement a while ago that I should like to see the same provision adopted that was approved by the Senate in 1932; but I made an error in that, because it included a tax on electrical energy used in manufacturing, which was an imposition on the little producer who cannot install his own plant because it would exempt the big producer who has his own power plant and therefore would pay no tax.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that I get the Senator's point, but he can reach it very easily by adding a proviso to the amendment that the tax shall not apply to the particular kind of energy that he wants to exempt.

Mr. COUZENS. That is true. I should like to point out to the Senator the way the conferees last year framed the language with respect to the use to which the energy was to be put. In section 616 of the act as it was finally agreed to in conference it is provided:

There is hereby imposed a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the amount paid on or after the fifteenth day after the date of the enactment of this act, for electrical energy for domestic or commercial consumption furnished after such date and before July 1, 1934.

That was set forth, the character of electrical energy to which the tax was to apply, and it was to be collected from the consumer. It will be observed that it did not include manufacturing purposes. So I should like to see the Senator, if he could, draft this amendment in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the last remark of the Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator would meet the objection I have if he would adopt the language of the conferees so far as the industries to which it is to be applied are concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it now, though I may not understand it correctly, if I adopt the language agreed to by the conferees I would put the tax where it is now, on the consumer instead of the producer or manufacturer.

Mr. COUZENS. I did not make myself understood. I referred only to the uses to which it is to be put, and not to who is to pay the tax.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it meet the Senator's objection to the language I have offered if I should add "Provided, That this tax shall not apply to electric energy sold for manufacturing purposes"?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I will add that in order to satisfy the Senator. I will add to the language which I have offered as a substitute the following proviso:

Provided, That this tax shall not apply to the sale of electric energy sold for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator would then eliminate all manufacturers from the payment of any tax on electric energy.

Mr. COUZENS. They do not pay it now.

Mr. WHEELER. They do not?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; they do not pay it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, as modified.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska proposes the following amendment:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned, operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold: Provided, That this tax shall not apply to the sale of electrical energy sold for manufacturing purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think I am in favor of the amendment, but I should like to ask if it is certain that the amendment would lodge the tax upon the producer? Is that the way it was adopted last year?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way it was adopted. It is the identical language.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me say just a word about the effect of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Nebraska. What the committee has done has been to take the tax entirely off the backs of the domestic and commercial consumer. What the Senator from Nebraska now proposes is to increase the committee rate from 2 to 3 percent, to be paid by the producers, but to exempt all manufacturing concerns and to exempt all public-operated concerns. The result will be—if the Senator is as successful as he seems to have been in putting the United States into the electric-light business at Muscle Shoals—that a tax of 3 percent on the gross receipts of the competitors of that institution will be levied and paid into the Federal Treasury, which supports this governmentally owned electric-light institution at Muscle Shoals. In other words, we are taxing one competitor to raise funds to be used for the support of the other competitor.

In the farm-relief bill we tax the consumer to pay the producer, but in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska we are going farther and taxing the private competitor to raise money for the Treasury that is to support the public competitor. The committee takes the burden off of the consumer—there is no question about that desire being attained—but the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would impose a further penalty upon the private producer of electric light which in the long run and on the average would amount to a surtax on their present income tax of an additional 9 percent. By the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska we would in effect provide that whereas the corporation income tax of all corporations shall be 13¾ percent, as it is now, yet the electric-light companies' corporation income tax shall be 22¾ percent. I do not believe the Senate means to do any such unjust thing as that.

Furthermore, the Senator's amendment would exempt manufacturing concerns if they buy industrial current but does not exempt the trolley lines which are now in receivership or on the verge of it. The Senator from Nebraska does not exempt railroad companies which are having a bad time now. Many manufacturing concerns are far better able to pay the 3 percent tax than are the railroad companies and the trolley lines which will find themselves taxed under it. It is a wholly unjust discrimination.

Say what we will, in the long run it is the consumer who pays the tax under any phraseology, because it is the consumer's payment to the electric companies that furnishes the only means out of which any tax can be paid. If we levy this tax under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska or any other amendment, in the long run it will come out of the consumer's dollar, and we do not need to blind ourselves to that fact.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska would exempt from payment of the tax municipal plants which have gone into what might be termed private or proprietary activity?

Mr. REED. Oh, absolutely. The Senator from Nebraska would tax only privately owned companies. Here is an example of the result. In Los Angeles there are two kinds of plants, one owned by the city and one owned by the Southern California Edison Co. I have not, nor have any of my friends so far as I know, any vestige of interest in the privately owned company. The municipal plant will sell absolutely tax free. The privately owned plant would be subjected to the 3-percent gross tax, which is equivalent to 9 percent of its net. The stockholders of the Southern California Edison Co., I am told, are mostly owners of a very few shares each, being people who live in that community. Except for the form of ownership, it is almost as publicly owned as is the city plant, and yet we tax one and exempt the other. I see no fairness in that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it is his thought that municipalities should be exempt from the tax; and the Government, itself engaged in the manufacture and sale of electricity when it becomes the proprietor, the same as a private corporation, shall be exempt from the tax, and only private corporations shall pay the tax?

Mr. NORRIS. Let us take Los Angeles, or Tacoma or Seattle, Wash., or Springfield, Ill., for example. I concede that it would be an outrageous thing for the Government of the United States to tax a subdivision of government, and that is what we are going to do unless we have this exemption. I doubt very much whether it is constitutional to try to levy a tax on Los Angeles. If the Supreme Court was right when it said that the power to tax is the power to destroy, we can put the city of Los Angeles off the map by this method. We can prevent it from manufacturing electricity for its own people. We can do that with Tacoma and with any other municipally owned plant in the United States. In other words, one branch of the Government would be levying a tax upon another.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator recognize that there is a distinction between Government functions and private or proprietary functions? Suppose the city of Springfield should erect a plant for the purpose of manufacturing pig iron. Certainly that is not a governmental function. Obviously it seems to me it ought to pay a tax as other owners pay taxes who are operating pig-iron plants, a tax not only to the city but to the county and the State. If municipalities are to engage in all sorts of proprietary undertakings absolutely free from what might be conceived to be legitimate governmental functions, it seems to me that pretty soon we would drive out of business all privately owned institutions. I am merely asking the view of the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has imagined a condition that everybody knows will never materialize. The manufacture of electricity or the distribution of gas or the operation of a street railway is an entirely different thing from the manufacture of shoes. It is necessarily of itself a monopoly. People disagree as to whether there should be any such thing as a municipally operated electric-light plant, but evidently if a city wants to manufacture electricity and supply its own people with electricity, it is conceded, I think, that it is a proper function of municipal government. Nobody has tried to prevent it except in an election, when an effort was made to prevent the issuing of bonds or something of that kind, which is a very fair way to test it. I am not finding fault with those who oppose it.

If the city of Los Angeles wants to supply its people with electricity, it is conceded everywhere, I think, that it has a right to do it. Are we going to tax that city for doing something for its own people? The people have a right to have a plant to manufacture and sell electricity to the people within the city limits. In the city of Tacoma, Wash., there is no competition. The city itself maintains a monopoly of the business. As a matter of fact, it pays more taxes to the city than a private company would pay if it owned the same facilities. It pays 7½ percent of its income, as I remember, in lieu of taxation. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] will correct me if I am in error. There are dozens of other cities where there will be no tax whatever for municipal purposes, but the city will collect instead a percentage of the income from electric light and gas that they supply to their own people. In reality, it is a tax either way. They really take it out of one pocket and put it into another pocket.

But here comes the Federal Government and says to this municipality, "We are going to tax you if you supply your own people with electricity." I suppose there might be an instance where a city would go into the manufacture of boots and shoes. If they did, I do not think we ought to tax them. I am not in favor of doing anything of that kind, and I do not know that anybody else is. The question the Senator propounds, it seems to me, has no practical application to the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator was discussing the Constitutional phase of the matter. May I ask if my memory is wrong that the Supreme Court has differentiated between the types of municipal services in determining what municipal salaries are subject to the Federal income tax?

Mr. NORRIS. I think they have. I think they have held that the salaries of these municipally-owned plants are subject to income tax; that the tax can be levied on them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was wondering whether that discrimination would probably follow through in respect to this question.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know. As I look at it, that has not anything to do with this matter, although there may be a question—there has been in the past—as to whether an income tax levied by the Federal Government applies to employees of municipally owned plants, and I think the Supreme Court have held that it does apply.

If I had my way—that is a different subject, of course—I would amend the Constitution so that an income tax would apply to everybody's salary, whether he is a governor or a member of a legislature or a member of a court. I think it ought to apply. My own idea is that not an unreasonable but a little more liberal construction of the present Constitution would admit that. I am not arguing that question, because I admit that it is settled. The courts have settled it the other way.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. As I understood him, this amendment reenacts exactly the so-called "Howell amendment" with a modification as to manufacture.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As the amendment was read by the clerk at the desk, I find that a certain part of the Howell amendment was left out. The words in line 4 of the Howell amendment are "payable from net income but not otherwise."

Mr. NORRIS. That is not in my amendment. I left that out because the Senate last year, when it adopted the so-called "Howell amendment" and made it part of the law, itself omitted those words. They were not in the law. The Howell amendment was amended to that effect before it was agreed to. I wanted to offer the amendment in the same form in which we had adopted it before.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I always find myself embarrassed when I am compelled to differ from any view expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], because I am usually in sympathy with him on propositions of this sort; but I do find myself in disagreement with him on this amendment, and I desire very briefly to explain why I do.

I wish to say to the Senate that the Finance Committee found this tax the hardest nut to crack that it has had to deal with in a long time. I dare say that, considering the amount of revenue involved and its isolation as a tax item, the committee gave more consideration and more discussion to it than any one item that had been before the committee in a long time, finally resulting in the appointment of a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. REED, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. COUZENS, and myself; and we tried to explore every possible substitute for the tax, because none of us liked it in any form.

Personally, I should like to lift the tax altogether, because there is no way in which it can be assessed that will not result in injustice to somebody; but the Treasury Department convinced us that they could not dispense with this $32,000,000 in revenue. It is one of the important items that go to make up a balanced Budget, and the committee was confronted with the duty of trying to adjust and shift this tax in such a way as to result in just as little injustice to any large group of people as was possible.

A year ago, when we had this bill up, as we all recall, the then Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Howell, offered this amendment on the floor of the Senate, and it was adopted. We all realize here how easy it is to adopt any amendment that taxes power companies. The very mention of the word "power" is a sort of an obnoxious reference here, and we take fright and vote according to our fears sometimes; and I am as guilty as anybody else. The amendment was adopted by the Senate, putting the 3-percent tax on the producer. I dare say that the average Member of the Senate had very little information before him at the time he voted as to the effect that tax would have on a large number of companies in this country.

The bill went to the House with that amendment in it and was sent to conference. In conference the tax was left at 3 percent, but it was provided that the consumer should pay it. It was added to the electric-light bill every month; and I have been paying my tax, as almost everybody else has upon whom it was levied.

Personally I will say that I have had no complaint from anybody in my State with reference to this tax. I think it was recognized as an undesirable, obnoxious tax, but one of the many obnoxious taxes made necessary in order to try to balance the Budget. So far as I am concerned, I will say frankly that if I were sure this tax would not be extended beyond July 1, 1934, I should be willing to vote here to leave it as it is, because I do not think it has operated unjustly upon anybody; but in the House this amendment was added on the floor when the bill was under consideration there. The Ways and Means Committee considered it, and took no action with reference to it; but on the floor of the House an amendment was adopted transferring the 3-percent tax to the producer.

The Finance Committee held a hearing on this measure, and I think they were convinced that the transfer of this 3-percent tax to the producer will undoubtedly work a hardship on many small electric-light companies. I have in my office what I regard as indisputable evidence of the fact that that will be the case out in Illinois, and the statement is backed up by the Federal judge who appointed receivers for some of the companies. I know, of course, that anybody who mentions the name "Insull" here is tarred with the same pitch, psychologically, that tars Mr. Insull; but the Federal judge out in Chicago who appointed Mr. Edward N. Hurley, whom we all know and respect, as one of the receivers of some of those companies, stated that after assuming the duties of receivers they have brought about all the economies that are possible; they have used a meat ax, and have reduced expenses to the very bone; and that many of the small companies which he represents as receiver cannot stand a 3-percent increase in their operating expenses.

Let us take a company that we will say produces $100,000 worth of energy a year, upon which this 3-percent tax is levied. Many of them are already "in the red", as we know. Many of them are on the verge of receivership; but let us assume that any given company selling $100,000 worth of electrical energy without the tax would make $3,000 net in any year. Now we come along and slap on this 3 percent tax, which amounts to $3,000, and we take that $3,000 of net income in a tax, and in that case it amounts to a 100-percent levy upon net income. There is no way to escape it.

Let us assume that it is a larger company and sells $1,000,000 worth of energy per year. The 3-percent tax amounts to $30,000; and in some cases that $30,000 may represent 50 percent of the net income, or it may represent all of it, or it may be taken in such a fashion as to add to an already-existing deficit in that company. Now, what are we going to do about it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator will remember that several representatives from Iowa, as I recall, who represented independent companies, not connected at all with the large companies, in their testimony before the committee indicated that many of these small companies were either "in the red" or ready for receivership, or that their income was so small that the 3-percent tax would confiscate the entire revenue. Those are the smaller companies, the independent companies, a great number of them in Iowa and in some of those Mississippi Valley States.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the testimony also showed that the ownership of these companies is not in any holding company.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not in Wall Street. It is not in any great city. The testimony showed that in the main these small companies in the State of Iowa—and I take them as typical—are owned by the community, by small stockholders in the neighborhood, serving a village or a county seat or a small town.

When we consider that a 3-percent gross tax may amount to more than 9 percent on net income, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has indicated, but if it amounts to only 9 percent on net income, it increases the income tax to that particular type of corporation from 13¾ percent to twenty-two and a fraction percent, I think as a matter of justice we ought to consider whether it is desirable to single out any one type of corporation upon which we will increase the income tax by 9 percent, assuming that that is a fair average of the increase which would result.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Long in the Chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator tell us what percentage of the gross revenues of the electrical business in this country is realized from the little companies to which he refers?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot.

Mr. BONE. Would it exceed 5 percent?

Mr. BARKLEY. The total gross sales income of the companies supplying domestic and commercial energy is about two and a quarter billion dollars. I cannot give the Senator the proportion.

Mr. BONE. My impression is that it would not reach 5 percent of the total, perhaps not to exceed 3 percent of the total.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not in a position to answer the Senator's question. I do not know what percentage it may amount to, whether it amounts to 5 or 10 percent; but, anyhow, it is a substantial amount.

The subcommittee and the Finance Committee, in dealing with this hard situation, undertook to compromise between the consumer and the producer so as to work as little hardship on both as is possible. Recognizing, as I think the committee recognized, the impossibility of passing this tax on to anybody without working a hardship on somebody, it figured out that it probably would be possible for most of the companies to stand for a 2-percent gross tax—that is, those that are supplying domestic and commercial energy—and whereas there had been no tax levied upon the consumption or the production of energy for industrial purposes, in order to raise the other one third of the revenue necessary to make up the amount now received, the committee decided to put a tax of 1 percent on the gross sales of electric energy used for industrial purposes, to be paid by the consumer.

I take it for granted that the reason why this tax was not levied on industrial energy in the first instance was because of the difficulty in which our manufacturers found themselves. We were in the midst of a depression. Labor was largely unemployed. Many manufacturing companies found it difficult to go along. Many of them were closed; and we did not desire to make it more difficult for manufacturing concerns to continue in business and employ labor. Therefore we eliminated them from the payment of this tax.

I think the amendment which has been brought in here by the Finance Committee is the fairest division that can be made of this tax. There are some 6 or 7 States in which there is no great amount of regulation of utility companies; there is no public-utility commission; and in those States, of course, it will be an easy matter for the light company or the power company to pass this tax on to the consumer.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do.

Mr. FESS. Would the tax on industrial energy be paid if a manufacturer were producing energy for his own consumption and not for sale?

Mr. BARKLEY. It would not. There is no basis upon which a percentage tax can be levied on that energy. The manufacturing establishment does not sell it. It produces it in its own plant, by its own power, and consumes it there.

There is, therefore, no basis upon which we could levy a tax of 1 or any other percent, and the only way in which we could tax that sort of a concern would be to tax the use of electrical energy or impose a tax per kilowatt-hour, or thousand or million kilowatt-hours, and if we undertook to invade that field we would find ourselves under the necessity of requiring that a meter be put in every little electrical plant, every Delco lighting system, every unit for the generation of power on a farm or in a store or anywhere else, and we would find ourselves in a labyrinth of insurmountable difficulties which would make it impossible to administer such a law.

Mr. FESS. If an industry of that sort shows any profit from the use of electrical energy, it would be subject to taxation under the income-tax law.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would be subject to the same tax they would pay upon any other profit they made from any other enterprise or any branch of their business.

Mr. President, we postpone the transfer of this tax to the producer until the 1st of September in order that the companies which cannot bear the increase may have an opportunity to go before their State regulatory bodies and make such showing as they can upon applications for increases in their rates presumably sufficient, and only sufficient, to absorb the tax itself.

If we may assume—and I think we may assume—that some of the companies would be able to make a showing that would entitle them to an increase in rate, it seems inconceivable to me that we must assume here in the Senate of the United States that all of the 40 or 41 State regulatory bodies have not performed their duty in keeping electric-light rates down as low as possible.

If they have allowed the companies in their States to charge the public a rate high enough to absorb a 3-percent gross tax, then they have not been performing their duty,

They have not compelled a sufficient reduction in the rates of public-utility companies if they have allowed them to charge rates high enough to absorb a 3-percent gross tax, which, in many cases, will amount to a tax of 20 or 25 or even 50, and in some cases as high as 100-percent upon their incomes. I think it would be entirely out of line for us to assume here that these public commissions in the forty-odd States where such commissions exist have been derelict in the performance of their duty.

Mr. President, I know how easy it is for men to charge in public addresses that public-utility bodies, the commissions in the States, have not performed their duties, that they have permitted the charging of rates which were too high; but to make that wholesale charge in the Senate of the United States is equal to making a charge that the people themselves are incompetent to govern themselves, or to select honest men to administer the laws with reference to the regulation of the charges of public-utility corporations.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. If the companies were given opportunity to go before the public-utility commissions for increases, it would only open the way to do what has been done before, place the tax upon the consumer, rather than on the producer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was coming to that. If we may assume that any number of State regulatory bodies, after hearing and showing by a company, would allow them to increase the rate high enough to absorb the tax, then the consumer would pay it, and we would not benefit the consumer by shifting it from him to the corporation, but we might damage him by making it possible for such corporations, using the increase allowed to absorb a 3-percent tax, to increase the rate even higher. My experience and observation have been that whenever any public regulatory body allows a private industry to increase its rates to the people enough to absorb a tax, they go just as far beyond that as is possible in the collection of the toll from the public.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Why should we exempt the payment of taxes by a municipal corporation that is in the power business?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that we have to divide that power into two classes. The power which is generated and used for purely public purposes, like the lighting of streets, I do not think ought to be taxed, but where a municipality engages in the manufacture of power for profit and charges private consumers for the use of that power for private profit, I cannot see where we have any right to discriminate as between it and a private corporation doing the same thing in the same community.

Mr. FESS. That is my view exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think we ought to tax any municipally owned plant on any public function it performs.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask a question for information?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Is the tax proposed by the committee now upon the producer or upon the consumer of the electricity?

Mr. BARKLEY. The tax as proposed by the committee, beginning on the 1st of September, so far as energy for domestic and commercial purposes is concerned, is imposed on the producer. The 1-percent tax which we levy upon industrial electrical energy, as proposed by the committee, is to be paid by the consumer. The whole tax now, as the Senator knows, is paid by the consumer.

Mr. GLASS. I know, and I have reviewed the controversy which ensued in the Senate at the time the former bill was before us. The Senate adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, the late Mr. Howell, and instructed its conferees to insist upon that amendment, which imposed a tax on the producer and not on the consumer, and the Senate conferees were bitterly reproached for abandoning that position to the House. I wanted to be certain whether the tax this time is to be paid by the consumer or is to be paid by the producer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the tax on domestic and commercial energy is to be paid by the producer. As the Senator knows, there is now no tax on industrial energy produced by electricity.

Mr. President, I think I have said about all I can say about this proposition. I have no interest in it one way or another. It so happens that in my State there is no public body authorized to regulate electric-light rates, and I am quite satisfied that if this tax is put on the producer it will be added to the light bills of the consumer, so that so far as my State is concerned the people will receive no benefit from the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska or the proposal of the Senate committee itself, because I have every reason to suppose that, if it is necessary, the companies will pass it on to the consumer.

Regardless of that fact, however, regardless of how we conceive notions with reference to misconduct on the part of power and electric companies, it seems to me that there is an element of justice of which we cannot lose sight, in view of the conditions which now exist, and the testimony which has been brought before the Committee on Finance with reference to many of these companies, which may represent a small proportion, I will say to my friend from Washington, in the amount of energy produced, but represent a much larger proportion in the number of companies that will be involved, because we cannot compare a hundred small electric-light companies in small towns, privately owned, which produce only enough energy to light the homes and probably the streets of the villages or small towns, with the great, giant corporation, which controls, as a holding company or otherwise, the distribution of large units of electrical power in commerce or in industry in the United States. While the proportion of money involved in the sale of the energy may be small, the proportion that is used and the territory which it covers are large, and we ought to consider that.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the committee had any accurate information as to the number of small privately owned power companies.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe the committee got that information. It may be in the hearings. I think we asked some witness to put in a statement with reference to that, but we have been so busy on other matters that I have not had a chance to read the hearings since they were printed. I doubt whether the hearings contain that information.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may judge other States by my own, there are comparatively few, because most every one of the electric plants in Virginia has been gobbled up by the great and powerful corporations of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I think there were only a few, perhaps, but there were at least 3 witnesses who appeared before the committee, 1 a gentleman from Iowa, and 2 from New England, who stated that the smaller companies would be affected very much; but I do not think there were any facts put in as to the proportion who would be affected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as far as the straight 3-percent gross tax upon the distribution of industrial power affecting industry is concerned, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, if there was any virtue in the argument made a year ago that this tax ought not to be levied on industry because it would make it more difficult for industry to carry on during the depression, and employ the men it was able to employ, it would be even more true with a 3-percent gross tax upon electrical energy. The committee felt that a 1-percent tax upon the distribution of industrial electric power was sufficient, that we were making it easier for the smaller companies by reducing the 3 percent carried in the bill as it passed the House to 2 percent, giving them until the 1st of September to make whatever showing they can make before public-utilities bodies, in order that they might secure, wherever necessary, an increase in rates which might be essential to absorb the tax.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, merely for the RECORD, I should like to present some figures which have been handed me with reference to the income-tax returns of these companies. In 1930—and evidently it is worse now—there were 679 companies engaged in the production of electrical energy showing net incomes and 291 companies which showed deficits.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was for 1930?

Mr. HARRISON. That was for 1930. The 291 companies which showed deficits were evidently the small companies.

Mr. BARKLEY. The facts as to commercial activities show that there has been a decline since 1930 up to within the last week or two. There has been a slight increase in the United States as a whole during the last week, and, I think, the week before, in the use of electrical power. In other words, for week before last the decline in the use of electrical power was smaller than it had been for the week before and for the same week a year ago. Last week there was a slight increase over the week before of one half of 1 percent in the use of electrical power. But, taking it as a whole, I am quite sure that in 1932, and in all likelihood for the part of 1933 that has already elapsed, the conditions have been even worse than those referred to by the Senator from Mississippi, which shows that a considerable portion of the number of these companies, without regard to their size, were in the red in 1930, and I do not think that it can be claimed there has been any substantial improvement since that time.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have given, I hope that the Senate Finance Committee amendment will be agreed to, because I believe it is the fairest compromise between the two proposals, either one of which would work hardship on somebody, and we cannot claim that ours will not work hardship upon a large number of people in this country.

INVESTIGATION OF STOCK-MARKET ACTIVITIES

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate for a few minutes on the stock-market investigation and the securities bill. I should not break into the debate at this time except for the fact that I am compelled to leave the city for a few days.

I take this opportunity to make a few remarks in connection with the so-called "securities bill", S. 875, which has passed both Houses and is now in conference. The bill is aimed to put a stop to certain fraudulent practices, so common in the past, by which investors lost billions of dollars.

The United States is the only great industrial and commercial nation on earth which lacks a national code of law dealing with the creation and business conduct of corporations selling their securities generally to the public. In consequence, the Federal Government is without legal means to safeguard the American investor.

In the pending bill the authority of the Government rests largely on the fact that the mails are used in the transaction of this business and that it is, therefore, subject to certain regulations. Briefly, the high points in this bill are three:

First. That a sworn statement must be filed with the Federal Trade Commission before securities can be offered for sale, and substantial penalties are connected with any violation of the act.

Second. This legislation goes farther than to prevent misrepresentation; it makes it mandatory that the whole truth be told in a signed statement and also in advertisements or any publicity in connection with the sale of securities. It recognizes the fact that a half truth is a falsehood. This will be a new thing in American corporation law; it is in fact copied after the British law.

Third. The directors, underwriters, and issuing houses of the corporation provided for are personally responsible for misrepresentation and may have to answer in court for such misrepresentation.

STOCK-EXCHANGE INVESTIGATION

The Senate Committee on Banking and Currency started its investigation during the last Congress largely on the theory that the bears were breaking down the market. The committee did not find much basis for that, but did find much improper conduct on the part of those who had been trying to boost the market rather than on the part of those who had been trying to break it. The bear operations had long since passed.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

As the committee proceeded with its investigation it became more and more evident that the iniquities connected with the sales of stocks and bonds could not be limited to the New York Stock Exchange. The exchange was simply a place where the business was transacted. Its rules were lax and its management was often indifferent. Violations of its rules and of the New York State laws were of daily occurrence. The only penalty for the most flagrant violation, however, was that the speculator was denied the use of the exchange. There was no redress for the victim. In all fairness it must be said there has been a gradual improvement in the rules and practices of the exchange. But the changes have been only those forced by public opinion or by the New York State laws. Their rules seemed to be aimed toward providing for what they consider square dealing between the members of the exchange and to make sure of the solvency of members so that their obligations will not be unpaid. While strict rules have prevailed as to the conduct of members toward each other, only recently have they discovered that the public is also a party to stock-market transactions and has interests which should be protected. It seems to be a new idea to think first of protecting the investor in the stock market. Until recently they had been operating with the idea that the "buyer should beware", but this bill proposes also to place responsibility on the one who sells.

The pending bill does not in any way deal with the stock exchange. That matter has been left for subsequent and much-needed legislation. All the trouble, however, is not in the New York Stock Exchange, which is probably the best-regulated exchange in the country. This may not be saying much, but it means something by comparison. The New York Curb Exchange is now under investigation by the authorities of New York State.

Millions of shares are admitted to trading privileges on various exchanges throughout the country without any adequate examination of the companies which issue them or without imposing any responsibility upon the exchanges to keep currently advised of their condition. The New York Curb is notoriously guilty of this practice. When stock is listed on an exchange, a financial statement is required of the corporation, but even this is not required when stocks are "admitted to trading." It is generally done on motion of an interested broker who is a member of the curb or exchange.

Our first witness was Mr. Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, but we did not learn much from him. He denied categorically all bad practices and violations of their rules; he would not admit the possibility of anything wrong. He employed his technical knowledge to dodge issues and confuse the committee. The committee was compelled to depend on other witnesses to learn something about the practices and weaknesses of the New York Stock Exchange.

It has been a common saying among the wise ones that markets never go up; they are put up. "Rigging the market" is well understood among the traders but not by the public. Pools for the purpose of sending the market up or down are common, but we could not get much evidence from the president of the exchange on that subject.

STOCK-EXCHANGE PRACTICES

Mr. President, I have a report here from Mr. William A. Gray, who served as counsel for the committee during 1932. I ask that the portions of the report which I have marked may be printed in the RECORD. The report reviews the cases handled during the period of Mr. Gray's service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The excerpts referred to are as follows:

PERCY A. ROCKEFELLER

Percy A. Rockefeller admitted his connection with certain syndicates or pools and his testimony developed the fact that among those who would engage in these pool operations were members of the brokerage firms which constituted the New York Stock Exchange, these brokers being in the position to obtain inside information regarding the operations on the stock exchange in the particular stock in which the pools were interested. These pools were managed mostly by brokers, and among those who would be interested in the pools were those who were either officers or directors of the corporations whose stocks were made the subject of the pool transactions.

Mr. Rockefeller also stated that he, himself, had engaged in the practice of selling stock against the box; in other words, the selling of stock he did own but did not deliver, but which he would borrow for the purpose of delivery in the same manner as would be done in the case of an ordinary short sale. The vice of this practice, as will be shown in some of the concrete instances hereafter referred to, is that it is usually done in another name or in such a manner as to prevent the public from knowing that an officer or director in a certain corporation is disposing of his stock; and inasmuch as he naturally has more definite information as to the value of the stock than the public in general, this is to his advantage and very often to the detriment of the public who buys the stock which he sells without having an opportunity to obtain the knowledge which he possesses. This may or may not be an improper practice, but it is undoubtedly a decided disadvantage to the public who purchase stocks to buy the same from one who is selling it with information which the public cannot obtain. It might be likened very well to the playing of a game of cards with marked cards.

MATTHEW BRUSH

Mr. Brush, who classified himself as an individual trader, though he admitted having, at times, an interest in certain pools, gave some enlightening information to the committee. He stated that in his belief stocks could be manipulated; that heavy short selling in a declining market influences the market; and that short sellers will add to their short interests in a declining market, although at times the short interests increase with a rising market when the short seller is taking his position. He gave illustrations of how stocks might be put up just before the closing of the market (vol. I, p. 303).

He stated he believed, however, that the prohibition of short selling would bring a terrific swing in the market because those who wished to purchase would be limited in their buying to the purchase from someone who actually owned the stock. He acknowledged the existence of the pegging of the market and the practice of large operators to operate in other names in order that the activity of the trader might be kept secret.

THOMAS E. BRAGG

Mr. Bragg was a member of the brokerage firm of W. E. Hutton & Co. from some time in 1928 until October 1930.

He acknowledged his operations in a number of pools or syndicates, notably those that were conducted in Anaconda Copper and Radio stocks. The circumstances under which these pools were operated and the details thereof shall be referred to hereafter.

RADIO POOL

On March 7, 1929, M. J. Meehan & Co., a brokerage firm and a member of the New York Stock Exchange, sent out to certain persons a communication marked "private and confidential" and headed "Radio Corporation of America Common Stock Syndicate (new stock)." The communication contained a statement that the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co. was forming a syndicate to trade in the stock of Radio Corporation of America, and that it had reserved for the person to whom the communication was addressed a certain number of shares. The commitment of the syndicate was not to exceed 1,000,000 shares, "either long or short." The communication also indicated that the managers were to receive 10 percent of the net profits of the syndicate. The managers were to be Thomas E. Bragg and Bradford Ellsworth. Participation in this syndicate was composed of two groups—one formed through the brokerage firm of M. J. Meehan & Co. and the other through the brokerage firm of W. E. Hutton & Co. The participants in the pool through the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co. will be found in volume II, pages 468, 469, of the record; and among other significant names of the participants were Mrs. M. J. Meehan, wife of M. J. Meehan, and Mrs. D. Sarnoff, wife of the president of Radio Corporation of America.

The list of participants through W. E. Hutton & Co. will be found in volume II, pages 469, 470, 471, of the record; and among those who participated through this firm are G. D. Smith, wife of Bernard E. Smith; Vera Bragg, wife of Thomas E. Bragg; and Clifford Corporation, a corporation owned and controlled by Thomas E. Bragg.

The pool started to operate on March 12, 1929, and concluded its operations on March 19, 1929, during which time those who participated through the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co. made a profit of $3,217,570.03, and those who participated through the firm of W. E. Hutton & Co. made a profit of $1,502,310.68. There was also a participation in this pool by certain persons through the firm of Block-Maloney Co., another brokerage firm, which brought the entire profit through these three firms arising from the pool operations to $4,924,078.27. During the course of the operations

1,493,400 shares of stock were purchased and sold at a gross profit of $5,563,198.48, from which were deducted the management fees and certain other payments, leaving a net balance as heretofore stated. These other payments, amounting to $92,000, will be found in volume II, page 475, of the record, and could not be explained by any of the witnesses who were called, though the persons to whom these payments were made were not participants in the pool.

During the time this pool operated the stock rose approximately from a close of 91 $\frac{3}{4}$  on March 12 to a close of 109 $\frac{1}{4}$  on March 16, receding on March 18 to a close of 101, and on March 19 to 96 $\frac{1}{4}$ , the last 2 days representing the closing of the operations of the pool when they were disposing of a small balance of their holdings. Thereafter the stock continued to decline for several days, reaching a closing price of 87 $\frac{1}{4}$  on March 23 (vol. II, p. 473).

The prices which are referred to and which appear in volume II, page 473, of the record, are therein indicated as the high prices of the stocks for the dates mentioned.

On August 24, 1932, Mr. Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, made a statement to the governing committee and the members of the exchange regarding the investigation which was being conducted by your committee; and on pages 14 and 15 of his printed statement he calls attention to the fact that these prices were not the high prices on the days mentioned, and that in some instances the differences between the actual high prices and the figures given to the committee by its counsel were substantial. He set out these differences in detail.

The statement of Mr. Whitney having come to the attention of counsel, he immediately investigated the situation to determine what the actual facts were. The information, of course, was furnished originally to counsel by one of his investigators. It was found that the prices stated were not the high prices for the day, but were the closing prices for the day; and though it may have been that counsel inadvertently stated them as being the high prices of the day, it would have required but little investigation by Mr. Whitney to determine that as a matter of fact they represented the closing prices and not the high prices of the day, though the differences do not affect the picture that was presented to the committee, but show plainly the effect of the operations of the pool on the market prices.

It will be noted in connection with Mr. Whitney's criticism of the data furnished to the committee regarding the prices of Radio that he directs attention to the fact that after the pool stopped its operations and the price of Radio had returned to approximately 87, it again rose on March 26 to 95, on March 27 to 100 $\frac{1}{2}$ , on March 28 to 109, or within three quarters of a point of the high price reached during any time during the operations of the pool. Though this is a correct statement of the prices, counsel was reliably informed, but had not the time to make a proper investigation to present the facts to the committee, that after the pool which was investigated ceased its operations another pool was formed, which again brought about a rise of prices to those mentioned by Mr. Whitney. Upon this, however, counsel does not desire to make a definite statement, because of the lack of opportunity to make a proper investigation. Undoubtedly the prices of this stock rose and fell at times when the pool operations were not in existence; but, as has hereinbefore been stated, one cannot read the picture of the operations as presented to the committee without coming to the conclusion that something more must have been done than simply sitting idly by waiting for a natural rise in the price to occur in order that the stock purchased might be sold at a profit. The mere fact that during the operation of the pool, covering a period of approximately 1 week, 1,493,400 shares were purchased and then sold indicates the immense volume of transactions engaged in by the pool operators, which must have been managed in such a way as to influence the market prices of the stock.

A few brief illustrations of the publicity given to Radio during the time immediately preceding the activity of the pool interest in that stock and while the operations of the pool were continuing will be found in volume II, pages 517, 518, 519 of the record.

A significant fact developed by the testimony presented to the committee is that Esmonde F. O'Brien, a member of the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co., was, at the time of the operations of the pool, a specialist on the floor of the stock exchange, dealing in the stock of Radio Corporation of America. He was called as a witness, and though he denied that his inside knowledge, which he possessed by reason of his acting as a specialist in the purchase and sale of that stock, was used by the firm in its market transactions, one cannot help believing that the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co. was enabled to act with considerable more intelligence in its dealings in this stock by reason of the fact that a member of its firm was a specialist therein than had the situation been otherwise. Indeed, the New York Stock Exchange, by the adoption of a rule hereinafter referred to, since this pool operation was made public through the facts presented before your committee, has recognized and endeavored to correct the evil existing through the connection of the specialist with the firm operating in the stock in question; and one cannot read the story of the operations of this pool without coming to the conclusion that steps must have been taken by the experienced persons who were managing and controlling the pool which helped to manipulate the market and guide the prices in such a manner as would bring large profits to those interested in the pool.

Another evil which the existence of this pool brought to light is the trading by brokers on their own accounts, which trading may be and frequently is contrary to the interests of the clients whom they represent. This evil has been recognized by the stock exchange by the adoption of a rule, which will be referred to hereafter, since the presentation of the testimony on this subject before your committee.

GENERAL ASPHALT

The pool which was operated in General Asphalt is an illustration of several vices which existed in connection with certain stock-exchange transactions. The word "existed" is used because, after the production of evidence showing this and other transactions, certain of the vices were corrected by the stock exchange by the adoption of rules affecting them and prohibiting such occurrences thereafter.

The vices shown by the operation of this pool were the engaging in such transactions by the brokers themselves on their own account, some members of the brokerage firm in this particular instance, together with others who were interested in the pool, being officers and directors of the company in whose stock the pool operated, and having specifically, in this instance, knowledge of what the company intended to do with respect to declaration of dividends, which information was, of course, not available to the general public.

This pool lost money, but this was only because its operations were conducted up to the point of time when the stock market crashed in the year 1929 and thereafter, but the facts developed showed a decided advantage which the officers and directors of the corporation, by the declaration of dividends, gave to those interested in the pool.

The pool was formed by the firm of Luke, Banks & Weeks, a member of the New York Stock Exchange. Mr. Weeks, a member of that firm, was on the board of directors of the General Asphalt Co., and in May 1929 a pool to deal in the stock of that company was formed. The syndicate agreement authorized the managers to operate on either the long or short side of the market. The syndicate agreement will be found in volume II, pages 532, 533, of the record.

The pool was managed by Mr. Weeks; and among the participants were M. J. Meehan & Co., a brokerage firm; Jessup & Lamont, another brokerage firm; J. G. Mayer & Co., another brokerage firm; Horatio G. Lloyd, a partner in the banking firm of Drexel & Co., in Philadelphia, and the chairman of the executive committee of the General Asphalt Co.; Thomas Cochrane, a member of the banking house of J. P. Morgan; together with several trading corporations, among which was Lu-Ba-Wee Corporation, which was a combination of the firm of Luke, Banks & Weeks.

At the time the pool was formed, General Asphalt Co. was paying no dividends.

On August 27, 1929, the company sent out a letter to its stockholders indicating that consideration had been given to the question of dividends on the common stock and that certain changes were to be made in the financial set-up of the company. In November 1929 an initial dividend of $1, being based on a dividend of $4 a year, was declared.

The pool operated from May 17, 1929, until May 15, 1931, and during that time dealt in 500,000 shares of stock, winding up by a distribution of the stock remaining on hand.

In the year 1930 the General Asphalt Co., in which this pool held a very large interest and in which, as has been indicated, Mr. Weeks, the manager of the pool, was a director, and Mr. Lloyd was chairman of the executive committee, paid out $1,549,292 in dividends, whereas their net income for the year was $1,006,796. Of this amount paid out in dividends in the year 1930, the pool received $448,950 in dividends, which represents nearly one third of the amount paid out in dividends and nearly one half of the entire net income of the General Asphalt Co. during that year. In the year 1931, while Mr. Weeks was still on the board and still managing the pool, though the company itself showed a deficit in earnings of 41 cents per share on the common stock, dividends were still declared, from which the pool received $108,600.

All this Mr. Weeks characterized as a pure coincidence, but one cannot help drawing the conclusion that the existence of the pool and the personal advantage to those who were managing it and at the same time handling the affairs of the General Asphalt Co. had a great deal to do with the diversion of part of the surplus, if not part of the capital, of the General Asphalt Co. into the dividend channel.

The testimony produced with respect to the pool operations in this case also indicated another interesting thing.

Block, Maloney & Co., another brokerage firm, had an option to purchase from the syndicate a certain number of shares of General Asphalt Co. stock at a price which, when the option was exercised, was considerably below the then market price. This was explained on the ground that the option had been given verbally some time before and that the syndicate of necessity was compelled to make delivery of the stock at the price mentioned, notwithstanding the increased market value. But the significance of the transaction is to be found in an exchange of correspondence between the firm of Luke, Banks & Weeks and the firm of Block, Maloney & Co. The letter giving the option will be found in volume II, page 546, and the letter accepting the same will be found in volume II, page 544, which letter uses this language:

"Hoping that you will give us whatever assistance you can marketwise and assuring you that we will do our utmost for a successful culmination, we remain, very truly yours."

Though it was denied by Mr. Weeks that this transaction was one whereby the stock was transferred to Block, Maloney & Co. in order that the two brokerage firms in cooperation might engage in transactions for the purpose of manipulating the stock and "stabilizing" the prices, the language contained in the letter of Block, Maloney & Co. is certainly capable of that interpretation and is probably inexplorable except on that theory; and market manipulation by the persons interested in this pool and by cooperation between two brokerage firms, members of the New York Stock Exchange, is a practice which should be, and probably now is, by the adoption of a rule since the conducting of this investigation by the New York Stock Exchange made impossible.

KOLSTER RADIO

The testimony offered with regard to a certain operation conducted in Kolster Radio stock shows the conduct of an operation under an option to purchase, and the testimony of George F. Breen, who conducted this operation, gives the committee some very interesting information as to how such operation was conducted and as to several other practices which take place in stock-market transactions.

Mr. Breen was a very frank witness. He stated his business as a dealer in securities. He handled stocks alone and did not have a seat on the New York Stock Exchange. He stated it to be the general practice of those who were in control of the affairs of corporations whose stocks were traded in on the New York Stock Exchange to give men like himself an authority up to a certain point to buy those stocks to support the market and that he had been doing that for a period of twenty-odd years past. He stated that when these corporations felt that a sustaining of their securities was necessary they would give him a trading account with power to purchase a limited number of shares at some specified price, with power to redistribute those shares as he could; that the corporations would put up the money for him and that he was absolutely guaranteed against loss. Should the stocks decline, it was the company's loss. Should he be able to sustain the market and create a market, the profits belonged to him and his associates. He acknowledged that very frequently stocks could be guided by him on the New York Stock Exchange; that stocks could be put up and that stocks could be put down. This has been frequently asserted and generally believed, and it is refreshing to get an admission that it is true from one whose business it is to do that very thing and who has evidently been doing it successfully for some years past. One is brought to a realization of the very unsafe and insecure position in which the public stands when this can be successfully accomplished.

Mr. Breen obtained from Rudolph Spreckels certain options on Kolster Radio stock, and in the course of his dealings in that stock he first took a short position in the market for a certain quantity of shares; and, though he stated that it was not his practice to do so, he admitted that should the stock decline in price he was in a position to cover his short selling in the open market and to decline to exercise his option and thus assure himself of a profit, whereas, of course, if the stock rose in price he would exercise his option and in that way accomplish the same results. He was under no legal obligation to exercise the option at all. After the options were secured and his position was assumed in the market, Mr. Breen evidently instituted an active campaign to produce profitable results. A statement of his purchases and sales of this stock will be found in volume II, page 559 of the record. Altogether he sold, between the end of October and the early part of December, 456,900 shares of stock and bought 206,900 shares, putting him in a position to balance his account by the exercise of his various options, which were for the purchase of 250,000 shares. The profit made by the operation, divided among Mr. Breen and his associates, was $1,351,152.50.

GOLDMAN-SACHS TRADING CORPORATION

The Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation was, as its name implies, a corporation formed for the purpose of trading in stocks by the firm of Goldman, Sachs & Co., brokers and members of the New York Stock Exchange. Ninety percent of the stock of the corporation was sold to the public, the firm of Goldman, Sachs & Co. retaining a 10-percent interest therein.

The particular transaction which was investigated concerned a deal which was made by the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation and the Postum Co., afterward known as the General Foods Corporation, for the purchase of the stock in a company known as the General Foods Co. The stock in the General Foods Co. was represented by an investment of $1,750,000 and its only asset which was claimed to be of any serious value was a patent right in connection with a process for the freezing of foods. For the purpose of purchasing the stock of the General Foods Co., the Postum Co. and the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation organized and controlled a corporation known as the Frosted Foods Co., which company in turn was used to acquire the assets of the General Foods Co. The mechanics by which this was done prove very interesting reading.

In the first place, Postum Co. had an agreement with the committee of stockholders of the General Foods Co. to buy all its stock, for which they were to pay the sum of $23,500,000; that is, the stock of this corporation, which had an entire investment of $1,750,000 and the patent. The Postum Co. then issued 150,000 shares of additional Postum Co. stock, which they sold to the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation for $10,750,000. This amount paid by Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation to the Postum Co. for Postum Co. stock, together with $12,750,000 in addition thereto put up by the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation, was paid for the acquisition of the stock of the General Foods Co. through Frosted Foods Co. Thus it will be seen that the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation put up the entire $23,500,000, for which it acquired 150,000 shares of Postum Co. stock and an interest in the acquired stock of the General Foods Co.; but under an agreement between the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation and the Postum Co., the Goldman-Sachs Corporation acquired only 49 percent of the stock for their $12,750,000; whereas the Postum Co. acquired 51 percent of the stock for their $10,750,000, and in addition thereto secured under the agreement with the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation preference with respect to the payment of dividends and certain other preferences should the corporation be liquidated or dissolved.

In addition to this the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation put up $1,500,000 for the purpose of furnishing the corporation with working capital. This transaction took place in June of 1929. The stock of the Postum Co., which was acquired in this transaction by the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation for the sum of $10,750,000, was sold by the Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation at a loss of $230,000; and the stock in the Frosted Foods Co., for which Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation paid $12,750,000 in June 1929, was charged off at the end of the year 1930 on their books as being worth only $1, and at the end of the year 1931 was turned over to the General Foods Corporation, successor to the Postum Co., for 30,000 shares of Postum Co. stock, which was then selling on the market for $30 a share and represented something worth $900,000, for which they gave up something that cost them $12,750,000.

There is certainly something wrong when those who are managing a corporation such as Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation, in which the public has invested its money to the extent of 90 percent of the full capitalization of the company, can, in June of 1929, make an investment of $25,000,000, on which they will take a loss in the several succeeding years of more than 50 percent which is not due in any way to a depression in market values but is due to the fact that they paid $12,750,000 of that amount of money for a 49-percent interest in a stock of a corporation whose total investment was represented by $1,750,000 and whose principal asset was a patent of undetermined value.

But this transaction was investigated for still other reasons.

In the first place, the method which was followed to complete the transaction and to make the payments for the stock purchased was in itself a suspicious factor which naturally demanded an investigation when it was brought to our attention, and because of the fact that the method of payment also indicated tax avoidance if not a tax evasion.

As before stated, a corporation known as the Frosted Foods Co., Inc., was formed and the stock of the General Foods Co. was not purchased directly by Postum Co. and Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation, but was purchased by the Frosted Foods Co., whose stock in turn was owned by the Postum Co. and Goldman-Sachs Trading Corporation; but instead of having Frosted Foods Co. buy the stock directly from those who owned and controlled it, there was another Canadian corporation known as the "United Foods, Inc.", and another company formed under the laws of the State of Delaware and called the "United Foods Co." The checks which were paid by the Goldman-Sachs Trading Co. for the purchase of Frosted Foods Co. stock (copies of which checks will be found in vol. II, p. 574 of the record) show that they passed through the hands of Frosted Foods Co. and the United Foods, Inc., and were deposited in the Royal Bank of Canada to the credit of United Foods, Inc. Ultimately they were paid to the United Foods Co. of Delaware, a corporation which was formed to represent the interests of the stockholders who were selling their stock in General Foods Co. Time did not permit a complete tracing of these funds, so that it might be determined who reaped the ultimate benefit of these transactions. It might, therefore, be said that the picture is incomplete, though undoubtedly it serves to show what those in control of the public's funds in investment or trading corporations can do with the same when they feel so inclined; and it must be borne in mind that this trading corporation was a corporation whose stock was sold on the New York Stock Exchange and was organized and managed and controlled by the brokerage house of Goldman, Sachs & Co.

The question of whether there was any tax evasion involved in the transaction was given consideration and it was not believed, from the facts so far developed, that there is any justification for the United States Government to recover any taxes from anyone involved in the transaction up to the time which the evidence covers, but undoubtedly there was a tax avoidance and a proper study of this problem may determine the remedy by appropriate legislation to prevent such a tax avoidance or evasion. This problem, of course, is not one with which the stock exchange has anything to do.

INDIAN MOTO CYCLE CO.

Three witnesses were called and examined with reference to certain transactions in the stock of the Indian Moto Cycle Co. These witnesses were Howard F. Hansell, Jr., independent operator, formerly a member of the brokerage firm of Redmond & Co.; Norman T. Bolles, who was president of the Indian Moto Cycle Co.; and Harry Content, a member of the brokerage firm of H. Content & Co.

The testimony of these witnesses showed that Howard F. Hansell, Jr., arranged to purchase 40,000 shares of Indian Moto Cycle Co. stock from the company, a large part of which was sold through the brokerage firm of H. Content & Co. Options on the stock were given to 20 or 30 people. Thereafter the witness Hansell purchased 60,000 shares additional, all of which shares were marketed to the public, according to his own admission, at prices ranging from $4 to $12 a share. In some of these transactions, Harry Content, of H. Content & Co., had an interest. Trading operations in this stock were conducted which caused the price to rise as high as $17 a share; whereas it was apparently well known that the company was in a temporarily impaired financial condition due to a decrease in working capital.

Thereafter a promoter named Lawrence Wilder was given 50,000 shares of stock in the Indian Moto Cycle Co. by the company to purchase in England certain patents on an airplane motor; a large part of this stock which was given to Wilder for the purpose of purchasing these patents being retained by him and distributed in the operations of Messrs. Hansell and Content to the public.

The vices in these transactions are shown first in the testimony of Mr. Content, who admitted that his market transactions were so conducted as to control the price (vol. II, p. 600 of the record) and the fact that a publicity man was employed for the purpose of disseminating information to aid the parties in their market manipulations. Though it was denied by the witnesses that the publicity man, whose name was Plummer, was employed for that purpose, it was admitted that he received large sums of money and that a suit which was instituted to recover a balance claimed to be due him was settled. Independent proof of the employment of Plummer and the payment to him of large sums of money by these witnesses and others was offered to the committee by Hon. F. H. LaGuardia, a Member of the House of Representatives from New York State, whose testimony will be found to contain in detail an extensive statement of the publicity operations of Mr. Plummer. Congressman LaGuardia's testimony on the Indian Moto Cycle Co. will be found in volume II, pages 459, 460, and 461 of the record. Congressman LaGuardia testified (vol. II, p. 463 of the record) that Mr. Plummer had paid out for publicity on behalf of his various employers the sum of $286,279.

JOHN J. LEAVENSON

The testimony of John J. Leavenson and R. J. Cornell is illustrative of another flagrant instance of the employment of a publicity writer, and in which instance a member of a New York brokerage firm, which firm was a member of the New York Stock Exchange, was interested.

Mr. R. J. Cornell had formerly been connected with the bureau of securities of the department of law in the State of New York, and in the course of his duties he made an investigation of certain transactions which Mr. J. J. Leavenson had with Mr. Raleigh T. Curtis.

Mr. Curtis was an individual who wrote a financial column in the New York Daily News and signed himself "The Trader." Mr. Leavenson described himself as a free-lance trader who, during the year 1929 and part of 1930 conducted certain operations through the brokerage firm of Burnham, Herman & Co., by which transactions he made a profit of approximately $1,136,000. During that time, by the purchase and sale of stocks on behalf of Raleigh T. Curtis, he made for Mr. Curtis approximately $19,000 between May 3, 1929, and March 1, 1930. During this time Mr. Curtis was writing the column in the New York Daily News under the name of "The Trader", and the testimony of Mr. Cornell shows that he was constantly boosting the stock in which Mr. Leavenson was trading and in which he was given, without the deposit of a single cent of money, a profit of $19,000. Mr. Leavenson stated that this was done out of pure friendship, and denied that his motive was to pay him for publicity. Mr. Curtis could not be found to be questioned on the subject.

Each one of the transactions in which Mr. Leavenson was engaged, the interest of Mr. Curtis therein, and the boosting of the stock by "The Trader" will be found in detail in Mr. Cornell's testimony.

Aside from the vice of paid publicity, of which this case is a strong illustration, Leavenson admitted (record, vol. II, p. 619) that one of the persons interested in his operations was a man named Rodney, who was a partner in the brokerage firm of Burnham, Herman & Co., through which Mr. Leavenson conducted his operations.

As will be noted hereafter, the New York Stock Exchange has since adopted rules to correct the vices shown to exist in this matter.

DAVID M. LION

Another illustration of the publicity which was paid for (and it may be safely assumed that when publicity is paid for the publicity will be in aid of the market manipulations in which those who make the payments are interested) will be found in the testimony of David M. Lion.

When asked his business, he stated that it was "financial publicity", and, without covering his testimony in detail, he admitted (vol. II, p. 675 of the record) that his articles would be published for the purpose of interesting the public in the stock in which he and those who employed him were interested for the purpose of causing a rise in the market value of the stock, and for this work he was paid by calls and options.

He went to the extent of employing a man to talk on the radio. This man was introduced as an economist and the president of a financial research institution, which was only the name of a business conducted by the individual in the case. He conducted over 30 such operations at one time; was employed by pool operators and individual traders and among those names he mentioned were some who were members of the New York Stock Exchange. His operations and earnings were detailed and it seems unnecessary in this report to analyze such earnings, and again it may be said that the conduct of business in this manner has since been prohibited by a rule adopted by the New York Stock Exchange.

ELECTRIC AUTO-LITE CO.

Evidence was offered to the committee of several different instances which clearly illustrate the operation of traders under an option to purchase.

One of these instances is to be found in the operations conducted by George F. Breen in the Kolster Radio stock. In this instance, however, the options were exercised and the market stabilized by purchases and sales.

The committee's attention was called to the fact that when options were taken the person who held the options immediately pursued the policy of selling short a certain amount of stock so that, in the event of a declining market, his position would be protected, the price at which the stock was sold usually being approximately the price at which it could be bought under the option. If the market rose, the option was exercised, with a resulting profit; but should the market drop, the operator was in a position to refrain from exercising his options and covering his short sales at a profitable figure.

As an illustration of an operation in which this was done, there was submitted to the committee (vol. II, pp. 522, 523) a transaction in Electric Auto-Lite Co. stock, operated under an account known as account no. 815 with M. J. Meehan & Co.

Joseph E. Higgins, a member of the firm of M. J. Meehan & Co., whose testimony appears in volume II, page 750 of the record, conducted this operation. An option was given to him to purchase all or any part of 25,000 shares of Electric Auto-Lite Co. stock at $70 a share, and all or any part of another 25,000 shares at $75 a share. (Vol. II, p. 751.) This option was never exercised. Discretion was left with M. J. Meehan to handle the account as he pleased. With the protection of the option in approximately a month and a half some 94,000 shares were dealt in, the operators practically at all times maintaining a short position in the stock, with an ultimate profit to themselves.

WARNER BROS. PICTURES

The transactions which took place in the stock of Warner Bros. Pictures, as they were conducted by Harry M. Warner on behalf of himself and his brothers and through accounts which were kept in various names, show what can be done by persons in control of a corporation who have inside knowledge of the affairs of a corporation in dealing in their own stock.

Summarizing the situation, the Warner Bros. started in January 1930 to sell a large quantity of stock in Warner Bros. Pictures which were owned and controlled by them, but these sellings were not made so that the public could in any way know that their holdings would be disposed of, but through accounts and in such manner as to prevent the public from ascertaining the true facts; and during the first half of the year 1930 while these stocks were being thus sold, the publicity given to the affairs of the company was such as to keep up the price of the stocks.

It is evident that the Warner Bros. knew that at a meeting of the board of directors, which meeting was to be held in the month of August 1930 the dividend had been theretofore paid on the stock was to be passed. When this occurred, of course, the stock depreciated in value on the market, and after this happened Warner Bros. started to buy back the stock which they had sold; and during this period of time, publicity appeared deprecating the future of the company.

In the early part of 1930 Warner Bros. owned 303,480 shares of the company's stock. During the year 1930, in the manner indicated, Warner Bros. sold 305,350 shares of their stock at a price totaling $16,520,986; and they bought back 326,500 shares of stock at a price totaling $7,544,481.50, showing a net profit to them on the transaction of $8,976,504.50 in cash and an increase of their holdings of 21,150 shares which, at the then approximate value, made an additional profit for them of $274,950.

These operations were conducted through various brokerage houses and under various names and numbers. Mr. Warner indicated that he lent to the company certain sums of money which he received from the sale of his stock, and for this he secured debentures. In other words, he placed himself in the position of becoming a creditor of the company having preference over the stockholders and thus, in addition to making a very substantial profit out of his dealings in the stock, secured a decided advantage in his investment position; and there is nothing in the rules of the New York Stock Exchange to prevent officials of a company, having the affairs of the company within their control, from conducting similar operations in their own stock for their own personal advantage and of necessity to the detriment of the public buying and selling the stocks.

The articles showing the publicity given to the stock of Warner Bros. Pictures during the time the operations were being conducted will be found in the record, volume II, pages 655 to 669, inclusive.

COPPER STOCKS

The investigation which was conducted into certain transactions involving the manipulation of stocks of certain copper companies related to a period of time extending from January 1929 to the fall of 1929. The transactions which were investigated involved two pools in the Anaconda Copper Co. stock and other pools in Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock and Chile Copper Co. stock, with ultimately a marketing of Anaconda Copper Co. stock by the National City Co., an affiliate of the National City Bank, which marketing took place after an exchange of Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock and Chile Copper Co. stock into Anaconda Copper Co. stock.

On January 18, 1929, W. E. Hutton & Co., a brokerage firm and a member of the New York Stock Exchange, sent out a communication to various individuals indicating the formation of a syndicate for the purpose of dealing in the Anaconda Copper Co. stock. Various individuals were entitled to participate in this syndicate. A complete résumé of this pool will be found in the record, volume II, pages 758, 759, 760.

The pool closed with a distribution of profits amounting to $1,225,765.54, the pool having closed its dealings about March 5, 1929. During that period of time, the price of Anaconda Copper Co. stock rose from $116.25 a share to a top of $163.75 a share.

A second pool in this stock was formed on March 19, 1929. The syndicate agreement with reference thereto will be found in the record, volume II, pages 761, 762. That syndicate absorbed approximately 66,000 shares of stock of the Anaconda Copper Co. from the first pool. It operated until May 24, 1929, and purchased a total of 416,260 shares of various copper-company stocks at a cost of $65,065,532.50; and, having sold all of the stocks in all other companies than the Anaconda Copper Co. and having sold a large number of shares of the Anaconda Copper Co. stock, distributed the balance of the stock which they held in the Anaconda Copper Co. among the members of the pool. Figuring the stock at the then market price, this pool lost a little over $6,000,000.

Among the participants in this pool were several brokerage firms and several persons who were interested in one or the other of these pools, namely, Mr. Percy Rockefeller, Mr. James A. Stillman, and Mr. Lee Olwell, were connected with the National City Co., an affiliate of the National City Bank.

While these operations were taking place several other small pools or syndicates were operated in the stocks of the Greene Cananea Copper Co. and the Chile Copper Co., and on the close of these transactions and the second pool in Anaconda Copper Co. stock the Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock and the Chile Copper Co. stock, having in the meanwhile been for the most part converted into the stock of the Anaconda Copper Co., the National City Co., hereinbefore referred to, engaged in an operation by which it, through a high-pressure salesmanship campaign, distributed and sold a large number of shares of the stock in the Anaconda Copper Co. The pools in the Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock and the Chile Copper Co. stock, which have been referred to, were managed by Mr. John D. Ryan, who was chairman of the board of the Anaconda Copper Co. and a director in the National City Bank, though he had no position in the National City Co., the affiliate of the National City Bank. The participants in these syndicates were John D. Ryan, various officers of the Anaconda Copper Co., the Chile Copper Co., the Andes Copper Co., and the National City Co.

The right to conversion of the Chile Copper Co. stock into Anaconda Copper Co. stock became effective on January 23, 1929, and was closed on April 30, 1929. The right of exchange in Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock into Anaconda Copper Co. stock became effective on July 1, 1929, and was closed on October 1, 1929.

In order to properly understand the situation with respect to the syndicate which dealt in the Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock and the Chile Copper Co. stock certain other facts shown by the evidence produced before the committee must be considered.

There was a corporation known as the United Metals Selling Co. which was owned and controlled absolutely by the Anaconda Copper Co. All of the metals of the company were sold through this corporation and this corporation did virtually all of the banking business for the subsidiary companies of the Anaconda Copper Co., excepting that of the Chile Copper Co. and the Greene Cananea Copper Co. When the offer was made to exchange Anaconda Copper Co. stock for the Chile Copper Co. stock on January 23, 1929, the United Metals Selling Co. was used by the Anaconda Copper Co. for the purpose of engaging in market operations in order to keep the stocks of the Anaconda Copper Co. and the Chile Copper Co. relatively at the levels of the basis of exchange, and the stock was bought and sold to carry out that plan (vol. III, pp. 794, 795, of the record).

Mr. Ryan testified that if there were any disparity between the values of the stocks of the two companies while the exchange was under way, it was likely to defeat the object and prevent the exchange. The stock was bought or sold accordingly, all of which transactions were carried on through the witness, who was not only the chairman of the board of the Anaconda Copper Co. but also the president of the United Metals Selling Co. Mr. Ryan would not tell the committee just exactly what he would do in order to maintain the prices, but he testified (vol. III, p. 796, of the record) that if there were a weak market and one of the stocks was especially weak, he would do one thing and in another market he would do another.

At the end of 1928 the United Metals Selling Co. owned 42,062 shares of Anaconda Copper Co. stock, and when the transactions in buying and selling this stock had been concluded it had acquired in the market 172,100 shares of Chile Copper Co. stock for which it received 125,633 shares of stock of the Anaconda Copper Co., and 73,700 shares of Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock for which it received 100,550 shares of stock of Anaconda Copper Co.; or in all it received, in exchange for the Chile Copper Co. stock and the Greene Cananea Copper stock, during the year 1929, 236,183 shares of Anaconda Copper Co. stock.

Mr. Ryan testified (vol. III, p. 800 of the record) that at a period of time in December 1928, when certain bonds of the Andes Copper Co. were called for conversion, the Anaconda Copper Co.

and the National City Co. were anxious that the bonds be converted instead of taken up and paid off in cash, and for that purpose the Anaconda Copper Co. and the National City Co. operated in Andes Copper Co. stock to "stabilize" it and bring about the conversion, which operation conducted for that purpose resulted in a total profit to the two institutions of $335,042.43.

Prior to January 23, 1929, which was the date on which the conversion of Chile Copper Co. stock into Anaconda Copper Co. stock was to become effective, Mr. Kelly, who was the president of the Anaconda Copper Co., with Mr. Ryan and Mr. Guggenheim, who was a large stockholder in the Chile Copper Co., and the National City Co. began to accumulate the stock of the Chile Copper Co., knowing that the conversion agreement was to become effective on January 23, 1929. This resulted in a delivery of the stock accumulated to the National City Co. on January 22, 1929, one day before the right of conversion became effective, bringing to those interested in the operation a profit of approximately $1,250,000.

In the meanwhile, an operation was conducted in Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock by the same gentlemen, the National City Co., and a Mr. Thornton, who was president of the Greene Cananea Copper Co. This operation was conducted through the brokerage firm of Hornblower & Weeks, under an account known as "account no. 55", which was an account conducted under the same number as Mr. Ryan's personal account. Under this operation a net profit to the syndicate was made in the sum of $2,909,978.15. The profit, of course, is figured on the value of the stock at the time of the distribution, the stock not having been sold but having been distributed among the members of the syndicate, the National City Co. having taken its distribution from the Chile Copper Co. syndicate and the Greene Cananea Copper Co. syndicate in stock.

One very significant transaction, which shows what may happen or may be caused to happen in stock-market operations, is found in the testimony of James A. Fayne, a member of the firm of Hornblower & Weeks, who was conducting the operations of the syndicates composed of the various officials of the Anaconda Copper Co., Chile Copper Co., Greene Cananea Copper Co., and the National City Bank. His testimony will be found in volume III, pages 800 to 814, of the record.

The attention of the witness was directed to a transaction which took place on March 20, 1929, in connection with the operations in account no. 55 hereinbefore referred to. In the syndicate account a sale of 35,000 shares of stock was shown, whereas on the same day a purchase of 35,000 shares of stock was shown in Mr. Ryan's personal account. Prior to the time this purchase was made in one account and the sale in another account, the transactions in stock had been in small amounts comparatively. To counsel for the committee this appeared as a purely wash transaction intended to boost the market price, but the witness explained that the making of the sale through one account and the buying through another account was an error, for which he took the responsibility, he having absolute discretion as to the purchases and sales of the respective accounts. He admitted, however, that the result of the transaction was to cause an immediate rise in the market value of the stock from approximately $192 a share to $196 a share, resulting in his immediate disposal of such stock of his client as he could at the advanced price. He denied that this was a wash sale, but whether it was or was not, it is a clear illustration of what might be done under the rules of the stock exchange to cause a fluctuation of prices in the manner in which it occurred in this case.

It has been stated that after these various pool operations, in which the officers of the Anaconda Copper Co. and the Chile Copper Co. and the Greene Cananea Copper Co. were engaged, and the operations of the several pools hereinbefore referred to, an operation was conducted by the National City Co., an affiliate of the National City Bank, in the stock of the Anaconda Copper Co. Time would not permit such investigation to be made as would determine definitely whether any of the stock in what was called the small Anaconda pool and the large copper stocks pool passed into the hands of the National City Co. in connection with its operations, but undoubtedly, as is shown by the testimony before the committee, considerable of the stock of the Anaconda Copper Co., resulting from the conversion of the Chile Copper Co. and the Greene Cananea Copper Co. through the syndicates conducted by the officers of these companies and National City Co., did pass into the hands of the National City Co., and in addition thereto certain of the Anaconda Copper Co. stock passed into the hands of the National City Co. from the exercise of an option given to this company by the United Metals Selling Co., the wholly owned subsidiary of the Anaconda Copper Co. hereinbefore referred to.

Mr. Mitchell, president of the National City Co., testified (record, vol. II, p. 772) that they had in their portfolio 50,000 shares of stock of Anaconda Copper Co., and that from April 1928 until June 1929 it was purely an investment account; that the account in 1928, by conversion of certain Anaconda Copper Co. bonds, ran up to 114,000 shares, but at times it came down and ran below the 50,000 shares mark; that in February 1929 it was down to 38,000 shares and continued that way until June 1929; that in June 1929 the National City Co. bought some additional stock; and that in July 1929, by conversion of the Andes Copper Co. stock and the Greene Cananea Copper Co. stock (which had been acquired through the pools hereinbefore referred to), their holdings in Anaconda Copper Co. stock were brought to 208,000 shares; and that in June 1929 they determined to offer Anaconda Copper Co.

stock to the public through their sales organization. They obtained an option to purchase 100,000 shares of Anaconda Copper Co. stock from United Metals Selling Co., and through their sales organization continued to distribute this stock until the early part of October 1929. Mr. Mitchell himself, who was chairman of the board of the National City Bank, and as such was the chief operating officer of the affairs of the bank, and who was a director of the Anaconda Copper Co., testified that Mr. Percy Rockefeller, who was interested in one of the pools conducted in the stock of the Anaconda Copper Co., was on the board of the National City Bank, as was Mr. James A. Stillman, another participant in the pool; that Mr. Lee Olwell, another participant in the pool, was vice president of the National City Co.; that Mr. C. T. Fisher, who was also a participant, was one of the directors of the Anaconda Copper Co.; and that Mr. John D. Ryan was chairman of the board of the Anaconda Copper Co. and a member of the board of the National City Bank. There seems, therefore, to be a very clear picture connecting the several pools that were being operated through the brokerage firms in Anaconda Copper Co. stock and other copper stocks which the pools that were operated by the officers of the Chile Copper Co., the Greene Cananea Copper Co., and the National City Co. with the operations of the National City Co. in the stock of the Anaconda Copper Co., all of whom should have had inside information as to the affairs of these respective companies. During the operations of the National City Co. the stock rose from $122.50 a share to $133 a share, and at the time when the National City Co. ceased its operations the stock dropped again to approximately $114 a share. Through the operations of the National City Co. in the market immediately prior to the time when they started their selling campaign, they purchased 251,081 shares of stock of the Anaconda Copper Co. and sold 288,707 shares, leaving their net position 210,774 on August 6, 1929. The net profit on this transaction was over $2,000,000.

Between August and October 1, 1929, extensive market operations were conducted in the Anaconda Copper Co. stock by the National City Co., and a high-pressure campaign was conducted through their salesmen to sell these stocks to the public. As heretofore stated, this resulted in a decided rise in the market price. These operations were conducted on a very extensive scale, and when they were concluded about October 1, 1929, the National City Co. had a very substantial profit. Thereafter the stock continued to drop in value; but this, of course, can be partially attributed to the crash which occurred in stock-market values in October 1929.

The picture thus developed by the testimony in connection with the stock pools, which were conducted through a brokerage firm, a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and by the officers and directors of the various companies interested in the stocks, and, of course, having inside information as to the affairs of the various companies involved, shows what can be done not only in the manipulation of the prices on the market but what can be done to the profit and advantage of the officers and directors of the various companies who have inside information as to what is going on with respect to the affairs of the various companies.

The National City Bank is, of course, a national institution, and under the law as it exists today it may not conduct such dealings or engage in such transactions as have been heretofore pictured; but it may, as was done in this instance, do this very thing under the guise of an affiliated company. The right to do this has never been, but may be, seriously questioned; and if a national bank has a right to do this under the law as it exists at the present time, it is respectively suggested that it should be, by proper legislation, deprived of this right. A national bank, if permitted through an affiliated company to gamble in stock-market transactions, jeopardizes not only the money of the investing public who buys its stock, but may very well be said to be jeopardizing the money of its depositors, who have used such an institution as a depository on the faith of the protection that is afforded them by the laws which surround national banks.

The National City Co. was organized by the National City Bank. Its business is conducted by trustees. In this particular case the National City Co. was originally organized to hold the securities which the bank could not have held under the law. Up until the year 1928, it did not engage in stock operations, and at that time the shareholders of the bank authorized the setting aside of a sum of money for the purpose of stock operations. Every stockholder in the National City Bank owns a proportionate amount of stock in the National City Co., and it is plainly seen that any losses or profits sustained or made by the National City Co. cause a resultant loss or gain to the stockholders of the National City Bank. In plain words, the National City Bank, which was never intended to have the authority to gamble in stocks, was permitted, through the subterfuge of an affiliated company owned and controlled by the stockholders of the National City Bank, to gamble in the stock market. This would seem to be a dangerous practice, which, as has been before suggested, may result in a serious loss to the stockholders or the depositors of the bank in a manner which was never intended to be permitted under the laws of the United States with relation to national banks. It was never intended that such institutions should be used as either a distributing center for stocks and bonds or as a medium through which public funds, whether invested in the stocks of such institutions or deposited therein, should be used for the purpose of speculation which, though it might result to the profit of such stockholders and depositors, might very well lead to the ultimate bankruptcy and dissolution of the institution.

CONTINENTAL SHARES, INC.—OTIS &amp; CO.

Continental Shares, Inc., was an investment trust. Otis & Co. was a brokerage house and a member of the New York Stock Exchange. Cyrus S. Eaton, of Cleveland, controlled the affairs of Continental Shares, Inc., and was a member of the firm of Otis & Co. A third corporation, known as Foreign Utilities, a Canadian company, was used by him to hold his personal investments.

In the organization of Continental Shares, Inc., the stock was distributed through the firm of Otis & Co. The record shows questionable transactions by which the firm of Otis & Co. sold back to Continental Shares, Inc., certain of the stock which they had underwritten, and also shows a number of other questionable transactions. The importance of the investigation of the affairs of Continental Shares, Inc., and Otis & Co. is to be found in one certain transaction.

Shortly before October 10, 1930, Otis & Co. had total obligations approximating $125,000,000 and the banks holding most of these obligations were calling upon them for payment. On the night of October 13, 1930, Otis & Co. were informed by the New York Stock Exchange that they would not be permitted to open the next morning unless they obtained $20,000,000. It was later arranged that they would be permitted to open if they obtained this money by noon of the next day. On October 8, 1930, Continental Shares, Inc., purchased certain securities from Foreign Utilities for $57,000,000, of which $35,000,000 were to be paid in cash and the balance in stock of Continental Shares, Inc., at $21 a share. At this time it must be borne in mind that Continental Shares, Inc., Foreign Utilities, and Otis & Co. were practically in the control of Mr. Eaton and it is plainly indicated, in view of what later transpired, that this transaction on October 8 was in anticipation of Otis & Co. needing financial help.

A great many of the obligations of Otis & Co. were secured by collateral either owned by Mr. Eaton himself or by Foreign Utilities, Mr. Eaton's corporation, and it was these securities which were being sold to Continental Shares, Inc., the investment trust controlled by Eaton, for the purpose of securing sufficient money to pay off the obligations of Otis & Co. Of the cash to be raised for the purpose of carrying out the agreement between Continental Shares, Inc., and Foreign Utilities, $30,000,000 were to be furnished as an original payment by the Chase National Bank, and, pursuant to the authorization of the board of directors of Continental Shares, Inc., a number of bank promissory notes were given by Continental Shares, Inc., to the Chase National Bank, which were subsequently filled out for various amounts and the cash loaned thereon used to take up existing loans of Eaton, Otis & Co., and Foreign Utilities at various banks in New York and Cleveland, which resulted in the releasing of the securities which were sold by Foreign Utilities to Continental Shares, Inc. On the morning of October 14, 1930, these transactions were put through in order that Otis & Co. might comply with the requirements of the New York Stock Exchange.

The loan, which was made by the Chase National Bank, was of course, made to the Continental Shares, Inc., for the purpose of furnishing them sufficient funds to buy from Foreign Utilities the securities which they had agreed to purchase. It should be noted that these securities, for which they were to pay $57,000,000 partly in cash and partly in stock of their own corporations, were not sufficient as collateral for the loans of $35,000,000 which they were securing and that they had to deposit as additional collateral therefor considerable stock from their portfolio. When the transaction was completed, Otis & Co., Foreign Utilities, and Mr. Eaton were relieved of their obligations, while Continental Shares, Inc., an investment trust in which the public had put its money, was obligated at various banks where it had put up as collateral not only the stocks which it purchased from Foreign Utilities but other stocks of its own. From these stocks of its own it had a certain income and it was testified that, after the transaction hereinbefore referred to was closed, it cost Continental Shares, Inc., for its carrying charges $800,000 a year more than the dividends on the securities which they purchased of Foreign Utilities.

On pages 918 and 919 of volume III of the record will be found certain memoranda which passed between officers of the Chase National Bank, and an interesting sidelight on the transaction will be found in the fact that the Chase National Bank sent the securities thus purchased up to Canada in order that they might there be delivered by an agent of Foreign Utilities, a Canadian corporation, to the correspondent of the Chase National Bank in Canada and forwarded by the correspondent to the Chase National Bank in New York. This was done, at an expense of over $34,000, in order to save the payment of taxes to the Government of the United States.

On October 20, 1930, 6 days after the deal hereinbefore referred to was closed, and while the New York Stock Exchange knew, or should have known, how Otis & Co. arranged to pay its obligations, Continental Shares, Inc., applied to the New York Stock Exchange to list 990,000 additional shares for the purpose of sale, which listing was permitted. The application for listing will be found in the record, volume III, pages 934 to 951, inclusive.

FOX THEATERS AND FOX FILMS

It was the practice of counsel for the committee, in the making of investigations into transactions involving the practices of the New York Stock Exchange, to examine those who were closely associated with the transactions in question, to subpoena those persons to appear before the committee for the purpose of examining them with regard to these transactions, and also to afford those persons an opportunity of presenting to the committee such facts as they may desire to present in connection with the matter under investigation.

In the investigation of certain transactions concerning dealings in the Fox Theaters and Fox Films stock, counsel interviewed William Fox, who was a very large owner of the stocks of these corporations and managed and controlled their affairs. He was subpoenaed to come before the committee, and, though he came to Washington, failed to appear on account of an alleged illness. Reference is only made to this circumstance because his failure to appear necessitated the presentation of the results of the investigation by a statement from counsel and the testimony of other witnesses instead of—as it had been done in other instances, at least partially—by the examination of the persons involved in the transactions.

A summary of the situation will be found in the record, pages 979 to 1000. It would serve no purpose in this report to fully restate that summary here, but a brief reference might well be made to the nature of the transactions. Mr. Fox controlled the voting stock in both the Fox Theaters and Fox Film Corporation.

In 1925 Fox Theaters made a contract with Eisele & King, a New York brokerage house, under which they were authorized to sell a half million shares of class A common stock at $25 a share, they to be paid $3 a share commission. A copy of this agreement will be found on pages 995, 996, and 997 of volume III of the record. Following this agreement there was another agreement made upon the same day, November 11, 1925, between Eisele & King and certain other brokerage houses of the one part and one Carolyn Leah Tauszig, a copy of which agreement will be found on pages 997 and 998 of the record, volume III; which, among other things, provided that the said Carolyn Leah Tauszig should receive 25 percent of the commissions to be paid under the agreement first referred to. Carolyn Leah Tauszig was the daughter of Mr. Fox and, under these agreements, was paid the sum of $411,185.37. A copy of the check paid to her will be found on page 998, volume III of the record; and the statement of the distribution of the profit from the operations in these stocks under the agreements referred to will be found on pages 999 and 1000 of volume III of the record. Through this transaction, Mr. Fox, by his control of the affairs of the Fox Theaters Co.—in which the public had invested its money—authorized the issuance of this half million shares of stock and provided for a method of sale which brought back more than $411,000 to a member of his family.

The Fox Film Corporation desired to acquire the stock of the Westco Corporation, a corporation operating theaters upon the west coast of the United States, and William Fox conceived the plan of offering one share of stock of the Fox Film Corporation for  $\frac{75}{100}$  of a share of the Westco Corporation. The stock of the Westco Corporation was then quoted at approximately \$55 a share. The firm of Hayden, Stone & Co., a brokerage house and a member of the New York Stock Exchange, entered into an underwriting agreement with the Fox Film Corporation to market 125,000 shares of their stock and agreed to underwrite the issue for the marketing and underwriting, for which they were to be paid the sum of \$3 per share.

Having a knowledge of the offer which was to be made by the Fox Film Corporation for the exchange of the stock in that company for the stock in the Westco Corporation, they purchased a considerable quantity of the Westco Corporation stock, so that, when the time came to market the 125,000 shares of Fox Film stock under the underwriting and marketing agreement, practically all that had to be done by Hayden, Stone & Co. was to make the exchange of the Westco Corporation stock for the 125,000 shares of stock which they were to market under the agreement.

According to the testimony of Richard F. Hoyt, a member of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Co. (record, vol. III, p. 1034), both the agreement for the exchange of the stock of the Fox Film Corporation for the Westco Corporation stock and the underwriting agreement referred to were executed on January 21, 1928.

A list of those participating in the underwriting syndicate will be found in the record, volume III, page 1035. Aside from the interest of Hayden, Stone & Co. in the syndicate, there was a very large interest of the Haystone Securities Corporation, controlled by the members of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Co. and other brokerage houses, members of the New York Stock Exchange.

In September 1928 another contract was signed by Hayden, Stone & Co. with the Fox Film Corporation, by which they agreed to underwrite and market 153,000 shares of stock at $85 a share. They were to be paid $4 a share for the underwriting and marketing. A syndicate was formed to handle this underwriting. A list of those interested in the syndicate and the extent of their interests will be found set forth in the record, volume III, page 1043. The firm of Hayden, Stone & Co. and other interests which the firm represented had a very large portion of this underwriting; and it is important to note that in this transaction—which was, of course, authorized by the Fox Film Corporation, controlled by William Fox—he himself had an underwriting to the extent of 27,000 shares out of a total of 153,444 shares, upon which he made a profit of $81,000.

During the same year, other brokerage firms—notably the firm of Taylor, Thorne & Co.—were conducting several different operations in the stock of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Fox had an interest in these various syndicated operations—this interest being carried in the name of Nathaniel King and in the name of Eisele & King, a brokerage firm and a member of the New York Stock Exchange. In volume III, page 1020, will be found a copy of a check drawn by Eisele & King to the order of William Fox for $50,000, which represented his profit in one of the syndicates. In volume III, page 1021, will be found another check drawn to his order for $19,992.48, which represented his profit from another syndicate.

Further evidence of the participation of Mr. Fox in these syndicates is found in certain communications acknowledging receipt of contributions appearing in volume III, page 1024, of the record. It might very well be noted also (record, vol. III, pp. 1010 and 1011) that, while one of these pools was operating, Taylor, Thorne & Co., the managers of the pool, sent a communication to the various members of the pool enclosing certain confidential information which it was admitted was being furnished to them by William Fox in advance of the time that the information was made public.

The brokerage firm of Stevens & Legg, members of the New York Stock Exchange, were participants in one or more of the syndicates handling the Fox Film stock, which was controlled by Taylor, Thorne & Co., making a profit of more than $42,000; and, in addition to the profit made from the operations in the pool, the firm, who were specialists in the stock of the Fox Film Corporation, while the pool was still in operation were paid the sum of $10,000, which, according to the testimony of Mr. Stevens (record, vol. III, p. 1002), was an unsolicited amount in appreciation of the work done in "running an orderly market."

The operations of these syndicates show very clearly what can be done by New York brokerage houses, members of the New York Stock Exchange, operating in conjunction with a person who holds a controlling interest in a corporation the stock of which is to be handled, and operating in addition thereto in conjunction with the specialist in the stock. The practices engaged in would seem to be the proper subject of correction. It will be noted, however, that the New York Stock Exchange, by the adoption of certain rules, which will be referred to hereinafter, since the development of this evidence before the committee, has prohibited brokerage firms, or the members thereof or specialists, from engaging in such transactions as these.

Other transactions which were developed in the course of the investigation of Fox Films and Fox Theaters show to what extent inside manipulations of stocks may take place without the knowledge of the public. In the stock of the Fox Theaters, a syndicate, operating on the short side of the market and handling nearly a half million shares of stock of this corporation, was conducted through the brokerage house of Michael J. Meehan & Co. On December 6, 1928, the board of directors of the Fox Theaters Corporation granted to William Fox an option to purchase 500,000 shares of the class A common stock of the Fox Theaters and, on the same day, Fox granted a similar option to the firm of Michael J. Meehan & Co., agreeing in his letter granting the option that, if Michael J. Meehan & Co. should at any time require a loan of shares of Fox Theaters Corporation class A common stock, he would loan 200,000 shares in the aggregate.

Prior to this time a pool was conducted in the fall of 1928 by Bradford Ellsworth, a pool manager for Michael J. Meehan & Co., in the stock of Fox Theaters, which pool operated in connection with an option given by William Fox on 125,000 shares of stock in the Fox Theaters Corporation. The participants in the pool were William Fox, Elizabeth Meehan (wife of Michael J. Meehan), Bradford Ellsworth, J. H. Higgins, and Earl Rodney, a partner in a New York Stock Exchange firm. The profit was upward of $400,000. The importance of this transaction, aside from the interest which William Fox and members of the brokerage houses had in the operation of the syndicate, is to be found in the manner in which the transactions were conducted. A very large number of the purchases, which were made on certain days at certain prices were directly offset by sales made on the same dates at the same prices.

Referring again to the transaction which started with the securing by Mr. Fox of the option to purchase 500,000 shares of stock on December 6, 1928, and the granting of a similar option to the firm of Michael J. Meehan & Co., the records of the account showed that the transaction was practically a short sale operation, in which stock of the Fox Theaters thus acquired by Mr. Fox was loaned to the firm of Michael J. Meehan & Co., or the syndicate which this firm was operating, to cover their short transactions. The pool made a profit of nearly $2,000,000. In order to secure the stock in Fox Theaters for the purpose of loaning it to Michael J. Meehan & Co., William Fox—who controlled both the Fox Film Corporation and the Fox Theaters—had the Fox Film Corporation purchase from the Fox Theaters in the first instance 125,000 shares of stock in the Fox Theaters Corporation. These stocks were issued in two blocks—one of 25,000 shares and one of 100,000 shares—and were issued to Jack Leo; and, on the same date that these blocks of stock were issued to Jack Leo, they were loaned to Michael J. Meehan & Co., Michael J. Meehan & Co. putting up $4,300,000 in cash. This stock remained with the firm of Michael J. Meehan & Co. during the time that their operations on the stock market were being conducted. This transaction of the loaning of the stock appeared on the books of the Fox Film Corporation as a loan of the stock to Michael J. Meehan & Co., showing the receipt of the sum of $4,300,000 in cash.

On April 9, 1929, Fox Films repaid $550,000 to Michael J. Meehan & Co., but received none of the stock in return. On April 11 Fox Films repaid $2,400,000 to Michael J. Meehan & Co., and received 75,000 shares of stock; and though on April 18 Fox Films repaid to Michael J. Meehan & Co. the balance of $1,350,000, the 50,000 shares of stock remaining in their hands were not returned to the Fox Film Corporation nor to Jack Leo; and, though from the records it was impossible to establish when the 50,000 shares of stock were returned, it was evident from the examination of the portfolio of the Fox Film Corporation that in some way the certificates were returned.

From the operations of this syndicate on the short side of the market, which was known as "Account No. 433" on the books of the firm of Michael J. Meehan & Co., Mr. Fox himself made a profit of $322,960.41 (testimony of Mr. Higgins, record, vol. III, p. 1072), the check for the same having been drawn to the order of P. J. Higgins and by him endorsed to the order of Mr. Fox. Mr. Higgins testified (record, vol. III, p. 1072) that it was drawn to his order for the purpose of concealing from the clerical force who the participants were in the account. A copy of the check is to be found in the record, volume III, page 1073. This account at one time had a maximum short position of 466,310 shares (record, vol. III, p. 1083).

Mr. Fox was conducting a large number of transactions in Fox Theaters stock through a number of brokerage houses, with accounts in various names, and though absolutely no authority appeared in any of the books of the Fox Theaters authorizing him to deal in that stock on their account and, though Mr. Fox admitted that he was unable to distinguish as to which of the transactions conducted by him belonged to the Fox Theaters and which belonged to him, on November 19, 1929, after the market had broken, he caused the directors of Fox Theaters to adopt a resolution taking over his transactions in the Fox Theaters stock, they assuming at that time his indebtedness to his brokers, amounting to $6,153,774.33, and, of course, taking over at that time the stock to which he was entitled and thus assuming a loss of $3,314,724.33 which, if the dealings were dealings of Mr. Fox on his own behalf, should have been borne by him (record, vol. III, pp. 1086, 1087, and 1088). Notwithstanding the fact that these transactions were taken over by the Fox Theaters, with reference to such of these transactions as could be examined, credit was taken by Mr. Fox in making his New York State income-tax report for the losses suffered.

On behalf of Fox Theaters, on March 24, 1928, Mr. Fox purchased 400,000 shares of Loew Co. stock for $50,000,000, paying for them $125 a share when the market at that time ranged from 75½ to 81½ per share. He thereafter dealt in Loew stock in his various accounts, and thus acquired a total of 660,900 shares, which on November 19, 1929—which is the same date upon which he turned over the Fox Theaters stock to Fox Theaters—he turned over the Loew stock to Fox Theaters at an assumption by them of a loss of $5,026,782.50 which he himself would otherwise have been compelled to stand.

Of course these losses were ultimately borne by the public which owned the Fox Theaters stock, and these transactions are an illustration of the nefarious practices which can be carried out by one who is in control of a corporation to his own advantage and profit and to the detriment of the public which owns a considerable portion of the stock in the companies in question, while, if regulations were adopted giving publicity to the dealings of officers and directors of corporations in their own stock, either on their own behalf or on behalf of their corporations, the public could be properly informed as to the manner in which the business affairs of the corporations were being conducted and could determine for themselves whether such transactions were to their advantage or to their detriment.

In 1929 Fox Theaters and Fox Films were both threatened with receivership proceedings, and Mr. Fox entered into a deal, which was ultimately consummated on April 7, 1930, to part with his controlling stock in the Fox Film Corporation. He sold this stock to the General Theaters Equipment, Inc., owned by a group known as the "Harley-Clark group", for a total consideration of $18,000,000—$15,000,000 in cash and $3,000,000 in a note, which has since been paid. His attorney was paid $1,000,000; his brother-in-law, Jack Leo, a bonus of $500,000; a man named Sol Wertz, a bonus of $500,000; and Fox secured an agreement whereby the General Theaters Equipment caused a contract to be entered into between the Fox Film Corporation and Mr. Fox to employ him for a period of 5 years at a salary of $500,000 per annum—the portion of which had fallen due at the time that the matter was presented to the committee having been paid, though it was evident that no actual services were required.

Fox had incurred obligations on behalf of the Fox Film Corporation to the extent of $103,000,000, and in order to finance the transaction the Fox Film Corporation sold to the Fox Theaters 1,600,000 shares of its stock, which in conjunction with $27,000,000 in cash and accounts was used to take over the Loew stock at a cost of $75,000,000. The Fox Film Corporation stock was taken over at $30 per share, though the market on the stock at that time was between $45 and $48 a share. Fox Theaters immediately sold this stock to General Theaters Equipment Co., Inc., at the same price. General Theaters Equipment sold 200,000 shares of this stock to Halsey, Stuart & Co. at $30 per share, thus affording Halsey, Stuart & Co. a profit of somewhat over $3,000,000, which was evidently a consideration for Halsey, Stuart & Co. loaning to General Theaters Equipment Co. $55,000,000 upon their notes, secured by the Loew stock, hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. Fox was to be given an interest in the distribution of the Fox Film Corporation stock as a further consideration for the contract which he entered into and a pool was formed for the purpose of dealing in some of the stock of the Fox Film Corporation; but at that time the United States Government instituted proceedings under the Clayton Act for the purpose of setting aside the transaction by which the Fox Film Corporation obtained the Loew stock from Fox Theaters. A consent decree was entered, and a corporation known as the Film Securities Corporation was formed, to which the 660,900 shares of Loew stock were transferred, which corporation created a new scheme for financing, whereby the remaining $48,000,000 needed to take care of the obligations of the Fox Film Corporation were raised; and when the Halsey, Stuart & Co. obligations of $55,000,000 fell due they were taken up by the same banking interests that financed the $48,000,000 portion of the indebtedness—the investments thus made resulting eventually in a very substantial loss to the financial interests which originally took care of them.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, later the committee employed Mr. Ferdinand Pecora, of New York, as counsel for the committee. I think he was a happy discovery. He is a man of unusual qualifications for that kind of work, and the record made by him shows what is possible when such a subject is handled by the right man and with due diligence. Mr. Pecora remains in the employ of the committee. He has important tasks still ahead of him. I feel confident that he will continue to add to the laurels he has already won.

KREUGER & TOLL

The first case we took up during the last session of Congress was that of Kreuger & Toll. This corporation is the parent company of the Swedish match monopoly, but there were many affiliated corporations operating in different countries, all interrelated and depending on each other—none knowing what the other owned or what the other did. It was all built on secrecy. The operations, both in finance and business, were on such a large scale that they were accepted not only by the investing company but by the financial centers both here and abroad.

In delving into the matter we tried to ascertain who protected the investor. We found it not in the attorneys of the bonding house nor of the stock exchange; we found it not in the banking houses nor the brokerage houses; we found it not in the American director of the company.

The late bond issue of Kreuger & Toll was floated by Lee, Higginson & Co., one of the oldest investment houses in America, who had previously built up a fine reputation for fair dealing.

The committee found that the agreement between Kreuger & Toll and the bankers permitted of substitution of collateral pledged to support $50,000,000 of bonds on their par value instead of their real value. Under this agreement it was possible to take a bond worth $90 and substitute one having a market value of $10 or less. This was a very unusual proceeding; evidently it was one of the new tricks in the game. Substitutions were made and values were reduced. Under this agreement good securities were taken out and poorer ones substituted, impairing the security and reducing the value of the bond resting thereon. The agreement was drafted by the same firm of attorneys who are attorneys for the stock exchange in New York City, and associated with them was an equally well-known firm in Boston.

The American director of Kreuger & Toll admitted on the witness stand that he had never attended a meeting of the board of directors, evidently having the view that the directorship would give him certain business advantages, but that he owed no obligation to the American investor.

There are some remaining assets, but it is feared that there are prior liens in Sweden against them, a matter which was not looked into until after the failure.

In the listing agreement with the stock exchange Kreuger & Toll agreed to keep the exchange advised of substitution of security, but no information came to the stock exchange and the exchange asked for none. This part of the agreement seems to have been entirely overlooked or forgotten. The stock exchange evidently felt deeply the criticism in connection with this matter, since they have to some extent strengthened their rules in relation to such transactions, indicating that progress is slowly being made.

THE INSULL INTERESTS

Next the committee took up the Insull failure at Chicago. This was one of the worst, if not the most colossal, failures on record in this country, involving losses running into many hundreds of millions of dollars, and it is impossible even yet to determine the total amount of losses. Under the management of Mr. Insull there were over a hundred corporations, connected or related—so many that his closest friends admit that it was impossible for any human mind to keep track of them all. Most of them were engaged in the production and distribution of electric power or gas, but a number of them were finance companies, promoting companies, holding companies, investment companies, management companies, or what not. Many of the operating companies, especially the smaller ones, have assets and some earning power and still continue to operate. The finance and holding companies have "blown up", and most of them are in receivership. Much of the rottenness was brought to the surface by the Senate committee. The stock manipulations were easily carried on by different companies trading with each other, and therefore the "wash sale", which everyone condemns, was being indulged in and concealed. Such sales were easily possible. When one Insull company sold securities to another Insull company, through a broker or perhaps a third Insull company, the transaction was given every appearance of a bona-fide sale.

HALSEY, STUART & CO.

Working in collusion with the Insull Co. was one of the oldest investment banking houses in America—Halsey, Stuart & Co. This is one of our large financial institutions which had built up a fine reputation during years of square dealing, only to sell out that reputation during the boom. H. L. Stuart, the active head of this concern, is under indictment for criminal practices. Eighteen others are in the same sorry boat with him. This is the house that employed the "old counselor", who gave advice over the radio for many months, and counseled widows with $10,000 in life insurance to buy bonds. He turned out to be a professor, who was paid $50 a week to read a statement prepared for him by Halsey, Stuart & Co. He had a good voice and won the confidence of his listeners. He led many to make bad investments. The "old counselor" was always introduced in connection with the name of Halsey, Stuart & Co. From the long period he was on the air, it is fair to assume that he brought many people to Halsey, Stuart & Co. for their "investments."

INSULL INFLUENCE

The senior Insull left this country, and is now in Greece. He has so far successfully resisted extradition. He does not want to come home and face those whose trust he betrayed.

This is the same Insull who was the dominant figure in Chicago and in Illinois politics, who contributed $200,000 to the campaign fund of Frank Smith, elected to the Senate from Illinois, and refused a seat. At the time of his election, Smith was chairman of the State Utilities Commission, which had jurisdiction over the rates charged for electricity produced by Insull companies. Insull wielded large influence in both parties. Both were subject to his beck and call. He was always an important contributor to their campaign funds.

Not only was the public fooled by Insull, but the "higher-ups" seem to have had no better grasp of his operations. The Chicago banks were heavy losers through his operations. Whether through zeal or confidence, they made excessive loans, technically possible on account of the weakness in the banking laws. In fact, the bankers in their testimony frankly admitted they violated the spirit of the law in making these loans. Different Insull corporations would borrow the limit, and so the total became entirely too large.

Insull's hold on men who dominated the business of the country and who shaped public opinion was partly due to the favors he extended. On stock issues put out he had a preferred list and gave to those on that list an inside price, which was lower than the price for which the stock was sold to the general public. In that way he courted the influence of powerful individuals, and they in turn helped sell Insull to the public.

NATIONAL CITY BANK

The last investigation before the close of the session on March 4 was that of the National City Bank. The committee had come to realize that until we went into the operations of the banking houses, we would know little about stock manipulations. We did not get our facts from the stock exchange. That task is still before the committee.

The investigation of the National City Bank was made on account of its recognized leadership in the orgy of speculation which led to the business collapse. Stock operations are forbidden in the charter of all national banks. To circumvent the law, National City created an affiliate organized and owned by the stockholders of the bank and managed effectively, though indirectly, by the same directors. This affiliate went into stock manipulation on a huge scale.

The National City group recommended a large number of questionable stocks, notable among which was the Oliver Farm Equipment. Their recommendation and sale of Anaconda Copper at 15 or 20 times its subsequent value caused enormous losses to the innocent investor. Outstanding among their issues were South American bonds. Bonds of the State of Minas Geraes, a small State in the Republic of Brazil, were sold under representation that the funds obtained would be used for revenue-producing internal improvements. The fact of the matter is that a good deal of the money was to take up worthless outstanding loans in which the National City had an interest.

PERUVIAN BONDS

Many million dollars worth of bonds of the Republic of Peru were sold in this country, and they are worth today in the market about one tenth what they cost American investors. The committee developed the fact that the National City had sent their own representative to Peru to size up the country and that this representative had reported a bad situation in Peru, casting much reflection on the value of the bonds—everything—in fact, all but telling the company not to handle them. Notwithstanding these facts, the bonds were sold. It was developed before the Committee on Finance, under Senator JOHNSON'S resolution, that a sum of nearly half a million dollars had been paid to the son of the President of the Republic of Peru in connection with these flotations.

GREED

One outstanding example of the manner in which National City transacted business was shown by the testimony of Mr. Edgar B. Brown, of Pottsville, Pa. He read an advertisement in a standard magazine where the National City proposed to manage investments for those who expected to travel and be absent from home for some time. He said that fit his case, so he wrote the National City Bank. Promptly a salesman appeared at his home and took over his investments under power of attorney. This man is today broken in health; he has lost his entire fortune. His case is merely typical of thousands of others.

This is another instance of a reputable banking house with a century of growth and confidence back of it suddenly going wrong in the hands of unsound management, who were so anxious for immediate gain that greed got the better of their judgment.

SPECULATES IN OWN STOCK

The most notorious operation of National City was the manipulation and speculation in the stock of its own bank. In other words, National City Bank stock, which at the peak went to $580 a share, and has since sold for $20 a share, even now 3 years after the peak sells only at $31, which is probably about its fair value. Finding in the first instance they could sell more stock than they had, they divided each share into five new shares. The astonishing thing is that the difference between the peak market value and the low value on the total issue of this bank stock was around $3,000,000,000—3,000 times a million dollars—and it was shown that short selling contributed to this result. This is, and will for a long time be, the most outstanding example of insane speculation. Men supposedly well informed in business and finance, who were looked up to by every banker in the country as men of integrity, lost all sense of value.

Their only defense is they did not have any basis to figure—yet they had the books of the company showing the assets of the bank right before them. They also claim they did not know the depression was coming. They had less business foresight than Members of this body or men on the street.

WARNINGS UNHEEDED

Let me here repeat: They had the books of the National City organization before them; they had the inventory; they knew what the bank owned and what the affiliate owned. They knew assets and liabilities, and still they pleaded lack of knowledge. One witness from the National City Bank, as I have said, pleaded that they did not know the depression was coming. Senator Brookhart said to him, "You should have read the speech of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] which was made in 1926 and you would have known it was coming."

It may not be out of place here also to recall that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency reported favorably in the spring of 1928 the La Follette resolution—Senate Resolution 113 of the first session of the Seventieth Congress—a year and a half before the stock market broke in the fall of 1929. Not one of the committee members claimed to be a financial expert, but they all agreed in forecasting the disaster, which those New York financiers said they could not foresee.

TAX EVASION

Incidentally, the committee has found a great deal of technical tax avoidance and unlawful tax evasion. I should not be surprised that many millions of dollars will be recovered as a result of this investigation which, up to the time I gave up the chairmanship of the Banking and Currency Committee on the 4th of March, had cost in all about $85,000. Indictments have been found in Federal courts, and civil actions are already pending for about a million dollars against a former official of the National City Bank. The investigation is still under way, and the public may well expect that very important matters will develop under the direction of the new chairman of the committee, the able Senator from Florida.

PUBLIC SUFFERS

The stock-market collapse was a tragic disaster for the American investor, and is doubtless responsible for a great deal of the lack of confidence from which this country has suffered so much the last few years.

The American public has looked with confidence and pride upon men who have been successful in the accumulation of wealth, but the light thrown upon securities markets by the Senate committee indicates neither judgment nor integrity on the part of some of the leading figures in American finance, though it must be admitted there are bankers even in New York who have not yielded to temptation and have not betrayed their stockholders nor the public. They are outstanding because they are the exceptions.

This great debacle grows out of the fact that we have forgotten that money must be earned instead of made. We all hope for an early business recovery, but that is impossible without a return to plain, old-fashioned business honesty.

We have not had the time nor the facilities to examine corporate practices in their relation to the securities markets, nor have we gone behind that to the State charter situation which is the starting point of much of this trouble. We have not gone into the investment trusts where is to be found probably the greatest single complication of bad security practice. Nor have we examined the holding-company matter, and that is no small part of the problem. Some of this ground we should retrace for more searching examination. The aspects we have not touched should be looked into.

REMEDIES

How we should continue depends upon two things: First, we should uncover rotteness, the frauds and the fakes, until the public is fully aroused to the need of remedies and until we know enough about the facts to draft sound legislation. Second, we should continue facing the disagreeable truth—and there is plenty of it left—until no responsible banker or business man in the country will dare obstruct with lobbying fixers any honest and intelligent attempt to give the public a remedy.

Two general courses of action seem possible. We can hamstring markets with a lot of prohibitory laws that will make business good for a new crop of lawyers whose job it will be to beat them; or we can permit a good deal of freedom under a system which will definitely fix responsibility for deception and frauds upon directors and other officials and with severe penalties for such acts. Personally, I prefer the latter approach to the problem.

We must have simpler corporate structures and more straightforward accounting and auditing.

We should have better and more complete information about investments, cleaner publicity, more facts, and less bunk.

All publicity which induces the public to invest should carry with it an obligation of personal liability for the accuracy of the facts stated.

Bankers who depend on secret arrangements or market manipulations for their profits should be driven out of business by those who are willing to lay their cards on the table with the public.

When the time comes, I believe the lawyers in the Senate should consider the principle of a Federal license to do business in interstate commerce as a device to regulate securities markets.

We are not going to restore confidence in investment markets by soft-pedaling or side-stepping the facts. I believe the inquiry should proceed without suspension, or until we have restored this confidence through practical and effective remedies.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I have been very much interested in the Senator's speech. I think the committee has done a great deal of very effective work. I should like to have the Senator make an explanation at this time of the reason why the Chase National Bank has never been drawn into the investigation. It is certainly one of the worst of these malefactors and yet has never been drawn into the investigation.

Mr. NORBECK. I am frank to say, and I want to admit here, as I have admitted many other times, that there are many more that ought to be investigated. We are able to take only one at a time. When we called Mr. Mitchell down here, he was at the head of the biggest bank in the world. He had been a member of the Federal Reserve bank and had defied the Federal Reserve Board when they tried to slow down the boom. He showed an arrogance that was simply unbelievable. We had him here four times before we could get anything substantial out of him.

Mr. CLARK. Is it the purpose of the committee to pursue the investigation through the Chase National Bank and the rest of those banking institutions that ought to be investigated?

Mr. NORBECK. I am no longer chairman of the committee and I cannot speak for the committee. I think the question should be addressed to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. CLARK. I am aware of that fact, but I wanted to get the Senator's reaction to the situation.

Mr. NORBECK. I have already in my remarks stated that I think a great deal more should be done, that we have got to break down every crooked organization so that we can throw the fear of God into them and let them know there is law in the land. Until we do that we cannot restore confidence to the people. We have examined only one bank in New York, perhaps the worst one of the lot.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will agree that the National City is only one example?

Mr. NORBECK. That is true.

Mr. CLARK. The Chase National should be investigated just as much as the City National?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; there have been many complaints coming to the committee off and on about the stock manipulations of the Chase Bank. I for one think we ought to look into them. But as I have said before, that is a matter for the committee to decide.

Mr. CLARK. That is all I wanted. I merely desired the Senator's reaction to that suggestion.

PRESENCE OF STENOGRAPHERS BEFORE GRAND JURIES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for interrupting its present business, but the matter which I now present is quite in the nature of an emergency.

It will be remembered that in the last Congress the Senate passed a bill authorizing district attorneys or other counsel for the Government to employ stenographers and clerks in taking testimony before a grand jury. That bill passed the Senate, but did not pass the other branch of Congress. I have reintroduced the bill, and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has ordered a favorable report on the same. Doubtless Senators would like to know what changes are here proposed to the present law.

Section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States reads as follows:

No indictment found and presented by a grand jury in any district or other court of the United States shall be deemed insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant.

The bill proposes to add the following language:

Or by reason of the attendance before the grand jury during the taking of testimony of one or more clerks or stenographers employed in a clerical capacity to assist the district attorney or other counsel for the Government who shall, in that connection, be deemed to be persons acting for and on behalf of the United States in an official capacity and function.

The Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, has urged the enactment of this bill. The reason I ask immediate consideration is—without mentioning the places or the States—a number of United States grand juries are soon to be impaneled looking toward what might be called a more effective and vigorous action against "gangsters." In many States the district attorneys have the power and authority to employ stenographers and clerks to aid in clerical capacities before the grand jury. A vast deal of doubt now exists as to whether the United States courts have the power to uphold and sustain an indictment where stenographers or clerks were present before the grand jury.

I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill to which I have referred, and I present a report (No. 64) thereon. The report is a unanimous one, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received.

The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. There will be no discussion on the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no! I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 1582) to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1025. No indictment found and presented by a grand jury in any district or other court of the United States shall be deemed insufficient, nor shall the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant."

Mr. ASHURST. That is the present law. Now comes the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Or by reason of the attendance before the grand jury during the taking of testimony of one or more clerks or stenographers employed in a clerical capacity to assist the district attorney or other counsel for the Government who shall, in that connection, be deemed to be persons acting for and on behalf of the United States in an official capacity and function.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO BANK CONSERVATION ACT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a matter of very considerable interest here in the District.

It will be remembered that not long ago we passed the Emergency Banking Act, and in section 207 of that act provision is made for reorganizing banks that have been closed, and so forth, under the President's order. In section 207 "national banking associations" are mentioned, but the section does not seem to give the Comptroller of the Currency authority to permit this reorganization plan to operate on other banks in the District that are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency—for instance, trust companies, savings banks, and so forth—all of which are under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

There is pending here a bill which the Committee on Banking and Currency unanimously reports, and which the Secretary of the Treasury recommends, which will enable a number of these banks in the District to reorganize, simply by substituting for the words "national banking association", in section 207, the word "banks." The bill is only five lines long. As I say, it will give relief to the depositors in savings banks and trust companies that are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, as I understand, the bill applies only to the District of Columbia.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is all.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for its present consideration?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. If there is no debate on it, I shall have no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sure there will be no debate.

Mr. HARRISON. I think, however, we had better proceed with the tax bill just as soon as the bill referred to by the Senator is out of the way.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator. Ordinarily I should not make this request, but these depositors are very anxious to have some relief afforded them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 1410) to amend section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act, with respect to bank reorganizations, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act is amended by striking out "national banking association" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof the word "bank."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have the report printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 60) submitted by Mr. FLETCHER on the 10th instant is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 60, Seventy-third Congress, first session]

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 1410):

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1410) to amend section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act with respect to bank reorganizations, having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of the bill is to correct an inadvertent error in the language of section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act (title II of the Emergency Banking Act of Mar. 9, 1933), which as written provides for the reorganization of national banking associations under special conditions. The provisions of the remaining sections of the act are uniformly extended to "banks", a term which is defined in section 202 as including not only national banking associations, but also banks and trust companies located in the District of Columbia and operating under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency. It seems obvious that a discrimination against the latter class was not intended in the matter of reorganizations, and therefore the committee recommends the passage of the bill, which strikes out the term "national banking association" wherever it occurs in such section 207 and inserts in lieu thereof the defined term "bank."

The bill has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as shown by his report hereto attached and made a part thereof.

MAY 9, 1933.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

Chairman Senate Committee on Banking and Currency,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your request of April 20, 1933, for a report on S. 1410, "To amend section 207 of the Bank Conservation Act with respect to bank reorganizations."

The proposed amendment to the act would strike out of section 207 the phrase "national banking association", wherever it appears therein and would substitute therefor the word "bank", which is defined in section 202 of the Bank Conservation Act as meaning (1) any national banking association and (2) any bank or trust company located in the District of Columbia and operating under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Section 207 provides a basis of consent by shareholders and/or depositors and other creditors to a plan of reorganization. As this section now is written, State-chartered banks and trust companies operating in the District of Columbia cannot avail themselves of its provisions, since those banks which come within the scope of the section are specifically referred to as "national banking associations"; whereas the amendment would make the section applicable to all those banks and trust companies in the District of Columbia which are under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The Treasury considers it essential to contemplated plans of reorganization of certain banks in the District of Columbia that the provisions of section 207 be made applicable to these banks and therefore recommends the immediate enactment of the proposed bill.

Sincerely yours,

W. H. WOODIN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5040) to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Keyes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Couzens	King	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Cutting	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Dale	Lewis	Russell
Bailey	Dickinson	Logan	Schall

Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Patterson	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson	Pittman	White
Connally	Kean	Pope
Coolidge	Kendrick	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly in behalf of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the committee amendment dealing with the power aspects of this measure. I had prepared an amendment similar to that offered by the Senator from Nebraska; but, inasmuch as his amendment covers the same field in large part, I have refrained from offering it.

I have been impelled to say what I am going to say—and I want to make it as brief as possible—by the remarks of some of the Senators dealing with certain aspects of the power business, particularly with the question of whether or not this act would impose an undue burden on private companies.

I think we are all very well aware of the fact that during all of this depression, which probably is the most trying and tragic the Nation has ever experienced in its entire history, the private power industry of this country has fared better than any other industry.

During this entire panic or depression I have watched the profit record made by the privately owned power companies of this country; and the astounding and astonishing fact remains that the private power industry of this country has fared better, has been better fortified to withstand the economic shocks of this depression, than any other business on earth.

Some of the ablest thinkers in this country, including our best-known economists, have pointed out repeatedly that the very nature of the power business in this country fortifies it against shocks which so easily affect other types of business; and we have seen the profits of these private power companies not only mount steadily during good times but remain unimpaired during a panic which has destroyed the business life of so many others.

I am now going to take the liberty of telling the Members of the Senate some of the experiences of the people of my own State, merely to shed a little light on this problem. I merely want to tell you some of the facts concerning our experience out in the State of Washington, which will tend to explain to you why it is that power companies are immune from the shocks that affect so harshly other forms of business and why they are able to carry the burden of government, as is suggested in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] referred some time ago to the fact that his own State does not have a State regulatory body. I assume that is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has a railroad commission, which, of course, deals with railroad matters; but it never has had conferred upon it the authority to regulate electric-light rates in cities.

Mr. BONE. That was my understanding; and the Senator expressed the feeling that perhaps they might not be as adequately and as well protected in the State of Kentucky from the encroachments of power companies as they would be if they had a State regulatory body of some sort.

Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that my own State of Washington possesses what is said to be a State regulatory law second to none, drafted by the most capable attorneys for private power interests, passed by a legislature willing to give those interests anything that they wanted. It has been on our statute books since the year 1911. We have had ample time to demonstrate its workability, to demonstrate whether or not it would protect the people of my State from wrong at the hands of private power companies. So let us examine for just a moment some of the things that have occurred under the regulatory law of the State of Washington, and find out how power companies have fared there.

Let me say to the Members of the Senate that in the State of Washington for a great many years active battles have been carried on against private power companies to establish, firmly and perpetually, the institution of public ownership of power. The State of Washington possesses nearly 20 percent of all the hydroelectric energy in this country in its rivers and lakes, the most priceless heritage that ever came to any people. It is worth billions of dollars. It can be translated, year after year, into millions of dollars of profit that should be flowing into the public treasury instead of the coffers of private power companies. This revenue would in itself help very materially to solve the tax problem of the State of Washington. It would, if it were handled correctly, at one fell swoop wipe out this Banquo's ghost of taxation which assails the people of my State as it does the people of every other State in the Union.

Private power companies out there are just like the private power companies in the State of Kentucky or in any other State of this Union.

They want to make all the profit they can; but in my State, contrary to the experience they have enjoyed in other States, notably in the Middle West, and in other sections of this country where they did not have the strong sentiment for public ownership, the private power companies have been subjected to rigid and critical scrutiny at the hands of men like myself who are interested in the building of great publicly owned power systems which have effectively served the people of that great Commonwealth. In spite of this critical scrutiny at the hands of these critics of private power companies, these power companies in Washington have boldly put across some of the very things which have subjected Mr. Insull and his associates to the criticism which has been justly visited upon them.

Let me try to illustrate: It has been stated that a number of little power companies will be injured by the application of the change suggested by the Senator from Nebraska. Let us see what has happened to the little companies of the State of Washington, because what has happened in that State is typical of what is happening to them everywhere.

A few years ago when this flair for the creation of holding companies took possession of this country there came into existence organizations like the Electric Bond & Share Co., the American Power & Light Co., the Insull combine, the Foshay outfit, and a number of others I could mention. They set about to acquire every independent power company in this country and wipe out of existence the little power companies concerning which the Senator from Kentucky has spoken.

They came into my State. The American Power & Light Co. is an example, an eastern power combine controlled in New York City. It took over three major power companies in the State of Washington which served the greater part of that State, the Washington Water Power Co. on the east side of the State, a large company; the Pacific Power & Light Co., in the south and east part of the State; on the west side, the Northwestern Electric Co.; and I want Senators to remember that last name, because I am going to refer to one of its peculiar experiences in a moment.

There remains in my State only one other company of major size and importance, the Puget Sound Power & Light Co., now controlled by another holding company, the Engineers Public Service Corporation.

I call this to the attention of the Senator from Kentucky, because if his State is ever subjected to this sort of fantastic financial business I trust that he and other citizens who object will write into the law books of their State provisions which will protect the people from that sort of thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I judge, from what the Senator says concerning the law in his State, and the type of men who are administering it, that there would be no difficulty for the light and power companies to appear before the public-service commission and secure an increase of rates which would enable them to absorb the proposed tax.

Mr. BONE. I will try to answer the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is true, I am wondering whether the increase will be limited to the tax, or whether they will use it as a vehicle on which to hang additional increases in rates, and, after all, whether the people are to be benefited by the transfer of this tax from the consumer to the producer, so called.

Mr. BONE. I am going to try to explain why I think this tax can be borne and should be borne by the private power companies, and I am telling the Senator now why the earnings of these companies are sufficient to enable them to absorb this proposed tax without reverting to this process of passing it on to their customers.

Again, I want to suggest to the Senator, when he refers to this thing we call "public regulation", that I know of no system of public regulation ever devised that has successfully regulated these private power companies, because in my own State we are no better or no worse than the people of other States, and our past system of regulation tolerated the thing I am about to describe. However, we now have a new State administration which gives promise of stopping the practices to which I shall advert.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I just want to suggest that the only regulation that has been effective in the far Northwest has been the regulation that has come about by the competition of municipally owned plants in the State of Washington and other States. Then we have had real regulation.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, my colleague from the State of Washington is absolutely correct. The only kind of regulation that ever regulated private power companies is the sort of regulation we have created in the State of Washington, where we have set up the yardstick of public ownership of power. We have harnessed the rivers and lakes and have been selling cheap light and power so that the people have had an opportunity to know what power could be sold for at a profit.

Mr. President, to get back to the Washington Waterpower Co., it was taken over by the American Power & Light Co. at a cost of about $26,000,000, and one of the first entries on the books of the American Power & Light Co. in this new set-up was a new valuation of $57,000,000, a write-up of practically 100 percent. That write-up was represented by a flood of stocks, bonds, notes, and debentures, prior preference super-heterodyne stocks and bonds of one kind or another, upon which the people will pay interest and dividends as long as that company is permitted to operate in the State.

Why was that write-up made? If they are not going to make earnings on the stocks and bonds issued in the set-up, why did they issue them? There is not a man in this body who is a lawyer who can rise to his feet and explain the logic of uttering all that stock unless that power company was going to do one thing. It was going to make the public pay on this new capital or it was capitalizing false hope for earnings.

Mr. President, let us examine the record of another company operating in the southern part of my State, known as the "Northwestern Electric Co." It is another child of the American Power & Light Co. Before I refer to that company, however, let me retrace my steps for an instant to point out to the Senate that when the American Power & Light Co. took over the Washington Waterpower Co., a very peculiar thing occurred. That company had been controlled largely by local men, but it suddenly discovered that it needed a guardian, and it employed an eastern holding company to give it technical advice, something it had been able to get along without very beautifully over the years. For that technical advice it has been paying that eastern concern a sum many times in excess of the tax that would be levied under the pending bill.

Going to the southern end of the State, to the Northwestern Electric Co., another child, or grandchild, or some sort of relative, of the American Power & Light Co., we find that a few years ago that company filed on the water power of a river in southern Washington known as the "White Salmon River." Then followed one of the most astounding things that ever occurred in my State, but a thing which has been repeated and duplicated all over this country and which has brought the power industry of this country to the verge of ruin and precipitated things like the Insull crash.

The company filed on that little stream, securing its water right from the State. That river belonged to every boy and girl in Washington. Because of the peculiar laws of the State, that river was practically given to this power company. All it paid was a tiny filing fee for the privilege of harnessing the stream for private profit. It built a little stream-flow hydroelectric-power plant which produced 15,000 horsepower of electric energy. The plant cost that company $1,230,000, or about $82 per horsepower.

Then came the financial jugglery I want to describe. This has happened not only with that power company, but it has happened with hundreds of private power companies in this country. It is one of those things for which the private power companies in this country can never answer to the people of this Republic who have been robbed, skinned, gouged by this sort of business. This was put over in my State, under State regulation, where the regulated outfit successfully regulated its regulators. Against that bare water right, which cost nothing, the company issued $10,424,000 in securities. Bear in mind that the plant cost only $1,230,000, but the Northwestern Electric Co. issued $10,424,000 in securities against a water right which cost nothing, and that flood of wind and water represented nearly nine times the capital cost of that plant, and these securities were uttered in addition to the capital cost of the plant.

When I challenged that operation on the public platform I was met with the charge that they had merely issued the stock and were not earning on it, and a gentleman down in Portland, who edits a paper called the "Oregon Voter" volunteered the statement in a debate with me that the company was merely capitalizing its hopes. "Are they paying dividends on hopes?" I asked. The company, through one of its leading agents, denied they had been paying dividends; but not long ago, in a rate hearing in Oregon, it was demonstrated that the company had been paying 10 to 12 percent a year on that $10,000,000 ever since the securities were issued.

These dividends were paid on those phantom dollars in that fake capitalization. This phantom value was translated into real value by the alchemy of State regulation. The earnings on this fake value have been taken out of the pocketbooks of the people of Oregon and Washington year after year. They have been taken out of the pockets of widows and orphans in that section. They represented the interest on ten and a half million dollars, which did not represent one dollar of investment. Ten percent on that vast sum would be over a million dollars a year, over a million dollars a year filched from the pockets of the people of Washington and Oregon by that one transaction, put across by men who claimed to be reputable, honest, and honorable business men.

Mr. President, I pick up a report of the Internal Revenue Department, giving a statement of the collections under the revenue act on power and light in the State of Washington during 8 months, and I find there was collected only the sum of $246,000. The Northwestern Electric Co., out of the money it has filched from the people over the years by that one shady transaction, could have absorbed this 3-percent tax on electrical energy and not affect its revenues in any substantial way.

Another thing occurred which is illuminating. In 1924 we had a big power fight in an attempt to write into the statute books of Washington a public-ownership measure. The private power companies bitterly resisted it, and spent a million dollars fighting the bill. In the reports of these Washington power companies filed with the State, there appears no evidence of the expenditure of that vast sum of money employed to fight the right of the people to use their own power systems. We cannot trust a power company to be square with us in dealing with that type of expenditures. Under State regulation there certainly should be some evidence of the expenditure of such a vast sum of money to fight legislation.

Mr. President, let us turn to Chicago for a moment, and see how these companies fared in the Middle West, and whether they could pay in the way of taxes the small sum that is required under this bill. I see the Senator from Illinois in the Chamber, and he will recall that not long ago Mr. Insull, the head of a great combine in his city, very generously gave $20,000,000 to build an opera house. The Insull Co., operating in Chicago and all through that section of the country, has been reaching into the pocketbooks of the people of that entire section, taking a toll totally disproportionate to the service rendered.

In the month of December 1929 I used in my home in Tacoma 2,249 kilowatt-hours of electric current, which cost me $16.55. That was the charge the city of Tacoma made to me for furnishing me 2,249 kilowatt-hours of current. This was an average price of a little over 7 mills per kilowatt-hour. That is the astonishing record of public ownership. I went over to Chicago a few months later to make a speech before a public body, and while there that bill was checked with the Commonwealth Edison Co., of Chicago, against the lowest domestic rate in that city. It was checked three ways—against the records of the State regulatory body; with rate experts in my section of the country, who were thoroughly familiar with that sort of work; and against the company's records at Chicago, where I went to ask them what it would be. I was advised that this consumption, at domestic rates, would be $98. It was $16.55 in Tacoma, under public ownership, $98 in Chicago, under Sam Insull. No wonder he could give $20,000,000 to Chicago for an opera house. Who could not be generous; whose hand could not be wide open; who profited by such a wide difference in the rates? Yet the Insull Co., as Senators know, advertises to the world that it possesses the finest steam generating equipment in this country.

It owns the very last word in electrical-generating equipment, has the finest engineering ability to be found in this country producing cheap power—yet they charge the citizen of Chicago $98 for what my city charged me only $16.55. Does anyone wish to suggest that that sort of company cannot pay this tax and absorb it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator indicated the difference between the rates charged by a municipally owned electric company and a privately owned company, reflecting their ability to pay this tax. I am just wondering if the Senator, in his very exhaustive study of this subject, had noticed the great difference between the valuation placed on the power companies for rate-making purposes and the valuations that are shown when such properties are returned for taxation in the various States?

Mr. BONE. I am glad the Senator from Georgia has referred to that. I am going to give the Senator some figures which I want to place in the RECORD, so that Members of the Senate may understand exactly what this tax evasion means to the private power company.

First, I want to say to the Senator that the whole theory that underlies the principle of public ownership of power is a very simple one. That theory is service at cost to the public. Let me explain what that means.

In 1908 the people of Tacoma decided to build a hydroelectric plant on the Nisqually River. Immediately the private power interests set up a dreadful wail that we were going to plunge the city into debt from which it would never emerge. We went ahead, however, and built a hydroelectric plant that cost $2,000,000, and in 12 years, out of operating revenue, we paid off every dollar of cost of that hydroelectric plant.

That power plant is now the property of my city. So profitable has it been that during the twelfth year the system paid $1,000,000 to the city in net profit, while selling the cheapest light and power in this country. The one purpose that underlies public ownership is to give service at the lowest possible cost, pay decent wages, and at the same time write out the capital structure.

Let me suggest to the Senator from Georgia that our light and power system, publicly owned, is one of the finest in this country. Today it has a capital debt of $38 a horsepower, evidenced by outstanding bond issues that will be paid off in a few years. The average maturity of these bonds is about 8 or 9 years. One of the private power companies out there is operating under a capital debt represented by stock and bond issues amounting to over $400 per horsepower; that is to say, 10 times the capital debt of the Tacoma municipal system. That capital debt of the private company will never be paid off, and when my child is a grandfather the people of that section will still be paying interest and dividends on the capital structure of that company. In a few years the capital debt of the power system of the city of Tacoma will have been completely retired, and we will have a $30,000,000 plant free of debt.

Every cent of profit that is then derived from the system will go back to the people in the form of high wages to the men employed in the plant, the cheapest power in the world, and reduction of taxation. That is public ownership of power. Private companies are claiming throughout the country that they can produce power cheaper in steam plants than in hydroelectric plants. The Tacoma plant is a hydro plant.

Now, getting back to the tax problem, I want to refer to that for a moment, and then I will be through. In 1924, in the State of Washington, there was a big power fight. We have had many such fights in that section of the country. That fight revolved around a power measure which bore my name, because I drafted the bill and caused it to be initiated to the people so that they might vote on it. The bill provided, in brief, that the city-owned power systems might freely sell their electrical energy outside their city limits in competition with private companies. The suggestion was immediately made that that would be a desolating thing, that it would be un-American, bolshevik, or something of that sort—such terms come trippingly from the lips of the gentlemen who ardently defend private ownership of power.

One of the arguments raised against the bill was that it would remove property from the tax rolls, because under the "Bone bill", so-called, public ownership would expand and then the private plants would be stricken from the tax rolls. A million dollars was expended by private power companies for propaganda work, for paid advertisements in newspapers, and for hundreds of orators engaging in radio speaking and every other form of propaganda. The private power companies represented to the people of the State that they had $300,000,000 of property on the tax rolls which would all be lost to the tax collector. That assertion was made by men who were jealous of their honor and who would be outraged if it were suggested that they were not telling the people the absolute truth. They were the spokesmen of the private power companies. The people of my State had a right to believe that these men told the truth, and they did believe them, because at that time they voted down the bill.

But it so happened that instead of paying taxes on $300,000,000 of property, which they claimed to have on the tax roll, the companies were paying taxes on a total valuation of $9,450,000. This tax value was less than one thirtieth of the property value they claimed to possess and to have on the tax rolls.

These men deceived the public. The private power companies were paying normal taxes in that State on a valuation of $9,450,000 when they were telling everybody in thousands of circulars and in newspaper advertisements that they had $300,000,000 of property on the tax roll. I repeat, they were paying on one thirtieth of the value they claimed.

Another big power fight in that State occurred in 1930, the "grange power fight", so-called, when we prepared a bill creating power districts similar to those set up in the Province of Ontario. That year newspapers friendly to the Power Trust claimed that the private power companies had $400,000,000 of property on the tax rolls. They were, however, only paying the normal 70-mill tax in the State of Washington, on a valuation of $16,781,000. In other words, they were paying taxes in about the same ratio as in 1924.

A couple of years ago a friend of mine, who is now head of the regulatory body in the State of Washington, started condemnation proceedings on behalf of the city of Puyallup, Wash., to acquire the distribution system of the private power company.

I sat in the Federal courtroom when that case was tried and saw the vice president of that company, a gentleman by the name of McGrath, go on the witness stand, hold up his hand and swear "to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth", and then heard him testify that the property of his company in that city was worth $450,000 and that the company was making a legitimate return on $450,000. I went to the county assessor's office to ascertain how much tax that company was paying on its $450,000 of property. I found that the $450,000 of property on which this company was earning a handsome net return paid taxes on a value of $15,000, or exactly one thirtieth of the value which its officers and owners swore it was worth.

That record is plain. I have been over the Pacific coast, from one end to the other, checking the tax records of these companies, and the same story of deception and tax evasion is found in all the tax books. The companies are collecting rates on tremendously inflated values and paying taxes on a fraction of these values.

When one challenges that situation they say that in their values for rate-making purposes are numerous intangibles. There is nothing so intangible as these intangibles. Mostly, they are pure imagination.

Intellectual honesty compels but one answer to this sort of financing. Whatever the nature of the investment of private power companies, such an investment finds its way into the rate base of the company and forms the basis of earnings. Rate structures are built around these investments and intangible values. Under all systems of State regulation, the companies base earnings on not only every kind of actual investment made, but upon many sorts of intangible values that have been sustained in the past, and which have no place in a rate structure.

These values should not be immune from taxation, when their owners are permitted to tax the public on such values in the form of rates. That proposition is one of simple justice to the home owner and ordinary taxpayer. If the law makes any form of property so real that a man can make private profit out of it, that property should be taxed.

However, this angle of the power business is not directly involved in this amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. I sincerely hope that his amendment will be adopted. It will, if adopted, merely place a little of the emergency tax burden on the greatest tax evaders in the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is an appropriate place in which to insert in the RECORD an article from Public Ownership regarding municipal ownership in Washington, Ind. I should like to have the article printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From Public Ownership, February 1933]

WASHINGTON, IND., WORKS WONDERS—THIS LITTLE INDIANA CITY WITH LOW RATES IS DEBT FREE, REDUCES TAXES, KEEPS FACTORIES RUNNING, AND ITS PEOPLE EMPLOYED—THROUGH MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

By John W. McCarty, mayor

(Editorial note.—One of the most striking examples of what municipal ownership can do for a city may be found in Washington, Ind. (population, 9,070). That city has one of the lowest tax rates in the State and one of the lowest electric light and power rates; is practically free of debt, has put thousands of dollars into the general city fund, used surplus earnings to keep the factories in the town running and its people employed, and otherwise contributed in most astonishing ways to the general prosperity of the community. And all of this through the surplus earnings of its remarkably successful municipal light and power plant. In the following pages Mayor McCarty tells the remarkable story of this city's achievements.)

From early childhood up to the present time I have always had a desire to see the city in which I lived be the owner of its utilities, as otherwise cities cannot function properly without that great help which the utilities can give. We have owned our electric light and power plant for over 30 years, but we have only recently, June 1932, acquired our waterworks.

STARTED OVER 30 YEARS AGO

In the year 1900 the city council of Washington, Ind., purchased from private ownership a 175-kilowatt-hour electric plant, paying for it the sum of $83,291, which sum was about 6 times its actual cost, but as time went on it proved a godsend to our people, as it furnished at a moderate rate light and power that a privately owned concern would fail to do. This old plant functioned rather well until the year 1921, when the city started to build a new up-to-date 2,000-kilowatt-hour plant, completing the plant in the year 1922. This new, modern, and up-to-date plant shows a book value of $650,000 and could be sold tomorrow for the sum of $1,000,000, but five times this amount would be no inducement to sell, as the people of this good city realize that they have a safeguard which money cannot purchase.

HOW IT HAS HELPED THE CITY

Since the year 1926 this municipal light plant has done some remarkable things in the way of betterments for the city of Washington, and the following are some of them:

(1) In the first place, the surplus earnings of this plant have enabled us to pay the original cost of the plant—$83,291—and also to retire the outstanding debt of $57,000 additional, which had 20 years to run, saving in interest $37,000. Not only that but the surplus earnings have also paid for various enlargements, extensions, and improvements to the plant, amounting in all to $430,251, so that the plant is now thoroughly modern and up-to-date.

(2) Secondly, the success and surplus earnings of the plant have enabled us to reduce the rates, which were originally 10 cents per kilowatt-hour maximum to 7 cents per kilowatt-hour, with a 5-percent discount if paid promptly.

(3) Third, it has helped us to wipe out our city debts. Not only have we paid off all the indebtedness on the plant, as indicated above, but we have also, out of the surplus earnings of this plant, retired a $7,000 indebtedness we owed on the city hall.

(4) Fourth, it has also helped us to reduce taxes from $1.12 on the $100 valuation in 1930 to 43½ cents in 1933. This was done by appropriating to the general city funds out of the earnings of the light plant $80,000 for 1931 and 1932, and an additional $45,000 for 1932-33, making a total of $125,000 in those 3 years.

(5) Fifth, it has paid $19,000 for a modern office building conveniently located on the main street of the city and serving not only the electric-light plant but also the recently acquired waterworks system.

(6) Sixth, the plant has enabled us to set aside $7,182 for the improvement and extension of our streets and alleys.

(7) Seventh, out of the surplus earnings we have also set aside $13,600 for the relief of the unemployed during the current years of the depression.

(8) Eighth, out of the surplus earnings we have applied $27,500 to keep our industries going and our people employed. Twenty thousand dollars of this was invested in a shirt factory and $7,500 in another factory, thus keeping between 500 and 600 men and women employed.

HELPING THE UNEMPLOYED

Perhaps the most pressing problem confronting any city administration during these present times of depression is the problem of unemployment. And we have felt that it was better to give our people work than to give them a dole. We have, therefore, made every effort to keep the wheels of industry going.

In the spring of 1930 a factory which was being operated in this city, employing 250 men and women, was about to leave our city because of inadequate factory space. An effort was put forth by the city and business people here to save the factory, and a company was started to construct a building such as the factory people needed. The building was erected at a cost of $90,000, the city taking $20,000 of its stock and paying for this out of the light fund of the electric-light plant, and this plant has since completion been employing over 600 people.

The $20,000 of stock in the shirt factory purchased in this manner bears 6-percent interest, so that the city earns $1,200 per year in this way and in addition thereto the factory uses approximately $8,000 worth of electric light and power per year. In this way during the last 10 years this particular factory and the old plant have paid into the general fund of the city for power, light, and interest approximately $165,000. In this way the city of Washington considers its investment in this factory a very good-paying proposition, first, because it keeps its people employed and, secondly, it is actually earning money in doing so.

Not only have we assisted the aforesaid manufacturing company but kept the wheels of industry of another factory going by loaning it $7,500, and have seen the number of men and women employed grow from 48 to 150. The above amount, too, was taken from the light fund.

Besides these cash investments in keeping our people employed, the city has also taken out of the light fund the sum of $13,600 with which to give employment to those who are out of work.

REDUCING TAXES

As stated above, due to the surplus earnings of our municipal light and power plant, we have been able to reduce taxes from $1.12 per $100 to 49 cents. This reduction was accomplished by the appropriation of a total of $125,000 during the last 3 years for reduction of taxes for 1931, 1932, and 1933 to the general expenses of the city, which otherwise would have been carried by the taxpayers.

In making our budget for 1933 we were worried as to how we were going to do our part in reducing our former low rate. We had appropriated $80,000 for tax reduction out of the earnings of the light plant during 1931 and 1932. In so doing we had brought the rate down to 45½ cents on the hundred. But in 1933 we are confronted with a depreciation of property values of $1,970,140, and also have a street- and alley-intersection tax to pay of $7,182, which we have agreed to pay out of the general fund instead of making a levy to do so. But, as someone has well said, "Where there is a will there is a way", and we have made our budget for 1933, again reducing the tax rate of this year from 45½ cents to 43½ cents on the $100.

And thus our municipal light plant is actually reducing our tax rates. In June of 1932 the city of Washington purchased its water plant from a private company, paying for it the sum of $650,000. This is to be paid for through revenue bonds. I have repeatedly said, and I say here and now, that when these bonds on the waterworks are paid through the revenue derived from the plant, the surplus earnings of the waterworks, together with the surplus earnings of the light and power plant, should and will, with proper management, make the city of Washington a taxless city.

THE REDUCTION OF RATES

During the early years of the operation of the light plant it did not show a profit. But on the 1st of the month of January 1927, the superintendent of the electric plant in his report to the council showed that in the preceding year, 1926, it had made a profit of $72,000. On this showing we asked the commission to reduce our rates from 10 cents to 7 cents per kilowatt-hour maximum, with a discount of 5 percent if paid on the 10th of the month. This was granted and the rates reduced. The present rate schedule is, for lighting, 6.65 cents for the first 50 kilowatts, 6.175 cents for the next 50 kilowatts, 5.7 for the next hundred, and so on, scaling down to 3.8 cents for all over 1,000 kilowatt-hours, with a minimum charge of 50 cents.

For small power the rate is 3½ cents for the first 500 kilowatt-hours, 3 cents for the next 500, and so on, scaling down to 2 cents for all over 100,000 kilowatt-hours.

Large power users have a rate of 2 cents for the first 10,000 kilowatt-hours, 1.6 cents for the next 15,000 kilowatt-hours, and 1.4 cents for all over 25,000 kilowatt-hours. There is a minimum charge of 50 cents per horsepower. There is a special rate for domestic and commercial heating of 2½ cents for the first 25 kilowatt-hours, 2¼ cents for the next 75 kilowatt-hours, and 2 cents for all over 100 kilowatt-hours, with a minimum charge of $1.50 per month and 5-percent discount for prompt payment.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS

Besides the above-mentioned improvements, the municipal light and power plant has helped the city in acquiring many much-needed and important city improvements. For example, out of the surplus earnings of the plant as mentioned above, $7,000 of indebtedness on our city hall was paid off, as mentioned above, also, a $19,000 office building purchased and paid for, and $7,182 appropriated last year for the improvement of streets and alleys.

SAVING INTEREST ON DEBTS

In this connection, it is important to note that by following the policy of calling in outstanding bonded indebtedness and paying it off, the city has made considerable saving in interest. For example, in October 1930, $64,000 of indebtedness was paid off, and of this, $57,000 had 20 years yet to run. Thus the saving on this item alone was $37,000. There was also $7,000 of this indebtedness which had 4 years to run, so that in this case a saving of $1,500 in interest was made. Thus the saving of interest alone on this retirement of our indebtedness in advance amounted to $38,500.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE PLANT

For several years after the plant was first established the city realized little or no profit, with the exception of furnishing low rates to the consumers. However, as the plant was improved its earnings increased. In April 1917, through a bond issue of $10,000, new boilers were added and a 300-kilowatt-hour generator was acquired. Again in March 1919, the city sold $20,000 worth of 5-percent light bonds to add one 400-kilowatt-hour and one 250-kilowatt-hour, 3-phase, 60-cycle, 22-volt generator. Up to this time the equipment consisted of single-phase, 133-cycle, 1,100 volts, suitable for lighting only. The above equipment was soon loaded up to capacity and it became necessary to lay plans for additional plant development or look for service outside of the city of Washington.

BUILDS NEW MODERN PLANTS

So it was a question of building a new modern up-to-date plant or taking current from outside parties. The issue became a most heated one and the election to determine the matter was called, and those in favor of building a new plant carried by a vote of 11 to 1. So on the 15th day of July 1920 the city sold $83,495.93 worth of 6-percent light bonds payable $2,800 annually, but with a 10-year callable clause.

The above issue provided funds to start the erection of a new plant. By September 15, 1920, it became necessary to sell $11,500 worth of 6-percent, 10-year light bonds to complete boiler equipment. On August 1, 1921, the city being bonded to the limit of 2 percent, entered into a least contract with the manufacturers of turbines for two 500-kilowatt-hour turbine generators with condensing equipment, the total amount of principal and interest being $76,800, with $1,000 payable each month.

On January 1, 1922, it became necessary to make a temporary loan of $20,000 to complete the distribution system from the new to the old system. The new plant was put in service February 22, 1922, with two 500-kilowatt-hour turbines and two 400-horsepower boilers of what seemed an almost impossible financial load of principal and interest, bearing in mind that the annual gross revenue of 1920 was only $56,232.92, but with a very favorable rate the load increased with leaps and bounds until 1924, when it became necessary to add another 422-horsepower boiler at a cost of $1,600. Again in 1926 there was added 1,000-kilowatt-hour turbine with the necessary condensing equipment at a cost of $32,100.

In 1931 there was added a 2,000-kilowatt-hour turbine generator complete with condensing equipment which required an addition to the building, all of which cost $67,400. The distribution system has been one continuous construction for the last 10 years, at a total cost of $145,056.62, including 42 miles of rural lines.

Thus the plant has been thoroughly modernized and fully equipped for handling the service of the city, including service to the surrounding rural territory.

TO SUM UP

Below are enumerated various sums that have been contributed by the plant from time to time to the general city funds:

(1) Original purchase price.....	$83,291
(2) Retirement of original purchase bonds.....	57,000
(3) Extension and improvements since beginning.....	430,251
(4) For tax reduction.....	125,000
(5) For retirement debt on city hall.....	7,000
(6) For purchase of office building.....	19,000
(7) Purchase of stock and loan to factories.....	27,500
(8) For aid of unemployed.....	13,600
(9) For improvement of streets and alleys.....	7,182

Total..... 769,824

The city also owns and operates a street-car system. And for a city of this size this is, of course, quite unique and unusual. The primary purpose of this publicly owned utility is not to make money for the city, but to give to the industrial workers transportation to and from their work. In other words, the main purpose of this utility is public service.

The street-car system has not been a moneymaker. In fact, we have been losing slightly on this investment, especially in recent years, owing to the unemployment. The loss, however, sustained by the operation of these cars is only a trivial matter. A few more shovels of coal is, in the last analysis, about the only real outlay. Of course, the same rate is charged against the street cars as is charged to other users of power. In this way the city secures some return, at least, from the operation. I believe that if we should require all who use the street cars, whether they are public employees or not, to pay the regular fare, it would greatly improve the earnings.

In this connection it is important to note that we still cling to the 5-cent fare on our street cars. This is the lowest street-car fare in the State. And thus, by the maintenance of these city street cars and the 5-cent fare, we are rendering a distinct social service to our community, and especially to the working classes and the common people.

Mr. DILL. I want also to call attention to an article from the Nation, which I inserted in the Record yesterday, showing the tremendous profits which are being made, even in these times of great distress for every other kind of industry, by the public-utility corporations, and particularly by private electrical companies in this country engaged in the power business.

My colleague spoke of what was happening on the Pacific coast. I call attention to what has been happening in New York City, a tremendous increase in the actual dividends paid in 1931 as against 1929 by the power companies of the great city of New York.

I do not want to take the time to argue this question other than to say that when this subject was before the Senate a year ago, I voted repeatedly to place this tax upon the power companies. I believe it should always have been there. I said then and I repeat now it was a breach of faith for the Senate to permit the change to be made in the conference report at that time and for the Senate to have agreed to it. We have before us an important question, and I, for one, hope that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will be adopted.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is necessarily absent. However, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KEAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. McADOO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KEAN. I find that I am able to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], which I do, and vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BULOW. On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. NYE. The pair of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has already been announced. I merely desire to announce his necessary absence, he being in attendance upon a funeral.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—35

Adams	Connally	Long	Reynolds
Ashurst	Costigan	McCarran	Robinson, Ind.

So Mr. NORRIS' amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment without the proviso as a substitute for section 6.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. As a substitute for section 6, on page 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which so sold.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate. We have debated all of this matter. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. The proviso strikes out the exemption of electric energy for manufacturing purposes?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is omitted from the Senator's present amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. That is omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and will vote. I vote "nay".

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Believing that he would vote the same way that I shall vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and withhold my vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily detained at a committee meeting. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. NORRIS' amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, line 10, after the period, it is proposed to insert the following new sentence:

If any person manufactures, produces, or imports such electrical energy and uses it to the extent of more than 500 kilowatt-hours per month, he shall be liable for the tax under this subsection in the same manner as if such electrical energy were purchased by him; and the tax shall be computed on the price at which such electrical energy is sold in the ordinary course of trade, as determined by the Commissioner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the committee amendment, as presented at this time, provides for the taxation of industrial power. The existing law does not levy any tax on industrial power; but, under the committee amendment, the tax is levied only on the sale. The result is that manufacturing concerns which manufacture their own power and use it in their own factories pay no tax, whereas their competitors—usually smaller companies—which buy their power would have to pay the tax. The result is that a discrimination is made as against the smaller concerns engaged in the manufacturing business; and it seems to me that since these concerns are competitors, there ought not to be any advantage given by the law to any particular group of them.

My amendment proposes that manufacturers who produce their own power and consume it in their own plants shall pay at the same rate that the other concerns pay which buy their power.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not get clearly, from the reading of the amendment, what is the basis of the tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. The same—1 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. One percent? But there is no sale price upon which to base it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendment provides that the local sale price of similar power, as determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall control.

Mr. BARKLEY. But suppose there is a manufacturing establishment which is the only one in a town, and no other electrical power or energy is consumed in that community for manufacturing purposes; how will anyone then fix the basis of the tax on it?

That is not an exaggerated illustration. There are many communities in which there is one great industry which produces its own power. There is no similar use of electrical energy, upon which there is a charge, by any private concern. In that case, how would the Secretary of the Treasury be able to fix the tax?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator from Kentucky presents an extreme case.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so. If there were other factories in the community, there would be a criterion by which to go. Suppose we put on this tax of 1 percent. What would be received if they sold the electrical energy instead of using it?

I have in mind certain towns in which there is a cotton mill, for instance, which generates its own electricity. It may be the only one in the county. How can a percentage tax be fixed upon the basis of what would be charged for power in that community if there were no other commercial and industrial electrical-energy producers selling power to the public?

Mr. CONNALLY. I still insist that the Senator is presenting an extreme case, because there is scarcely any county or community in the country that does not have electrical power-producing plants of some kind which sell power.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have in mind, on navigable rivers, power plants erected by a particular industry to use the power for their own purposes, it may be even out away from any commercial production or sale at all of electric power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator does present a case in which there would be some difficulty. I am not prepared to dispute that; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is given the power to determine those matters. It is perfectly practicable for him to ascertain the cost of power under similar conditions in the adjoining county, we may say, or in other centers where the conditions of cost of production are similar, and to take that cost as a basis for the application of this tax.

Mr. President, this amendment will prevent an undue burden upon those small manufacturers who buy their power and will deny an undue advantage to the large concerns, like the Ford Motor Co., for instance, which manufacture their own power, and because they escape the tax.

In the first place, the large concern manufactures its own power because it can do so more cheaply than it can buy it. It already enjoys that advantage over its competitor. If, in addition to that particular advantage it now enjoys, the Government taxes the consumer who buys his power and exempts the consumer who manufactures his power, it will amount to two advantages to the large concern and two burdens on the backs of the small concerns.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was going to ask the Senator a question, which probably will be obviated by what the Senator from Mississippi is about to say.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was going to say to the Senator that I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment and letting the matter go to conference and trying to have it worked out. I do not mean by that just to have it go to conference. I am in real sympathy with the amendment, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Mississippi. I would not be willing simply to agree that it go to conference as a graceful gesture, but on the assurance of the Senator from Mississippi that he means for it to go to conference in the real sense I, of course, have no hesitancy in accepting his proffer.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Mississippi said he was in sympathy with the amendment. I would be one of the conferees, too, and I am in sympathy with it. So I think the Senator may rely upon an earnest endeavor to keep the amendment in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I rely on anything that either the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from Mississippi may say.

Mr. HARRISON. What the Senator from Michigan has said reflects my feeling. The Senator from Texas will recall that in the committee I said I felt that there ought to be an exemption even where the energy was used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with that.

Mr. HARRISON. I would go so far as to exempt the case where energy is used in churches and hospitals.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator from Mississippi that my amendment exempts 500 kilowatts a month, and that saves accounting annoyance in the Treasury in checking up on small concerns.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, there are a good many charitable institutions and educational institutions which make their own electricity. Does the Senator think it is fair to impose the tax on them?

Mr. CONNALLY. Such a use of energy would not be industrial, would it?

Mr. METCALF. Are they exempt?

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator refer to industrial power?

Mr. METCALF. No; I mean light and power used in hospitals.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is not industrial power. This applies only to industrial power. That to which the Senator refers is commercial and domestic.

Mr. METCALF. One more question. Say that I run a little power plant and make a little electricity for use on a poultry farm. Would the Senator call that industrial?

Mr. CONNALLY. We exempt 500 kilowatts a month for just that sort of thing. I think a poultry farm that used more than 500 kilowatts a month would be a pretty substantial establishment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I want to make just this statement. I suppose, in view of the statement of the Senator from Mississippi and the statement of the Senator from Michigan, the amendment will be adopted. I want simply to say that for the 10 months of the year ending the 1st of July 1934 the amount of revenue obtained from it will not justify setting up in the Treasury Department the machinery necessary to collect it. I think it is an indisputable fact that the Treasury would have to set up intricate machinery within its walls to assess and collect the tax, and that the amount collected will not be sufficient during the 10 months of its application to justify the establishment of all this machinery in the Treasury Department. For that reason, I am not for the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I might point out to the Senate that the subcommittee which reported to the full committee recommended the extension of the tax for a year, and it is my conviction that the tax will be extended for a year.

Mr. BARKLEY. It cannot be extended for another year, because it will not be in conference.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not mean by the pending bill, but I mean that it will be extended, when the time comes, for another year, in all probability.

Mr. BARKLEY. We will cross that bridge when we get to it; but I have an idea that whether this particular tax will be extended or not will depend a good deal on the result of the application of it, if this amendment is agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the Senator to yield, because I have an amendment in line with some of the matters which we have been discussing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from California for that purpose?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 7, because I want to make the line of demarcation plain and have us determine exactly the situation which exists here without extraneous matters; to add a new subsection, no. 616½, to be added after line 22, as follows:

None of the provisions of this section or of section 615½ shall apply to publicly owned electric and power plants.

Mr. President, just a word. I never quarrel with decisions which may be made either by the Senate as a whole or by votes which may be cast by individual Senators. Each of us, I assume, is doing his utmost here to vote as his conscience shall dictate and for the best interests of the Nation.

Here, sir, is a fundamental principle presented as between private power companies, with which we are all familiar, and the publicly owned plants. I offer this amendment because in a publicly owned plant in southern California with which I am familiar the difficulties have been so manifold; they have been in many instances created and fostered in such outrageous and shameful fashion by their private competitors, that it is absolutely necessary the Government, instead of frowning upon these publicly owned plants—which have given, as a matter of rates in that particular territory, something of justice unto our people—that the Government, instead of frowning upon them by votes here upon amendments, shall lend its aid, so far as it can, in maintaining them and preserving them.

Mr. President, there is not an election that is held in southern California concerning the publicly owned electric plant there; not an election for bonds with the proceeds of which are expended in behalf of the people, and to serve just the people; there is not an election held there for bonds for construction or extensions, but what money is lavishly spent in that territory by privately owned plants in the endeavor to prevent the necessary two-thirds vote for any bond issue for improving or conserving or protecting the public plants.

Mr. President, there has been a magnificent work done for the people in that section. It is only for the people that I appeal in this particular amendment thus presented. I do not represent any particular interest or any particular aggregation of interests, of course. No one else in this body represents any interest or any particular aggregation of interests, of course. But when the presentation is made here on a line of demarcation that is so plain that he who runs may read, between the aid which may be extended to struggling governmental non-profit-making plants, and private plants that are profit making and in extensive profit making, there should not be, it seems to me, from my standpoint, the slightest hesitancy on the part of representatives of the people in standing for that which the people own themselves, and according to that which the people own themselves the benefits which may be derived in any tax measure.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] made a moving speech today about the Southern California Edison Co. I did not propose then to argue, and I kept silent under the statements which he then made. I did so because I could not conceive that the amendments presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] were going to be defeated. I was egregiously mistaken. The only thing the Senator from Pennsylvania omitted in the moving speech he made was the usual reference to the widows and the orphans who own the stocks and bonds of the private electric company, and who would suffer, forsooth, if we did not accord the private profit-making plants whatever they might wish and whatever they might desire.

I plead for the publicly owned institution. Oh, talk to me no longer about privately owned institutions and private initiative. What was done in the last administration? What have they been doing since? Business, all business, is wandering around here asking aid of the Government. All kinds of private businesses are dipping into the Public Treasury. Government business may ask the aid of Government as well.

I submit this amendment, sir, because the difficulties of the particular plant in southern California I well know. Knowing them, I know that they ought not to be burdened with this particular tax in the circumstances under which they labor, caused often by the privately owned companies which there try to prevent any activity for the people, any improvement, or anything that will contribute to the betterment of the service that is dedicated wholly to the public.

I do hope that an amendment of this sort may be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily, but I regard this amendment of such infinite importance to the success of the great municipally owned lighting system of Los Angeles that I am obliged to say a few words about it.

I want to say at the outset that some years ago the city of Los Angeles acquired the electric-lighting plants within the city limits, and since that time it has developed a magnificent public electric light and power plant, which is not in competition with any private interest of any kind. The exemption of that plant from the taxation proposed to be imposed by the pending bill would not discriminate in its favor against the Edison Electric Co. or any other plant, for the very simple reason that there is no competition between the municipal lighting and power plant of Los Angeles and the Edison Electric Co.

I want to say, furthermore, that the municipal plant is a nonprofit enterprise, built up by the people of southern California through taxation and bond issues, for their benefit and for the development of the great city of Los Angeles and of that great community.

Many millions of dollars have been expended, and, under statutory requirements which have been imposed upon the municipal plant, it is obliged to amortize a certain portion of its indebtedness every year, a larger portion than would ordinarily be amortized by any private corporation.

I may say that the interests which have fought bitterly this municipally owned electric plant have had a hand in the enactment of legislation there which has imposed unnecessary burdens upon this plant operated and conducted for the benefit of the people of my community.

Mr. President, that plant is required to amortize annually, under statutory law, $1,340,000, and recently, because it has not been able to sell bonds for the purpose of building the necessary distribution line from the Boulder Canyon to the city limits, it has had to apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of $22,800,000, which has been granted upon terms which require the amortization of the entire amount in the period of 10 years, or in annual installments, including interest, of $3,257,000. So a fixed charge of $4,597,000 from those two sources alone is imposed upon the municipal plant.

I want to say that this tax will be imposed upon the electric energy furnished by this plant to the people who own it and who operate it not for profit. It will impose an additional burden of some $300,000 per annum of tax upon that plant alone.

I ask is it fair, is it reasonable, is it just to penalize the people of a great city who, through their own efforts and the expenditure of their own money, have built up a great institution of this kind for their benefit? Mr. President, it does violence to every principle of just taxation with which I am familiar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the force of the Senator's argument, but at the same time there seems to me to be another question involved. All the people of the country who use electric energy are now paying this tax under present law. It is being paid by the people of every community who consume electricity. If this amendment shall be adopted, of course, nobody in Los Angeles will pay any electric tax at all, whereas people in every other community in the United States, where there is no publicly owned electric plant, will be paying this tax. Is it quite fair to levy this tax, whether it is on the consumer or on the producer to be passed on in some way to the consumer in practically all the United States and to leave it off both ends of the equation in any community, whether it be Los Angeles or a municipality in any other part of the country?

Mr. McADOO. I answer the Senator by saying that the taxation to which he refers is embodied in the existing charges which under statutory requirement are already imposed upon the people of Los Angeles.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there no power to regulate the charges?

Mr. McADOO. Yes; we have the power to regulate the charges, of course, but we at the same time are burdened with a statutory requirement which we cannot escape and which the private power companies have insisted on imposing upon this public plant because they did not want to see it developed. I have nothing against privately owned electrical companies in the United States; I want to see them flourish; I want to see them encouraged in the development of their property, and I am not making an argument against them; but, naturally, competitors surround the city of Los Angeles, that would like to invade that territory, have done everything they could to embarrass this great enterprise.

Mr. President, as I said before, it is burdened with fixed charges already which it cannot escape, burdens imposed upon it by conditions for which it is not altogether responsible. So I want to beg my colleagues to exempt municipal, publicly owned electric light and power companies from this tax; and when I refer to them generally I believe I do not overstate the fact when I say that not more than 5 percent of all the power in the United States is produced by publicly owned corporations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McADOO. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator to say that there is no power at all used in the city of Los Angeles except that which is generated at the municipal plant?

Mr. McADOO. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are the other companies barred by statute or by city ordinance from selling to manufacturers and to homes?

Mr. McADOO. They have no distribution system in the city of Los Angeles; it is owned entirely by the city. The then existing companies were acquired by purchase by the city years ago. This development has been made since then.

Mr. BARKLEY. I misunderstood the Senator, because I thought when this matter was discussed in the committee it was stated that they were in competition with others.

Mr. McADOO. I think I said in some of the suburban communities perhaps they were in competition. I have since learned that the statement which I made to the committee was incorrect. I therefore submit this question of fairness and justice to my colleagues of the Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the senior Senator from California if I understood him correctly a while ago to say there were no Members of this body who represented special interests? I want to keep the record straight.

Mr. JOHNSON. I said, of course, I assumed there were no Members here representing private interests; and I assume that still.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand the Senator has since added the word "assumed" since he made his original statement. That might be the polite way to say it, but I want to point out to the Senator that a very prominent Member of the Senate told me a while ago that there were at least 30 Members of this body who represented power interests. So I wanted to make quite sure whether when the Senator said "assumed" he was humorous about it?

Mr. JOHNSON. I say I assume that no man here represents private interests; and I cannot conceive that 30 Members of this body represent the power interests. Of course, if that were so, there would be no use of any amendment of this sort being presented; and the vote will show the Senator that that is not so, I am sure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and will vote. I vote "nay." I am advised that the Senator from Wisconsin, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand, however, that he would vote as I intend to vote. I, therefore, feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If he were present, I understand he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and, therefore, withdraw my vote.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to state that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 45; nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—45

Ashurst	Connally	Long	Shipstead
Bailey	Costigan	McAdoo	Smith

So Mr. JOHNSON's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 7. No tax shall be imposed under this subsection upon any payment made for electrical energy used (1) in the production of agricultural products or (2) by any religious, charitable, or educational organization, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. The right to such exemption under this subsection shall be evidenced in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulation prescribe.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I shall take no time to discuss the amendment. It simply provides relief for the farmer who is using electrical energy for irrigation. It relieves him from payment of the 1-percent tax. It also relieves any charitable or educational institution from paying the tax. That is the sole purpose of the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I did not clearly hear the reading of the amendment at the desk. Does the amendment exempt from the payment of the tax those farm-irrigation companies or cooperative companies organized by farm-irrigation districts who use electricity to pump water for irrigation purposes in the various districts?

Mr. CAREY. Yes; it relieves them from payment of the tax on all electrical energy used for agricultural production.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment read again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The clerk will read the amendment again for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am going to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he change the language of the amendment to read: "This section" instead of "this subsection."

Mr. CAREY. It applies to section (a), on page 7.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not so sure of that.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado may have some merit, because I believe there is now pending some controversy between the farming element in my State and the Department with respect to the application of this tax. If we are going to adopt the amendment, as I assume we will, it should be made very clear that the category within which this current falls is sufficient to protect the farmer. There are thousands of farmers who pay so much tax on electricity for pumping purposes that they are going broke. I am thoroughly in agreement with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming because it applies so much to the Northwestern States, where there is a great deal of irrigation work carried on. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado should be considered by the Senator from Wyoming before he asks for final action upon his amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wyoming desire to modify his amendment in any way?

Mr. CAREY. I will modify it as suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that I am going to offer no objection to the adoption of the amendment. The expert informs me that he thinks this will take care of the situation suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. I would rather take it up tomorrow than today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to have his amendment read?

Mr. LONG. I believe we may dispense with the reading of the amendment. Everyone is familiar with its contents. I would like to have it printed and taken up tomorrow. My amendment proposes to carry out the redistribution-of-wealth pledge contained in the last Democratic platform. I would prefer, as there are several Senators who want to discuss it, that it be taken up tomorrow if that can be arranged. Let it be printed tonight, and let us proceed with other amendments. I understand the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is the desire that we move along as rapidly as possible with consideration of the bill. Of course, there are some other amendments to be offered, and if the Senator from Louisiana will wait a while we can see how we get along with the other amendments. The Senator from West Virginia has an amendment that may take some little time.

Mr. LONG. It will take some time to dispose of my amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no disposition to keep the Senate in session this evening later than half past 5.

Mr. LONG. That being true, I may say to the Senator from Mississippi that it will take much longer than the time between now and half past 5 to dispose of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment for the purpose of having it printed and lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from West Virginia proposes the following amendment, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill:

SEC. —. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles when imported directly or indirectly into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the island of Guam) directly or indirectly from any foreign country, if the depreciation in the currency of such country, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, is 5 percent or more below the standard value of such currency as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, or similarly depreciated when compared with currency of the United States, these following taxes, which shall be in addition to the duties collected under existing law as amended by section 7 of this act:

(1) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of such foreign country—a tax equal to the difference between the invoice value of the article expressed in units of currency of such foreign country and converted to units of currency of the United States at the standard value of the currency of such foreign country as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931; and (b) such amount converted to the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the unit of currency of such foreign country as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the Tariff Act of 1930.

(b) If the amount of the invoice value of the article is ascertained in units of currency of any country (including the United States) other than the country of exportation—a tax equal to the difference between (a) such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation at the current rate of exchange for noon of the date of exportation and converted as provided in paragraph (1) to the currency of the United States at the standard value of such unit of currency of the country of exportation as proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on October 1, 1931, and such amount expressed in units of currency of the country of exportation, and converted as provided in paragraph (1) into the currency of the United States at the buying rate of the units of currency of the country of exportation as ascertained under section 522 (c) of the Tariff Act of 1930. In cases, if any, where the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to determine the said buying rate under any of the provisions of said section 522 (c) of the Tariff Act of 1930, he shall determine such buying rate by the method which he approves as most fair and equitable in the premises and make and proclaim his determination accordingly and such determination and decision shall be final.

SEC. 6. This act shall not apply to imports of articles on the free list of the Tariff Act of 1930 not produced in the United States in substantial commercial quantities.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties under the existing law, the value (whether such value is ascertained in units of currency of the United States or of any other country) of any article provided for in section 5 shall be the value of such article converted to the currency of the United States at the standard value of the unit of currency of the country of exportation as provided for in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 5, as the case may be.

SEC. 8. Until June 30, 1935, the Tariff Commission, upon the filing of petitions; the adoption of resolutions by the Senate or House of Representatives; the initiation of proceedings before it in any form; or on its own motion shall, when satisfied by evidence before it, that such increased duty, or new duties, as the case may be, will increase employment in the industry which is the subject matter of the investigation, report to the President increased duties on articles on the dutiable list or duties on articles on the free list.

When unable, with due regard to prompt action, to fix rates of duties with greater exactness, the Commission shall report ad valorem rates of either 25 percent, 50 percent, 75 percent, or 100 percent, whichever the proof before it shows to be nearest to the rate which the Commission finds necessary to increase employment, in the United States, in the industry which is the subject matter of the investigation.

The President, upon receipt of such report, and, within 10 days thereafter, shall approve the same by issuing his proclamation in the manner now provided by law, or return the same to the Commission, with or without recommendation. No rate of duty on any article, fixed under the provisions of this section, shall be less than the rate of duty, plus the additional tax, if any, imposed under the provisions of the preceding sections of this act on the same article nor less than the rate fixed under and by virtue of the provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 or by section 601 of the Revenue Act of 1932. Except as otherwise provided in this section; and except that the Commission shall not be required to hold public hearings; the provisions of part 2 of title 3 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall, so far as applicable, apply to proceedings taken under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 9. Duties fixed, if any, by the President, under the provisions of section 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall not be in addition to the taxes, new duties, or additional duties fixed under and by virtue of the provisions of this act.

In case of the fixing of any such duties under said section, the additional duties in force shall, while the duties fixed under said section 338 remain in effect, be either the new or additional duties or taxes fixed under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, or the additional duties fixed by the President under said section 338, whichever are higher.

SEC. 10. Terms used in this act shall have the meaning assigned to such terms in the Tariff Act of 1930.

SEC. 11. Sections 5 to 12, both inclusive, of this act shall be administered as part of the customs laws.

SEC. 12. Sections 5 to 11, both inclusive, of this act shall take effect on the day following the date of enactment and continue in force until June 30, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia offer the amendment as an amendment to the committee amendment? In the opinion of the Chair it ought to be a separate section.

Mr. HATFIELD. It is offered as a separate section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment then ought to be disposed of first.

Mr. HATFIELD. It was my understanding that the committee had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it has not yet been disposed of. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I intend to propose. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table. It will constitute an additional section to the bill. The amendment is designed to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of contraband or bootleg oil; that is, oil produced in any State and shipped to another State contrary to the provisions of the law of such State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], which has been read.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I sent this amendment to the desk on the 4th of May. The amendment that I send to the desk this afternoon is a perfecting amendment, which I understand I have a right to offer.

The Senate of the United States by a majority vote only a few weeks ago, in the passage of the Thomas inflationary amendment to the farm relief bill, found it necessary to protect American trade and commerce from the injurious effects of depreciated currencies of foreign countries.

For the information and benefit of the Senate, I desire to quote briefly the purpose, or, stating the matter more accurately, the reasons given in the presentation of the Thomas inflationary amendment to the United States Senate for its adoption:

Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, the President in his discretion is authorized—

And so forth.

Mr. President, the adoption of my amendment will simply place in the hands of the President of the United States the power, if he sees fit to use it, to protect our trade and commerce from the injurious effects of the depreciated currencies of foreign countries.

My amendment will not increase any tariff rates unless the President, after investigation and consideration by the Tariff Commission, finds that such increases are necessary to protect the trade and commerce of this country.

It is hardly to be expected that the granting of such permissive power would be opposed by a majority of the Senate; yet I am fearful that the partisan zeal of some Members of this body may outweigh their judgment.

I am hopeful that the Senate will favor this amendment and indicate to the trade and commerce of the United States that we in the Senate seek to give to American trade and commerce the assurance of protection which is most essential if we are to contribute toward the revival of American industry at this time.

Congress in the last 6 weeks has conferred much dictatorial power on the President of the United States. The power which my amendment seeks to give to the President and the Tariff Commission is one wherein the President is authorized to protect the trade and commerce of America, to provide employment opportunities for millions of American workers, and to make it possible for thousands of American plants again to resume operation.

The President has publicly called upon the industry of the United States to provide employment and to increase wages. The adoption of my amendment will place in the hands of the President an opportunity to say to American industry, "You can now operate, because we have it within our power, and we will exercise the power, to make possible for you to distribute and sell the products of your factory at prices which will permit a fair return on your investment, and to pay the American laborer wages which will insure him a purchasing power which at the present time he does not possess."

Mr. President, I recognize fully that this is a grant of broad and extensive power. In fact, possibly through its directness, it is the broadest and most extensive power proposed to be conferred upon the President at this session of a Congress which has not shown itself unwilling to confer dictatorial powers on the President.

I am entirely willing to confer great power upon the President when such power is to be used solely for the benefit of the American people. However, Mr. President, candor also requires me to call attention to the fact that, while these powers are great and broad, they cannot be exercised until 6 American citizens—3 appointed as Democrats and 3 appointed as Republicans—basing their action, at least, upon evidence in their possession which they deem sufficient, have transmitted to the President a recommendation upon which he can act.

Mr. President, we all realize that if we adjourn early in June, as is now anticipated, there is to be a congressional recess of approximately 6 months. We all realize that we will not be called again in special session before the regular session except in the gravest emergency. Every Senator knows that within those 6 months, with conditions such as exist in the world today, almost any or all American industries may need the tariff protection herein provided. Indeed, Mr. President, they have needed tariff protection, they have needed the assistance of Congress, they have needed the President's assistance, since September 1931.

The adoption of my amendment will make it possible for the President and the Tariff Commission to grant necessary protection to American industry and labor. Yet, unless the President is satisfied that such tariff protection is necessary, there will be no tariff increases granted. In other words, it is left optional with the President as to whether or not he will invoke the great opportunity that is given to him to protect the industries of this country.

Mr. President, my amendment is a planning amendment. It looks ahead. It places at the disposal of an American President, for the benefit of the American people, a tremendous power which, if necessary, I am confident the President, on the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, will courageously exercise.

Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I have tabulated the depreciation of foreign currencies of 17 nations of the world; and I think it will interest the Senate to know that a table containing these tabulations shows an average depreciation in the currencies of European countries of 31½ percent, and a world average depreciation of the 17 countries of 39 percent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator included in that tabulation the depreciation in the currency of the United States?

Mr. HATFIELD. I have. That has occurred only very recently, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. It may be that within a reasonably short time the depreciation in our currency may be greater than in some other countries.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is very true under the inflation plan unfortunately adopted; but the condition prevails to a larger extent in Europe. It has continued to prevail since England went off the gold standard; and no effort has been made to protect American industry, notwithstanding Belgium, France, England, and all of the European nations as well as the Asiatic nations have protected what they control under their flags; and today each and every industry and each and every laboring man within the confines of their respective countries is absolutely assured of the home trade. Not so, however, with the United States of America.

Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD a tabulation dealing with the depreciated currencies of Europe, and I ask that it be made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tabulation is as follows:

	Par	Demand on May 9	Decline in cents	Decline in percent
England (sovereign).....	$4.86	$3.94	$0.92	19
Denmark (krone).....	.26	.17	.09	35
Finland (finmark).....	.025	.017	.008	32
Greece (drachma).....	.012	.006	.006	50
Norway (krone).....	.26	.20	.06	23
Portugal (escudo).....	.044	.036	.008	18
Spain (peseta).....	.199	.099	.10	53
Sweden (krona).....	.267	.205	.062	23
European average.....				31½
Canada (dollar).....	1.00	.87	.13	13
Mexico (peso).....	.49	.30	.19	39
Argentina (peso).....	.42	.28	.14	33
Brazil (milreis).....	.12	.08	.04	33
Colombia (peso).....	.97	.88	.09	9
Chile (peso).....	.12	.06	.06	50
Peru (sol).....	.28	.16	.12	43
Uruguay (peso).....	1.03	.64	.49	47
Japan (yen).....	.498	.242	.256	51
World average.....				39

The American dollar has depreciated approximately 10 percent in European markets; and this depreciation has been taken into account in the demand quotations of foreign currencies given in the above table, and the dollar depreciation also has affected the percentage decline shown in the table.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the able Senator from West Virginia whether he has tabulated data with respect to imports from foreign countries under depreciated currencies?

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that that has been very difficult indeed to do. I have undertaken this great task, but up to the present time I have not been able to satisfy myself as to the imports. Suffice it to say they have increased obviously more in volume than in value under the currency depreciation that has been carried on; and I am simply undertaking to claim what we are justly entitled to in America since the gold standard was abandoned by the European and the Asiatic nations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Have the investigations of the Senator from West Virginia disclosed any flood of imports into the United States from depreciated-currency countries?

Mr. HATFIELD. I do not think there has been a flood of imports into the United States, due to the fact that the purchasing power of the average American has been so low that he could not buy the commodities shipped from Europe and from Asia; however, the low quotations from the importer have precluded industrial activity in many lines.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the Senator from West Virginia investigated imports into the United States under the great depreciation in the German mark in and following 1921? At that time, if I am correctly informed, the German mark depreciated in excess of 95 percent. Was there, in those years, the flood of imports which the Senator from West Virginia appears to fear at this hour?

Mr. HATFIELD. No; I do not think so. This is the situation, however, so far as Germany is concerned.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What is the explanation of the Senator from West Virginia of the failure of Germany to send a flood of exports to the United States during the period of enormous depreciation in German currency?

Mr. HATFIELD. Their sales organization had been broken down by the war and it was practically inoperative for years after the armistice. Mr. President, there is no reason why they should not have come into this country, so far as the cost of production of the industries was compared, with the cost of production under the American flag. If we take the standard of wage which is paid to the German wage earner and measure it by the standard of wage paid the American wage earner, there is no reason why they should not have been dumped into our country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I have in my hand a statement obtained from the Department of Commerce which shows quite a contrary conclusion from that announced by the Senator—to wit, that instead of there being an increase of imports since those countries have gone off the gold standard, there has been a great decrease in the imports to the United States.

Take Japan, for instance: The last 3 months of this year, under the depreciated currency, the shrinkage in imports into the United States has been approximately 50 percent.

Mr. HATFIELD. In what items? Will the Senator state that?

Mr. KING. I have them here. I have a large number, but in the aggregate the reduction in imports is approximately 50 percent. I have the figures for, I believe, all countries from which we have imported, and they show that there has been a considerable decrease in imports to the United States.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HATFIELD. Just a moment. Will the Senator explain to me why it is that France, Germany, England, and even Japan, have protected their own markets even to the point of almost an embargo if there is no advantage in protecting their home market, which America has failed to do?

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that our exports to those countries have greatly exceeded our imports from them, and in the case of the countries to which the Senator has just referred, the exports from the United States to those countries have not been affected at all by any tariff duties which they have imposed, measured by the imports which have come into the United States from them.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I may say to the distinguished Senator from Utah that I live in a State that furnishes a great deal of pottery and china. The largest china-and-pottery industry in the world is located in West Virginia; and across the great Ohio River there is located another great china-and-pottery industry. That section of Ohio and West Virginia employs, in ordinary times, 17,500 industrial workers at a wage which is worthy of their hire; but today less than 3,000 workers are employed in those industries, and those men are staggering their work for the purpose of giving employment to a greater number to the point where they may be able to feed and clothe their families. It is conceded by every producer that their market, which they ordinarily enjoy, has been lost to Japan under its 60 percent depreciation of currency.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I desire to make this observation: It is a universally conceded principle that where a government goes upon a depreciated-currency basis the cost of production in that country is going to be reduced just to the degree that the money is depreciated, and therefore it will undersell any other country that is not on a depreciated-currency basis. The Senator will admit that that is a conceded principle.

Mr. KING. No; I do not.

Mr. FESS. Well, it is a conceded principle that the cheapness of production in such a country, due to the depreciation of the money paid to labor, enables that country to go into markets and undersell where otherwise it could not do so. That is a principle that is conceded. On the other hand, other things being equal, we would have an increase of imports into this country from depreciated-currency countries if we had the normal purchasing power.

Mr. HATFIELD. That is it exactly.

Mr. FESS. But where the purchasing power of the country is broken down, then the principle does not apply. The Senator will admit that it is a principle of economics that every country argues that it should have a cheaper dollar in order to increase its exports.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say that the investigation of the Tariff Commission does not justify at all the broad generalizations of the Senator from Ohio; and may I say that it would seem that if those other countries which have gone off the gold standard are suffering because of lack of purchasing power, they have, in some instances, been purchasing from us approximately a hundred percent more than we have been selling to them.

Mr. FESS. I am not talking about their purchasing power; I am talking about the purchasing power of the gold-standard countries.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that with respect to those that have gone off the gold standard and those which have maintained the gold standard there are relatively the same exports and imports now as there were before the abandonment of the gold standard.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will concede that the argument of every country for a cheaper dollar or a cheaper measuring unit is for the purpose of increasing its exports.

Mr. KING. I do not concede that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. If it meets the approval of the Senator from West Virginia that no action be taken on his amendment tonight and that we now lay aside temporarily the pending business in order that we might take up the deficiency appropriation bill, it would be entirely agreeable to us. The Senator could then proceed tomorrow.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that I am just concluding. I have no other statement to make except to refer to a statement recently made by Mr. James A. Farrell, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, at a round-table conference on foreign commercial policy, on May 3, 1933, in which he points out the following. I quote Mr. Farrell:

We have not changed our tariffs, notwithstanding the fact that within the past 90 days there have been 60 tariff changes on the part of the European countries, and within the last few weeks England has made a tariff treaty with Denmark, with Germany, a very important one within a few days with Argentina, which gives them preference in Argentina and probably will absorb the exchange available there, and in order to make a good measure England has loaned Argentina £10,000,000 sterling.

This statement is followed by a tabulation which contains a list of a great number of nations which have recently changed their tariff rates, which I ask to have made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOME TARIFF INCREASES MADE RECENTLY BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Denmark: Duty increases on coffee and confectionery.
Italy: Import duty put on manioc flour; import duty on marine motors increased; increased duty on outboard motors.
Federated Malay States: Increases on canned milk, certain edible oils.

Norway: Business machines and vacuum cleaners.
Mexico: Galvanized-iron wire, certain articles of rubber, and matches.
Netherlands: Horizontal on noncompetitive imports.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if power is given to the President or to the Tariff Commission which would enable them to increase tariff rates anywhere from 25 to 100 percent, it does not mean that the President or the Tariff Commission would exercise the power, but it seems to me that the power ought to be lodged in the hands of someone who is going to be responsible to American industries and to the 125,000,000 people of this country.

Gentlemen may say what they please about the Smoot-Hawley tariff law and its rates, they may say that they are operative at the present time, and that they more than protect the industries of the United States, but when we compare the low currency value of the money of Europe and Asia with our own monetary values at the present time and then when we take the average rate found in the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, which is 16.4 percent, and compare the conditions at home and abroad with a world average of depreciation of currency of 39 percent, which is  $2\frac{1}{2}$  times our average tariff rate, we will soon arrive at the conclusion, as has the average business man and the average working man who thinks in terms of his own protection here in the United States, that we need something more in the way of protection to these industries than we have at the present time.

Mr. President, there is nothing compulsory about this amendment. It would simply give to the President of the United States power to deal with our commerce and trade.

It would give him power to protect the wage earner of the United States today. There is no question but that there is a sentiment from every point of the compass in the United States for such action. The wage earners have asked for it, they have appealed for it, since England went off the gold standard in September 1931, and they are going to continue to appeal for it.

We may inflate the currency as much as we please, we may devalue the gold dollar and destroy the fundamental principles laid down by Thomas Jefferson and by Alexander Hamilton and approved by George Washington and the other great founders of this Republic, but as long as Europe is on a depreciated-currency basis, as long as Asia is on the same basis, just so long will the American industries under the American flag languish and fail. Here in the Congress we should give the President of the United States the power, if we are not willing to invoke it ourselves.

Mr. President, the tariff rates carried in the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, with foreign currencies at par, average, for all imports, free and dutiable, 16½ percent. The average tariff rate of duty in force on dutiable imports alone—and dutiable imports amount to some 33 percent of our total imports—with foreign currencies at par, average some 50½ percent.

The figures I have cited show a world average depreciation of foreign currencies of 39 percent. This in itself eliminates almost every vestige of tariff protection at present accorded those products of American workers which are forced to compete in the American market with products of foreign workers.

Mr. President, in view of the facts I have presented, I am hopeful that those Members of the Senate who desire to place in the hands of the President of the United States the power to properly protect the best interest of American trade and commerce will favor my amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made by the Senator from Mississippi, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5390, the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I think I should have a vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I had understood that the Senator was entirely agreeable to having action on his amendment go over until tomorrow. Otherwise, I would not have made the request.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, several Senators have had to leave, and I told them that we would not have a vote on this amendment today.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have not the slightest objection to its going over.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to give notice of a motion to reconsider the motion by which the first Norris amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be entered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the pending business is temporarily laid aside, I should like to state that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] requested that I ask unanimous consent that the amendment he offered be modified by striking out the word "subsection" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "section."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the modification will be made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. If the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside, when it shall again be taken up for consideration, the question will then be on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD].

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5390) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Legislative", on page 2, after line 1, to insert:

SENATE

To pay to Nieves Maria P. C. Walsh, widow of Hon. Thomas J. Walsh, late a Senator from the State of Montana, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

To pay Alice C. Howell, widow of Hon. R. B. Howell, late a Senator from the State of Nebraska, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1933, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 9, to insert:

Police force for Senate Office Building, under the Sergeant at Arms: Fifteen privates at the rate of $1,620 per annum each, fiscal year 1934, $22,275.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the 15 officers are to be in addition to the force now looking after the building?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, they are in addition to that force, and we are advised and believe that, due to conditions with which the Senator is familiar, the additional policemen are needed urgently. The item is supported by a budget estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives", on page 2, after line 13, insert:

To pay Lois Slayton Woodworth Briggs, widow of Clay Stone Briggs, late a Representative from the State of Texas, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Architect of the Capitol", on page 3, after line 10, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For labor and materials and other expenses incidental thereto, for additional painting in the Senate Office Building, to remain available during the fiscal year 1934, to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Committee on Rules, acting through the Architect of the Capitol, who shall be its executive agent, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to insert:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

Not exceeding $400,000 of the working capital of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year 1934 shall be available for the purpose of enabling the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting 15 days' annual leave of absence to employees with pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, to strike out the heading "Judgments, United States Courts," and insert the following:

TITLE II. JUDGMENTS AND AUTHORIZED CLAIMS

DAMAGE CLAIMS

SECTION 1. For the payment of claims for damages to or losses of privately owned property adjusted and determined by the following respective departments under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case", approved December 28, 1922 (U.S.C., title 31, secs. 215-217), and certified to the Seventy-third Congress in a communication from the President of the United States to the President of the Senate, dated May 8, 1933, under the following departments, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Seventh International Conference of American States, Montevideo, Uruguay: Not to exceed $70,000 of any appropriation made for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1934 is hereby made available for the participation by the United States in the Seventh International Conference of American States to be held in the city of Montevideo, Uruguay, including personal services without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and rent, stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5); traveling expenses (and by indirect routes if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire of automobiles; purchase of necessary books and documents; stationary; official cards; newspapers and periodicals; printing and binding; entertainment; equipment; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, to remain available until June 30, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I offer another amendment, to follow the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, line 24, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

Salaries of Foreign Service officers while receiving instructions and in transit: The sum of $60,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Office and living quarters, Foreign Service, 1933", to the appropriation "Salaries of Foreign Service officers while receiving instructions and in transit, 1933."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I offer a further amendment to follow the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 4, after line 24, after the amendment last adopted, it is proposed to insert:

Salaries of Foreign Service officers while receiving instructions and in transit: The sum of $20,000 is hereby transferred from the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Foreign Service, 1934", to the appropriation "Salaries of Foreign Service officers while receiving instructions and in transit, 1934."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I send forward another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

Fluctuations in rates of exchange: Not to exceed $1,500,000 of any appropriation or appropriations for the State Department for the fiscal year 1934 is hereby made available to enable the President, in his discretion or as prescribed by him, and notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, to make expenditures arising in connection with fluctuations in rates of exchange subsequent to March 1, 1933, and such action as the President may take shall be conclusive, to be immediately available and to continue available until June 30, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the top of page 5 it is proposed to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Flood control, Lowell Creek, Alaska: For necessary maintenance of the flood-control works at Lowell Creek, Seward, Alaska, authorized by an act approved February 14, 1933 (47 Stat., p. 802), to be available until June 30, 1934, $21,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the top of page 5, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

That paragraph (6) of section 201 (a) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 is amended so as to read as follows: "(6) To make loans to nonprofit corporations, with or without capital stock, organized for the purpose of financing the repair or reconstruction of buildings damaged by earthquake, tornado, or cyclone in the year 1933 and deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation economically useful. Obligations accepted hereunder shall be collateralized (a) in the case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of private property, by the obligations of the owner of such property secured by a paramount lien except as to taxes and special assessments on the property repaired or reconstructed, and (b) in the case of municipalities or political subdivisions of States or their public agencies, by an obligation of such municipality, political subdivision, or public agency. The corporation shall not deny an otherwise acceptable application for loans for repair or reconstruction of the buildings of municipalities, political subdivisions, or their public agencies because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions affecting the collateral. The collateral obligations may have maturities not exceeding 10 years. Loans under this paragraph shall be fully and adequately secured. No loan hereunder shall be made after December 31, 1933. The aggregate of the loans made under this paragraph shall not exceed $5,000,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand that amendment is largely based on legislation heretofore passed by Congress allowing loans to be made in cases of damage caused by cyclones?

Mr. BYRNES. That is a correct statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the amendments heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

American group of the Interparliamentary Union: Toward the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including traveling expenses, subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), compensation for stenographic and other clerical services, printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1934, $10,000, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the president and the executive secretary of the American group.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer an amendment which is intended simply to extend an appropriation which has not been used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the top of page 5, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

Palo Verde Valley, Calif.: Flood protection, the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $50,000 for the protection of Palo Verde Valley, Calif., contained in the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1932, approved July 1, 1932, shall remain available for the same purposes during the fiscal year 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The amendments which have been offered to the pending bill have all been adopted with a great deal of expedition, and properly so, unless there is some inquiry made; but I noticed among the number an amendment that provided 60 thousand or 70 thousand dollars for the payment of Foreign Service officers in transit or something of that character. I should like to know what that really is, and why the Senate is appropriating 60 thousand or 70 thousand dollars in addition to the customary amounts?

Mr. BRATTON. As I understand, due to the changes in personnel, additional funds are needed to provide transportation for Foreign Service officers to and from the United States. The item is supported by a Budget estimate and has been thoroughly investigated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suppose probably the amendment is all right, but, so far as the question of being supported by a Budget estimate is concerned, that does not carry a great deal of weight with me. I find that in fixing the Budget there still remains some of that old Republican favoritism in the matter of making estimates and sending in items of appropriation. I am not going to criticize any of these items in particular, but I think there is a little liberality being dispensed here.

The Public Printer in his annual report stated that $500,000 a year could be saved to the Government in the operation of the public printing plant. I have not seen any item come in here for the purpose of curtailing or reducing the amount of expense there. There is an appropriation of $400,000 carried in this deficiency bill for the Government Printing Office. I think we had better go into the question of the Public Printing Office, for instance, for which there is an item of $400,000 in this bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from Florida is in error in that statement, and I know he does not desire to make an erroneous statement. In the recent economy bill we restored to employees of the Government Printing Office the right to leave with pay, but reduced the period to 15 days. In an earlier appropriation bill we had altogether discontinued the right of leave with pay. The result is that the employees are now entitled to 15 days' leave with pay, but no money has been provided with which to pay them. This amendment simply authorizes the use of that much of the working capital of the Government Printing Office to carry out existing law. It does not appropriate any additional money out of the Treasury, but it is to carry out the provisions of existing law. I am sure the Senator from Florida would not object to that.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think that that ought to be provided for, but what I had in mind more particularly, to which I desire to direct the attention of the Economy Committee, is that the Public Printer has stated that $500,000—a half million dollars—per annum might be saved in the Government printing plant in connection more particularly with the expenditures by Congress. I do not care to notice any of the criticism of Congress; much of it is nothing but folderol and absolutely absurd; but the Public Printer did say that. It seems to me, if he is correct, there is a channel in which some work might be done in the interest of economy.

I notice that the public press "played it up" that mostly the savings would be in connection with the printing that is done for Congress and probably referred to the fact that, if we would exclude from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD much matter that does not belong there under the rules, that would work a great saving.

I am in favor of economy; I have supported practically all the measures of that kind which have been presented here; but I think where a public official has made a statement such as the Public Printer has made in his report, and it has been heralded all over the country by the press, that the Economy Committee and those working in behalf of economy should make a little investigation along that line and see whether or not there is anything to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I say in reference to the remarks of my colleague, recurring to the public printing plant and its operations, that I have received a letter from the Public Printer—I have it not with me now—in which he shows savings of more than $500,000 this year that will be covered into the Treasury from appropriations heretofore made. So that I am quite sure that they are operating there in such a manner that they are actually saving money from previous appropriations and that money is being put back into the Treasury.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am very glad to hear that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

RECESS

Mr. BRATTON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 12, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1933

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, who read the following communication from the Speaker:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., May 11, 1933.

I hereby designate Hon. ALFRED L. BULWINKLE to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

HENRY T. RAINY.

Mr. BULWINKLE assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

High above all, wrapped in tranquil infinity, our Father, yet in mercy Thou dost look upon this world with its tragedies, storms, and defeats. Give us an inspirational faith to believe that somewhere in this universe there is something waiting to fill our breasts with endless song. We praise Thee for the care and for the love which have gone into Thy children of this earth. Wherefore may we not glory in wealth, or in man, or in station, but glory in the everlasting gift with which we have been endowed. Thou, great Shepherd of the sheep, lend us strength and courage to smite temptation and guard Thy fold from polluting taint of every kind. Let us enjoy the unbroken flows of fresh, new grace while the light of eternity is burning in our breasts. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 4220. An act for the protection of Government records.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. RANDOLPH, may have 15 minutes to address the House on the subject of Mother's Day. The lady who first suggested Mother's Day and who is the founder of Mother's Day formerly lived in the gentleman's district in West Virginia. I hope no one will object to the request at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I am not going to object to this request—but I would like to know from the gentleman if he has any information as to whether we will meet tomorrow or not.

Mr. BYRNS. I am inclined to think we may, but I am not absolutely positive about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman can possibly give us that information later in the day?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. While I have no definite information on the subject, it is entirely possible the President may send in a message tomorrow. I do not mean to say this will be done, but if he has the message ready I think it highly important that it should be received and that the bill, which would follow, should be taken up by the committee to which it would be referred in order to let that committee proceed at once with its consideration, because I take it they will want to hold some hearings on the measure.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman inform us with respect to the text of the message?

Mr. BYRNS. It is on the public works bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The public works bill?

Mr. BYRNS. That is my information. I hope the gentleman will understand I am not saying the message will come in tomorrow, but there is a possibility it may; and if it does, I think the House ought to be ready to receive it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not expect a message with respect to the tariff to come in at that time?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I do not. And if this request is granted, which I hope it will be, I trust there will be no further unanimous-consent requests to address the House. I am sure we shall be pleased to grant this request and then permit the committee to proceed with the appropriation bill, as it is hoped we may get through that measure today.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Further reserving the right to object, will the gentleman be reasonable with this side of the House if we desire a little time to discuss any message that may come in?

Mr. BYRNS. I take it we will have a lot of time at our disposal tomorrow, if we get through with the pending bill today.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object to this request, because I think the address of the gentleman is highly appropriate, I hope there will be no further unanimous-consent requests, as the Committee is anxious to conclude the consideration of the independent offices bill today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

THE UNAPPLAUDED MOLDERS OF MEN

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling that I am treading on holy ground that I ask you to turn with me today for a few minutes to honor the immortal builder of all heroes—mother. Too long have mothers been the unapplauded molders of men, too long the true but unsung architects of destiny.

Volumes have been written about kings and emperors; historians have told of the exploits of a thousand heroes of battle; biographers have packed into colorful words the life and death of our statesmen; while painters have filled galleries with likenesses of our living great; but it remained for Miss Anna Jarvis, a West Virginia woman, untold years after the first mother had given birth to a son, to immortalize mother by having the Congress of the United States give recognition to Mother's Day through the display of our flag. The Congress established this memorial in 1914, and since that year on Mother's Day men and women turn from the turmoil of labor and by silent communion with that mother, living or dead, receive again from her the strength of mind and the pureness of soul that only can be bred in that greatest of all loves—that of a mother for her child.

Oh, if the historians, the painters, and sculptors could see through the outward acts of men to the source from which they derive their power of greatness, how different might be the lists of the honored and successful! How different would be the story of our national progress!

Behold the settling of the New World. With the Pilgrim father who sought his religious liberty in a new and unknown land came also the Pilgrim mother. She it was who endured the same hardships as her stronger mate; she it was who steadfast to her duty of wife and mother battled with him the cold of the cruel New England winters; she with him sacrificed the comparative peace and safety of the Old World for the dangers of the New; she with him fought the savage Indian; she kept his house, cooked his meals, bore him sons and daughters, and earnestly and faithfully reared them into new pioneers destined to build America.

Write, ye historians, of the mother of George Washington faithfully training that great man in the paths of duty and service. Record the story of the brave mother from the hills of western Virginia who sent her three sons to fight in the Continental Army when the British, under Colonel Tarleton, threatened invasion of the Shenandoah Valley with these words:

Go, my sons, and keep back the foot of the invader or see my face no more.

When this story was related to Washington in the darkest hours of the Revolution he said:

Leave me but a banner to plant upon the mountains of West Augusta and I will rally around me men who will lift our bleeding Nation from the dust and set her free.

Paint, ye artists, the settlement of the western America, but forget not that into that empire-building went not only the toil and blood of our pioneer men but that into it also went the immeasurable toil of pioneer women. Too often we visualize the skeletons that marked the trail across the prairies, the mountains, and deserts as the last remains of a Custer, a Lewis, a great frontiersman who died in glory defending his loved ones. Too often the true story written on the desert sands is the story of a mother's sacrifice, sometimes in the forefront of battle but more often in the burdensome strife of daily tasks that bent and broke her body. Too often the mute bones on the westward trail bespeak the death of a mother in childbirth. The story of the cradle rather than the report of the blunderbuss marks the westward course of empire.

O orators, if you would explain the greatness of Lincoln paint the vision of Nancy Hanks; fill your minds, if you can, with the glory of her mother love, catch the strains of the strange lullabies she sang to her unborn child. What fount of greatness can compare with hers? Biographers, if you would know from whence came the staunchness of Woodrow Wilson's soul, the breadth of his great vision, search out the secret gift of life and life's greatest ideals transmitted to him by his mother.

And so goes the story day in and day out, from the mothers of the great to the mothers of all men throughout the world. I wonder if any son ever knew the true depth of a mother's heart. Is there any force for righteousness and peace in the world equal to the force of a mother's daily teaching of obedience, of peace, of love, and of devotion to high ideals? Is there any nobler lesson taught than is taught by a mother's living example of sacrifice, of duty, and of love?

One September evening, several years ago, I stood on the railroad-station platform in Charleston, the capital of our State, just before the night train for Clarksburg was ready to pull out.

It was a delightful twilight, and I did not want to board the sleeper until the last minute. Just then a young man came swinging toward the car steps carrying his luggage. I know the boy, and it happened that he was leaving for Morgantown to enroll as a freshman at West Virginia University. It was the beginning of his first great life's adventure.

Standing close by, I heard the final words of parting. The father shook his son's hand with a final admonition, "I hope you'll make the football team, but go easy on the money, for your old dad has to settle all the bills." And this was a remark that many a father has made to his son. The sister said she hoped he might be pledged to the best fraternity on the campus. And then his sweetheart murmured—but I shall not report what they said, for we should never tell what sweethearts speak at parting time.

But, seriously, I shall never forget the words spoken by that mother to her boy, as she put her loving arms around his stalwart shoulders and said, "My boy, like your father, I want you to make the football team, and like your sister I want you to know the best people, but above all other things I hope you'll always remember to be a good boy."

When that mother spoke she did not mean "good boy" in the sense that she desired her son to be a wishy-washy sort of person. She meant what every mother has meant when she said those words. She simply wanted her boy to be honest, chivalrous, brave, and to stand foursquare against the evil winds that blow.

And thus do mothers write the living stories of men and nations. Behind the storm and strife and blustering of the actors most vividly before our eyes do we see the power of mother love and the fashioning of manhood and womanhood in mother's heart and hands.

I once heard a friend telling a young woman that he did not believe in any hereafter; that so far as he was concerned heaven and hell consisted of the joys and sorrows that every person experienced in this world and that when death stopped the movements of this life his body became only so much decaying matter and nothingness was the end. The young woman answered him in these words, "Do you mean to tell me that I shall never again see my mother?" And in that simple and yet boundless faith that mother and immortality were one and inseparable; in the sureness of her knowledge that when she had become weary of the labors of life there would be waiting the radiant face of her mother to comfort her and the loving arms to enfold her once more—never again to be separated in all eternity—in the light of that abiding hope and faith, all of the scientific arguments of my friend were of the nothingness of which he spoke. Against that mother-love logic was but the mere exercise of dried-up mathematics. And it is the same mother love that has enthroned the highest ideals in the hearts of all men. It has been the inspiration of the great and the comfort and hope of the lowly. Before the voice of a mother telling her son to "be a good boy" all of the pomp and splendor of the outward world fades away and

The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart,
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.

Mother's Day is the most fitting memorial that can be raised to mothers of men. When we drive about the city of Washington we proceed from circle to circle, from monument to monument. Here stands a statue of Farragut, and here a likeness of Webster, and towering over them all is the giant spire honoring the great Washington. It is fitting that a nation should honor its heroes. But no statue can be raised to mother as enduring and as inspiring as the child each mother rears herself. No writer can enclose between the backs of any book all of the wisdom of a mother's teaching. No poet can capture all of the joys and sorrows of a mother's heart. No painter has the power to transmit to his canvas the beauty of a mother's face that glows in the memory of her dear ones, no matter how homely, how grotesque, or how blank and stupid that same face may have appeared to strangers. Even the wizardry of the sculptor's hand cannot endue his cold marble with the warmth of a mother's love. No; only a special day set apart for us, sons and daughters of mothers living and mothers dead, to commune again in our thoughts with those to whom we owe our all, is a fitting memorial to Mother. Memory alone holds for us the charm of her personality. Memory alone brings back the picture of those thousands of cares and daily tasks she did for us; the joyful laughter at our successes; the loving kindness of her manner. Memory alone brings back the mother we knew, and to bring back any other mother is only to rear an unworthy monument.

Today we are living in a world of personalities. Europe bristles with names of men rather than names of nations. Stalin of Russia, Mussolini of Italy, Hitler of Germany—who knows what influence their mothers had upon them? From whence their courage, their vision, their power? A mother tapped the sources of their personality, taught them the duties and tasks of life, guarded their bodies, and filled their minds with great thoughts.

Today in our Western Hemisphere it has been said that our President Roosevelt is the outstanding and dominant personality. Fortunate are we Americans to have his mother alive. This splendid mother of our President sees him as he magnificently commands our ship of state. She remembers daily the dreams she had for him in the yester-years when with her aid and guidance he was equipping himself for just such a momentous task of leadership. Humble, yet justly proud, she walks securely down the remaining miles on her highway of life, knowing that there follows along the trail a son who is perhaps destined to become one of the truly great leaders of mankind. And ever behind Roosevelt will remain his warm and glowing mother.

The late great poet, Henry Van Dyke, has expressed in tender words my wish and your wish when he says:

I cannot pay my debt
For all the love that she has given;
But Thou, love's Lord,
Wilt not forget
Her due reward—
Bless her in earth and heaven.

[Applause.]

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. McCLINTIC in the chair.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMMISSION

For continuing the construction of the Arlington Memorial Bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, authorized in an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from a point near the Lincoln Memorial in the city of Washington to an appropriate point in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes", approved February 24, 1925 (43 Stat., p. 974), to be expended in accordance with the provisions and conditions to the said act, $198,000, of which $25,000 shall be available for widening and resurfacing the present road from the memorial entrance of the cemetery to the southeast corner of the cemetery, conditioned upon the State of Virginia completing the construction of the Lee Boulevard link of the Virginia State highway system to the same point; and not exceeding $20,000 shall be available for clerical and accounting service, including all necessary incidental and contingent expenses, printing and binding, and traveling expenses, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the Commission may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for the cost of reconstructing and paving Constitution Avenue east of Virginia Avenue, as provided in the approved project, except for such portions as may abut upon Government-owned property, and not in excess of 40 percent of the cost of such reconstructing and paving of that portion of the said street which so abuts.

Mr. UMSTEAD took the chair.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section deals with a subject which I dare say many new Members are not familiar with. I can remember a year ago when those interested in this subject, and who were importuning Members to vote for the same, made the statement that the State of Virginia would contribute a certain portion of its cost. There was nothing of that nature included in the legislation, but it is interesting to know that this Government of taxpayers has expended possibly $5,000,000 for the purpose of completing a macadam, hard-surface highway to Mount Vernon, serving principally the citizens of Alexandria and Washington.

In addition I am advised that we are paying the salaries of those who police the highway. We purchased the territory adjacent, and I cannot understand why it is necessary to maintain in what some might term "in perpetuity" this highway.

We not only spend money for the completion of the bridge but, if I am correctly advised, the State of Virginia did not even furnish the ground where the other end of the bridge rests.

I do not wish to criticize the distinguished gentleman from Virginia in charge of the bill. I have as high a regard for him as any person that I know of; but I am interested in the welfare of the people, and I do not think this kind of discrimination ought to go on. I think the gentleman from Virginia, in charge of the bill, ought to advise the new Members how long we are going to maintain this Commission and the activities that, in my opinion, ought never to have been authorized in the construction of the bridge.

It seems to me that there ought to be some way of bringing the matter to a conclusion. I am hoping the gentleman in charge of the bill will enlighten the House as to how long we are to continue appropriating year after year money for this purpose, when the bridge is about completed and the highway is built and the road being traveled and used daily.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. How long has this Commission been in existence?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who was in charge of the bill originally, can answer that; but I think 4 or 5 years.

Mr. BEAM. Can the gentleman state the amount of money expended?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will give us the amount. Every Member of the House is entitled to the information when we are asked to make this appropriation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. This outburst of my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] in the interest of the taxpayers is very interesting. Members of Congress who were here, as he was and as I was when the legislation was passed, know that it was never contemplated or stated in this House by anybody who had any authority to make any such statement that the State of Virginia would pay any part of the cost of building the Arlington Memorial Bridge. It was entirely a Government project. It was considered carefully by a legislative committee of the House. It was not a project fostered by the people of the State of Virginia or in the interest of the people of Virginia.

It is true that one end of that great memorial does rest on the sacred and holy, historic ground of Virginia and the beautiful boulevard that is a credit to the Nation, which is used daily by thousands of citizens of the United States, not only Virginians but Oklahomans and all other citizens, to visit the great Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the home of the Father of Our Country. It begins at the Virginia end of the Memorial Bridge and goes to Mount Vernon. It is true that a few motorcycle officers patrol that Government boulevard at a very small expense. The original project, I think, called for an expenditure of about $12,000,000 or $14,000,000. The project is practically complete. This practically completes the structure, except some very drastic curtailments in the project made in the bill last year and this year with my entire and hearty approval, in the interest of economy—some ornamentation, which has been taken out, and some paving.

Everything has been deleted from the project that it was possible to take out without absolutely destroying it. When the constituents of the various Members of Congress come to Washington, this beautiful Capital City, and visit its beautiful memorials and parks and drive across that wonderful bridge and out that boulevard to the home of George Washington, not a Virginian but an American, I do not think any Member of the House need apologize to them for the few dollars that were spent to build that beautiful Memorial Bridge and highway. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. By reason of a committee assignment which I hold in the House I am, ipso facto, a member of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission. When this matter originated a few years ago, I was a member of that same committee but not its chairman and, therefore, not a member of this Commission. I recall that I took the floor and opposed this proposition originally. I did not believe that this sum of money should be expended for the construction of this bridge, especially entirely out of Federal funds. But that contention was overruled by the vote of the House, and the expenditure was authorized. The bridge has been constructed and is practically complete. As a member of that Commission I have opposed the approval of several items of expense which, in my judgment, were not justified. One of these was an item of about $10,000, which was to be used in having certain advertising matter engraved upon the stone of that bridge, setting forth the names of those who had done certain features of the work. It occurred to me that that information might well be preserved in official records and that the firms who were honored with that work should not have their names perpetuated in an advertising way at the expense of the United States Government. The work having been begun, and the work now being near completion, naturally it devolves upon the Congress of the United States to see that it is carried out as economically as possible in accordance with the original plan. I hope it can soon be completed, and I trust that we shall continue to eliminate any items of useless expense.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, on page 5, line 23, the word "to" should be stricken out and the word "of" substituted. It is a typographical error. I offer that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 5, line 23, after the word "conditions", strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

For three Commissioners and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including personal services required for examination of Presidential postmasters, and including not to exceed $1,000 for employment of expert examiners not in the Federal service on special subjects for which examiners within the service are not available, and for personal services in the field; for necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the Commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, including not to exceed $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings of public officials when specifically directed by the Commission; for furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; supplies, advertising; telegraph, telephone, and laundry service; freight and express charges; street-car fares not to exceed $300; stationery; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, directories, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, not to exceed $1,000; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motor trucks, motorcycles, and bicycles; garage rent; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal Union countries; special-delivery stamps; and other like miscellaneous necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, $1,028,000: Provided, That no details from any executive department or independent establishment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere to the Commission's central office in Washington or to any of its district offices shall be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, but this shall not affect the making of details for service as members of the boards of examiners outside the immediate offices of the district managers: Provided further, That the Civil Service Commission shall have power in case of emergency to transfer or detail any of its employees to or from its office or field force.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOEPEL: In section 1, page 10, line 7, substitute a comma for the period after the word "force" and add the following: "Provided, That in such transfer or detail of any of its employees husband and wife shall not be assigned to duty in the same division or section of any bureau, office, or institution of the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and changes the fundamental law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard upon the point?

Mr. HOEPEL. I do, sir. I contend that this does not change the fundamental law. It merely makes this present provision elastic. That is my contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment clearly changes existing law, and the Chair is therefore of the opinion that it is legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Federal Board for Vocational Education, $2,487,700.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to ask a question or two. I should like to ask the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations or someone who knows about this, with respect to this matter: I have received some complaints and some very interesting questions from people who are highly interested. In reading this section and getting from it what I can, it seemed to me that the committee has made the reductions very carefully and without any apparent favor to any item. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM. Is the gentleman speaking now of the Federal Vocational item?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. The reduction carried in that item is accounted for by additional salary reduction, for one thing, and what is equivalent to a 15-percent reduction of the amount of Federal contribution to the States.

Mr. JENKINS. I notice that in the salaries the reduction is about uniform, but where there is a reduction from $1,500,000 to $1,275,000 in vocational-education work in agricultural home economics, it would appear to me that that reduction is larger than any other reduction.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is exactly 15 percent.

Mr. JENKINS. Am I safe in assuming that the reductions are uniform down along the line, so that no department would have any right to complain that it has been unjustly discriminated against?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses in accordance with the provisions of the "Agricultural Marketing Act", approved June 15, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. V, title 7, secs. 521-535f), not including the salaries of members of the Federal Farm Board, except the salary of the member designated as chairman, and the act creating a Division of Cooperative Marketing in the Department of Agriculture, approved July 2, 1926 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 7, secs. 451-457), including stenographic reporting services to be obtained by the Board through the Civil Service or by contract; not to exceed $750 for newspapers and clippings; membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; manuscripts, data, and special reports by purchase or by personal services without regard to the provisions of any other act; to procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50; purchase and exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor trucks to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; garage rental in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including attendance at meetings, concerned with the work of the Federal Farm Board; payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem to cover subsistence and other expenses while in conference and en route from and to his home to any person other than an employee or a member of an advisory commodity committee whom the Board may from time to time invite to the city of Washington and elsewhere for conference and advisory purposes in furthering the work of the Board; the employment of persons, firms, and others for the performance of special services, including legal services and other miscellaneous expenses, all unexpended balances of appropriations for the Federal Farm Board, not exceeding $1,050,000, are hereby made available for the purposes enumerated in this paragraph: Provided, That during the fiscal year 1934, when the Federal Farm Board requires cooperative work by any department or independent establishment of the Government within the scope of the functions of such department or establishment and which such department or establishment is unable to perform within the limits of its appropriations, the Federal Farm Board may transfer from this appropriation to such department or establishment, with the approval of the head thereof, such sum or sums for direct expenditure during the fiscal year 1934, as may be necessary for the performance of such additional work: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any salary in excess of $10,000 per annum, or any salary in excess of $8,500 per annum except to the member of the Board designated as the chairman and not to exceed eight other officers or employees.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: Page 18, line 24, after the word "employees", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "which number, in addition to any officers or employees who, under existing law may be so appointed and compensated, may hereafter be appointed and compensated without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Civil Service laws."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, I would say it is simply a clarifying amendment. It does not affect the amount of the appropriation or the amount of salary. The language is suggested by the Comptroller General, because of the last proviso on page 18, which limits the number of $10,000 positions in this new set-up.

May I say that in the different boards and organizations which have been consolidated, there were sixteen $10,000 positions or executive positions, the basis salary of which was $10,000. Under this new set-up seven of those positions are eliminated, and the proviso at the bottom of page 18 limits the number of executive positions.

The language which has been suggested by the Comptroller is merely clarifying. It does not affect the appropriation at all.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is a clarifying amendment. It helps make the Civil Service Act ineffective. I hope the House will not adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, General Accounting Office, $3,280,000.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will say by way of apology that when we were considering the paragraph regarding the Federal Farm Board the Clerk skipped to the next section before I could ask a question.

I note on page 17, line 22, this provision:

Payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem to cover subsistence and other expenses while in conference and en route from and to his home to any person other than an employee or a member of an advisory commodity committee whom the Board may from time to time invite to the city of Washington and elsewhere for conference and advisory purposes in furthering the work of the Board.

I know that anyone subpoenaed here should be reimbursed for his expenses. They should be provided for, but I would like to ask the committee to enlighten us why this section is necessary to pay the expenses of visitors whom the Farm Board may want to invite to Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. WOODRUM. Under the Agricultural Marketing Act the Federal Farm Board is authorized to create from time to time, as conditions may require, advisory commodity committees for the purpose of advising with various groups of agriculturists on problems particularly related to their particular commodity or activity. This language permits the Federal Farm Board to bring to Washington, whenever in its judgment it is necessary, agricultural experts to give information to those advisory groups, and to reimburse them for their traveling expenses and a small per diem.

The total amount expended under that in 1932 was less than $2,000. So, figuring the scope of the work, it is really an insignificant matter, and the Federal Farm Board tells us it enables them to bring witnesses here rather than to go to the expense of conducting expensive hearings in the field oftentimes when they are considering these specific matters.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, the different points of view which Members of this body entertain upon public questions but reflects the fact that the people as a whole have varied interests and varied points of view.

I myself have never been able to understand how anybody could seriously criticize the work of the Federal Trade Commission. It has long seemed to me that this Commission, fully as much as any governmental agency, stands between the consuming masses of this country and the moneyed barons who through over-watered corporate structures all too frequently seek to prey upon them.

I myself think that if this Commission had never done any other thing than to have investigated the Insull properties it would have justified its existence and every dollar that has ever been appropriated for it.

I have very great respect for the Chairman of this Subcommittee on Appropriations. His judgment has been my judgment on many important questions where principles of right and wrong were involved. At the last session of Congress the subcommittee of which he is chairman cut down the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission by some $500,000, as I recollect. Undoubtedly the subcommittee would not have recommended that cut unless it had felt justified, and such was my respect for the judgment of the chairman and the subcommittee itself, and such was my desire to follow the policy of economy as outlined by this House that I voted against an amendment offered on the floor of the House to increase that appropriation.

When I voted as I did I thought the reduction would in no way interfere with the continued investigation of the power companies. I think it was the judgment of the subcommittee that they would not cripple the Trade Commission by that cut in that particular work.

Now, my judgment again follows that of the committee. The committee has since found, I believe, that that cut would have seriously interfered with such investigation; and by my personal investigation I have since found that such a cut would have seriously interfered. I now desire to commend this subcommittee for increasing the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission. I may say if they had not done so, I would have introduced an amendment to increase the appropriation recommended at the last session by $500,000 to make possible further and complete investigation of the power companies. I repeat that this highly desirable investigation work is sufficient justification for all the expenses incurred by this Commission; and I believe that when it has completed its investigation of the power interests it will have given enough facts to the public to enable it, through the proper authorities, to take such steps as will make it impossible for the great public utility companies to impose rates upon the consuming public based upon watered stock and an interlocking of corporate structure, which is in no measure justified by any sound business principle.

May I express my appreciation to the chairman of this subcommittee and the whole subcommittee for their very wise conclusion to restore to this bill an appropriation item which will enable the Federal Trade Commission to proceed with its investigation of the power corporations?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will examine the hearings, he will find that this Commission in its investigation of the utility companies has disclosed escaped taxes more than sufficient to pay the expenses of the inquiry.

Mr. BEEDY. Judge Healey has made a very interesting report quite recently along this line. The revelations following an investigation of the Insull properties were of vital interest and consequence to my own State of Maine. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have no word of criticism against the Federal Trade Commission in their investigations of the Power Trust. It is not a question of what the Federal Trade Commission has done in the Power Trust investigation that I am interested in.

COMMISSION DIVERTED FROM CHARTED COURSE

The gentleman from Maine stated a few moments ago that this was a very helpful commission because it stood between the consumers and the greedy profiteers. It was organized for this purpose, and for a few years it did perform the duties set out for it by the law, but during the past few years the Federal Trade Commission has diverted from its chartered and legal course to a course of action that is absolutely in violation of the law. In the portion of the bill relating to the Federal Trade Commission, page 21, nowhere will you find that an appropriation is made for the Federal trade practice work. If it was mentioned, we could reach it with a point of order. They will not mention it in the law. If they were to mention it, we would probably have stricken it out. Their Federal trade practice work they are doing is in plain violation of the law. This is not discussed or mentioned in the appropriation bill. It seems to be the custom of the Commission to get the appropriation for something else and then divert it to this illegal work.

May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee why the language about Federal trade practice conferences is not contained in the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman that the language carried in lines 8 and 9 on page 21 is the same language we have had all the time.

Mr. PATMAN. Perhaps the trade practice conference work is known to be so destructive to the general welfare the Federal Trade Commission does not dare ask for a specific appropriation for that purpose.

The statement is made that the Federal Trade Commission stands between the consumer and the profiteers. Let us see if the Commission is doing this.

INVESTIGATION INSTEAD OF PUNISHMENT

What does a law violator want? He does not want punishment. He does not want to go to jail. He does not want to pay a fine. He wants to be investigated. So the Federal Trade Commission has a complaint filed against him and the Federal Trade Commission immediately sends out its advance men to make an investigation. This takes probably a year or two. A report is made to the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission holds hearings and then the Federal Trade Commission makes a report that violations of the law are disclosed. Are these people punished? No; these people are not punished. The case is turned over to the Department of Justice and the Department of Justice's advance agents go out and make another investigation. They read these reports and they read this testimony, and by the time the Department of Justice gets it in shape where something can be done the statute of limitations has run against every criminal violation and the cases are dropped.

I would like for the gentleman to name me just one person who has paid $1 of fine or has gone to jail 1 hour during the last 5 years because of the activities of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman do that?

SPECIFIC CASES

Mr. BEEDY. I was going to ask the gentleman if he would tell us of one case in which he feels this Commission has failed to do its duty. It is all right to talk generally—

Mr. PATMAN. I can name 50 cases.

Mr. BEEDY. What does the gentleman have in mind?

Mr. PATMAN. One of them is the Cottonseed Oil Trust that the Federal Trade Commission organized. They had the members of that industry come before them, sitting there as members of a group, with a member of the Commission presiding, and the members of the group declared the object was to make rules and regulations for the government of their industry that would set the price that the consumers must pay and set the price that the farmers must sell to them their raw products for. Thereby entering into a conspiracy against both consumers and farmers. I believe that there are more than 50 cases involving the sale of comforts and necessities of life similar to the cottonseed oil case. It is a trust organizer.

Mr. McFARLANE. The American Petroleum Institute also went before the Federal Trade Commission, and that is another illustration.

ILLEGAL PRACTICES SHOULD BE DISCONTINUED

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; that is another case, and the Supreme Court of Alabama held that the Cottonseed Oil Trust was illegal. The highest courts in practically all the States, and in the United States have held similar rules to be in violation of the law.

I wish the Federal Trade Commission would abandon its illegal practices. It can be a useful body if it functions in the interest of the consumers and not, as it has been, in the interest of trusts and monopolies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am not unfriendly to the Federal Trade Commission. I think, however, it ought to be brought to the attention of the House why the committee reduced this appropriation to $500,000 at the last session of Congress.

The item in the present bill carries $920,000 for the Federal Trade Commission for the current year. The representatives of the Commission, when they came before the Subcommittee on Appropriations in January last pointed out that there were three or four investigations, including the utilities, the chain stores, and, I believe, the cottonseed investigation, and perhaps the cement investigation, which they expected to complete out of the present appropriation and before June 30 of this year.

The Federal Trade Commission has expanded its personnel wonderfully since it was created. It is my present recollection that the number of employees of the Commission, as given in the hearings of January last, was around 418.

It was testified that the appropriation for the coming fiscal year contemplated 427 employees.

I want to invite attention to pages 79 to 87 of the hearings, held during the present extra session of Congress, on the independent offices appropriation bill for 1934, where the cost of the several investigations by the Federal Trade Commission is given.

I feel sure that not many Members of the House know the enormous cost of these investigations to the taxpayers of the country. I am not saying that any investigation should not have been had, but the question I am presenting is whether the Federal Trade Commission, in the first place, is the best agency to make many of these investigations and whether some of them are not made at too great a cost to the taxpayers.

During the hearings in January last it was stated that the utilities investigation cost around $1,625,000. That is an enormous sum of money. During the present year the amount was reduced to $1,250,000.

However, on page 86 of the hearings the total cost is given at $1,598,677.13. This investigation began under a Senate resolution of February 15, 1928, more than 5 years ago. I think that if an investigation is justified that it ought to be expedited and that the main, essential facts could be secured at a very much reduced cost. Whenever this appropriation comes up for consideration in the House and when one speaks for economy in connection therewith, there is always some intimation that that person is opposed to the utilities investigation and is in some way dominated by the Power Trust. Now, I have never been afraid of my own integrity, and want to emphasize over and over again that I favor all investigations where they are necessary, but I assert in the first place that these investigations have been too expensive, and in the second place in practically all of these investigations the statute of limitations has run, so that no criminal prosecutions follow.

Now, let us examine the chain-store investigation. It was stated on page 72 of the hearings that this investigation would cost around $750,000. On page 80 of the hearings a more detailed statement is given, which shows the cost to have been $867,358.74. This investigation was authorized by a Senate resolution of May 12, 1928. This was 5 years ago, and the investigation has not as yet been completed. I assert with great positiveness that five or six good investigators, together with a few experts, could have made this investigation, assembled all the material facts, and made a report in a much shorter time and for one fifth of the expenditure.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that the facts and information compiled by the Commission 3 years ago in that investigation are not now useful?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is quite true, and I do not believe there is a Member of this House who believes that this enormous sum of the taxpayers' money was necessary to have been expended in this chain-store investigation.

A few days ago we saw in the public press a statement by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the bids for cement for the continuation of the work on the Boulder Dam.

If you will turn to the bottom of page 79 of the hearings, you will find that the Federal Trade Commission by Senate resolution of February 16, 1931, was directed to make an investigation of the cement industry.

This investigation began more than 2 years ago. The Commission should have assembled all the facts and should have made a report, so that the Secretary of the Interior would be able to secure from the Commission now all the material facts.

What I am bringing to your attention is that it requires too long a time for the Commission to make these investigations and they are too expensive. This cement investigation up to the present time has cost $68,734.36. I feel sure that a small body of men, properly equipped, could have made this investigation, collected all the material facts, and made a report within a few months.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. What was accomplished by reason of that investigation? Did the Federal Trade Commission have the Cement Trust prosecuted or was an effort made to disclose the facts to the public?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have never heard of any prosecutions as a result of this investigation.

Mr. PATMAN. And nobody went to jail or paid a fine?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; and the Secretary of the Interior, in a statement recently given out, makes the statement that all bidders for cement for the continuation of work on the Boulder Dam project submitted the same bid and that, therefore, there must be a Cement Trust, or perhaps I should say a price understanding.

The point I am trying to emphasize is that I am not unfriendly to any one of these legitimate investigations. I am in entire sympathy with them, but here is what happens; some Member of the Senate introduces a resolution providing for an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission without any estimate of the cost and without making provision for the expense of the investigation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think that the Department of Justice ought to take notice of the facts found by the Commission and prosecute?

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman from Texas will examine the time when these several resolutions were passed and then notice the dates of the reports of the Commission, he will find that by the time the Commission has assembled the facts and made the reports the statute of limitations has run in almost every case.

I would not say that these reports have been of no practical value but will say that I think the investigations ought to be expedited so that if it be found that there have been any violations of the criminal statutes the parties criminally liable could be prosecuted.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think that the Congress of the United States ought to remedy the situation so that the Federal Trade Commission can really function and cooperate with the Department of Justice?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the Federal Trade Commission has too many employees. If you will examine the breakdown of the Bureau of the Budget in making its estimates for the Federal Trade Commission you will find the detailed figures showing that this Commission has perhaps more higher paid employees than any other commission for which we make an appropriation.

I think the Department of Justice itself in many of these cases could better make the investigation by its experts. All of the essential facts could be secured in a much shorter time and at much less expense.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is not the principal object of the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission to determine whether any violation of law has occurred and to furnish the Department of Justice with the facts?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think that is one of the principal reasons for the investigation.

Mr. MOTT. If that is the case why could not the Department of Justice make the investigation itself?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I am trying to emphasize. I think in a great many instances the investigation could better be done by the Department of Justice; but in certain cases I feel sure that the Federal Trade Commission is better equipped. I want to be entirely fair with the Commission, but I was unwilling to permit the criticism to go unnoticed, on account of the reduced appropriations reported in the last session of Congress, without an explanation.

The committee thought that $500,000 would be sufficient for the Federal Trade Commission for the coming fiscal year, provided that if any special investigation should be ordered by the Senate, provision should be made for funds for the payment of each investigation.

You will note that the following proviso is added to the paragraph making appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission:

Provided, That hereafter no new investigation shall be initiated by the Commission as the result of a legislative resolution except the same be a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

The thought being that a more careful estimate would be made of the cost and an appropriation made to meet the expenses.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BEEDY. I commend the committee for the careful judgment they exercised, and I know they proceeded in good faith; but, in discussing this question, does not the gentleman think it is fair to the House and to the Federal Trade Commission to say that that body was never designed as a prosecuting agency? They could not prosecute. If there is anything to prosecute on the facts, it is for the Department of Justice.

Mr. HASTINGS. In answer to the gentleman from Maine, my criticism is that the investigations by the Federal Trade Commission have not been expeditious enough. They have been too tedious; it has taken them too long to find the facts, and by the time the facts are found and the report made the statute of limitations has run, so that no prosecution could follow. When Members of the House criticize the amount of the appropriation, I feel that they do not know how much has been expended in these several investigations. You will find a list of investigations on pages 79 to 87, inclusive, of the hearings. I do not have the time to examine each and discuss them. I believe that all will agree that these investigations have cost altogether too much money.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield for another short question?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. What is the object of the investigations of the Federal Trade Commission other than to ascertain whether or not the law has been violated?

Mr. HASTINGS. There are many other reasons stated in the act creating the Commission or in the resolutions which provide for the investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the Chair?

Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Federal Trade Commission has ever recommended to either branch of Congress certain legislation for the purpose of bringing about changes?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not recall any. Of course, I am on the Committee on Appropriations, which does not have legislative authority. I am not familiar with what, if any, legislation has been recommended by the Federal Trade Commission to the legislative committees of the House or to Congress, nor have I examined the report of the Federal Trade Commission to ascertain what recommendations, if any, it has made.

In addition to the 3 or 4 investigations to which I have especially referred, the Members can refer to the hearings, at the pages I have indicated, and they will find a complete report of all special investigations by the Federal Trade Commission and the cost of each.

The cottonseed investigation, frequently referred to, was under Senate resolution of October 21, 1929, and cost $141,009.81. This investigation was so voluminous and so long-drawn-out that it resulted in no benefit and no prosecutions.

I have made a somewhat hurried examination of the investigations reported in the hearings on pages 79 to 87, and I have not found in any case where the Commission examined the facts and reported them and where a criminal prosecution followed.

Let me repeat again that I favor, by some agency, every legitimate investigation and by the Federal Trade Commission those investigations where they are best equipped to make them. However, I repeat that it is the duty of Congress to the taxpayers of the country to make an estimate as to the cost of these investigations when they are ordered.

I felt that it was my duty to make this explanation of the attitude of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, which prepared the independent offices appropriation bill in January and February last, and recommended a reduced appropriation. The committee thought the amount adequate for the general expenses of the Commission, provided that additional appropriations were made when concurrent resolutions were passed providing for special investigations.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think the function of the Federal Trade Commission is one of the most vital things in our body politic. I look upon the functions of the Federal Trade Commission as a gland in the body politic, and when that Commission fails to function, then the whole political and business structure of the country becomes diseased. I say that the business structure of this country, through the operation of price-fixing measures on the part of the big industrial organizations in the country, has become diseased, and I would point out to you a few of the effects of that disease. We know that the price of commodities in many cases is fixed and that they do not follow the influence of the law of supply and demand through the operation of competition. If you are engaged in a primary productive activity in this country, such as agriculture, lumbering, or mining, you will find that apparent.

I know that in the West hides today are rotting, and the price of leather is fixed; that we are paying 60 cents a pound for common side leather and a dollar a pound for sole leather. I know that the price of lead is 3 cents a pound, and I know that the price of paint ingredients, white lead and red lead, is fixed at 14½ cents a pound. I know that there are enough buildings in the cities and farming communities of the West deteriorating and decaying for the lack of paint that would consume all of the lead produced in this country if the law of supply and demand could operate to supply the need for paint. I know that we could use the idle labor and surplus lead to make paint if small enterprises and small business organizations could be allowed to produce under the law of supply and demand protected from unfair competition and unfair trade practices. These big industrial organizations, by profiteering at the expense of the producing industries, have piled up huge surpluses, drained from the producers of the country. They made such large profits that they could not disburse those profits through the medium of dividends, and were forced to stock split-ups and dividends, and the public was enticed into a speculative market, and profits were made on what was taken from our producers. When the banking interests of the country saw that we were getting into an unsafe speculative market and sought to check the flow of money to these speculators and raised the discount rates, money continued to flow into these speculative markets and prices were driven up to unsafe levels. Our writers called that bootleg money, because they did not know the source of it. It was finally determined that this money was flowing from the surpluses of these big manufacturing organizations, attracted by the high rates paid by the speculators, and as our markets continued to rise to unsafe levels we were finally overtaken by the crash that has brought ruin and destruction to the banking and financial institutions of the country. If the Federal Trade Commission would function, if the Department of Justice would do the thing that the Interstate Commerce Commission did with our big railroad companies when they promulgated their rule for safety appliances, we would be in much better condition than we are today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the 2 minutes that the Chairman reserved for me in closing the debate in 7 minutes.

Mr. WHITE. It is possible to curb these unfair trade practices, because we have done that thing in respect to the operation of the big transportation companies. When the Interstate Commerce Commission promulgated its safety-appliance rules and the big transportation corporations refused to comply, they were checked up and haled into court on counts for failure to comply with the safety-appliance rules, and they were penalized, and as a result they were forced to comply. If we would broaden and strengthen the laws under which the Federal Trade Commission operates and give this country a real Federal Trade Commission, many of the things that we are suffering from now on the farms of the West and in the producing industries of the country would be cured and we would be protected.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Did I understand the gentleman to say he is opposed to price fixing?

Mr. WHITE. I certainly am opposed to price fixing. I am in favor of the operation of the law of supply and demand, through unrestricted competition in this country, as a matter of readjustment to bring prices into line.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Is the gentleman opposed to fixing farm prices?

Mr. WHITE. I think that is an expedient that we must use.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the Federal Trade Commission has done anything to remedy the situation of which he complains?

Mr. WHITE. I should say it has not. It has had one investigation after another, and the whole benefit has been emasculated by the matter of procedure.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the Federal Trade Commission is not functioning?

Mr. WHITE. It certainly is not.

Mr. MOTT. Is the gentleman in favor of this appropriation?

Mr. WHITE. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

General administrative expenses: For 11 Commissioners, secretary, and for all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including 1 chief counsel, 1 director of finance, and 1 director of traffic at $10,000 each per annum, traveling expenses, and contract stenographic reporting services; $2,250,000, of which amount not to exceed $2,155,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, exclusive of special counsel, for which the expenditure shall not exceed $50,000; not exceeding $3,000 for purchase and exchange of necessary books, reports, and periodicals; not exceeding $100 in the open market for the purchase of office furniture similar in class or kind to that listed in the general-supply schedule: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 23, line 24, strike out "$2,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,750,000."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is not to either decrease or increase the general appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission. While this amendment itself would decrease this appropriation $500,000, I expect to offer another amendment on page 27 which will transpose or transfer this $500,000 reduction, if it is made, so as to increase the amount allotted to the land-appraisal department, and raise that from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000.

My reason for offering the amendment at this time is based on a careful reading of the testimony before the committee, shown on pages 104, 105, and those following of the hearings, which shows that it was the intention of the committee. This section provides for an appropriation of $2,250,000, $2,155,000 of which may be expended in the District of Columbia for personal services. The reason the committee did that, according to the hearings, was this: The Commission proposes to bring from throughout the country, from every nook and corner thereof, to Washington every one of your constituents who has a case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of sending a Commissioner or an examiner down into the country to hold a hearing. For instance, it is shown in the testimony of one of the witnesses that they will transfer hearings that are already set at Wichita Falls, Tex., to Washington; from New York to Washington; from Kansas City to Washington; from Florida to Washington; from Raleigh, N.C., to Washington; from Columbia, S.C., to Washington; and from Jacksonville, Fla., to Washington. I undertake to say it is going to be infinitely unjust and unfair to require all persons who have cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission to bring a large number of witnesses to Washington instead of having an examiner sent down into the country to have the hearing there and submit the case to the Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is complaining about the committee cutting money out of the appropriation, which will necessitate those hearings being held in Washington, yet the effect of the gentleman's amendment is to further cut the fund from which they get the money to hold hearings in the field. The gentleman's amendment cuts out an additional amount.

Mr. MAY. I take the position that it is not necessary to have $2,250,000 or $2,155,000 expended in Washington while they curtail the land-appraisal department $1,313,000, and which will result in the discharge of 600 of the 913 employees of the land-appraisal department; that the difference in the cost of the hearings before an examiner in the country in the hundreds of pending cases, as compared with bringing them to Washington, justifies the cut. In view of the approaching legislation we are about to have, which will bring about a coordination and consolidation of the railroads into four great trunk systems, you will find a discontinuance of branch lines and the elimination of industry and manufactures out on branch lines everywhere. It will bring about the necessity of a reappraisal of all branch lines and it will coordinate everything in Washington, and this is the first step. That is the reason why I think it should not be done. I think this House should give careful and serious consideration to this amendment, because it simply means that instead of having hearings before an examiner out in the country they must bring two or three hundred people from the State of Texas, for instance, to Washington or from California to Washington as witnesses, and it will take thousands and thousands of dollars out of the pockets of the people in order to make it convenient for the Commission to have everything heard in Washington. I think this reduction ought to be made, and that it should be put in on the other branch of the work. It does not increase the appropriation in any way. I think you will agree with my amendment if you will give it serious consideration.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is it not a fact that when they have these hearings in Washington and some Commissioner hears them they then refer the matter to the Commission, and the Commissioner could go down into the field and it would save the taxpayers thousands of dollars of money if they would send them down there instead of letting "Mohamet come to the mountain."

Mr. MAY. That is true; but it would be infinitely more economical and cheap for the people who are concerned in the hearings that the Commissioner or examiner go down there instead of bringing 40 people to the city of Washington as witnesses in every case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I am not out of sympathy with the purpose that my colleague from Kentucky has in mind. I think the gentleman is not exactly accurate in the conclusion that he draws from the appropriation which the committee has recommended. The amendment offered by the gentleman, on page 23, line 24, reduces that appropriation $500,000. The gentleman gives notice that if that amendment is adopted he will move to increase the appropriation later on in the bill.

Now, it is true that in the bill it says $2,155,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia. May I call my friend's attention to the fact that while these are employees of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the main office in the District of Columbia, yet from this force come the people who go out into the field and conduct the hearings which my friend says he wishes continued rather than have the hearings held in Washington. If we take the $500,000 away, we simply further reduce the field activities of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Virginia does not understand my point. The purpose I have in mind is to save the people of the country who have cases before the Commission the expense of having to gather here in Washington, pay hotel bills and railroad fares, and the expense of bringing witnesses here, when an examiner can be sent in the field.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I think I understand the gentleman's point of view, but this amendment takes money out of the bill in such a way as to force them to cut down these hearings in the field.

Mr. MAY. The effect already has been that they have ordered 15 big cases to Washington.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to my friend from Kentucky that it is an old custom among bureaus and commissions of the Government that whenever you take 5 cents away from them they will begin to holler that you have curtailed the particular activity they know Members of Congress and their constituents are going to be interested in. For instance, if you curtail appropriations for the Agricultural Department, they immediately say that next year they will not be able to publish the Agricultural Yearbook, feeling that some of us Congressmen who want the yearbook will have an amendment put in the bill putting it back.

So it is also when we come to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have cut them pretty deep, I will admit, but no deeper than we have cut everybody, including our soldiers, ourselves, and our employees.

When we cut them they said, "We will not be able to have as many hearings in the field as we have had before." Our committee feels that perhaps it will not be necessary to have as many hearings in the field. But, Mr. Chairman, if experience shows it is necessary to have these hearings and they do not have sufficient funds to conduct the necessary hearings in the field, this committee and the Congress will be willing to give it to them. However, we want to put them on starvation rations for a little while, as we are doing with every activity of the Government, and see how it works out by the time we come here next year.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman care to refer to page 105 of the hearings where he himself examined one of the witnesses and where the witness, McManamy, answered a question by Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] asked this question:

After July 1 you are not going to set any of these cases?

That is referring to a large number that he testified about on the previous page and on that page.

Mr. McManamy answered:

No; these are the cases that we had to call to Washington. During the next fiscal year there will be a great many more.

In other words, he states there—and it is not contradicted—that they are going to bring the United States to Washington regardless of the expense to the litigants.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman that it is true the Interstate Commerce Commission complained about this cut, as I have stated. They undertook to base their claim for a more liberal appropriation upon the fact they had to have these hearings. But our committee feels that we have not cut them unreasonably. We do not believe the right of any constituent is going to be interfered with by this cut we have made. If it is, then we are ready to come back and recommend an additional appropriation when the time comes.

Mr. MAY. Why not take care of it now?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I notice in the hearings that the committee, as far as I can understand, did not agree that the cut would cause all of these hearings to be held in Washington of necessity. That is merely the testimony of one of the Commissioners.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is right.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. As I understand it, the committee does not feel it will be necessary to bring all these cases to Washington. Is that right?

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee felt that the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it tries to cooperate with the committee and with Congress in our economy efforts, will be able to conduct their hearings in the field, although they may possibly have to bring some of the cases to Washington.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended 2 minutes, that he may answer another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Virginia understands, no doubt, that the President is prepared now and will soon send to Congress during this session—and it will be enacted into law—a proposed merger of all the railroads; and the message announced that the bill will be so drawn that the railroads may coordinate, consolidate, and eliminate branches.

Suppose this bill goes through and operations under it are started. Suppose it is proposed to discontinue a 50-mile railroad somewhere in the country. Can the Commission, without going to the place or having somebody down there view the premises and take the hearings, get the right picture of the situation? Can this be done by having the people come here to Washington?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think the gentleman need not be uneasy about the Commission not being supplied with funds necessary to take care of any new activity the administration puts on it.

This is the appropriation the Director of the Budget sent to Congress and the President himself said it would be sufficient to run the Interstate Commerce Commission. The committee did not cut it any. We have given just what the Director of the Budget and the President of the United States said it was right for the Interstate Commerce Commission to have.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I wonder how much investigation of the facts and figures in connection with this matter the President has had the time to make since March 4.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. AYRES of Kansas. This item of $2,250,000 is the amount that is used for the field-service work. If the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] should be agreed to, then we would have less field work done and more centralization here in the city of Washington.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is exactly the point I tried to make.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that the total reduction here under the 1933 appropriation is less than 15 percent?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. And is it not also a fact that the reduction in some of the items is more than 15 percent?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I notice on page 104 of the hearings that Mr. McManamy states that this item of appropriation is $2,692,000, which has been cut, as shown by the bill, to $2,250,000, or $442,000. I wish the gentleman would tell us how many men they have available for this field work to go out and hold these hearings, and if the gentleman knows, also tell us how much it is going to cost the people concerned to come to Washington to attend these hearings. In other words, let us see how much we are going to save the taxpayers of this country by forcing all the people in the country who are interested in these matters to come here to attend the hearings, when we could send a Commissioner or an examiner which would only be one railroad fare, whereas under the other plan, we are causing thousands of people to come to Washington just to accommodate some little commissioner who does not want to leave the footlights of the capital.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman has made a speech and I really do not know what his question is.

Mr. McFARLANE. The question is whether or not you are cutting the bill $442,000—

Mr. WOODRUM. That does not all come out of this item. A good portion of that is the regular salary reduction and the rest is the percentage cut that we are giving all these departments to compel them to economize in this period of emergency. When we have had to cut our veterans by reason of the present emergency, we are also going to cut the departments and make them economize.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The appropriation for 1933 for this service was $2,600,000. This was some reduction under the previous appropriation, but not very much. They tell us that under this appropriation they are having difficulty in going out into the field and holding these hearings. I believe that this is just a bureaucratic idea that they should not work the way they ought to work in the interest of the people.

It is from this appropriation that money is provided to go out in the field and take the testimony there. If we cut this appropriation they will have less money to work on in the field.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Then why do you confine it to being expended in the District of Columbia, if you want them to go out in the field?

Mr. TABER. This is for the employees who are based here in the District.

Mr. MAY. Then you are going to spend $2,155,000 on employees in the District of Columbia?

Mr. TABER. These employees are the ones who go out in the field. They are stationed here, but they are sent out in the field to hold these hearings. The employees who hold the hearings are not stationed in the field but are stationed here in Washington.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. If the gentleman will refer to line 1, page 24, of the bill, it is shown there that this appropriation may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia. Why should we not provide that it may be expended Nation-wide, so we would have an opportunity to send these commissioners out in the field? If you are going to spend this money in the District of Columbia, that limits it to the District alone.

Mr. TABER. They can spend this money to go out in the field the way the language is now, and they have never had any trouble with the Comptroller's Office in doing this. The item to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] refers, and to which he proposes to add certain money, is $1,000,000 for the Valuation Division. This $1,000,000, it was stated to us by the Commissioner who has charge of this work, Mr. Lewis, will be sufficient for them to do everything that is required to be done, with the recapture provision out, without the least bit of trouble, and they probably in the future may be able to get along with less. It does not seem to me we ought to cut down the work of sending these people out by cutting this appropriation, but we should really allow the cut of about 15 percent to stand—it is not quite 15 percent, because we are $40,000 above a 15 percent cut in this appropriation—but I believe we should see if they cannot do all of the work with this appropriation, and I believe they can if they have the proper amount of ginger.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. What I should like to know is whether the language of this provision is any different from what has been carried in the previous appropriation bills.

Mr. TABER. It is exactly the same language, and the Comptroller has ruled that this is sufficient to permit them to operate.

Mr. HOPE. And they have been holding these hearings in the field under the authority of previous bills, which contained the same language.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I shall probably not consume all the 5 minutes, but I do want to call the attention of the committee to the technicalities and the unworkability of the Interstate Commerce Commission's rules and regulations.

It is almost as difficult to present your case to the Interstate Commerce Commission as it is to the Supreme Court of the United States. Entirely too much delay and red tape.

The melon growers in my district planted a rather large acreage this year, contemplating that they would enjoy the same freight rates they had been enjoying for the past few seasons. But the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the face of the panic and the business collapse, has permitted the freight rates to be increased from $10 to $50 per car. It seems to me utterly inconsistent and absurd for the Interstate Commerce Commission to have found that the melon growers should now pay from $10 to $50 more per car to get their melons to the market, especially when our growers are hardly breaking even. In fact, many of them have lost money during the past few seasons. From my district they now pay about $200 per car to New York and eastern markets; some $250 to $300 per car to Michigan. The railroads get this transportation charge because a guaranty is required before the melons are moved from shipping point. Sometimes the melons fail to bring even the freight charges. Often nothing at all is left for the grower. This is also very often the case with our shippers of other vegetables and fruits. Why does not the Interstate Commerce Commission see that they have the same rates accorded the steel and other highly financed monopolies? Why the vast difference in these rates?

The Congress has created bureau after bureau and commission after commission undertaking to help our constituents, the plain, everyday people of America, only to find that in the due course of time the commissions are in many instances devoured by the special interests and monopolies and trusts.

I think, instead of the amendment of my friend from Kentucky, we may do more good toward the American people if we would indiscriminately abolish and scrap and junk practically all of the so-called "service commissions" and "bureaus" and then vigorously enforce our antitrust laws through the Department of Justice. [Applause.]

Why should the Interstate Commerce Commission advise me to have my people present a petition and proceed in some set, cut-and-dried, and drawn-out manner? If we did that, we probably could not get before the Commission before the melon season was over. O, Mr. Chairman, why have these commissions so far forgotten the needs of our people?

Why do not they send a Commissioner or an inspector down to Florida, and in 5 days he could make a report on the melon rates as to whether they should be reduced to the same as we enjoyed last season. Our growers contemplated the lower rate when they planted this crop. Now, when it is about ready to ship, the rates are liberally raised. Is this fair?

The red tape of the bureaus—the Commission—is so wound around by complicated rules that you cannot get any action out of them. Why should not the Commission suspend the enforcement of these rates? They have made their own rules and hide behind them.

I doubt if we should appropriate the huge amount here asked for. I am inclined to think that my friend's amendment should be adopted until we can get some reaction, some cooperation, and some service from some of the bureaus and commissions to which we are paying high salaries, allowances, and traveling expenses to help raise the freight rate of my constituents.

It may be that I am a little radical on these things, but somehow I cannot help it when I see these abuses, long delays, evasions, buck passing, and a general lack of interest for the down-and-out American citizens, the farmers in particular, because if anyone is now hard hit it is our farmers. They have been sandbagged and robbed, literally speaking, until they have nothing left. It is a shame.

I submit one or two of the telegrams recently received and the reply of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as follows:

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a petition submitted by watermelon growers of Suwannee County for your consideration. This petition is self-explanatory.

The grievance is that with the low prices received by growers for melons for the past 3 years that freight rates are so high that they are prohibitive. For example, a grower in Live Oak, Fla., shipping melons to New York has to guarantee the freight under bond before the railroad company will move the car, and the freight is more than $200 per car. The net returns to farmer for last season was about $35 per car. Thus, the railroad gets practically all and the farmer nothing.

This condition is causing farmers to seek truck conveyance into large cities, and the railroads are going to suffer.

This appeal is in no way to ask unjust cuts in rates on melons, but merely to request a fair rate so that our growers can continue to grow melons. If something is not done to relieve this situation, the melon growers of this State will be forced to discontinue growing melons.

Correspondence regarding this petition should be directed to Mr. J. A. DeBerry, Live Oak, Fla., sending copy to me.

Thanking you for consideration of above, I am,

Yours truly,

N. G. THOMAS, County Agent.

TRENTON, FLA., April 27, 1933.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
United States Congressman, Washington, D.C.:

The advance tariff on watermelons affecting present growing crop Florida and Georgia from ten to more than fifty dollars per car will cause growers lose money and eventually force them to quit growing this commodity for market. Imperative this advance taken off, restoring old rates. Please use your best efforts.

S. G. GAY.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 2, 1933.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. GREEN: Please be referred to your letter of the 26th ultimo, addressed to the chairman, concerning a telegram received from Mr. S. G. Gay, Trenton, Fla., with respect to increased freight rates on watermelons.

The rates involved are evidently those found justified by the Commission in its decision of February 18, 1933, in I. & S. Docket No. 3706, Watermelons from, to, and between southern points (191 I.C.C. No. 534).

This investigation came about through schedules filed to become effective February 23, 1932, wherein the carriers proposed to cancel commodity rates and establish in lieu thereof rates based, generally speaking, 30 percent of first class, in order to remove irregularities prohibited by the long-and-short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act. Upon protest of the regulatory authorities of Georgia, Florida, and others, the rates were suspended for investigation to determine the propriety thereof.

Following hearing in this case the Commission found the proposed rates justified, with certain modifications. Those found justified were allowed to become effective March 22, 1933, and the modified rates were made effective May 1, 1933.

The adjustment was of widespread effect, involving both increases and reductions in existing rates, and such rates were permitted to become effective only after full hearing of parties interested.

In the event shippers consider it advisable and desire to attack any specific rate adjustment, their recourse lies in the filing of a formal complaint in accordance with the Commission's rules of practice.

Respectfully,

G. B. MCGINTY, Secretary.

MCINTOSH, FLA., May 9, 1933.

Hon. CONGRESSMAN R. A. GREEN,
Washington, D.C.:

Right on verge beginning shipments watermelons from Florida and Georgia, railroads have, in our opinion, unjustly advanced rates this commodity, which is one of their foremost agricultural products. Advancing rates at this time certainly no cooperation with farmers and is duly unjust. L. E. Holloway, president Melon Distributors Association, wired President Roosevelt protesting against this unjust advance. We urge you to lend your supreme effort handling Interstate Commerce Commission to place these rates back same basis as last year, remembering all shipments watermelons require bond guaranteeing freight.

CHRISTIAN & NEAL,

By J. B. NEAL,

Secretary and Treasurer, Marion County, Democratic Committeeman.

TRENTON, FLA., May 4, 1933.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.:

Immediate action necessary. Please urge Interstate Commerce Commission reestablish former freight rates watermelons from southeastern territory. Recent published rates absolutely prohibitive, will bankrupt growers, as old rates were already too high. Many cars selling below charges. Please use influence; get emergency action, thereby saving important industry.

D. H. BROWNING,
M. L. LANGFORD,
A. F. RUTLEDGE.

I joined in these protests and urged that they be given consideration. These new rates should be suspended until at least the present crop could be harvested, then let our growers be advised in advance as to future increases, then probably fewer would try to grow melons.

The following communication has just been received from the Commission:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, May 10, 1933.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I have your favor of 8th instant, with which you enclosed a communication dated 6th instant and addressed to you by Mr. R. H. Pennington, secretary of the Melon Distributors Association, Evansville, Ind., and telegram dated 4th instant and addressed to you by Messrs. D. H. Browning, M. L. Langford, and A. F. Rutledge, of Trenton, Fla., relating to rates for the transportation of watermelons from points in southeastern territory.

Upon inquiry I learn that the rates referred to became effective on the 1st day of this month, and that they are supposed to be in harmony with a decision of division 3 of the Commission, rendered on February 18, 1933, in Watermelons from, to, and between southern points (199 I.C.C. 435). As a practical matter, therefore, the rates cannot be interfered with by the Commission except after the hearing provided for in section 15 pursuant to a complaint filed in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Under the provisions of the act carriers are free to initiate rates and cannot be required by the Commission to change them after they have become effective unless and until the hearing mentioned has been held, and then only for the purpose of making effective one or more of the provisions of the act.

Many telegrams and other communications similar to those of your correspondents have reached the Commission recently, but because of the restrictions above set forth you will readily understand why it is impossible for the Commission to take such quick action concerning rates of transportation as interested parties appear to desire.

Very respectfully,

P. J. FARRELL, Chairman.

Now, may I ask my colleagues why the Congress should maintain bureaus and commissions? I await an answer. If the Commission is not at fault and new legislation is needed, I call on our administration and leaders to offer such remedial legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out $500,000 from the bill, and then I am going to vote against the next amendment to put it back in, as he wants to do.

I congratulate the committee in having cut out more than $2,000,000 of this appropriation bill, and it is carrying now twice as much as it ought to carry.

I want to say to you that, in my opinion, the condition that the railroads are in today is by reason of the fact that we have given the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix the rates for them on every article of commerce that is shipped in interstate commerce. They have been the means of pauperizing the railroads. If you will take off the orders by which the railroads are tied today, with the restrictions put upon them, whereby they cannot reduce their rates, then the railroads will come out without trouble. They are now penalized if they undertake to reduce the rate fixed by this Interstate Commerce Commission anywhere in the United States, and that is what is the matter. This Commission is running around and investigating the disobedience of some little order of the Commission. I have introduced a bill in this Congress—and have introduced it before—to provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix only the highest rates that could be charged by the railroads and express companies for carrying freight, and thus leave the railroads open for competition with each other, so that they could make some of these reductions in freight rates. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] a moment ago stated the freight rates with respect to fruit in his State, and

I can point back to the day when this same Commission destroyed one of the most profitable businesses in my State.

We were shipping thousands of crates of cantaloupes, carloads of them, throughout the entire United States. As soon as the Interstate Commerce Commission got to the point where it could fix a rate it put those men out of business. I should be glad today, as an experiment at least, to absolutely abolish this Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, which was discussed a moment ago, which carries $900,000. It has accomplished no good whatever, in my opinion. I believe that if you will continue to reduce the appropriations for these Commissions every year we will finally know whether or not they ought to be continued; I think it will be disclosed then that these Commissions are some of the greatest detriments that we have to trouble us now. We are living under an administration of bureaus and commissions, under a commission government, under a bureaucratic government. When the Attorney General wants to find out what the law is on some point, he has to hunt some little bureau to find out what kind of an order it has made by reason of the power given to it by Congress. I am tired of that kind of government. I want to see this Congress legislate, pass laws, fix a rate that is right, and let it be enforced by the court, and do away with the bureaucratic government now existing in this country. As one gentleman said, do away with the red tape. Let us turn the railroads loose to compete with each other and we will have better times in this country and they will prosper.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Does the gentleman know of any good reason why we need 11 of these high-powered Commissioners to do the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission? Could it not be done just as well by 3 or 5?

Mr. GLOVER. Three would do just as well as 11.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. It costs $250 to $300 per car to ship our watermelons to the State of Michigan.

Mr. GLOVER. I was down in my State a year or so ago and they were shipping out a carload of cabbages and the man shipping it said that he sold the carload in the market, and that he was paying almost as much to get it to market as he got for the whole carload.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division. Several Members desire to have the amendment read. I ask unanimous consent that before the vote is taken on the division the amendment be again reported by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment of Mr. MAY as follows:

Page 23, line 24, strike out "$2,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,750,000."

The Committee again divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Regulating accounts: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce compliance with section 20 and other sections of the act to regulate commerce as amended by the act approved June 29, 1906 (U.S.C., title 49, sec. 20), and as amended by the Transportation Act, 1920 (U.S.C., title 49, sec. 20), including the employment of necessary special accounting agents or examiners, and traveling expenses, $750,000, of which amount not to exceed $172,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That for the portion of the fiscal year 1933 remaining after the date of enactment of this act the amount which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia from the 1933 appropriation for the purposes included in this paragraph shall be at the annual rate of $175,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 24, line 25, after the figures at the end of the line, insert a colon and the words

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to hold hearings in the District of Columbia."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to this section. This section is the section providing for the personnel for the accounting division in the District of Columbia. It is not a section relating to the holding of hearings.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, then I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be made to apply to line 10. While I was preparing the amendment the Clerk read on down the page. I want this amendment to apply to the first section.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I would have to make the point of order to that.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is good where it is, and I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything in this paragraph that provides an appropriation for the holding of hearings?

Mr. WOODRUM. No. The information of the committee is that the appropriation which provided for the hearings, to which the gentleman from Texas doubtless refers, is an appropriation carried in the first paragraph. That begins on line 23 and the appropriation was for $2,250,000. We have passed that section.

Mr. McFARLANE. I call attention to the amendment and the section under which it is carried and the wording of the paragraph, which reads:

Including employment of necessary special accounting agents or examiners and traveling expenses, $750,000, of which amount not to exceed $172,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

That shows that traveling expenses are involved. It shows that special investigators, agents, and so forth, are involved in the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is true, but by an examination of the organic law, section 20, it will be found that section 20 of the act to regulate commerce is the section providing for valuation accounts of the railroads and for the policing of those accounts.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman have that section before him?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not have it here, but I know what the organic law is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the present existing law permits hearings in Washington. The amendment offered by the gentleman would change existing law.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, I should like to call attention to the fact that it is not legislation attached to an appropriation bill, but it is a limitation upon the appropriation itself, and I do not think the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the subcommittee, advise the Chair what he has in mind when he uses the word "policing"?

Mr. WOODRUM. I can answer the Chair better by referring to page 315 of the hearings on the original bill in the last session of Congress:

Functions of Bureau of Accounts: (1) to prescribe and revise uniform systems of accounts for all classes of carriers under our jurisdiction;

(2) To enforce these systems of accounts by test examinations; and

(3) To make such special accounting examinations as our duties may require—

And so forth.

It does not refer at all to rate cases, in which hearings the gentleman is interested. That appropriation is carried in the section of the bill which we have just debated, and to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] offered an amendment which failed. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not germane to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCLINTIC). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that the amendment as offered is not germane to this paragraph.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be offered at the end of line

10 on page 24, and I ask unanimous consent to return to that portion of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to offering the amendment, but I certainly shall object to any further debate.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action of the House in just voting on this amendment, I am compelled to object. I do not want to be discourteous to my good friend from Texas, but I shall be forced to object to the unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce', approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof", by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913 (U.S.C., title 49, sec. 19a), including 1 director of valuation at $10,000 per annum, 1 supervisor of land appraisals, 1 supervising engineer, 1 supervisor of accounts, and 1 principal valuation examiner, at $9,000 each per annum, and traveling expenses, $1,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia if suitable space is provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 27, line 16, after the word "expenses", strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat discouraging, in the face of the previous action of the House when I undertook to reduce an appropriation, to now undertake to increase one; but a mere reading of this subsection of the bill will convince any of you who will just think about it a while that this appropriation is entirely too small for the purpose.

Under this provision of the bill, the valuation department of the Commission, which includes the valuation of all property of the carriers, is required not only to view and inspect 400,000 miles of railroad in the United States, 250,000 of which is trunk line, but they must go into an investigation, under the provisions of this bill, that will secure information concerning stocks and bonds and other securities held by the railroads. It is not only an appraisal and valuation department as to lands and physical properties but it includes all securities. Most of those securities are now in the hands of the United States Government, or rather its agent, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. When we pass new legislation that we will all vote for, perhaps, under the lash of the whip, as we have been in the habit of doing, you will find there is going to be an overhauling and housecleaning of the railroads of this country from one end to the other, not only of the main lines but the branch lines, and there will be a discontinuance of lines and railroad and transportation facilities; and the branch of the Commission that has charge of the valuation department will be compelled to revalue all those properties. That is just what the railroads want to do. They want to cripple that valuation department so that they cannot get a fair valuation, and then they can dicker with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Treasury Department with the Government blind and its hands tied. I think this appropriation should be increased so that this branch of the activities will not be curtailed under the important and crucial position we are going to be in within the next few months with these changing conditions under the new deal we are going to have.

The importance of this appraisal department is emphasized over and over by past events one or two of which I shall point out here. In 1931 the Post Office Department was planning the building of 2 large and expensive public buildings in 2 of our great cities, New York and Chicago. At New York the lowest price they were offered on the site at Grand Central Station was $14,500,000, and somebody with foresight enough to think of it asked the land department of the Interstate Commerce Commission for their valuation which was furnished very promptly and which resulted in a finding that the proper value of that particular property was not $14,500,000, the authorized contract price, but $7,000,000; and by reason of the efficiency of this department the Government made an actual net saving of $7,500,000, which is one and one half times the amount of money contained in this bill for the entire Commission. Quite a nice little saving for one case. The same thing occurred in Chicago where the saving was no mean sum but a handsome little bagatelle of $5,000,000, almost the amount of this entire appropriation, and yet some wise men in the name of economy would materially cripple if not destroy this valuable activity. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Bureau of Valuations of the Interstate Commerce Commission is that part of the activity which has to do largely with making the primary valuation and keeping the valuation up-to-date on properties of the common carriers.

Congress is just about in the act, I think, of repealing section 15a of the Transportation Act which calls for the recapture of excess earnings of railroads, which is a ludicrous phrase in this day and time, because "There ain't any such animal" now as excess earnings of railroads.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. It means to give back to the railroads about $360,000,000 that is charged up to them, about $10,000,000 of which is in the Treasury.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; it does not mean that because we have been able to get only a small portion of that into our hands, two or three millions of dollars in real cash.

Mr. MAY. But this amount today is due under the recapture clause.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, there is a lot of it due, but how are the railroads ever going to be able to pay the Government what they owe it under the recapture clause? They will have to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pay back to the Government money they owe under the recapture clause of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act for the Government to pay back to the railroads, an utterly paradoxical and incongruous situation.

Mr. MAY. In other words the Government has played the part of Santa Claus until it proposes to change the Valuation Act and let the railroads say what they think they are worth.

Mr. WOODRUM. No more absolutely unjustifiable provision was ever written into a transportation act than that which in effect said to the railroads that when times were good and they were prosperous they would be limited to a certain percentage of earnings, yet when times get bad the railroads must look out for themselves, although every other man in business individually or every other concern is enabled under the law to lay up a little something against a rainy day.

Some of the railroads by careful economy and good management in prosperous times were able to make money, yet the Government undertakes to take it away from them and not guarantee them against loss when conditions fall off.

Even with the reduction the appropriation for this purpose is still $1,000,000, which is quite a considerable sum. It leaves them a skeleton organization with which to carry on until Congress and the President finally decide what the national policy is going to be with reference to railroads.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question? I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, for he is so courteous in his general demeanor to all of us, but does the gentleman think it is exactly fair to give back to the railroads by new legislation $360,000,000 that we could compel them to pay and at the same time take away from the veterans of the World War $560,000,000, and then say that we will not keep in touch with and keep our hands on these railroads, which we guarantee may earn 6 percent?

Mr. WOODRUM. If my friend from Kentucky has kept abreast of the situation with reference to this recapture of excess earnings, as I am sure he has, he will know that the Government is faced with litigation from now until the crack of doom before it can ever collect these excess earnings. With the exception of one or two railroads, none of them would be financially able to pay any of it. If we had valid judgments against them today, they could not be collected.

On the other hand, speaking of our veterans, if we rehabilitate the railroads, if we put them back to work, if we start them running their railroad engines and rolling stock, calling back into service their engineers and brakemen, putting into service their passenger-carrying facilities, then the veterans over this country will have some opportunity to get a job, some place where they can hope to get one. The one thing they want above all else in the world from the Federal Government is a fair, square chance to have what every American citizen ought to have, an opportunity to work and earn a living.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is it not a fact that if the Government did recover from the few railroads that have made excess earnings that the money would not go into the Treasury but the great bulk of it would go to railroads that have not earned the interest on their capital investment?

Mr. WOODRUM. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. I may remind the gentleman from Kentucky that if we collected all the $360,000,000 today, not one red copper penny of it would go back into the pockets of the people who paid them. The excess earnings go into a revolving fund to make up the deficits of mismanaged railroads.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Has the chairman of the committee made any investigation of this subject to know how many presidents and vice presidents of these mismanaged railroads are receiving salaries in excess of $100,000 a year?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, a great many, too many, are receiving high salaries, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $2,500 of the appropriations herein made for the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, for attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Commission.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 28, between lines 7 and 8, after the word "Commission", insert a new section, to read as follows:

"Not to exceed $200,000 for traveling expenses, reporting service, and other expenses incurred in the holding of hearings outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that, in the first place, it is not germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered; and, in the second place, it changes existing law. Existing law authorizes the holding of hearings in the District of Columbia, and the amendment seeks to change this.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's point of order, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is offered at the close of the Interstate Commerce Commission section of the independent offices appropriation bill, and that the item for general administrative expense carries an appropriation of a certain sum which shall be expended within the District of Columbia, and according to the hearings, on page 107, it has been brought out that—

For the fiscal year 1932 the reporting expense was $100,000 and the travel expense was $116,000, practically all of which was for field hearings. The official reporting expense this year, up to and including March 31, has been $61,000, in round numbers, and the traveling expense has been $40,000.

This is not a change in existing law and it is not legislation on an appropriation bill. It is a provision such as the paragraph above, and if a point of order is good to this section it is good to the one above, because it is worded in the same language—not to exceed a certain sum shall be expended in a certain way for certain expenses which have been permissible under the law all along or up until the appropriation was cut out at this session.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McClintic). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment in the nature of a new paragraph, which reads:

Not to exceed $200,000 for traveling expenses, reporting service, and other expenses incurred in the holding of hearings outside the District of Columbia.

In view of the fact that the first paragraph of this title deals with this subject, the Chair thinks it is not germane to the portion of the bill to which it is now offered, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, it is not my purpose to go into detail regarding the method being pursued by the Appropriations Committee to continue the Democratic gag-rule system, nor to enter into extended arguments regarding items contained in the independent offices bill.

I gladly voted for the Roosevelt economy bill, and I am in accord and sympathy with the President's efforts to bring about marked economies in governmental expenditures. This is a much better way to aid in balancing the Budget than continuously suggesting, as the Democratic majority is doing, new forms of expenditures and camouflaging them under the cloak of bond issues.

There is, however, one item of economy in the pending bill which I think goes too far. It appears on page 44, where the amount provided for carrying on the work of the Veterans' Administration for the next fiscal year is fixed at $77,273,000. It seems to be understood that this reduced figure involves the abolition of the regional offices of the Bureau. While all savings are desirable, it is my opinion that the doing away of the regional offices will bring about unintentional and severe hardships. My district covers the western part of Massachusetts. A year or so ago it was reported that the Springfield branch of the Bureau, which contacted veterans in that section and handled their preliminary physical examinations and other matters, was to be closed. This caused almost an uprising among the veterans in the western part of the State. Their protest was so great that it was finally decided to continue the Springfield station. The presence of this station made it unnecessary for veterans living west of the Connecticut River to make the long journey to Boston. On May 1, however, the Springfield branch was closed, and now it is proposed to also close the regional office in Boston.

This will leave the veterans without any opportunity for personal contact with officials who must pass upon their claims and will require them to present all matters in writing. Such a procedure will impose an undue handicap on many veterans. The majority of them are not expert letter writers. Many of them have not the education and training necessary for the proper presentation of their claims in writing. To deprive these veterans of the opportunity of personal contact with physicians and other representatives of the Veterans' Administration is, in my opinion, an extreme injustice.

It will be difficult enough for the Administration to convince veterans that the recent reductions in their compensation are fair and just; but to withdraw from veterans their opportunity to present their cases verbally to persons with sympathetic ears and understanding is something they will not understand. No amount of formal routine correspondence from the Bureau here will take the place of this personal contact.

My relations with the Boston regional office have been highly satisfactory. I consider that Colonel Blake is certainly an outstanding official and that his office has been conducted most efficiently. I sincerely hope that for the sake of the veterans of Massachusetts that office will not be discontinued.

The department commander of Massachusetts, the American Legion, is in Washington and has interviewed the members of the Massachusetts delegation. Commander Rose has stressed the desirability of maintaining the Boston office. I quote from his statement, as follows:

Nor is it necessary for us to bring to the attention of Massachusetts Members the humane side of this question. The Federal Government is about to stop the compensation and allowances of thousands of veterans. Practically all of those will seek some explanation of their removal from the lists. If this explanation is given them personally by a sympathetic attaché of the Veterans' Bureau, the blow will not fall quite so hard. But if the veteran is told that he cannot even get a hearing, that his court of appeal has been abolished, our elected officials are breeding distrust, if not outright hate, for the Government in whose defense he once offered his life.

The amount which would be saved by abolishing the regional offices is not sufficiently large to upset the economy program. On the other hand, the benefits to be derived from the continuation of these offices, from a humanitarian standpoint, as well as the mental attitude of the veterans, are fully sufficient to warrant the expense involved.

It is noted from this morning's press that the President's advisers have seen the handwriting on the wall and have made what appears to be a formal announcement that not all regional offices will be abolished. It is, of course, safe to assume that among the number retained will be the one at Boston, as the amount of business which has been transacted there would give that office a leading place on the list of those to be favorably considered. The veterans in the district which I represent naturally will receive this announcement with satisfaction.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital, $3,322,500.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to interrogate the chairman of the subcommittee. At the bottom of page 31 there is a provision for the "demolition of buildings." I desire to ask the chairman whether any money carried by this appropriation can be used to wreck and destroy the present Post Office Department Building?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is the understanding of the committee that this does not include any funds for that purpose.

Mr. LOZIER. I thank the gentleman for this assurance. For several years under the Hoover administration repeated and persistent efforts were made to have Congress appropriate money to tear down the Post Office Department Building. On several occasions I have joined my colleagues in defeating appropriations of funds to destroy this perfectly good public building that is built of Maine granite and, if not deliberately demolished, will stand for a thousand years. It is one of the best and most substantial buildings in Washington. But under the Coolidge-Hoover administration those who had charge of the public-building program ruthlessly sought to destroy every public building that did not conform to the classic Greek type of architecture. They also marked the Southern Building and the District Building for destruction. They proposed to spend several million dollars reconstructing the War, Navy, and State Department Building. I am proud of the fact that I have had a part in defeating these proposals several times. So long as I am a Member of this House I will continue to oppose the wanton destruction of these splendid buildings. To wreck the Post Office Department Building, the Southern Building, and the District Building and to remodel the State and War Building would be an act of vandalism and indefensible extravagance.

The Clerk read as follows:

American ethnology: For continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii, the excavation and preservation of archaeological remains under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including necessary employees, the preparation of manuscripts, drawings, and illustrations, the purchase of books and periodicals, and traveling expenses, $50,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Page 33, line 18, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, in this paragraph we are appropriating $50,000 for continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii.

This would make a fine junketing trip this summer for the bone hunters over here in the Smithsonian Institution and allow them to go over the country looking up skeletons and old bones while people Nation-wide are starving. I think we can well afford to at least cut this appropriation half in two and save that much money.

I do not care to make any extended remarks on the subject. This ought to appeal to your sense of fairness, and it seems to me this appropriation ought to be at least cut in two. I think for at least another year we can give these bone hunters a vacation.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does the gentleman have any facts he can give us to show that they can do this work on $25,000?

Mr. McFARLANE. I have this information, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky. If we can save this $25,000, we can at least have that much money in the Treasury of the United States to feed some of the starving people in this country.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does the gentleman have any information that would lead him to believe or lead the House to believe that the remaining $25,000 would be of any benefit at all?

Mr. McFARLANE. If it is not, the money will remain in the Treasury, and we will not be out that amount of money. We ought to save all of this money, I will say very frankly to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Then why did not the gentleman offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. McFARLANE. I shall be pleased to accept such a substitute, striking out the full amount.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the work of the Bureau of American Ethnology, according to the hearings, will be limited, under this appropriation, to the preservation and study of information already gathered concerning the American Indians and will not include field work or the initiation of new research work.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. It says here in the bill that you are going over to Hawaii and see the girls dance. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM. I am assuming that the gentleman is speaking facetiously. I want to say seriously that the appropriation has been cut from $61,000 to $50,000. The Bureau of the Budget went into the matter thoroughly with the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian and cut every item to the bone, and then some. It does not call for any new work in the field or any new exploration. I see my good friend from Oklahoma is on his feet, and I remember that when the bill was up before he tried to cut the appropriation, but failed. I hope he is not going to object to this small amount.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I move that we strike out the last word. The chairman is correct; I did offer such an amendment when the bill was under consideration before. I will say that I have visited the National Museum and I found the cellar and garret was filled with many kinds of various ancient objects, and I understand that the Smithsonian has also a large collection that the archeologists have brought to Washington. In view of the fact that we have more than can be housed properly at the present time, it would seem to me wise to postpone the further collection of such objects until conditions would warrant.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Is this the same excavating and exploration party that the gentleman said last year could be done by one man?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not remember saying that, but I did say that I had witnessed some of these archeologists when exploring the western part of the United States during the summer time. Apparently they were having a delightful vacation, and when the winter or cooler months came they returned to Washington and spent the winter in preparing their reports.

It seems to me that when the Nation is in the red and nearly everyone is broke all such activities should be curtailed. I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas has merit. I regret exceedingly to take an opposite position to the chairman of the subcommittee, but I hope the House will adopt this amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Was any part of this exploration and expenditure made in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not know; but it makes no difference whether it is in Oklahoma or any other State.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman is not afraid that they might dig up something that ought not to be dug up?

Mr. McCLINTIC. If they did, it would not be comparable to what they might dig up in the gentleman's State. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the pending amendment. If this were a proposal to spend $50,000 to advertise and sell wooden nutmegs in Hawaii, hooks and eyes in darkest Africa, automobiles in Europe, steel rails in Manchuria, no objection would probably be offered to the appropriation, because you would say that the appropriation and expenditure would help sell our manufactured products and promote trade and commerce. But here we have a proposal to expend a little money for cultural purposes; for ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii; to excavate and preserve archeologic remains of prehistoric animals under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution; to preserve for posterity and civilization the remains of prehistoric animals and men.

Why should we not secure and preserve these ethnological specimens? If they can be discovered now and preserved, we shall have accomplished something worth while. Have we no appreciation of the past? Have we no desire to preserve the fossils that record the history of the genesis and evolution of plant life, animal life, and of the human species? Have the American people become so sordid and selfish that they are indifferent to culture and the preservation of these specimens of prehistoric ages when this old world was in a process of creation?

I believe it was Lord Macaulay who said that the English people could think only in terms of pounds, shillings, and pence; and I am wondering if the American people are becoming so sordid, self-centered, and cynical that they cannot think except in dollars and cents. Take the Library of Congress, one of the most marvelous and valuable possessions of the American people. Its millions of books preserve the culture, the wisdom, the literature, and the philosophy of all past ages. It is the greatest school of learning, the one all-important and outstanding university in the world. The value of this Library cannot be measured in dollars and cents; yet many of us fail to avail ourselves of its treasures and deny ourselves the sources of information it offers.

The Smithsonian Institution, founded by an Englishman, has made a priceless contribution to the education and culture of the American people. It is preserving these priceless specimens of prehistoric ages for the oncoming generations. Some of us may not appreciate the treasures in the Smithsonian Institution and other national museums, but there are millions of people in the United States who do appreciate these mute yet eloquent records and legacies from prehistoric ages, and as the years come and go thousands of students will visit this institution, study its many thousand specimens which tell the history of the creation of the world, the origin and development of plant life, the evolution of animal life from the lowest conceivable order to the human species. The students and myriad millions in the near and distant future will rise up and call you blessed, because you gave your approval to this appropriation which but carried out the plan of our Government for more than a century to secure and preserve these mute memorials of the world's creation and of the development of animal and plant life. This little appropriation will increase the treasures of the Smithsonian Institution, and I hope you will vote down the amendment which seeks to withhold this fund. We cannot afford to be parsimonious in an educational and cultural matter like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE) there were—ayes 29, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of saying to the Members of the House that when the reading of the bill has been concluded and it has come into the House, I propose to offer a motion to recommit, to wipe from the bill section 6, authorizing the President to abolish contracts. That appears on page 52 of the bill. I shall do this because I believe that a proper case for this authority has not been made out, and I believe if it is carried into operation along the lines that have been presented here to the House in the arguments for it, it will result in great consequential damages being recovered against the United States, and not in a saving but in a large increase of expenditures.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, United States Shipping Board, $310,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I regret that I could not be on the floor of the House when the Federal Trade Commission item was being considered. In 1928 a Trade Practice Conference was held at Memphis, Tenn., under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission in the interest of this great industry which operates largely in the South.

This Trade Practice Conference was presided over by a member of the Federal Trade Commission. Trade-practice rules and code of ethics for doing business on the part of this industry were worked out, adopted by the representatives from the various States representing the cottonseed-oil industry at the conference, and these rules were endorsed by the Federal Trade Commission. In less than 2 years complaints from the various cotton-growing States in the South were coming up to Members of Congress from farmers, cottonseed buyers, cotton ginner, and those generally interested in the producer of cotton as well as those who consumed the products of the cottonseed-oil industry.

Around the first of 1930 I made a thorough investigation of these complaints and found to my own entire satisfaction that the cottonseed-oil industry had taken advantage of these trade practice rules as endorsed by the Federal Trade Commission and had formulated a real monopolistic price-fixing combination.

At that time I charged that, under the operation of these trade-practice rules on the part of the cottonseed-oil industry, independent cottonseed buyers had been driven from the market, competition in buying cottonseed, on the part of cottonseed-oil mills, had been wiped out, and the farmers were being robbed of thousands of dollars annually under this monopolistic scheme. I further charged that the Southern Cotton Oil Co., the Buckeye Cotton Oil Mills owned by Procter & Gamble, refiners and manufacturers of various products, and the Swift Cotton Oil Mills owned by the Swift & Co., meat packers, had gone into a conspiracy to force cotton ginner and independent cotton mills to stay in line with their fixed prices.

These complaints as referred to were so strong, especially on the part of farmers, that a resolution was adopted in the Senate calling for an investigation of the cottonseed-oil industry by the Federal Trade Commission.

For the past 3 years the Federal Trade Commission has been making a thorough investigation. The testimony taken at the hearings in connection with this investigation at Washington and in the various States contained about 12 or 15 volumes. When I made these charges against the cottonseed-oil industry, Mr. B. F. Taylor, secretary to the South Carolina division of the National Cottonseed Products Association, who had charge of sending out all cottonseed prices in South Carolina, ramped all over me in a newspaper article in the Columbia State, denouncing my charges. I received a telegram from Mr. Taylor February 25, 1930, stating:

Your statement that there are no individual buyers of cottonseed in the South is without foundation. Your statement that there are no competitive prices on cottonseed is equally unfounded.

When one of our own Congressmen joins in the hue and cries in total disregard of his constituents' rights and of the facts, we think it high time he should be required to inform himself in the facts in the case instead of blindly following the leader and approving the statements of those who are wholly unacquainted with the conditions in the State and, we believe, in the South.

I am glad to state to the House that after 3 years patiently awaiting on the Federal Trade Commission to make a report as to its findings I am informed that my charges against this industry have been proven without a shadow of doubt.

I quote from information just received in regard to the result of this investigation on the part of the Federal Trade Commission:

I am pleased to inform you that the commission has in the last day of two thrown out the so-called "cottonseed rules", adopted at a trade-practice conference, bag and baggage, and ordered the chief counsel to institute a proceeding against the whole layout.

It appears from this that my good friend TAYLOR and many others that agreed with him apparently were not informed themselves or, if so, they were anxious to keep their information away from the public.

I am hoping that inasmuch as this report on the part of the Federal Trade Commission is coming at a time when we are serving under a Democratic administration that the Attorney General will take his gloves off and teach this industry a few things and let them know that the antitrust laws are still in full force, and that the great masses of people, individual producers and individual distributors, are entitled to free and open competition and a square deal at the hands of this industry.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION
MILITARY SERVICES

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans", approved July 3, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 38, secs. 11-11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $77,273,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,500 of this amount shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, of employees detailed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science and annual national conventions of organized war veterans: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available also for personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; for expenses incurred in packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other property, not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds, of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty and when specifically authorized by the Administrator; furnishing and laundering of such wearing apparel as may be prescribed for employees in the performance of their official duties; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; for passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of same, including not more than two passenger automobiles for general administrative use of the Bureau in the District of Columbia and three for the Washington, D.C., regional office; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to utilize Government-owned automotive equipment in transporting children of Veterans' Administration employees located at isolated stations to and from school under such limitations as he may by regulation prescribe; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to procure actuarial services by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable; for operating expenses of the Arlington Building and annex, and the Wilkins Building, including repairs and mechanical equipment, fuel, electric current, ice, ash removal, and miscellaneous items; for allotment and transfer to the Public Health Service, the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, for disbursement by them under the various headings of their applicable appropriations, of such amounts as are necessary for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration, including minor repairs and improvements of existing facilities under their jurisdiction necessary to such care and treatment; for expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of farms; for recreational articles and facilities at institutions maintained by the Veterans' Administration; for administrative expenses incidental to securing employment for war veterans; for funeral, burial, and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration accruing during the fiscal year 1934 or prior fiscal years: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for the care and maintenance of veterans in hospitals or homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available for the purchase of tobacco to be furnished, subject to such regulations as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall prescribe, to veterans receiving hospital treatment or domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration hospitals or homes: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for domiciliary care shall be available for continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888 (U.S.C., title 24, sec. 134), as amended, including all classes of veterans admissible to the Veterans' Administration homes: Provided further, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may, with the concurrence of the Attorney General, transfer to the Department of Justice such personnel and/or funds as may be deemed necessary in connection with the defense of suits against the United States under section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 44, line 6, strike out the figures "77,273,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "85,273,000: Provided, That not to exceed $8,000,000 of this amount shall be available for all expenses and maintenance of all regional offices of the Veterans' Administration."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, prepared and drafted by my distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and myself, and which I am submitting for both of us, is probably one of the most important amendments that will be offered to this bill. I hope my friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] will permit liberal debate upon the amendment. I am sure there are many Members anxious to have their views on this amendment expressed, and for that reason I hope that ample time will be allowed so that Members on both sides of the aisle and of the question may have opportunity to express the same.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I wonder if it would be possible to reach some agreement on the entire veterans' title. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of having something as a basis for starting I know there are a number of gentlemen interested in this subject and there are a number of paragraphs, and, of course, we are very anxious to conclude the bill this afternoon, and there will probably be other parts of appropriation relating to veterans which Members will want to discuss. I ask unanimous consent that there be 40 minutes' debate under the 5-minute rule on the entire veterans' title, and that during that 40 minutes Members have an opportunity to present amendments, and the Chair can use his own discretion in dividing the time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman arrange it so that this side can get half of the time?

Mr. WOODRUM. I thought perhaps the Chairman would be in a position to exercise his discretion in recognizing Members for and against amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are a great many requests on this side, and I suggest that the gentleman make it 1 hour.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I suggest the gentleman make it 1 hour on this paragraph.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we have 1 hour's debate on the entire veteran's title and all amendments thereto. My purpose is to allow Members ample opportunity to debate the entire title.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire title has not yet been read. Does the gentleman want to endeavor to limit debate before the entire title is read?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think we could do that by unanimous consent.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague will surely realize that he can get much more time by the sort of an arrangement proposed by the Chairman.

Mr. McFARLANE. I asked the gentleman for time yesterday and he had plenty of time to give, and he would not give me a minute.

Mr. BLANTON. But we are getting liberal time under the proposed arrangement. If the gentleman forces the Chairman to the strict observance of the rules, many who want to discuss these questions will not be able to get time. We will get much more time by agreement than we will by arbitrary rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests it might be better to limit time on this paragraph and all amendments thereto, and that will save much discussion and probably will be satisfactory to all Members.

Mr. WOODRUM. I suggest 20 minutes on this paragraph.

Mr. HOEPEL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to know whether I will be able to speak 5 minutes on my amendment to this paragraph?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, there are several Members on this side who want to speak on this section. This is very important.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I will change the form of my request. I am only trying to help the gentlemen get time to discuss their amendments.

I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk proceed to read the remainder of the title and that then we have 1 hour's debate and that amendments may be offered to any portion of the title within that hour.

Mr. LEMKE. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the Chairman if he would not consent to 1 hour and 30 minutes? This is a vitally important question.

Mr. HOEPEL. I endeavored to get time on this bill yesterday, and I am going to object unless I am assured of 5 minutes' time on my basic amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPEL] objects. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOEPEL. I will withdraw that objection if I am assured of 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph that has just been read and all amendments thereto, close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, we find so many times when we go into this procedure that Members who have bona fide amendments to offer have no time in which to discuss them. The entire 30 minutes may be consumed in discussing pro forma amendments. We have plenty of time this afternoon. This title is the only title that offers any opportunity for amendment. It seems to me we could well afford to spend 2 hours on this vitally important subject.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. If my colleague, Mr. WOODRUM, will change his request and ask that the entire title be read and then there shall be 1 hour and 20 minutes' debate, in which all amendments may be offered, I think probably we can get an agreement.

Mr. WOODRUM. I make that request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOILEAU. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia state his request, please?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk proceed to read all of the title, and that then amendments be in order to any portion of the title, and that debate on all amendments to the title be limited to 1 hour and 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph that has just been read and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order. We have not started debate on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts was debating the paragraph, and yielded to me. The gentleman offered an amendment and was debating it and then yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] yielded to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] to prefer a unanimous consent request, but there was no debate on the amendment. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has not yet started to run.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] should prevail, limiting the debate on this paragraph to 30 minutes, how much time can be consumed on any one amendment?

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, how much time can be consumed by one Member? I desire to offer an amendment. I wish an opportunity to discuss my amendment, and do not want all the time taken up by others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize in regular order, so far as the Chair can, those who have notified the Chair of their desire to speak.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the Chair's attention to the RECORD. The RECORD will show that the gentleman from Massachusetts offered an amendment and proceeded to debate the amendment. The RECORD will show that the gentleman spoke for a minute, or half a minute at least. He said:

This is one of the most important amendments that will be voted on and I hope my friend from Virginia will be liberal and allow gentlemen opportunity to debate this amendment.

Then I asked him if he would yield to me.

This is debate on the section, and, under the rule, I have the right to move to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor and may proceed if he so desires. After he has used his 5 minutes the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Virginia to make such motion as he may desire.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to add $8,000,000 to the $77,273,000 provided for in this bill and to assure the continuance of the present regional offices which, if this bill is passed without amendment, will ultimately be abolished.

It is a plain, simple question as to whether you want regional offices of the Veterans' Bureau throughout the United States to be abolished or whether you want to have all veterans' activities emanate from Washington.

So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to abolishing the regional offices of the Veterans' Bureau. I am opposed to making the men come to Washington from all parts of the country to file a claim or to prosecute any appeal they are taking from any decision which has been rendered against them. I am opposed to many things which will flow as a result of the regulations issued pursuant to the passage of the Economy Act. The regulations issued clearly justify my vote against the economy bill.

A statement appeared in this morning's papers purporting to come from President Roosevelt to the effect that the regulations recently issued are to be liberalized. I sincerely trust there will be a liberalization of these regulations, because an examination of the same will show that veterans with direct service-connected disabilities are affected anywhere from 20 percent to 55 percent, together with other far-reaching effects. There is no question but what there is plenty of room and justification for liberalization, and if this happens, there is no question but what regional offices will have to be retained.

The adoption of my amendment will mean that the regional offices throughout the country will continue to exist and serve veterans. It will provide the appropriation necessary to enable the executive branch of the Government to continue all regional offices.

I have a very interesting telegram which I am going to read into the RECORD. It was sent to me yesterday by Karl C. Payne, of Boston, who has, apparently, seen the error of his ways. This telegram reads as follows:

Veterans' division, National Economy League, urges retention of regional office of Veterans' Bureau in Boston. Absolutely essential for proper handling of the deserving veterans.

That is the Economy League. If it is deserving to hold the office in Boston it is just as deserving to hold the regional offices in any other city in the United States. While I am fighting to retain the regional office in Boston, the adoption of my amendment will also mean the retention of the regional offices throughout the United States.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I gladly yield to my distinguished friend, Mr. GRANFIELD, from Massachusetts.

Mr. GRANFIELD. I am absolutely in accord with amendment offered by my good friend, Mr. McCORMACK, and I sincerely trust it will be adopted.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank my good friend, Mr. GRANFIELD, for his contribution and his views on the amendment which I have offered. I also want to say that I know of no man who better serves his district and is more loyal to the needs of the veterans than Mr. GRANFIELD.

Those who voted for the economy bill, never intending by their vote to have the regulations go as far as they have gone, can do the best thing possible by voting to retain the regional offices.

I sincerely trust that in plain justice and fairness, and as a message to the American people and to our veterans, that we are going to do everything we reasonably and properly can to have the regulations liberalized. The adoption of this amendment will send such a message to the country.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman's amendment really preserve these regional offices?

Mr. McCORMACK. At least the amendment will be a message that we desire them retained. It provides for their retention at least, so far as the appropriation is concerned, and, so far as we are concerned, we will be doing everything we possibly can when we adopt it.

Mr. McGUGIN. But its adoption does not necessarily mean the retention of the regional offices.

Mr. McCORMACK. But, so far as we are concerned, it will show the people we want to retain them and we will have done everything within our power. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, did the gentleman ask unanimous consent that debate close on the section or on the paragraph?

Mr. WOODRUM. I asked unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Has not the Chair the discretion to recognize the various Members who have requested time, say, for 2 or 3 minutes each? Quite a number of Members have indicated they wish to be heard on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the Chair would have the right to do so if it is satisfactory to the individual Members.

Mr. BLANTON. I think such procedure would give those who wish to be heard on the paragraph an opportunity to present their views.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all speeches on amendments to this paragraph be limited to 2 minutes.

Mr. HOEPEL and Mr. DIRKSEN objected.

Mr. HOEPEL and Mr. MEAD rose.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes and have the time deducted from the 30 minutes allowed for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman in favor of the amendment?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would prefer to recognize at this time someone in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the additional appropriation of funds as provided in this amendment, not that I am opposed to the maintenance of regional offices, but I have an amendment lying on the desk which will positively save this Government $20,000,000, or more, if the Veterans' Administration, which I term the largest racket in Government, will use the facilities of the Army and Navy hospitals, which are available to them. Thus this additional appropriation will not be necessary.

It is my opinion Al Capone and his ilk are virgins and saints compared with the keymen in the Veterans' Administration. I have investigated them and I know. They are inefficient, incompetent, and unsympathetic. They are interested in their own politically acquired sinecures and not in justice to the veteran. Hospitalization in the Veterans' Administration hospitals costs 97 cents per day more per patient than does hospitalization in Army or Navy hospitals. There are 6,000 available beds in Army and Navy hospitals, which the Veterans' Administration should utilize because of decreased cost per patient. Instead of using these cheaper and more competent permanent facilities the Veterans' Administration is withdrawing patients from them and endeavoring to build additions to their present hospitals in an endeavor to retain their higher-paid medical and service personnel, which is a distinct loss to the taxpayers.

It is reported such activities are now taking place at Fort Lyons, Colo., and at San Francisco at an unnecessary expense to the taxpayers.

It is contrary to the President's policy of economy not to accept the cheapest and best facilities available.

I am not opposing the regional offices, but I aver economies can be effected which will save $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 if the services of officers to be furloughed are also utilized in these facilities. There are 6,000 beds now available which if utilized at a saving of 97 cents per day will make a saving of over $171,000 per month over and above savings in personnel salaries. Veterans' Administration doctors receive up to $5,800 per annum, while the salary of the average Army and Navy doctor is $4,000. Instead of furloughing these officers at half pay for life, which is a pure loss to the taxpayer, it would be more profitable to retain them in service and release the higher-salaried, incompetent, and aged doctors in the Veterans' Administration.

This Government should use every available facility of the Army and Navy hospitals, not only in the interest of economy but likewise maintaining the high standard of efficiency and morale now existing in these services.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Are these speeches being made on the amendment now pending, one speech for the amendment and one speech against?

The CHAIRMAN. As near as the Chair can determine that fact; yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that one speech for and one speech against the amendment is all the time allowed on one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But there can be a motion to strike out the last word, which would entitle them to recognition. The Chair will endeavor to be fair and try to divide the time so as to include everyone.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the committee, is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for a moment with reference to the hospital situation in the United States.

We have at the present time 32,542 beds in Veterans' Bureau hospitals. We have in the national soldiers' homes 6,070 beds. There are 12,009 cases in the veterans' hospitals that are service connected. In the other hospitals there are 8,012 that are service-connected cases. About 20,000 of the 41,439 beds that are available are occupied by service-connected cases.

As I understand the policy of the administration, after this law goes into effect the non-service-connected cases will be cast out of the hospitals, and I am just wondering whether this will be best for our country—that is, when we have these beds available whether it will be the best thing for us to cast aside these men who are unable to take care of themselves and throw them back on the various communities from which they have been sent to the hospitals.

With the inauguration of President Roosevelt and the convening of this special session of Congress, I, like the great majority of my Republican colleagues, threw partisanship to the four winds and determined to follow the leadership of the Chief Executive in his avowed program of economy in Government, tempered with mercy and justice to those who were to be affected by the reduction in expenditures.

The Congress by overwhelming majority enacted the President's economy bill, giving the President unprecedented powers, and repealing laws affecting millions of men and women who served their country in time of peril, which were the result of countless hours and days—yes, years of sincere deliberation by Members of the Congress. We were told that the President would deal liberally with those whose disabilities were service-connected. During the Presidential campaign the Democratic Party fanned the flame of hatred in the breasts of the veterans against Herbert Hoover and Republicans in Congress, leading them to believe that only by the election of the Democratic candidates could their legislative programs become a law, with the result that leaders of the great veteran organizations appeared in the front-line trenches of the Democratic Party, and it is probably conservative to say that 80 percent of the veteran vote supported the "new deal."

By our votes we became a party to the proposed wholesale dismissals in the ranks of Federal workers and subscribed to the 15-percent reduction in all salaries, to which in many instances must be added administrative furloughs without pay ranging from 30 to 90 days. Men and women who have served their Government in departmental and field service faithfully and well at mediocre salaries, because they felt that they were protected by Civil Service laws, making it possible for them to look forward to security in their old age, are now faced with the specter of unemployment as the result of the "new deal", which in the same breath calls upon private employers to increase wages and employment.

While we are throwing thousands of faithful Civil Service employees into the ranks of unemployed, we are at the same time asked to create new governmental activities, requiring the services of thousands of persons, who will be recruited from the ranks of political workers, who can prove their active support of the Democratic candidate even before his nomination for the Presidency. I am convinced that the cry of economy as applied to the dismissal of Federal workers is camouflage, and that when the smoke has cleared away we will find that the personnel of the Government will be as large, if not larger than before, except that we will have scrapped the Civil Service ideals of the first Roosevelt for the patronage hand of the "new deal."

Twelve months ago thousands of veterans and their families were spurred on to Washington by the encouraging words of men in this House, who insisted on the payment of the adjusted-service certificates with printing-press money. The administration at that time did not favor that kind of currency. The veterans themselves made an honest effort to shake off their backs those among their number who were infected by the insidious disease of communism, which is obnoxious to all sound-thinking Americans. During the presidential campaign the eviction of the Bonus Expeditionary Force, greatly exaggerated by the propagandists, was used with telling effect by the adherents of the "new deal". Today we have gathering in the Capital another such force, divided as before in two camps, one with the sanction of the administration, whose leaders are known communists, whose prime purpose is the overthrow of our Government and the advancement of Soviet Russia. The other group, who cling to American ideals, are not admitted to the councils at the other end of the Avenue unless they affiliate themselves with Levine, the red leader, but instead are told that they can only remain 24 hours, after which they will presumably be removed by the police. In the meantime Congress has given the President authority to expand the currency, which he will likely do. I voted against that authority. Is it not strange that those men who urged the payment of the adjusted-service certificates with that kind of money 12 months ago are today silent; they now say they have no desire to "throw a monkey wrench in the machinery." It is evident, therefore, that their purpose last year was to throw a monkey wrench in the machinery of the Republican Party and not that of aiding the veteran.

I have today received letters from veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War whose disabilities are of unquestioned service origin who have received notice that they were either to be seriously cut in the amount of compensation they receive or removed from the rolls completely. One, a World War veteran, who had received a total permanent award together with insurance payments, is now advised that he is 25 percent permanently disabled and will receive $20 per month. Another, a Spanish-American War veteran, who was awarded a pension at a time when service connection was required, had been advised that his pension will be discontinued.

These two cases are similar to thousands of others being reported to the Members of this House; they indicate the spirit of justice and mercy that the administration is imbued with in reviewing the cases of disabled veterans. To me such action is convincing evidence that every Member of Congress who voted to grant these autocratic powers to the President were misled by the leaders of this House when they assured us as spokesmen for the administration that such things would not occur. I have always felt that there was plenty of room for economy in our Federal structure, even to the extent of the appropriations for veterans' activities, but certainly did not imagine for one minute that we would deny those who suffer from disabilities incurred in the war-time service a just rate of compensation.

I note in this morning's paper that the President expects to allay the drastic results of his regulations. It is evident that he failed to grasp the import of them when issued. Are we to experiment with human lives? Are we to create human misery? It is said that Congress will adjourn within the next 3 or 4 weeks—the President desires it. Shall we pull down the flag, without knowing what course the Ship of State will steer? It is time we pause and take our bearings, before the threatening storm obscures the landmarks and engulfs our craft.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I request that the Membership vote for this amendment which was drafted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and myself. At this particular time it would be a great hardship on the disabled veterans of America to abolish these regional offices. There are some 350,000 men who have been drawing disability allowance. These men, many of them, have service-connected cases before them. If these regional offices are abolished, you will find that it will be impossible for these men for months to come to be able to get any kind of hearing at all. The amendment is merely directory; it merely expresses the approval of Congress that for the present year we want to continue the regional offices so that every man, as I have said, whose disability would have permitted the right to go and have sufficient force to investigate and find out whether he has service-connected disability or not.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I cannot, for I have only 3 minutes. In these cases, and I have been in the hospitals from one end of the country to the other, I know of hundreds of cases of men drawing disability allowance who should have had service-connected disabilities. I have known men in my own county and State and elsewhere, who, under this rigorous policy that the law has placed upon them at this time, ought to have the opportunity to have the protection of this great Government thrown around them for their services in the past. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Texas for or against the amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. I am supporting the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for 3 minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and I should like to inquire the proper time to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's proposed amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It has no relation to the pending amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How many amendments are there pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is only one amendment pending.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand that there are several amendments to be offered to this paragraph, and I should like to know if the Member offering the amendment cannot have a minute or two to explain it?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Texas concludes, the Chair will have all the amendments read for information.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in the State of Texas there are 2 regional offices, 1 at San Antonio in the southwestern portion of the State and the other at Dallas, they being nearly 300 miles apart.

The San Antonio office has jurisdiction of the cases of veterans living in about a third of the counties in my district, and the Dallas office has jurisdiction of the cases of the veterans living in the remaining counties of my district.

Ever since the close of the war practically all of the veterans in my district have gotten me to handle their cases. This handling had to be done either with the regional office at San Antonio or the regional office at Dallas. When Congress was not in session, and I could be at home in Abilene, I could handle their cases with dispatch. But Congress is in session much of the time, and my official duties have required me to be here in Washington, about 2,000 miles from my constituents, much of the time. At first, when I would be in Washington, veterans would call on me to help them file application for compensation or for hospitalization, and it would take 4 days for their letter to come from my district to Washington, and then it would take 4 more days for my letter to the regional office at San Antonio or Dallas to get the application blank and other data sent them; and frequently it was necessary for them to write me back and forth before completing their application and proof, and then it would take 4 more days for them to send the completed papers to me, and 4 more days for me to send the completed papers back to Dallas or San Antonio, and sooner or later in most of the cases I finally would have to take them up with the Administration in Washington before they reached a conclusion. This back-and-forth process of coming 2,000 miles from my district to Washington and mailing back 2,000 miles from Washington to my district caused such interminable delays that I was forced to establish an office in Abilene, open the year round, so that veterans could be aided in preparing their various kinds of cases.

I rented two rooms in Abilene devoted exclusively to official business at a cost to me out of my own funds of $600 per year, and out of my own funds I went to the expense of furnishing and equipping it, and I keep there the year round a secretary to help veterans prepare their applications for compensation, insurance, hospitalization, and all other relief authorized by law, furnishing to them free notary service wholly without charge. My Texas office helps them get up all of their proof, obtaining certified copies of certificates of marriage, certificates of birth, decrees of divorce, certificates of death, physicians' certificates of examination and treatment, military records, hospital records, and various affidavits of every kind, nature and description from witnesses scattered all over the United States, and some even from foreign countries, to make for them the proof required by the administration. If I had not gone to that trouble and expense, their cases could not have been handled with dispatch, and they would have suffered delays which in instances meant life and death to them.

I have maintained at my own expense this contact office in Texas not only to benefit the veterans of the World War but also to render service to the veterans of the Spanish-American War, and of the Indian Wars and Ranger service performed on the early frontiers.

In Hon. Read Johnson, regional manager of the Dallas office, we have an able, efficient, worthy, and patriotic official, warmly sympathetic with the disabilities and problems of all veterans; but I have found that many veterans are wholly dissatisfied with the action taken by regional offices, and they insist constantly that they may have the privilege of having their cases reviewed by the administration at Washington. I have had many veterans to appeal to me saying, "For God's sake take my case away from the regional office and get it to Washington." And ultimately many of the cases have to be reviewed in Washington, necessitating much duplication, much expense, and much dissatisfaction.

In many instances when veterans apply for immediate hospitalization, when the need is serious and urgent, it is necessary for the regional office to get instructions and permission from Washington before the veteran can be admitted to a hospital.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not the time, otherwise I would gladly yield to my friend.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry that I have not the time, otherwise I would gladly yield to my friend from North Carolina. I am not sure that veterans have been benefited by having regional offices. I am not sure that the veterans themselves are satisfied altogether with the services given them by regional offices. If it were left to the vote of the veterans themselves, I am not sure that they would want the regional offices continued. It is problematical. After all, we are the ones who handle the cases for them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me? I yielded to him yesterday.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I always yield to my very distinguished colleague, the esteemed gentlewoman from Massachusetts. I could not refuse her request.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman spend some of his time in Texas? Does he not want to handle cases in the Texas office when he is in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, but when the Texas office does not do as they want it to do, I finally have to have them reviewed in Washington. Ultimately we all have to have many cases handled by Washington, and ultimately the final decision is made in Washington. This is a duplication of effort, and is a duplication of expense, and in many instances is most unsatisfactory to the veterans themselves.

However, regardless of whether the regional offices are beneficial or not, today's press brings us a message from the White House assuring us that these regional offices will not be abolished. President Roosevelt is going to have his administration retain them, hence we need not worry here about any fear of having them abolished. They are not going to be abolished. And since this is the only bill that appropriates money for veterans, we must pass it. If we do not pass it, there will be no money for hospitals, or for compensation, or for pensions. It is suggested that the bill be recommitted back to the committee. That means no bill. That means to kill it. That means no funds for veterans or for hospitals. Unless we pass this bill before we adjourn, there will be no help whatever for any veterans after the first day of July.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] to offer an amendment for information.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL: Page 46, line 15, after the colon, insert "Provided further, That the appropriations herein carried for maintaining hospital services under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available, not to exceed $5,000, for experimental purposes to determine the value of certain types of treatment."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment inserts in the present bill a provision that is carried in the current appropriation act for the independent offices, except that it reduces the amount from $15,000 to $5,000. This requires no increase in the appropriation of moneys provided in this bill, but simply makes available out of that money—that is, the money that is provided for hospitalization and medical care—a fund of $5,000, and not to exceed $5,000, for the treatment of certain diseases in an experimental way, being intended in particular for the treatment of Buerger's disease. This same appropriation in a larger amount is carried in the current appropriation act for the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. If I may supplement what the gentleman says, this merely permits the Veterans' Administration to use as much of its appropriation as it may deem necessary, not to exceed $5,000, for certain types of treatment, and is aimed particularly at treatment being given to some veterans at Soap Lake, Wash.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. An authorization that has been carried in this bill heretofore and was originally put in by our former colleague, Dr. Summers. So far as the committee is concerned, we have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], chairman of the subcommittee, I offer my amendment and yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to support the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL]. This amendment provides a $5,000 appropriation for treatment of veterans for Buerger's disease at Soap Lake, Wash., which is in the Fourth District, which I represent.

Last year the appropriation was $15,000. We have reduced that to $5,000.

Of all the casualties of the World War, I believe none is more pathetic than the veteran who is afflicted with what is known as Buerger's disease, which means a slow death, literally inch by inch; and I think inasmuch as we have appropriated here $50,000 to dig up the bones of old, prehistoric animals, we can at least appropriate $5,000 to save the bones of living veterans who offered to make the supreme sacrifice in the World War.

The cases at Soap Lake are pitiable. They have sought relief everywhere else in vain. The suffering is so intense that it drives them almost to insanity. Amputations are frequent, and eventually result in complete loss of the limbs. At Soap Lake they have secured relief, with hope of ultimate recovery.

In one case a wife writes for extension of appropriation as they have purchased a home, expecting to spend his remaining days there. He has secured relief there, and she begs that he be not sent back to the saw and knife.

One who has been greatly benefited flew recently from Soap Lake to Washington, D.C., to present his case before General Hines. His comrades furnished the funds. General Hines, I am informed, was impressed by the improved condition of this veteran to the extent of promising continued experiments if appropriation was made by Congress.

Affidavits from all these veterans attesting to the remedial effects secured at this place and by these treatments are on file in our offices and at the Veterans' Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER] to offer an amendment for information.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHOEMAKER to the amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Strike out "$85,273,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$110,538,514."

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to see any cut made. I have been around veterans' hospitals, and I know the situation. In fact, just a week before I came down here, I came out of a veterans' hospital at Fort Snelling. We are talking about saving these regional hospitals. I have here newspaper clippings from Minneapolis and St. Paul, showing that 86 doctors, dentists, and nurses have been left off up there and put out of their work. Not only that, but 300 more are slated to go up there, and they are figuring on boarding up that hospital. I know that for years it has been almost impossible for the veterans to get into that hospital. I have hundreds of them who are clamoring to get into that hospital, and who are in dire need of hospitalization. I feel this should not be cut at all, and for that reason my amendment calls for the original appropriation we had in the last year, bringing it back up to where we can take care of these people, these people that are sick and need attention. I hope that at least we will be able to do something for the sick soldiers. It is bad enough to take a lot of compensation from those who do not happen to be as sick as some who need hospitalization and cannot get it. I am opposed to further placing the burden of taxation upon our local taxpayers and further taking it off the large-income-tax dodger who supports the National Economy League. That is why I submit the amendment under discussion and why I shall support it. And I trust that this House will at least try to offset some of the damage that was brought about through the passage of the so-called "economy bill." Why take more crutches away from crippled soldiers? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There are reasons why the regional offices ought to be maintained to a certain extent to carry on the functions that have been carried on. A very large number of them can be carried on at a great deal less expense than they have in the past, and a large number of them can be consolidated with hospital activities in the different places. Frankly, we had an appropriation of about $110,000,000 laid out for this year. I do not believe that with the 15-percent cut, taking into consideration the operating expenses, and the way they probably will be cut, with the reduction in those who will be entitled to admission to hospitals, we will require nearly as much money as we did before. The President has control of this situation, and it does not make any difference how much money we carry. Only such money will be used as he feels is necessary to run the hospitals on the basis of the regulations that he proposes.

He has it figured up what will be required. I do not see why we should give more money than he has requested on the basis of what he figures he is going to do.

Another thing, this does not take effect until July 1, and it is possible with the appropriation, the way it stands in the bill, to carry along beyond such time as may be necessary to complete the adjudication of those cases, where no consolidation with a hospital can take place in the district. I really believe we ought not to crowd on to the President more money than he has asked for.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. My understanding is that in asking for only $34,000,000 the Veterans' Administration had to eliminate a large sum of money that it really needed for the proper care of veterans in the hospitals.

Mr. TABER. That is not what General Hines told us.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will send to the Veterans' Administration he will find it to be true that if $8,000,000 is spent for the regional offices, a very drastic cut must be made in the care of the veterans. Yesterday the President stated he would keep them open. This was done after vigorous protests against their closing had been made by many of us. Legion Post No. 87, of Lowell, Mass., made a very strong protest. We must take care of the TB cases and other sick veterans. We do not want them to die for lack of proper care, as they easily can. The responsibility clearly belongs to the President to take humane care of the veterans. Congress gave him the power to do so. He has stated only recently that he will liberalize the very drastic regulations. It is our responsibility to see that money is appropriated for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. The bill carries $77,000,000 for this purpose and not $34,000,000. The cut in this appropriation is $34,- 000,000. The 15 percent salary cut would account for half of this and the balance is accounted for in reductions in hospital and administration expenses. I do not believe that any needed activity will suffer from the defeat of this amendment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman is correct. I did not mean to say $34,000,000, as I know that is the amount cut in the appropriation. The amount of the appropriation is approximately $77,000,000—

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no Member of this House in my desire to go 100 percent in enforcing and maintaining economy in this Nation, but when we go so far as to pass legislation in this body which effects the lives, the future, and welfare of the men who were wounded, injured, and suffered in defense of our country in the World War, I say we must call a halt. Therefore I propose to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] in respect to the regional offices in connection with this bill.

We ourselves are under a solemn obligation, not only in the interest of our own districts, of our own States, and of our own Nation, to do everything that is legally and morally possible to further economy in this Nation, but we are also under an equally persuasive obligation to see to it that the men who protected the integrity of this Nation in the World War shall not be left behind. We talk about a new deal. Let us have a square deal, an honest deal, and let us do our part to enable this administration to do what it is ready to do in a statement reported in today's papers as coming direct from the White House, to wit:

By reason of the burden incident to rerating, and in order that undue hardship will not be imposed upon veterans in their application for adjudication of their cases, regional offices of the Veterans' Administration will not be closed as has been reported, except where it has been clearly demonstrated that regional facilities are not necessary.

It is not contemplated that Government hospitals will be closed pending a careful, studious survey of the entire hospital situation. This, of necessity, will require considerable time.

These conclusions are in line with the President's original statement that the regulations and schedules would be drafted so as to effect the most humane possible treatment of veterans purely disabled in war service.

Let us give the administration an opportunity to say that the Congress, the voice of the people, does not desire to have these regional offices closed, and in keeping them open we will be doing our share toward rendering our thanks for the deeds of valor, bravery, patriotism, and honor by those who fought and bled and were ready to give their very lives for us in the great World War.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] has expired.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I think the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, in answer to an inquiry by the able gentleman from Kansas, expressed a very wise thought. The gentleman said that this was an opportunity for us at least to let those in authority, and the people on the outside, know how Congress feels about this all-important matter.

I voted for the economy bill, and I have been prepared, and am prepared, without apology, to go down this uncertain path with the leader of my party and the leader of our country; but I think we have a very definite chance today, and perhaps the last chance, to give this expression of opinion, referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

In this morning's paper we were advised there was to be some change in the method of procedure, and we who know of the bleeding hearts of those who are threatened with suffering because of the regulations originally announced are very hopeful, as a result of what was said in the press this morning, that the soldiers themselves will be given a chance to be heard in connection with how the matter will be handled from this time on. Those high in authority have had the benefit of the opinion of the cold, practical side. Those who were maimed in war and robbed of whatever romance there may be in war have yet to be heard officially, and I do not think anyone here would deny them a chance to be heard now.

I have the same great faith in President Roosevelt that I had as I voted with him in his economy efforts. I am satisfied he would burn at the stake rather than sacrifice his fixed opinions; but before his opinion is finally and fully formed I hope the heads of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, and the Veterans of the Spanish-American War, as well as the Legion head, may get a chance to present their side of the case. I do not think this great leader of ours will permit his group of supporters in this Congress to go around with bowed head and a crushed conscience. I know he will bring about a correction. I hope we may continue the faith we have, the patience that we need, and give him the chance that is so necessary to rectify the mistakes that have been made, and to keep faith with the defenders of the Nation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to announce that the time has been limited. Twenty-five minutes have been consumed. The Chair arbitrarily reduced the time to 3 minutes for each speaker. There are only 5 minutes remaining.

Five Members have not had an opportunity to speak, but the Chair feels the Chair should recognize the chairman of the committee to close the debate.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, that I may submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WOODRUM. I should like to finish, but I yield.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, no member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has had an opportunity to be heard. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] and myself have both asked for time. We are the ranking members on the floor.

I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] and myself be allowed to speak for 2½ minutes each.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think if this extension is granted these gentlemen that the same length of time should be granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe if the request were modified so as to permit each Member who has an amendment pending on the desk the same amount of time, there would be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the chairman of the subcommittee accept as a compromise a request that these gentlemen and those who have amendments pending at the desk be allowed to proceed for 1 minute each? It has not been possible for the Chair to recognize five Members who have sent amendments to the desk.

Mr. WOODRUM. I make that request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that each Member who has an amendment pending at the desk be allowed to proceed for 1 minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, thousands of veterans in every State have received notice that they are going to be cut off the 1st of July. They received notice at the same time that as soon as possible after that date they would have an opportunity to refile their cases and make an effort to prove service connection, if possible. It would be an absolute physical impossibility for all these veterans to come to Washington to present their evidence after filing their claims anew. To require them to do so would bring about a condition of utter chaos and confusion.

It is essential, therefore, that the regional offices be continued so that the men can get to the regional offices to renew their claims and so field workers can go out from regional offices and contact the men when necessary.

The regional offices should not be cut off, and this expression from the legislative branch providing funds so that regional offices can be retained will, I feel, be information which our Chief Executive will welcome. I am in entire agreement with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] who has offered this amendment, and I sincerely trust it will be adopted as an expression of sentiment in this House in favor of the retention of these regional offices in our respective States. I am naturally especially concerned about the one located in my own State, at Birmingham, Ala. I hope the amendment will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, some years ago Congress appropriated $3,000,000 to eradicate the fruit fly from the orange groves of Florida.

They spent $25,000 to preserve order at Harding's inauguration.

They spent $5,000 to hang Coolidge's picture in one of these galleries.

They granted $50,000,000 for Muscle Shoals.

They gave $500,000,000 lavishly for relief.

Now comes the beseeching veteran and says, "Please give us $8,000,000 so we can keep the regional offices open."

The question is whether their demand and their beseechings will fall on deaf ears or be given the same consideration that was given to some of the material and commercial things for which we have literally broadcast and scattered millions of dollars—yes, billions of dollars. This is identified with a humane cause. The answer lies with the Membership of the body.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, the reason the amount of increase was fixed at $8,000,000 in the amendment was because at a recent conference of officials of the American Legion at Indianapolis it was estimated it would cost about $8,000,000 to maintain the regional offices. I have offered the same amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

If the regional offices are closed, about 2,000,000 cases will be returned to Washington for revision and adjudication.

The Federal Government is about to stop the compensation and allowances of thousands of veterans and is about to substantially reduce compensation and allowance to thousands of others. These men will naturally ask for hearings. If they cannot go to their local regional offices and present their cases, the right of hearing will effectually be denied them. These men are going to realize that their court of appeal has been removed from them, for most of them will not have the money to pay the expenses of a trip to Washington, and we will have taken away the right of appeal from these men who wore the uniform of their country.

If we abolish the regional offices and thus in effect deny a day in court to the veteran who was wounded in the service of his country, you will certainly be doing him a grave injustice.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and I trust it will be adopted by the Committee. I am opposed to the closing of the regional offices of the Veterans' Bureau because there is no economy in it. It will increase the cost to the Government. We could just as well have closed these regional offices a year after the World War as we can now. When we passed the economy bill, with its revolutionary revision of rates, when the Veterans' Administration issued regulations affecting some 2,000,000 cases, and when the President of the United States, in a reported statement emanating from the White House last night, signified his willingness to review these cases, the work of these regional offices increased, and they will be more necessary now than at any time within the past 10 years.

This is the wrong time to close these offices. Such a reduction would strike with undue severity the poor veteran who, either because he cannot afford to come to Washington or because his case is not in a favored class, will have to pay his own way if he desires to have his case heard. Economy, efficiency, and fairness will result in the adoption of this amendment.

We may close these offices sometime, but this is surely the wrong time. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I disagree with my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] as to the efficiency of the Washington office and the regional offices.

The Washington office has always been nothing but a rubber stamp, anyway. All your appeal boards down here you might as well throw out the window. The veteran gets nothing in Washington. Whatever little he does get he gets from the regional offices. They should be retained, if the veteran is to get anything at all.

I hope the McCormack amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, as has just been stated, if there ever was a time when we needed these regional offices, it is now.

The President has stated, according to the press, that there have been some grave injustices done under his order, and as the days go by many more will be discovered by him. If the regional offices are not retained, where these men can have a hearing, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, who states that he has an office established there now, he will need 2 or 3 more of them if he has to do this work.

I think these offices ought to be retained, and I do believe that if they are retained much of the injustice that has been done to many of the soldiers, as we see it now, will be corrected by the regional offices without having to have it done here.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I am supporting the McCormack amendment and hope it will be adopted. The chairman of the committee made the statement yesterday that more than 10,000 are now drawing compensation who did not join the Army until after the armistice was signed. It may be true that many are on the rolls who do not deserve to be there. Many civilians who have ample finances have received free hospital treatment. These abuses are going to be corrected. But we are now dealing with the sick and disabled, and I am going to do everything in my power to see to it that they get just and fair treatment. Some of the rules and regulations promulgated by the Veterans' Bureau cannot be defended. I am happy to see by the Associated Press today that the President says that the cut in service-connected cases was deeper than intended. He assures us that justice will be done in every case, and I have implicit faith in him always doing the right and fair thing.

I am opposed to closing the regional offices. I have personal knowledge of the fine work they have done. The main office in my part of the country is at Albuquerque, with a branch office in my city of El Paso. I have made vigorous protest against closing the El Paso office. They have handled several thousand cases. It should not be forgotten that hundreds of veterans have gone to the high, dry climate of the Southwest, suffering from tuberculosis. Many of them are bed-ridden. That is a country of great distances. Many of the men are physically unable to personally look after their claims. The representatives of the regional office have gone out in the field when the men could not come to the office and have rendered valuable assistance. They should not have to write Washington and suffer long delays in order to get their claims adjusted. There is no economy in it, because extra men will be required here if the district offices are closed. All doubts should be resolved in favor of the sick and disabled. I am for economy and am supporting the President's program, but let us be sure in dealing with sick veterans that justice is done.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 seconds.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that if we do not keep these regional offices open, every Member of Congress is going to be a regional office after they are closed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the undivided attention of the Committee. The debate for the last 30 minutes demonstrates pretty clearly how far we can go when we allow sometimes our zeal and our feelings to overshadow our better judgment.

Now, I know how deeply interested Members of Congress feel in this matter of the regional offices, and the debate here has been practically unanimous that they are to be kept open.

The interesting part of it is that the President has already said that they are going to be kept open, because yesterday the national commander of the American Legion came to Washington, saw the President, and the morning press carried an article which I am sure most of the Members of Congress have read. I want to read it to you. It is as follows:

The White House announced last night that economies to be effected through reduction of payments to veterans for service-connected disabilities would be reviewed with a view to making the cuts less severe.

A statement issued by Stephen T. Early, Secretary to the President, said:

"As a result of conferences between the President, the national commander of the American Legion, Louis Johnson, and the Director of the Budget, the following conclusions have been reached:

"As a result of the application of the veterans' regulations, it now seems that the cut in compensation of service-connected World War veterans with specific injuries has been deeper than originally intended. The regulations and schedules in this respect will therefore be reviewed so as to effect more equitable levels of payment. Careful study also will be made of the other regulations and their effects.

"REGIONAL OFFICES SAVED

"By reason of the burden incident to rerating and in order that undue hardship will not be imposed upon veterans in their application for adjudication of their cases, regional offices of the Veterans' Administration will not be closed, as has been reported, except where it has been clearly demonstrated that regional facilities are not necessary.

"It is not contemplated that Government hospitals will be closed pending a careful, studious survey of the entire hospital situation. This of necessity will require considerable time.

"These conclusions are in line with the President's original statement that the regulations and schedules would be drafted so as to effect the most humane possible treatment of veterans purely disabled in war service."

I hold in my hand a statement by the Director of the Budget and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, made at the request of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, stating that it is not necessary to increase the funds in this appropriation bill on account of the regional offices:

MAY 11, 1933.

HON. JAMES P. BUCHANAN,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BUCHANAN: Having reference to the statement appearing in the newspapers this morning with respect to the veterans' regulations, I enclose a letter from General Hines which states that no increase will be necessary in the present estimates of appropriation. With this conclusion I agree.

Very truly yours,

L. W. DOUGLAS, Director.

MAY 11, 1933.

MR. LEWIS W. DOUGLAS,

Director Bureau of the Budget, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGLAS: Reference is made to the press release issued by the White House on May 10, 1933, concerning the regulations promulgated under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress.

The policies outlined in the release are those which have been in effect since the President signed these regulations, as is indicated in the last paragraph of the release.

Insofar as reduction of compensation in service-connected cases is concerned, the Veterans' Administration from the date of issuance of the regulations, in accordance with the instructions of the President, has been studying the effects of the new rating schedule and will continue to do so on the basis of reports being received as to its application in individual cases. When estimates were made and submitted covering this item, allowance for any necessary adjustments as might be required was included.

As to the closing of regional offices and hospitals, the release outlines the policy which is being followed.

I can see no necessity, by reason of the above-referred-to release, for increasing the amounts now contained in the independent offices appropriation bill which is now pending before the House of Representatives.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Now, gentlemen, I plead with you here today to trust the President in formulating and promulgating his regulations. It has been demonstrated that the President is going to take a reasonable view of the matter in response to the interview with the commander of the Legion and that he is not going to close these offices.

It does not do any good to put money in the bill if he does not want to use it. There is sufficient money provided for the regional offices. Let us give the President a chance; let us give him an opportunity to work it out, because I say to you again what I said when we adopted the economy bill, that I am willing to trust the President to give the veteran a square deal. Some cuts may seem drastic, and many of them will no doubt be reviewed and changed.

I ask you to give the President a fair chance to work this thing out under the regulations he has formulated.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman ought to have made this speech before we began this debate.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. In the report that was made in explaining the reduction of $34,000,000, it was stated that it was on the ground that there would be a curtailment of hospitalization, and among other measures adopted the abolishment of the regional offices. How can the gentleman say that if all the regional offices are to be retained?

Mr. WOODRUM. If we do not have money enough to keep the offices open for the year, we can make an additional appropriation when we come here in January.

Mr. BULWINKLE. You have enough money appropriated—you do not reduce the amount going to the hospitals.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, no; we are not going to reduce anything because of keeping these offices open. The gentleman knows that we will be back here in January.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, last evening the national commander, Mr. Johnson, had a conversation with the President, and issued a statement with reference to the Veterans' Act. I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the proceedings at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. The national commander of the American Legion is the man who came out the day after the economy bill was passed and told soldiers to be patriotic. I do not propose to have him get any national publicity after double crossing the veterans. [Applause.] I object.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. Of course I am defenseless in the presence of a request coming from the charming lady from Massachusetts, but I think we have had liberal debate on this matter and after the lady is through I shall object to any further requests.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I have been promised one half minute on this, and I want at least a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that after the lady from Massachusetts has finished her remarks, he may proffer a unanimous-consent request, if he so desires.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I was at the Veterans' Administration this morning and was told that there was enough money in the $77,000,000 to keep all of the regional offices, but that if $8,000,000 were used for that purpose, that amount must be taken away from hospital and other needed expenditures for veterans' care. I am stating a fact. We shall need the additional $8,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the lady to the letter which the Veterans' Administration wrote to me in which it is stated they did have the money.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; but General Hines did not state that he would have all he needed for hospital care of the men if that $8,000,000 were used for regional offices. At the hearings they told the gentleman that the money must come either out of the hospitals and other activities or the regional offices. I talked with General

Hines, and that is what I was told. We need the $8,000,000 carried in the amendment. The paragraph on this section in the committee's own report of this independent offices appropriation bill clearly shows the need for this additional amount. The report reads as follows:

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: The appropriation under this heading has been reduced from $111,273,634 to $77,273,000, a cut of $34,000,634. The reduction is accounted for partly by the additional 6½ percent salary cut, and partly by curtailment of hospitalization resulting from the President's Executive order made pursuant to the act to maintain the credit of the United States. Among other measures which will be adopted to bring about the reduction it is intended to abolish all the regional offices.

I pray that the President will liberalize his extremely severe regulations. Before the regulations went into effect I asked him to be liberal. I realize the terribly difficult task that he has. I also know that he asked us to give him the power to regulate veterans' benefits. He had repeatedly said he wanted justice for the veterans. General Hines has been very bitterly attacked by these regulations. Have those attacks been fair? If something is done in your office or in my office by one of our office force that is wrong, is it not our responsibility? Until the Congress takes away the authority it gave to the President the responsibility belongs to him if the rules are unjust and to see that justice is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GRAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRAY. I rise to let the Chairman comply with his agreement with me to grant me a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the Committee for 1 minute, notwithstanding the fact that he was promised a half minute. The Chair hopes the Committee will grant this request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, I am not now and never have been in sympathy with that part of the economy program providing for the reduction or scaling down of wages or the reduction of pensions and disability allowances, the whole of which is being used and is necessary for wage earners and pensioners to live.

It is now the unanimously adopted, universally agreed, and the determination, conclusion, and judgment of all economic students and political economists that the depression has resulted and is being prolonged by a continued failure and destruction of the buying and consuming power of the masses of the people, brought about by a sudden fall of values, the price level, and the wage scale, and such cause has been found and determined by Congress and the administration and the remedy agreed and entered upon.

Regardless of the merits of existing pensions and disability allowances, and regardless of the wage scales, with the food and clothing commodity prices rising and where all earnings and income are being used and are insufficient or barely sufficient to provide the necessities of life and for the bare comforts and conveniences required for existence, reduction of such wages or disability allowances is an economic error which will intensify and aggravate the condition under which the people are suffering.

Everything I say here or I am trying to express regarding wages and wage earners I want to apply with equal force to pensions and the common soldier. And everything I say here regarding pensions and adjusted disability allowances awarded to the common soldiers is equally applicable to wages and wage earners.

It is an economic error to reduce wages and adjusted disability allowances before bringing a restoration of employment, an opportunity otherwise to provide the means to live. It is an economic error to reduce wages and disability allowances without and before restoring earnings, wages, and income necessary and required by men for their support and the support of those who by nature are dependent upon them.

It is more than an economic error to take from men the only means and income to live and leave them to suffer the stigma and humiliation of public or private charity.

It is more than an economic error to take from wage earners and the common soldier classes any part of their wages or income required to live and to provide for their families while wealth is left reveling in luxury and splendor with their surplus incomes untouched. It is a political and social misconception and oversight. It is a step without realization of the condition of the masses, without appreciation of the temper and mind of those suffering, in want and distress, in the midst of plenty and great abundance.

It is a false, hazardous, fatal maneuver to take from the thousands of men, women, and children their last means and substance and leave them standing before great mountains of food perishing for want of use, begging for labor, hungry and famished; leave them standing shivering before great mountain storehouses of clothing and raiment depreciating in waste, while they suffer cold and exposure.

It is more than an economic error, more than a political, social oversight, misconception, or hazard. It is a policy jeopardizing civil order. It is not only opening the door but is driving men on, goading them in desperate strain to take a stand in defiance and at bay, to maintain their right to live.

It will be vain and useless to counsel, advise, and urge private employers to raise wages and thereby restore buying and consuming power and inspire confidence in the policy urged, while we are reducing wages and disability allowances to soldiers, and thereby destroying the buying and consuming power by positive force of law among a great mass and multitude of people. Certainly we will lose the moral force of our advice and recommendation urged upon private employers if we deliberately follow a contrary rule to be observed with public employees and the holders of adjusted disabilities and pensions.

It is the desire and nature of all men to conserve peace and order and tranquillity under which to live and rear their children. It is their ambition to pay and meet their obligations as they mature and maintain themselves in loyalty and patriotism in obedience to the law and the support of their government and the existing order of things established by custom and usage in the course of life.

But the natural impulse of men to live, to provide for themselves and those who by nature are dependent upon them, is a higher and more controlling impulse in men than to pay taxes, meet their obligations, or even to abide by the law. The impulse to live is a higher and more controlling impulse in men than to observe peace and order. And when men are compelled to choose between the impulse to live and the obligation to pay taxes and observe the laws of the land they will choose to act under the natural impulse to live. By taking away from men the means to live and provide for those and theirs we will be driving men to choose and act under the higher and more controlling impulse of nature, the impulse of men to live.

With the farmers of 17 States already declaring for a farm holiday; with 14,000,000 people unemployed, living on half or insufficient rations, in enforced idleness, in a land of plenty and great abundance; with soldiers returning from the battlefield, where they breathed the fatal breaths of gas, bared their breasts to steel, the mowing machine guns, to give property its worth and value and make secure liberty and human rights, now marching in rags and tattered raiment, hungry, without shelter, begging at the door of industry and of those whose property they gave value and worth for a bare living sustenance; with laboring men organized and united, demanding without recognition their share of the fruits of their toil and labor; with a movement looking to the organization uniting all these common labor, toiling factions to make common cause for their right to live upon the earth and enjoy the fruits of their toil—surely there is a failure of a proper appreciation of conditions and of the state of the wavering mind and the tense impulse induced by want and suffering and distress in the midst of plenty and great abundance.

There are many flagrant abuses of the pension system which must be remedied, eradicated, and cured in the interest of the honest and deserving soldiers and to save the pension system from discredit and the pensioners from disrepute and suffering a revolt from the overburdened tax-paying public. But even these abuses and these unjustifiable pensions should not be summarily adjusted, reduced, or cut off and the pensioners, long led to rely upon this source of income, left without means or sufficient opportunity for employment to provide for themselves and their families the vital necessities of life.

We are now to realize a rise of values and the price level, which will automatically increase the cost of living, and which calls for readjustments on a higher level of wages, pensions, and disability allowances, and which rise of values and the price level I have long favored and now favor as the only way for economic recovery and a restoration of normal prosperity. When conservative values and price level have been reached, as they must be reached and stabilized, then wages, pensions, and adjusted disability allowances must be promptly readjusted to a higher level of values and commodity prices. Before that time comes no fair or equitable readjustment can be made.

Balancing the Budget is flaunted as a prosperity measure to restoring the earnings and income of the people. It has no such a relation either as farm or industrial relief. The Budget must be balanced, not because it will restore prosperity to the people but because the honor, dignity, and credit of the Government must be upheld and maintained before the people and the nations of the world. The people are left with less after the Budget is balanced than before, and with a policy of reducing wages and soldiers' adjusted compensation to balance the Budget, they are reduced by both withholding and taking from them.

But the Government's Budget is not the only budget to be balanced and kept balanced. The wage earners and the common soldiers have a budget to be balanced, not only to maintain their honor and credit before their fellow men but to provide the vital necessities for themselves and those who by nature are dependent upon them and look to them for support and maintenance.

The Federal Budget is largely balanced from imposed taxes and excise duties levied upon the vital necessities of life and more largely used, consumed, and paid by the masses of the people than the certain special few, owning and controlling 80 percent of the wealth of the country and taking a like amount of the national income. Certainly, any further taking necessary to balance the Budget ought to be taken from the owners of the 80 percent of the property and the takers of a like amount of the national income, instead of withholding from the owners of the 20 percent of the property and from those taking a meager part of such income.

I voted for the economy measure in approval of many provisions and with mental reservations, passive resistance, and in disapproval of some provisions. I voted for the economy measure first, because there was no opportunity allowed to separate what I approved of from what I disapproved of. And second, I voted for the economy measure because I felt and realized it my solemn and imperative duty to maintain the united support and solidarity of the new administration before the country, then facing a crisis, to maintain peace, order, and stable government before the wavering public mind. And I would so vote again under like conditions and facing the same emergency. But no such conditions are here to be met. This is a separate, independent measure. Solidarity of action upon this one section of the bill is not imperative to sustain governmental prestige before the country.

I shall vote to recommit this bill back to the committee for deliberate, regular, and orderly consideration to maintain existing wages, and adjust disability allowances until opportunity for employment, wages, and income and the consuming power of the masses shall have been restored.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on these amendments may have permission to extend their remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote comes upon the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SHOEMAKER to the amendment of Mr. McCORMACK: Strike out "$85,273,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$110,538,514."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the McCORMACK amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 44, line 6, strike out in line 6 the figures "$77,273,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$85,273,000: Provided, That not to exceed $8,000,000 of this amount shall be available for all expenses and maintenance of all regional offices of the Veterans' Administration."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 140, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL: Page 46, line 15, after the colon, insert: "Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for medical and hospital services under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available, not to exceed $5,000, for experimental purposes to determine the value of certain types of treatment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pensions: For the payment of pensions, gratuities, and allowances, now authorized under any act of Congress or regulation of the President based thereon, or which may hereafter be authorized, including emergency officers' retirement pay and annuities, the administration of which is now or may hereafter be placed in the Veterans' Administration, $231,730,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose, and the amount so expended shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. LEMKE. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEMKE: Page 48, line 10, after the word "Administration", strike out "$231,730,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$331,730,000."

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, in considering the appropriations in this bill a great deal has been said in regard to our national defense; we are told that we should subsidize the merchant marine, because they are a part of our national defense, but little has been said of the real national defense—the veterans of this Nation. Without soldiers, sailors, and marines there can be no defense; without them warships, submarines, and airplanes will stand still and cannons, machine guns, and rifles remain silent. Therefore, I am interested in the veterans—in the human side, in the human flesh and blood of our national defense. I witnessed several hundred of our beragged, tired, hungry, disheartened veterans with the flag of this Nation, marching by the House Office Building yesterday with policemen directing them off the Capitol Grounds, and I cannot help but think of the difference when these boys proudly marched forth to defend this Nation's honor and future glory, how we lauded and praised them then, and what miserable and contemptible treatment we have given them since and are giving them now.

While these boys went forth, willing to give their lives and their limbs for this Nation, many of the stay-at-homes wrapped the flag of glory around them and grabbed everything in sight. They made millions and billions out of the blood, the tears, and the agony of an agonized world. During the war we made 17,000 new millionaires and a few billionaires. We paid common labor as high as $8 and $10 a day and ordinary skilled labor as high as $20 to $100 a day. But when these boys returned and asked, not for a just compensation, but merely a few paltry dollars with which to get a start in life again, then we yelled that if they insisted upon that they would wreck the Nation; that the national credit and honor were at stake.

The treatment of our soldiers and veterans during the war and since the war is a national disgrace. Quoting from the Chicago Tribune of May 21, 1920:

Every soldier knows the training camps were located not for training purposes but to bring money to favored communities.

Every soldier knows that of the money not deliberately misspent, fully one half was wasted, because it was administered by miserable incompetents appointed for political advantage.

Every soldier knows what an infinitesimal fraction of war-time expenditures ever reached the battlefield.

Every soldier knows that both his comfort at the rear and his safety on the battlefield were sacrificed.

Every soldier knows that throughout the war his interest was sacrificed to that of the slacker and profiteer.

Every soldier knows that the only suggestion of national economy has been to economize at his expense.

The bill under consideration is, so far as the veterans are concerned, carrying out the provisions of the so-called "economy bill" which we passed so hurriedly at the opening of this session. It is carrying out the provisions of the international bankers' Economy League bill—that we passed without knowing what it contained, and relying upon misinformation—it is carrying out these provisions with a vengeance, so far as the disabled veterans are concerned. It is carrying out these provisions under the most cruel, brutal, and inhuman suggestions made by the Director of the Budget Bureau, a young man of 38, utterly devoid of human feeling.

If we do not check this mad young man in his insane desire to become a coupon clippers' hero, he will virtually strangle the disabled veterans and their widows and orphans. These veterans upheld the honor and the glory of this Nation in the filth, the mud, the slime, the blood, and the gas in the trenches of foreign battlefields. They pulled the chestnuts out of the fire for our international bankers, who gave credit in the form of war material, food, and clothing to the Allied Governments to the extent of billions of dollars before we entered the war. These international bankers had bet on the wrong horse over in Europe and were about to lose when this Nation took up the gage of battle to make the world safe for democracy. Now, these racketeers ask that the soldiers' pension and disability compensation be cut so that they will be sure that there will be enough money in the United States Treasury with which to pay the interest on the bonds they hold.

Frankly speaking, if we do not check the Director of the Budget Bureau, not only he but this splendid administration, this humane administration, will go down in history as giving the most barbarous, the most cruel treatment that any government ever gave to its defenders and its protectors. Let us not permit that cruel stain to be put upon our Government—upon our manhood and decency—as Members of this Congress. We passed the so-called "national economy bill" under misinformation. Let us now rise to the occasion and make partial amends by at least letting up on the persecution of the disabled veterans. Let us call and stay the hand of this cruel peace-time hero, who has deserted his comrades. Let us say to him, "You will not be permitted to make a name for yourself as an efficiency expert at the expense of the disabled veterans and their widows and orphans; you will not be permitted to put that stain upon the American people."

Chickens are coming home to roost. At the time that the so-called "economy bill" was up for consideration, the Wall Street racketeers, who saw here a chance to cut their income tax, saw to it that we were flooded with hundreds of telegrams asking us, in the sacred name of the credit and honor of this Nation, to pass the so-called "economy bill." The telegrams coming to us now bear a different message. They ask us to help save the disabled veterans and the widows and orphans of disabled veterans from becoming public charges; they ask us to help save their veterans' bureau, their veterans' hospital—begging for help they come, admitting that they have been misled, the same as this Congress.

Under these circumstances it is not too late for this Congress to correct its blunder. Let us have sufficient courage to amend this bill and to make sufficient appropriation to take care of the disabled veterans and of the orphans and widows of disabled veterans.

At the time that the economy bill was up, I suggested that so far as crucifying the veterans was concerned it was false economy. I suggested you could not bring back prosperity by adding to human misery. I suggested that we should practice economy where it ought to be practiced. I suggested that we should give the President authority to suspend the interest on the bonds of the United States for a period of 3 years. That would have put the burden of economy where it belonged—upon those who profited and made millions out of the blood, the misery, and the tears of an agonized world. We can still do this. Why not in this crisis, if this Nation's credit and honor are at stake, suspend the interest on these bonds?

In conclusion, permit me to ask you to stay the merciless hand of the Director of the Budget Bureau—the hand that would take pennies from dead men's eyes in no man's land, in the name of a false economy. This Nation owes a duty to the boys that so valiantly upheld its honor and its glory upon the foreign battlefields. Let us correct our blunders; let us liberalize our appropriation so that the President can liberalize the veterans' slashes.

The President, according to this morning's news, intends to liberalize these slashes of the veterans' disability compensation. I am with the President; I know he is sincere, and for that reason let us now give him enough money so that he can undo the wrong and the injustice that has already been done to many veterans. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in favor of the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to have 5 minutes. I do not believe we have been accorded our full time over here. We received only 1 minute on the other.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my request to make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If I get 5 minutes I will not object.

Mr. KVALE. Reserving the right to object, I want to merely make sure that it applies only to this paragraph.

Mr. WOODRUM. To this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as I understand it, would increase the amount of money for the relief of veterans suffering from service-connected disabilities in the sum of $150,000,000.

That amount is just about what would be needed to restore to those men with service-connected disabilities the amount they were receiving before this so-called "economy bill" was put into effect.

In other words, if this money were appropriated the President might make new regulations to restore the benefits that were previously paid to those men who were wounded in line of duty, those men who received service-connected disability.

At the time the economy bill was up for consideration we were told the President would be fair and just in the administration of that bill and in the making of regulations for the benefit of ex-service men. We were also told, at that time, that by enacting the so-called "economy bill" we would effect an economy or a saving of approximately $385,000,000 or $400,000,000. I do not wish to impugn any unfairness to the President of the United States, but I do want to say that any man who voted for the economy bill must have expected just exactly what we got, because we were told that if we passed the economy bill these reductions in benefits to ex-service men would come; and we got exactly what we were told we would get.

The estimates now are that we will save only $375,000,000 on compensation to veterans, plus $34,000,000 for hospital care, and $50,000,000 on the fund to retire the adjusted-service benefits. So that actually we have cut the ex-service men about $460,000,000. Thus, you got exactly what you voted for, and I hope no Member of this House will try to defend his vote on the economy bill by saying that the President promulgated regulations that were more drastic than he expected, because we were told exactly what was going to happen.

If you believe there should be some fairer treatment of veterans, if you believe that the regulations should be liberalized, there is only one way you can possibly show that you mean it, and that is by voting for this amendment or some such amendment, increasing the appropriation.

If you want the President to be fair, and the President stated that it is his intention to be fair, and I want to repeat I do not doubt the fairness of the President, I submit to you that if you expect to liberalize these regulations in line with the statement of the President recorded in the press this morning, you will vote for this amendment. You will be doing your duty by the President if you give him the money with which to restore the compensation to men suffering from service-connected disabilities instead of requiring him to ask Congress next January for a deficiency appropriation. That would not be fair to the people of the country.

The distinguished gentleman from West Virginia in closing his remarks a minute ago said, "Do not forget we are coming back here in January."

If we are coming back in January for a deficiency appropriation we are not being fair with the American people, for we told them we would not spend so much, yet we are spending more.

Let us be fair. The President said he intended to liberalize the rules. Back in your districts you would not say, "Yes; I favor returning compensation allowances to those men with service-connected disabilities." If there is a single man or woman in this House who would tell the soldier back home that he or she is against giving the former compensation for service-connected disabilities, I wish he or she would stand up; I would like to see such a person.

So vote for this increase and you will be fair not only to the veterans but to the people of the country and to the President. If you want the President to liberalize the regulations, give him the money so he can do it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think every Member should have definitely in mind the thing to which he gives approval when he votes for the $231,000,000 that is recited in the bill. The minute you approve that amount as a sequel to the economy bill here is what you are doing: You are letting word go out to the ex-service man who is 24 percent disabled and who has bared his breast to the shot and shell of the Argonne and Chateau-Thierry that he is worth only $8 per month. You are saying to the ex-service man who is 49 percent disabled that he is worth only $20 a month.

When you approve this amount you also approve the presumption that he was physically fit when he went into the Army, even though he may have had some physical defect and patriotic fervor made him enlist, conceal physical defects, and fight for his country.

You also place approval on the fact that the wife, the little child, the little son or daughter of a veteran who died from service-connected injuries is entitled to receive only $20 a month.

Now, ask yourself this question: Would you be willing to have your kids go out and fight the battles of life and get for themselves a primary and secondary education for $240 a year, or $20 per month, particularly after you had made the highest sacrifice for this Nation?

You can express your approval of such an attitude by approving the $231,000,000 in this bill.

Let me mention burial expenses. Seventy-five dollars is provided for funeral and burial expenses and transportation.

The boys who wrote the Executive order were so niggardly that they at first forgot to include the American flag to which the soldier is entitled.

Imagine a man who went into the Argonne, into Chateau-Thierry, or the St. Mihiel, and went through the mire of the shell holes and the rat-infested trenches with a bayonet fixed, crawling up behind a creeping barrage at 4 o'clock in the morning—and I was there—a man who fought for that flag, and yet they were so unmindful of his sacrifices that they forgot to give him the flag, and then went back and wrote it in the regulations. So out of great generosity they decided he could have a flag when he died so it could be placed over his casket.

They allowed $75 to transport him and bury him. If he has $75 to his credit in the Administration, the clammy, slithery hand of the Veterans' Administration will reach in and take away that last $75. It is in the Executive regulations.

This is the thing you are going to approve with the $231,000,000. Do not blame it on President Roosevelt. He does not know what is in the regulations. Blame it on the unsympathetic men who have operated the Veterans' Bureau all these years and who stand up coldly like a stone wall against the desires of the veterans, namely, General Hines and his corps down in the central office.

I just want you to know the thing you are going to approve when you approve the $231,000,000 in the bill as written.

A widow of a Spanish-American War soldier gets only $15. If she were the widow of a World War veteran, she would get $30. I wonder why the difference in widows. The surviving child of a Spanish-American War veteran gets $12 and the surviving child of a World War veteran gets $20. Why the difference of $8? Is there any difference in the children of those who fought for that flag, as a matter of fact?

Then, so far as medical care is concerned, for those who have service-connected disabilities, it provides that within the discretion of the Administrator in that big building down town he can provide it "as may be found necessary", but you put it in the hands of a man who has never shown any sympathy for the veterans, to determine whether or not they need such medical treatment.

If you want to approve all this sort of thing as a supplement to the economy bill, then vote for the $231,000,000. If you want to give the soldiers a square deal, if you want to lift them out of the stink and agony and sweat in which they are found on the highways and byways and in the hospitals of the country today, then I say to you you would better raise it to the amount carried in the amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the kind of argument just made by the eloquent and attractive gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is not the kind of argument that is really going to help the American veterans today. The gentleman knows, and I know he knows, because he is a man of intelligence as well as of eloquence, that it would not matter if you put $1,000,000,000 more in here. This would not give one red copper penny to any veteran, under the regulations, unless the President of the United States sought in his good judgment to change the regulations.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not right now, if you please.

I want to plead with you again to give the President of the United States an opportunity to see the effect of the regulations that he has promulgated, and may I remind you that they have not yet gone into effect except as to hospitalization and some few other things.

Mr. HOEPEL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not just now, if the gentleman will permit me to continue.

We have very present evidence of the fact that the President is not insensible to certain inequalities that may come into these regulations and that he is ready to counsel with accredited representatives of the veterans and to treat the veterans just and fair. And I say to you that it is not fair to him, and I want to make an appeal to my Democratic colleagues on this side of the aisle, because, after all, it is your particular duty and your particular responsibility.

The President of the United States has not asked you for any more money for these pensions. If they are to be liberalized, he will liberalize them and let us give him an opportunity to do it. If he needs more money, he will come to the Congress, through the Budget, and ask for it, and we will be ready to give it to him.

I may also say to the House that this report comes to you as the unanimous report of the Appropriations Committee of this House, and I want to say further, with great respect and admiration for my Republican colleagues on this committee, that they are ready to cooperate and ready to give the President of the United States an opportunity and a chance to work out this very great problem that is just as close to his heart as it is to the heart of any man who sits on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, it would be a vain thing to increase the amount of this appropriation. If these regulations show injustices to veterans, then I am ready to join with any Member of Congress as a delegation to wait upon the President and ask for their modification; and I think I know the American people well enough to know that if the President should refuse to lend ear to such an appeal, as I know he would not, this Congress can exercise its right to change the regulations by law. But I want to again plead with the House to give the President an opportunity to carry into effect these regulations and see the effect of them before we vainly add more money to this bill, which, as I have said, would not give one red copper penny to any veteran unless the regulations were changed.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

The question was taken; and on a division there were 63 ayes and 80 noes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LEMKE and Mr. WOODRUM as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 76 ayes and 119 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For military and naval insurance accruing during the fiscal year 1934 or in prior fiscal years, $123,000,000.

Hospital and domiciliary facilities: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat., p. 1550), $1,000,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. HOEPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, line 24, substitute a comma for the period after the word "expended", and add the following: "Provided, That the facilities of the Army, Navy, and Public Health Service are first utilized to full capacity where available."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is contrary to the regulations vested in the administration promulgated with authority given by Congress, which is now the law until Congress changes it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Adjusted-service certificate fund: For an amount necessary under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act (U.S.C., title 38, secs. 591-683; U.S.C., supp. VI, title 38, secs. 612-682), to provide for the payment of the face value of each adjusted-service certificate in 20 years from its date or on the prior death of the veteran, and to make loans to veterans and repayments to banks in accordance with section 507 of the act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 38, secs. 642, 647, 650; act July 21, 1932, 47 Stat., pp. 724-725), $50,000,000, to become available July 1, 1933, and remain available until expended.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I wish to address myself to the present status of veterans' legislation that we now have before us.

We are now considering the present status of veterans' legislation appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. We have been told by the chairman of the subcommittee that we are to deduct $460,000,634 in the operation alone of the Veterans' Administration, and $7,740,411 is deducted in the rest of the bill for all departments the appropriations cover in this measure.

You gentlemen remember how speedily the so-called "Economy Act" was rushed through, without being referred to the regular committee. It was referred to a special committee, every one of whom was known to be favorable to the bill. It was put through without Members of Congress having an opportunity to read the provisions of the bill. We went into a Democratic caucus, and after the caucus had debated the amendment, agreeing to a 25 percent reduction, in keeping with the Democratic platform—after we defeated the move to bind the Democrats to support the so-called "economy bill" in the caucus, the economy committee together with certain Democratic leaders rushed into the House and, under a gag rule, put the bill through.

HOW THE BILL WAS PUT OVER

The people of the country are entitled to know, especially the veterans of the country are entitled to know, how this piece of legislation was enacted into law.

THE PROPAGANDA OF THE NATIONAL ECONOMY LEAGUE AND THE UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

You are all familiar with the bitter campaign of propaganda carried on by the National Economy League and the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the Manufacturers' Association through the press, the magazines, and the radio, to poison the minds of the public against the rights of the disabled war veterans. Thousands of dollars have been spent in this ruthless campaign by these organizations to put over the program of the repeal of all veteran laws, all of which they have realized under this so-called "economy bill." And to think that such a program can be put over by a group of law violators themselves, such as the National Economy League who has been one of the chief leaders of this campaign of lies and misrepresentations carried on against the rights of the disabled veterans. The so-called "National Economy League" is now an outlaw organization and a violator of our corrupt practices act for they have failed and refused to file statements under its provisions, which would let the people of this country know how much it has cost big business to put over this so-called "economy bill" that has literally cut the throats of the disabled war veterans and their dependents.

The RECORD will show that a resolution was quickly adopted waiving all points of order against the bill and limiting debate to 2 hours, all of which time was placed in control of members of the so-called "Economy Committee." When the Democratic caucus was called there were not even any printed bills available for the Members to read and study, and the committee report on the bill was not available. The RECORD will show that very few minutes were given to those who opposed the bill. Very little opportunity was given to even speak upon it, and no amendments were permitted.

VETERANS AFFECTED

It affects the rights of more than a million disabled war veterans and their dependents. Many of us recognize the wrongs that were done under this method, under the rules and regulations promulgated by Director Hines and Mr. Douglas, and, according to the Stars and Stripes, this whole economy act and the rules and regulations thereunder has all been put over under the direction of Mr. Barney Baruch.

THE AMOUNT CUT

It seems that the veteran is to take a cut under this bill of $460,000,634, even more than the $400,000,000 it was said they would be cut when the bill was before the House.

When Director Hines was before the Senate Finance Committee, March 10, the matter was carefully gone into in the limited time of two hours and a half hearing. Two men were before the committee, Director Hines and Budget Director Douglas. The statement is made and itemized on page 40 of this confidential Executive session hearing, in which it was proposed that $383,530,000 was to be deducted from the veterans. Mr. Chairman, I trust the membership of the House will carefully study the revised itemized account, contained in these hearings, as to how these sums of money have been deducted from the different war veterans and their dependents.

It is futile to try to amend this bill, as has been well stated, because after all, it is the so-called "economy law" that has done the damage, and under it the President has enacted his rules and regulations carrying into effect the $460,000,000 cut to the veterans. What other cuts have we made? What other sacrifices have been made other than those placed on the veterans and the Federal employees? Hundreds of thousands of men have been let out of the Government service. Many departments have been consolidated, and what has been done toward taxing the wealth of this country? Wall Street is now receiving a bonus in interest paid them on tax-exempt Government bonds of more than $725,000,000 annually, and this is the group that put over this so-called "economy bill." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 49, line 5, after the word "in", strike out "twenty" and insert "one"; and in line 6, strike out the word "years", and insert the word "year"; and in line 10, strike out "$50,000,000", and insert "$2,400,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, of course the amendment is subject to the point of order and I make the point of order. It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TRUAX. I desire to be heard on the point of order. My amendment, Mr. Chairman, merely changes the time of payment from 20 years to 1 year. It merely changes the amount of the appropriation from $50,000,000 to $2,400,000,000 to pay the soldiers now. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, we authorized the President of the United States to expand the currency by $3,000,000,000. There is no better place for that new currency than to pay these soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman kindly confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to do so. As I stated before, the only way in which this bill is changed is to make this payable in 1 year instead of 20 and change the amount from $50,000,000 to $2,400,000,000 to pay the soldiers' bonus now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The existing law would be materially changed if this amendment were adopted. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. No part of the appropriations contained in this act or prior appropriation acts shall be used to pay any increase in the salary of any officer or employee of the United States Government by reason of the reallocation of the position of such officer or employee to a higher grade since June 30, 1932, by the Personnel Classification Board or the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM: On page 52, line 8, strike out the word "since" and insert "after"; on page 52, line 9, after the word "commission", insert the following: "and salaries paid accordingly shall be payment in full."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, all amendments to the bill from this point on are prevented, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the balance of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I concur in that request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. SHANNON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask in open session that the committee offer an amendment to strike out section 12. That section is a clear violation of the rule as to an appropriation bill offering legislation which disturbs existing law. I ask the committee to offer that amendment. I ask in open session that the committee do that and not commit this Congress to a piece of petty larceny such as this is.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, the gentleman knows perfectly well that I have no authority—

Mr. SHANNON. Oh, the gentleman's committee has authority. This is taking $150,000 from a lot of boys.

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee cannot agree to the amendment. That will settle that matter very quickly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that, according to the terms of the resolution, no amendment could be offered to this section of the bill unless the amendment came from the committee.

Mr. SHANNON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHANNON. I would like to have the rule read that bars me from offering this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the rule.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

No amendment shall be in order to sections 4 to 17, inclusive, except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. MEAD. Reserving the right to object, under the rule no amendments are permissible, and I am not going to offer any objection on that point, but there are a number of irregularities that should be corrected. I am wondering if the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would not allow at least 10 minutes' discussion after this particular part of the bill is read. For example, men who were called upon to work from the 1st to the 10th of July and were then denied their retirement, are denied repayment of that retirement in this bill. Then again, this bill reduces the compensation of injured workmen. I do not believe that was the intention of the committee. It, evidently, is an oversight. I think if the record could be corrected, at least the Senate could straighten it out.

The regular order was demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. This resolution was passed by the House, and the House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would not have authority to grant the gentleman's request.

Mr. MEAD. Except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Not even by unanimous consent in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

The remainder of the bill is as follows:

Sec. 5. Title II of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, to the extent that it provides for the impoundment of appropriations shall not operate to require such impoundment under appropriations contained in this act.

Sec. 6. Whenever it shall appear to the President, in respect of any contract entered into by the United States prior to the date of enactment of this act for the transportation of persons and/or things, that the full performance of such contract is not required in the public interest, and that modification or cancellation of such contract will result in substantial savings to the United States, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, on or before April 30, 1935, to modify or cancel such contract. Whenever the President shall modify or cancel any such contract, he shall determine just compensation therefor; and if the amount thereof, so determined by the President, is unsatisfactory to the individual, firm, or corporation entitled to receive the same, such individual, firm, or corporation shall be entitled to receive such portion thereof as the President shall determine and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said portion so received, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided for by paragraph 20 of section 41 and section 250 of title 28 of the United States Code: Provided, That where any such contract makes provision for settlement in the event of modification or cancellation, the amount of just compensation as determined hereunder shall not exceed such amount as is authorized by said contract. Any appropriation out of which payments upon the said contract were authorized to be made is hereby made available for the payment of such just compensation.

Sec. 7. Whenever the President, after investigation, shall find that the charge or charges established by or in accordance with existing law for any service rendered or article sold by any executive department, commission, or other executive agency of the United States is less than the cost of such service or thing determined by the President in accordance with sound principles of accounting, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, by Executive order to increase such charge or charges in such amount as he may determine will return to the Government the cost of such service. The authority granted to the President to order increases in charges hereunder shall cease upon the expiration of 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act.

Sec. 8. (a) Whenever at any time hereafter prior to July 1, 1935, any employee of the United States or the District of Columbia to whom the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930 (U.S.C., title 5, ch. 14), applies, who has an aggregate period of service of at least 30 years computed as prescribed in section 5 of such act, is involuntarily separated from the service for reasons other than his misconduct, such employee shall be entitled to an annuity computed as provided in section 4 of such act, payable from the Civil Service retirement and disability fund, less a sum equal to 3½ percent of such annuity: Provided, That when an annuitant hereunder attains the age which would have been the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service applicable to such annuitant had he continued in the service to such retirement age, such deduction from the annuity shall cease. If and when any such annuitant shall be reemployed in the service of the District of Columbia or the United States (including any corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States), the right to the annuity provided by this section shall cease, and the subsequent annuity rights of such person shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of retirement law existing at the time of the subsequent separation of such person from the service.

(b) In making reductions of personnel due regard shall be given to the apportionment of appointments as provided in the Civil Service Act.

Sec. 9. (a) Until July 1, 1934, in cases in which the number of officers and employees in any particular service is in excess of the number necessary for the requirements of such service, the heads of the several executive departments and independent establishments of the United States Government and the municipal government of the District of Columbia, respectively, are hereby authorized to furlough, without pay, any officers and employees carried on their respective rolls for such periods as in their judgment may be necessary to distribute, as far as practicable, employment on the available work in such service among all the officers and employees of such service in rotation: Provided, That no employee under the classified Civil Service shall be furloughed under the provisions of this section for a total of more than 90 days during the fiscal year 1934 except after full and complete compliance with all the provisions of the Civil Service laws and regulations relating to reductions in personnel. Rules and regulations shall be promulgated by the President with a view to securing uniform action by the heads of the various executive departments and independent Government establishments in the application of the provisions of this section. The provisions of this section relating to furloughs shall not apply to carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service, but the President is authorized to suspend or to reduce for the duration of the fiscal year 1934 the allowance paid to such carriers for equipment maintenance.

(b) Section 216 of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933, and such section as continued and amended for the fiscal year 1934, are hereby repealed.

Sec. 10. The President is authorized to place on furlough such officers of the Army, Marine Corps, Public Health Service, Coast Guard, or Coast and Geodetic Survey, as he, in his discretion, shall deem desirable. While on furlough, officers shall receive one half the pay to which they would otherwise have been entitled, but shall not be entitled to any allowance except for travel to their homes.

SEC. 11. The President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend the extra pay or reduce the rate of extra pay allowed to commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard while on flying duty, and to distinguish between degrees of hazard in various types of flying duty and make different rates of extra pay applicable thereto: Provided, That no such rate shall be in excess of $1,440 per annum.

SEC. 12. So much of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat. 285), as is contained in the proviso at the end of section 1057, title 34, United States Code, is hereby amended by repealing the words "and 1 year's sea pay", so that the said proviso will read as follows: "Provided, That if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointments shall be given a certificate of graduation and an honorable discharge."

SEC. 13. From the date of the approval of this act and until July 1, 1934, the compensation of all officers and employees of the insular possessions of the United States which is now fixed by acts of Congress and which is not subject to reduction under the provisions of title II of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, is hereby reduced 15 percent: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as applying to officers whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office.

SEC. 14. For the period of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, remaining after the date of the enactment of this act and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the retired pay of judges (whose compensation, prior to retirement or resignation, could not, under the Constitution, have been diminished) is reduced by 15 percent.

SEC. 15. The compensation authorized by sections 3, 4, and 10 of the act of September 7, 1916, as amended, accruing during the fiscal year 1934, shall be reduced below the amounts prescribed by the said act by the same percentage as that prescribed for the reduction of compensation of officers and employees under section 3 of title II of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933: Provided further, That the monthly pay as defined in section 40 of the act of September 7, 1916, shall be determined without regard to the temporary reductions in pay required by the act of March 20, 1933: Provided further, That the funds made available for the purposes of the act entitled "An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes", approved March 31, 1933, shall be available for the payment of compensation for injuries as required by section 3 of said act, but such payment shall be made through the Employees' Compensation Commission.

SEC. 16. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, every pension payable under any private relief act, not subject to the provisions of sections 1 and 17 of title I of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, shall, irrespective of the provisions of section 18 of title I of such act, be reduced by the same percentage as that prescribed for the reduction of compensation of officers and employees under section 3 of title II of said act.

SEC. 17. This act hereafter may be referred to as the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, under the rule, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. BULWINKLE, the Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. McCLELLIC, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BULWINKLE). Under the special rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the McCormack amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 44, line 6, strike out "$77,273,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$85,273,000: Provided, That not to exceed $8,000,000 of this amount shall be available for all expenses and maintenance of all regional offices of the Veterans' Administration."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York, a member of the committee, is recognized to offer a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, upon this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. When we vote to recommit, we do not vote against the cancellation of contracts on air mail, do we?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 255, not voting 60, as follows:

 Mr. Kemp with Mr. Smith of West Virginia.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the House should adjourn now, would the first order of business tomorrow be the vote on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This would be the unfinished business and therefore the first order of business tomorrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KLOEB, for Monday and Tuesday, May 15 and 16, on account of important business.

FARM MORTGAGES

Mrs. JENCKES. Mr. Speaker, I have just been successful in stopping the foreclosure of an Indiana farm mortgage. I propose at a later date to tell more of the farm-mortgage situation in Indiana, but I rise now to ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by inserting therein the brief that I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES. Mr. Speaker, I have just been successful in preventing the foreclosure of a mortgage on an Indiana farm, and I propose to address the House on this subject at a later date. I now ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by inserting a short brief on the unfair conditions surrounding certain farm mortgages held by our Federal land banks.

The brief is as follows:

On April 28, 1933, Mr. Samuel L. DeMars, a citizen of Lebanon, Ind., telegraphed Representative VIRGINIA E. JENCKES, advising that the Connersville (Ind.) National Farm Loan Association, C. E. Brookbank, secretary-treasurer, had recommended foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage on his 177-acre farm on account of the removal of some timber of little or no value. The Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky., Mr. A. G. Brown, vice president, approved this action, notwithstanding the fact that the loan was not delinquent, and also notwithstanding that Mr. DeMars has owned the farm for 6 years.

Upon receipt of the telegram from Mr. DeMars, Representative JENCKES personally called upon Mr. Paul Bestor, president of the Federal land bank, Washington, D.C., and requested that he issue the necessary orders to hold up the foreclosure until she could make an impartial investigation. Mr. Bestor immediately communicated with Mr. Brown, and the foreclosure was held up. The Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky., advised Representative JENCKES by telegram that the reason for the foreclosure was that Mr. DeMars had cut some timber from the farm and that the farm was "grossly neglected", and that while the loan was not delinquent the foreclosure was warranted. Representative JENCKES immediately telegraphed the Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky., to hold up the foreclosure until she could make a fair and impartial investigation, as it had been brought to her attention officially.

Mrs. JENCKES' investigation developed the following information, which is supported by affidavits on file in Mrs. JENCKES' office:

(1) A sworn statement over the signature of Mr. Alonzo P. Faulkinbury, real-estate dealer, of Boone County, Ind., as follows: "That he has been engaged in the buying and selling of real estate for the past 10 years and that he has visited the farm of Mr. Samuel L. DeMars in Posey Township, Franklin County, Ind., and that he has observed the timber growing thereon, and that he believes the timber growing on the farm 2 years ago was second-growth timber; that the farm is a rough farm not suitable for a grain farm; but that the same, when properly cleared, will be suitable for a stock farm, and that the second-growth timber would be worth very little if anything on the market, and that the removal of the timber would injure the value of the farm very little or none."

(2) A sworn statement by Mr. Cleo F. Green, of Boone County, Ind., who is the present tenant: "That he saw and inspected the farm after Mr. DeMars acquired it, and that the farm and improvements in general today are in at least twice as good condition as they were upon first inspection."

(3) A sworn statement by Mr. Elmon L. Walker, of Boone County, Ind., "that he has been engaged in buying and selling timber for 10 years and that he has examined the farm of Samuel L. DeMars, and that all of the timber is of little or no value to the farm; that the farm is not injured by the removal of the second-growth white poplar therefrom; and that the farm is worth as much without the timber as with it."

(4) A sworn statement by Mr. Cris Witmer, of Boone County, Ind., as follows: "That the farm is worth as much or more without the timber growing thereon, and that there are no evidences of the farm's being neglected."

(5) A sworn statement of Mr. Thomas A. Grant, 906 North West Street, Lebanon, Ind.: "He is familiar with the farm, has examined the farm on three different occasions; that the farm has not been neglected, and that the farm is in better condition now than when Mr. Samuel L. DeMars first obtained title to it, and that the timber cut has no cash value, and that valuable improvements have been made to the farm."

(6) A statement by Mr. Elza O. Rogers, a prominent member of the Indiana bar, of Lebanon, Ind., advises "that Mr. Samuel L. DeMars is a very high grade citizen; he is engaged in the grocery business in Lebanon, Ind., and expected to have this farm for his old age."

On May 9, 1933, Representative JENCKES filed certified copies of these affidavits with Mr. Paul Bestor, president of the Federal Land Bank of Washington, D.C., with the request that he direct the Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky., to immediately terminate all foreclosure proceedings in the DeMars loan and to accept any settlement Mr. DeMars might care to make, if any.

Representative JENCKES also requested President Bestor to advise her immediately if the Federal Land Bank of Louisville refused to do this, in order that Mrs. JENCKES might ask for a congressional investigation of this loan and all other loans of a similar character where farmers were subject to the loss of their farms for unreasonable conditions.

Here is a case of where an Indiana farmer was threatened with the loss of his farm due to incomplete investigation on the part of the Federal land-bank agencies. This is contrary to the "new deal" promised farmers, and as an Indiana farmer, as well as a Member of Congress, I am prepared to ask the Congress and President Roosevelt to intervene to prevent such unfair foreclosures.

Mrs. VIRGINIA ELLIS JENCKES,
Member of Congress.

WICHITA NATIONAL FOREST AND GAME PRESERVE IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an excerpt from a Government bulletin giving information on the Wichita National Forest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to state that the director of the forest camps now being established under the Reforestation Act recently passed by Congress has today announced the designation of one camp of 200 men for a period of 6 months to be located soon in the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve in Oklahoma. I have just returned from the White House where the President signed the order establishing the camp in this area. The purpose of this camp is not only for forestation, but included also in the program are some important flood-control and erosion projects; several lakes, ponds, and earthen basins are to be constructed on this reservation of more than 61,000 acres and, when the entire project is completed, it will convert this national forest, already picturesque and beautiful with its trickling streams and shady nooks, mountains and lakes, into a veritable paradise.

The announcement today of a forest camp in the Wichitamas marks a new era in the development of that region, and generations yet unborn will rise up and bless those who are responsible and who have been leading the fight in Oklahoma for governmental participation in a real, comprehensive, and constructive program on this reservation.

I wish it were possible to name all of those who have been outstanding in this great movement, but time does not permit. Let me say in passing that to the Izaak Walton League of Oklahoma goes the lion's share of the praise. My lamented friend, the late Judge Burford, of Oklahoma City, was one of the originators of this movement and made several trips to Washington in an effort to convince what then seemed to be an unfriendly Forest Service of the practicability and public demand for lake improvement in the Wichitamas.

I have in mind many other gentlemen who have been patient but enthusiastic in an endeavor to secure adequate consideration by the Government for this important project. I wish I could name them all. In passing I think it is only fair to say, however, that both of our distinguished United States Senators from Oklahoma, as well as the entire delegation in Congress from our State, have cooperated in this undertaking in a wonderful way.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that soon after my first election to Congress I began urging what was then known as the "Izaak Walton League program" in the Wichita Mountains. At first the Forest Service did not look with favor on the projects, but later was induced to send a representative to Oklahoma to make a survey of the situation, and we were given assurance by a representative of the Forest Service that at least a large part of our program would be recommended to Congress. Because of the economic conditions, however, the promised recommendation never materialized.

When the President's reforestation program was presented to Congress our delegation from Oklahoma supported it to a man, not because we believed that our State would secure a great amount of benefit under its provisions but because of our desire to stand by the President and help him in his unselfish desire to put 250,000 idle men to work.

The Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve, however, fits into the President's program in every particular. The projects proposed in the Wichitamas come clearly under the provisions of the act. Although the Forest Service has been very reluctant to give the Wichitamas any consideration until now, let me say that the local forester, Harry French, has been enthusiastic and helpful in support of a construction program. I am glad to say it is largely because of his recommendation that I am enabled to announce that the untiring efforts of those sponsoring this program have finally culminated in a successful conclusion.

Let me say that in this area the citizens of the city of Lawton, Cache, Indianola, Okla., and surrounding cities, towns, and communities have cooperated in this great undertaking. For example, the progressive citizens of Lawton, believing that native rock could be used in construction work and that concrete dams are unnecessary for holding water, especially in the smaller lakes, put in an experimental project in that area a few years ago with rubble masonry, known as "Lost Lake." The dam was constructed some 35 feet in height, and although several feet of water runs over it at flood stages it has shown no signs of weakness, although for years it has held up under the pressure of 35 acres of water.

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that last year more than 300,000 people visited the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve, showing clearly that the public is vitally interested in this oasis that God has placed in the center of our almost treeless plains.

The realization of this dream that many of us have had for several years will when accomplished convert the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve into one of the real beauty spots of the great Southwest.

The following quotations are taken from Miscellaneous Circular No. 36, issued by the Forestry Service, and will, I believe, be of especial interest to the public. It is not only interesting but authentic information:

LOCATION

The Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve is a tract of 61,500 acres, embracing the major portion of the Wichita Mountains in southwestern Oklahoma, the entire area lying within Comanche County. It is 117 miles southwest of Oklahoma City and 60 miles north of Wichita Falls, Tex., on the Quanah branch of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway. The Ozark Trail, a transcontinental automobile highway, leading from St. Louis to Amarillo, Tex., where it intersects the Santa Fe Trail, passes 4 miles south of the forest boundary at Cache, Okla. The Meridian Highway, a north-and-south through route, comes within 6 miles to the west. The city of Lawton, Okla., is 16 miles southwest, and the Fort Sill Military Reservation (50,000 acres) adjoins the national forest on the east.

HISTORY

Southwestern Oklahoma is rich in historical interest. Between 1850 and 1860 Generals Sheridan, McClellan, and Scott campaigned in the Wichita Mountains and the surrounding prairies against the Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Indians. Geronimo, famous Apache chief, was held a prisoner at Fort Sill for some 25 years, until his death in 1911. Quanah Parker, last chief of the Comanches, made his home immediately south of the present boundary of the Wichita National Forest for 40 years prior to his death on February 23, 1911.

TREE GROWTH

When compared with the bountiful hardwood forests of the Appalachians, the pineries of the South, or the magnificent timber of the Pacific Northwest, the somewhat scrubby and scattered white-oak groves of the Wichita National Forest seem insignificant. Nevertheless, when one considers the hundreds of square miles of almost treeless prairies which stretch away beyond the range of vision on all sides from the Wichita Mountains, these shady groves, sheltering springs of sparkling mountain water and affording delightful resting places for relief from the heat of the plains, assume an importance both economic and esthetic.

TREE PLANTING

About 15 years ago six plantations were started on the forest. These are designated as Cedar Creek planting, Panther Creek planting, Elm Springs planting, Pleasant Valley planting, Reck planting, and Baker Peak planting. Native juniper, Osage-orange, black locust and honeylocust, black walnut, and mulberry were planted. Some of the plantations have been very successful and are among the show spots of the forest. The juniper and Osage-orange plantations known as Cedar Creek planting and Elm Springs planting are almost perfect stands with forest conditions completely established.

These planted groves serve as excellent refuges for birds and game and have justified themselves from that standpoint alone. A more extensive program of planting is being considered on the basis of economic as well as wild-life value.

WILD LIFE

Knowing that the newly established Wichita Game Preserve embraced some of the best grazing grounds of what was once the great southern herd of American buffalo, it occurred to Dr. William T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park, that an opportunity had been created for the founding of a Government bison herd under exceptionally favorable conditions.

In view of the light snowfall in Oklahoma, and the fact that millions of buffalo had previously inhabited the plains of Oklahoma and Texas all the year round, subsisting by grazing, it seemed evident that it would be entirely possible for buffalo to maintain themselves on the Wichita National Forest in the same way. Since no species of large quadrupeds can be bred and perpetuated in the confinement of zoological parks and gardens, even where the enclosures are as large as those of the one in New York, it was believed that the only way to insure perpetuation of the buffalo would be through the creation of herds maintained by the Government on large areas of grazing grounds.

The grazing grounds are practically surrounded by several high round-topped or rock-capped hills, and cliffs and ridges of red granite. Heavy growths of blackjack oak cover most of the slopes, and near the bases of the elevations blackjack and post-oak groves extend down into the level country for a quarter of a mile. In several portions of the forest there are trees 60 feet in height. The mountains, hills, and timber together afford abundant shelter for the buffalo from the fiercest storms of winter.

VALUE FOR RECREATION

Situated just aside from a main transcontinental highway, in the center of a vast open-prairie country and yet within easy reach of populous sections of the Southwest, the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve is rapidly becoming a public recreation center of great value. The Forest Service recognizes that public recreation is an important national-forest resource. It invites the public to come, use, and enjoy the forests and places no restrictions upon such use or enjoyment except the ordinary common-sense requirements as to sanitation and care with fire.

The area lying to the south of the scenic highway, known as the "Lost Lake and Camp Boulder region", is dedicated to recreational use. Six choice areas have been designated as public camp grounds and are being made more convenient and enjoyable as rapidly as funds are provided to finance the necessary sanitation, water supply, and playground improvements. The use of these areas is free to all.

SCENERY

In scenic value the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve ranks high among the national forests of the country. Geologists affirm that the Wichita Mountains are the oldest mountain range in continental United States, and even to the untrained or unscientific eye their appearance seems to bear out this assertion. Disintegration is far advanced, and the countless strange and interesting formations, coupled with indescribably beautiful colorings resulting from the play of the elements upon the crumbling rocks, yield scenic effects at once unique and of compelling attractiveness. The forested groves are cherished by the local people; they grant you that the Wichita National Forest and Game Preserve is the property of all the people, but in their eyes it particularly belongs to their part of Oklahoma and the sense of prideful ownership is strong.

No matter how much one enjoys the beauty of the Wichita Range in general, the buffalo, elk, deer, and antelope, the birds, the trees and flowers, the hours in the campfire's friendly circle, no visit to this national forest is complete without a jaunt to Boulder Canyon, where West Cache Creek breaks through the mountains into the open plain. Here the forces of nature have combined to create a Garden of the Gods in miniature. The towering canyon walls, the rugged peaks, the jumble of massive boulders, and the delicate and ever-changing colors are profoundly impressive. And with it all there is the crystal stream, edged by wooded and grass-carpeted parks—ideal camping grounds where thousands whose homes and workshops are in the cities or on the prairies may and do find rest and the joy of life close to nature in her most pleasing moods and aspects.

REGIONAL OFFICES, UNITED STATES VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a telegram from Dr. George J. Lawrence, commander American Legion, Department of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following telegram received by me from Dr. George J. Lawrence, commander American Legion, Department of New York:

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 26, 1933.

HON. ELMER E. STUDLEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.:

American Legion here in New York State registers strenuous opposition to proposal of committee handling veterans' appropriations which would eliminate all Veterans' Administration regional offices and discharge 6,000 employees. Under such an arrangement a grave injustice would be done to the disabled veteran, both from the viewpoint of adjudicating his claim and the hospitalization phase. I cannot urge too strongly that you oppose that move. May I hear from you?

DR. GEORGE J. LAWRENCE,

Commander American Legion, Department of New York, 305 Hall of Records, New York City.

MY PROTEST AGAINST THE UNJUST TREATMENT OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE IN GERMANY BY ADOLPH HITLER

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a protest against the unjust treatment of the Jews in Germany by Hitler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor to protest against the brutal and unwarranted treatment of the nationals of Jewish extraction in Germany by Adolph Hitler.

Our forefathers fled from oppression to New England. We from that section especially sympathize with any persecuted race. Our heritage demands that a protest be made. Some will say that we should not interfere with the private affairs of the German people or with the internal affairs of that country. We must take note of such unjust and inhuman treatment as has been dealt out in Germany of late.

This race, so renowned for its ancient culture, its love of peace and simple living, has been persecuted for 30 centuries. The Jewish people have been driven from land to land, until they have become wanderers seeking a haven of rest and contentment in a world which does not hesitate to profit by their standards of culture and their example of loyalty to family and home.

America is deeply indebted to more than 300,000 young Jewish men who responded to the call to arms in 1917 and 1918. Their relatives are being subjected to this unwarranted treatment in Germany today. They are being driven from their homes. They are being forced to abandon their trades and professions without recourse to trial or law. They ask for nothing but simple justice—an opportunity to pursue the even tenor of their ways.

Under the Versailles Peace Treaty they were promised protection with other German minorities. They were granted all civil and political rights enjoyed by German nationals. They have the right to expect that these promises will be fulfilled.

Is it little wonder that these oppressed people look to America for help? When we recall the early history of our own Nation we must expect the eyes of the less fortunate to be turned toward us for help. The action of the Hitler regime is so contrary to our ideas of justice and good government that we cannot at first comprehend the severity and cruelty of it all.

The Hitler order is directed against such renowned men as Albert Einstein, the scientist; Richard Willstätter, the chemist; Max Liebermann, the painter; and Jacob Wassermann, the novelist. Even their books and scientific researches are being burned in Germany today. It may be jealousy. It may be vindictiveness. Whatever it is, it is wrong. It is an outrage against a peaceful, home-loving people.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader if he could tell us what the program is going to be tomorrow outside of the pending vote?

Mr. BYRNS. There are several rules on the calendar which will be in order, provided they are called up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman from Tennessee does not know what they are?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee should give us full information, he would be compelled to say that some of them are good and some of them are bad. I can say that; but, as our majority leader, he cannot thus prognosticate.

Mr. BYRNS. I am not passing judgment on any of them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is just telling us what the order of business will be. He is not indicating any preference.

Mr. BYRNS. There are several rules on the calendar.

One is a resolution by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler], and relates to the investigation of bankruptcies.

Mr. CELLER. The investigation is to be made by the Judiciary Committee of the House and not by a special committee.

Mr. BYRNS. Then there is the Sirovich resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That provides for an investigation of the moving-picture industry.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. Then there is one that will be offered in a moment relating to the suspension of mining assessments in the West. I do not know whether there is any other rule or not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is a discharge rule, but I do not suppose that will come up tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNS. I was not aware of that, and that could not come up tomorrow under the rule anyway.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report from that committee for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar:

House Resolution 138

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 7, an act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

NOVEL WAY FARMERS BENEFIT BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION AID

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one half minute.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us on what subject?

Mr. PATMAN. I want to ask unanimous consent to put something in the Record and I want to describe what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Members of Congress and all the people are interested in any plan that will assist farm families in bettering their condition and especially any plan that will better enable these families to produce their living at home by preserving and canning the wonderful fruits, vegetables, and meats grown on the farm. We are also interested in knowing how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation money can be used to the very best advantage. The county in Texas where I was born and reared has recently benefited so greatly by the farmers working for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for $1 a day building plants and turning the money back for steam-pressure cookers, preparing themselves to live at home and have cotton for a cash crop, I believe the plan is interesting from a national standpoint; its publicity will probably cause the people of other counties to adopt similar methods.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement about this work that was prepared by Mr. Victor H. Schoffelmayer, of Dallas, Tex.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long is the description?

Mr. PATMAN. I assure the gentleman it is not lengthy. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY VICTOR H. SCHOFFELMAYER, AGRICULTURAL EDITOR OF THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS, DALLAS, TEX.

Cass County recently established a high-water mark when within 1 week its business men, farmers, extension forces, and vocational agriculture teachers distributed 100 steam-pressure cookers, mostly of the hotel size, and their complement of sealers to communities in 85 school districts out of a total of 102 in the county. This achievement was made possible because of the teamwork among the forces of such towns as Atlanta, Linden, Marietta, Hughes Springs, and Avinger, all backing a common program, in which the work of Miss Willie Terrell, home demonstration agent; M. C. Jaynes, county agent; George D. Holland, secretary of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and teacher of vocational agriculture in the high school; and F. B. Sullivan, occupying a similar position at Linden, stands out foremost.

There are many more men to mention, such as T. R. Richey, chairman of the county committee for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; E. W. King, president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce; A. O. Brabham, president of the Atlanta Rotary Club, which played host to the 300 persons who attended the distribution day celebration; and others.

FINANCE IDEA IS NOVEL

The distinctive feature of the Cass County canning program is this:

Funds for the purchase of the canning equipment were provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation committee after Mr. Holland, Mr. Jaynes, and others had worked out a method by which each community desiring to install a community canning plant received the sum of $45. This money was actually paid to farmers in each community as a wage of $1 a day, allowing 45 days for a man to erect a community canning house of native pine logs or other home material.

This wage of $45 in turn was paid back by farmers to a central committee, which was empowered to buy the steam-pressure cookers and sealers in such volume as to insure savings. Without the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds it would have been largely impossible for the various communities to have raised the necessary money. Furthermore, without a central community canning plant the communities could not have been mobilized as a whole to share in the benefits of such food canning.

Now that the equipment has been distributed, Cass County will launch the greatest food preservation campaign in its history, which is expected to exceed greatly the 650,000 cans and glass jars of home-raised food put up by the farm women last year.

PRELIMINARY SPEAKING TOUR

In order to arouse the remotest community in Cass County, Mr. Jaynes and his cooperators got 65 business men and bankers from Cass and adjoining counties to take part in a whirlwind speaking campaign at every schoolhouse at night meetings for a month previous to the final placing of the canning equipment. The best of spirit prevailed at all times. The eastern side of Cass County was worked under direction of Mr. Holland, and Mr. Sullivan had charge of the central districts. The home demonstration agent and county agent worked all parts of Cass County, but concentrated on the western side. These forces carried the message of the need for providing an adequate home food supply in every community and thus become absolutely independent of Red Cross and Reconstruction Finance Corporation aid next winter.

A total of 6,792 persons attended the community meetings of which 3,000 were adults. From Marion County John Ericson, veteran county agent, came to aid in the campaign. The Texas & Pacific Railway lent its agricultural agent, Cy M. Evans. From Marshall came Bryan Bialock, former manager of the chamber of commerce there, and T. B. Cameron. Roy W. Snyder, meat specialist of the extension service, gave demonstrations how to prepare home-killed meat for canning. Women specialists assisted Miss Terrell in teaching the farm women leaders of each community so that they could not only lead in canning and preserving their own food, but could carry the knowledge into the nearby communities. In this way the work became cumulative in scope.

BUILD PINE LOG HOUSES

Soon the sound of razor-edged axes through the wooded hills of Cass County and community canning plants of glistening barked pine logs took shape. These were 20 by 24 feet and 8 feet high each, fitted with a furnace of ironstone native to the county. Also, there were built-in benches and tables along the walls of each community house. Those erected in sections outside of the piney woods used commercial saw timber and native stone. The log buildings were properly chinked with mud to make them tight. In a few weeks the earliest garden vegetables and products of the fields will be put up in these plants, with each community setting aside days for members to do their canning in group action.

Mr. Holland completed the arrangements for purchase of the 100 canners and sealers, which cost roughly around $4,000. Two different makes were bought.

COMMUNITIES HAVE THEIR DAYS

Toward the end of April the different communities took part in the various distribution days, Atlanta leading with a total of 43 canners; Linden second with 28; Marietta, 17; Hughes Springs, 7; Avinger, 5. There were special speakers at these different celebrations. Now all the communities have a definite objective. More gardens have been planted than ever before. Extra rows of sweet corn or field corn have been added. While every farmer grows some cotton, all of them now raise their supply of food.

Surrounding counties are making preparation to go in for similar projects as did Cass County. County agents and home agents, secretaries of chambers of commerce, and bankers are interested in adopting definite food programs which will insure their people against shortage.

So far the season has been backward in northeast and north Texas. There is no certainty that as much food will be raised as is necessary to supply the farms unless special efforts are put forth. Farmers have no money with which to buy food or feed, so they are making every effort to grow it. The Cass County example will be stimulating in many parts of Texas.

NEW REGULATIONS FOR VETERANS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the proposed regulations reducing veterans' benefits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, the White House announcement appearing in the newspapers this morning is of interest to all veterans in my district. The proposed liberalization of the regulations reducing veterans' benefits is the most humane course to follow at this time. I am glad to state that I fought the passage of the so-called "economy bill" because of the unjust provisions contained therein, and I voiced my objections to its provisions in a letter to the President on March 24. I feel that my plea, together with the hundreds of others he received, was of material assistance in bringing about the revision which will take place under the President's new orders.

My letter to the President was as follows:

MARCH 24, 1933.

HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Painful as the task is for me to describe the dark side of the Federal employees and veterans' affairs, it sometimes becomes a matter of duty and necessity. I desire to inform you candidly of the discontent which at this moment prevails universally.

The complaints of evils, particularly with the veterans, which they suppose almost remediless, are the total lack of money or the means of existing from one day to another, the heavy debts they have already incurred, the loss of credit, the distress of their families, and the prospect of poverty and misery before them. It is useless, Mr. President, to suppose that veterans will acquiesce contentedly with small rations, when many of those in a civil walk of life are enjoying certain privileges and recreations. While the human mind is influenced by the same passions and have the same inclinations to indulge, this cannot be. A veteran has the same predilection to sociability as a person in civil life. He conceives himself equally called upon to live up to his rank, and his pride is hurt when circumstances restrain him.

The act to maintain the credit of the United States gives you the power to determine the actual percentage of reduction. It has been generally expressed that your consideration will be fair and just to all. I trust you will, in the case of Federal employees, exempt salaries of $83.33 a month ($1,000 per year) or less from the proposed reductions and temper the cut to other low-salaried workers.

In the case of veterans, I feel sure you will bear in mind the fact that this country has been rescued by their armies from impending ruin, and our debt of gratitude should not remain unpaid.

Very truly yours,

ALFRED F. BEITER.

CURTALMENT OF THE WORK OF THE NAVAL RESERVE

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD three short letters relative to curtailment of the work of the Naval Reserve.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has not been the custom in the past to permit the insertion of such letters. I shall not object, because that is the duty of the majority; but I may say it is contrary to custom.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from George W. Akers, of Detroit, also a memorandum of the Secretary of the Navy and a letter to the President:

DETROIT, MICH., April 27, 1933.

HON. JOHN C. LEHR,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. LEHR: Apparently well-authenticated rumors come from Washington that executive cuts of the Army and Navy appropriations for the coming fiscal year contemplate the complete elimination of drills and field and ship training for the National Guard and Naval Reserve.

The necessity of the National Guard as a vital arm of our national defense and State protection is well known, and its certain impairment by the withdrawal of Federal support would take years to overcome, even if we were so fortunate as to maintain a peace-time condition.

The drilling units of the Naval Reserve, being confined to 83 cities and comprising only about 1,200 officers and 8,800 enlisted men, is not so well known, but is perhaps even more vital to the national defense. With all naval vessels undermanned, many of them rotating in commission and others out of commission entirely, the immediate availability of the drilling units of the Naval Reserve is absolutely necessary to just get what ships we now have ready to go to sea.

Should this country be called upon to fight a defensive war, the Navy would have to have these trained men if it hoped to prevent our land forces, including the National Guard, from being thrust into battle before they were ready. In fact, one of the cardinal features of the present plan of rotating ships in commission is this immediate availability of the Naval Reserve.

The total Naval Reserve appropriation is only about 1 percent of the Navy appropriation. Any savings effected are bound to be insignificant as compared with the total savings required, yet the elimination of drills and ship training means about an 85 percent cut of the Naval Reserve budget. No ship training was given last summer, and it was definitely a set-back to the morale and efficiency of this force. Should training be again denied this coming summer, the result would be well-nigh fatal.

Drill attendance without pay was tried in 1921 and 1922 and was not satisfactory, even though cruises with pay were authorized at that time. The cruises were attractive to recruits and were the main incentive for drill attendance, but when the novelty wore off the recruit would drop away. The result was a continuous recruiting campaign, a turnover of upward of 80 or 90 percent, and training and instructions limited to the rudiments for those few who appeared at the armories on drill nights. How much less satisfactory will drilling be with drill pay and training duty both eliminated?

The nominal drill pay of the individual members of the National Guard and Naval Reserve is today in a substantial majority of cases, their sole means of support. If this is taken away, an additional burden is bound to be thrown on the local welfare agencies. The Federal Government will thus be enabled to unload a comparatively small amount of expense onto the States and municipalities, but it will lose the training investment it has made in thousands of the most patriotic of its young men, most of whom give freely of their leisure time, over and above the actual drill requirements, to increase their value to the national defense and to become better citizens.

As representative of one of the foremost States in patriotic and national-defense activities, won't you protest this proposed disproportionate cut of one of our necessary national services?

Sincerely yours,

GEO. W. AKERS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 25, 1933.

From: The Secretary of the Navy.

To: All ships and stations.

Subject: Local emergency-relief work by Naval Reserve.

1. The Secretary of the Navy takes great pleasure in bringing to the attention of the service the valuable aid rendered by the Naval Reserve during the recent earthquake in the vicinity of Long Beach, Calif.; during the recent Ohio River flood at Cincinnati; and during the search operations off Barnegat, N.J., in connection with the wreck of the U.S.S. Akron.

2. Under the provisions of law the Naval Reserve may not be called out without their own consent except during war or a national emergency. No funds are contained in the annual appropriations for active-duty pay or allowances for Reservists except training duty or active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve, and the amounts are barely sufficient for these purposes. The duties performed by individuals or organizations of the Naval Reserve during local emergencies are therefore entirely voluntary and without pay or allowances.

3. During the earthquake emergency in southern California the presence of ample regular forces obviated the necessity for calling upon local Reserve organizations for patrol or other rescue work. However, through the network of volunteer-communication Reserve stations, most of which are owned and operated by Reservists themselves, communication was established with the stricken area and with the outside world within less than 2 hours after the first shock. When the emergency call went forth, practically all volunteer-communication Reserve stations within the stricken area were manned, and remained in operation continuously until commercial communication lines were reestablished the following day. A large number of messages were handled, principally for the Red Cross and the California National Guard, dealing with the emergency.

4. A sudden flood emergency developed at Cincinnati, Ohio, Saturday night and Sunday, March 19, on account of the overflow of the Ohio River and its tributaries. This emergency became critical on Sunday morning and, at the request of the mayor, the local Naval Reserve division was mobilized and the volunteer-communication Reserve network was placed in operation for maintaining communications throughout the stricken area. Eighty-five percent of the Naval Reserve division promptly responded to the call and performed patrol and relief work until Monday morning, when most of them were obliged to return to their regular employment. The mayor requested that official orders be issued maintaining them on duty for a longer period, but this could not be done under the law. As in the case of the California and other disasters, the volunteer-communication Reserve functioned in sending and receiving emergency messages dealing with relief wherever commercial communication lines had failed or did not reach.

5. In connection with the search problem involved on account of the wreck of the dirigible Akron, about midnight of April 3, it was necessary to utilize the services of Naval Reserve aviators and Naval Reserve planes from the Naval Reserve aviation base at Floyd Bennett Field, N.Y., and the Naval Reserve aviation base, naval aircraft factory, Philadelphia. About 3 a.m. of April 4, news of the disaster having reached the stations, the various Naval Reserve aviation officers and men belonging to the organizations were communicated with by telephone, and at daylight all available planes from both stations began taking off to participate in the search over the sea. This hazardous and exacting duty was continued by various Reservists day after day until the search was discontinued on April 7. As in other disasters, volunteer-communication Reserve stations were manned and communications maintained with the searching planes and with the district headquarters. The unusual communication load placed on district headquarters at Philadelphia was handled by Naval Reservists, who stood regular radio watches, and several acted as radio operators on the planes and assisted in the search. Approximately 100 Naval Reserve officers and men qualified for the performance of this duty, volunteered therefor, and actual flying was performed during the search by approximately 20 Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve aviation officers.

6. The best traditions of the naval service have been upheld by the Naval Reserve during these emergencies.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

APRIL 29, 1933.

President FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: According to information in the press and otherwise which I have received, it appears that a considerable reduction in appropriations for the Regular Army is being considered, as well as for the training of the R.O.T.C., the C.M.T.C., and Reserve officers.

I supported your economy program because I felt that it was perfectly justified in view of all the circumstances and conditions in which we find ourselves, but I do wish to go on record as being strongly in favor of an adequate national defense, and I hope and trust that nothing will be done which in any way will tend to affect adequate national defense, both for the Army and Navy. I believe that the peace and security of this country should not be jeopardized by economy in this line, and in particular I wish to urge that no reduction be made in appropriations for the training of the R.O.T.C., C.M.T.C., and Reserve officers. I feel that because of your own experience during the World War and your intimate knowledge of the conditions as it existed then, you will agree with these sentiments.

In brief, I feel that this is one place in which we dare not sacrifice efficiency for the purpose of economy.

Respectfully yours,

J. C. LEHR, Member of Congress.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the floor leader announced earlier in the week that we would adjourn tomorrow afternoon over Saturday, I should like to ask the floor leader if he has any objection to meeting at 11 o'clock tomorrow instead of 12 in order that those who want to take a week-end trip may have an extra hour in which to get away?

Mr. BYRNS. Personally I have not the slightest objection to meeting at 11 o'clock tomorrow if that is satisfactory to the House.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I should like the majority leader to put the request.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p.m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned to meet tomorrow, Friday, May 12, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(Friday, May 12, 10 a.m.)

Continuation of the hearings on H.R. 5500. The Emergency Transportation Act, 1933.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

60. A letter from the secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting report of the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the first quarter of 1933, January 1 to March 31, 1933, inclusive, and for the period from the organization of the corporation on February 2, 1932, to March 31, 1933, inclusive (H.Doc. No. 34); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

61. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of a proposed bill, the purpose of which is to enable the Treasury to afford relief to holders of national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes and Federal Reserve notes, which may not be redeemed under present law because they have been so defaced that the identity of the issuing banks cannot be ascertained; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

62. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a proposed joint resolution to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 for the purpose of extending for 1 additional year from March 10, 1933, the time within which American nationals who have obtained awards from the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, or from the Tripartite Claims Commission, United States, Austria, and Hungary, may make application to the Treasury for the payment of such awards; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

63. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to section 1 of the River and Harbor Act approved January 21, 1927, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 27, 1933, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, containing a general plan for the improvement of Cumberland River, Ky. and Tenn., for the purposes of navigation and efficient development of its water-power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation (H.Doc. No. 38); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. DICKSTEIN: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H.R. 3524. A bill to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874); without amendment (Rept. No. 125). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CORNING: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 5394. A bill authorizing Charles V. Bosser, his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the East River between Bronx and Whitestone Landing; with amendment (Rept. No. 126). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DICKSTEIN: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. House Joint Resolution 118. Joint resolution to provide for the return to the Philippine Islands of unemployed Filipinos resident in the continental United States, to authorize appropriations to accomplish that result, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 127). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 138. Resolution providing for the consideration of S. 7, an act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska; without amendment (Rept. No. 128). Referred to the House Calendar.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

999. By Mr. ARENS: Petition of E. N. Myers, secretary North Western Carmen's Association, St. Paul, Minn., protesting against the continuance of the waste of public funds through the diverting of freight to an extravagant and hugely subsidized competing form of transportation, approving President Roosevelt's position that waterway projects included in the public-works program should be confined to projects that are self-liquidating and for the use of which facilities a tonnage tax can be collected on water craft sufficient to pay for the maintenance of such waterways as well as to eventually retire the Government's investment therein, and favoring the investigation of the feasibility and practicability of water transportation on the upper Mississippi; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1000. Also, petition of Capt. Martin O. Ness, International Shipmasters Association, Duluth, Minn., opposing any reduction in personnel or appropriations for national defense appropriated by the last Congress, and also if appropriations are reduced for personnel in the Regular Establishment for the civilian components should be increased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1001. Also, petition of the Minneapolis Hide & Tallow Co., 240 Gateway Building, Minneapolis, Minn., retail and wholesale meat dealers of Minnesota, urging the Congress of the United States for the immediate consideration of adequate duties on all imports of animal, marine, and vegetable oils and fats, as well as the oil content of all raw materials from which such oils and fats are processed, and also adequate duties on hides and skins; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1002. By Mr. BACHARACH: Petition of Mayor Nathaniel Rosenfeld; Woodbine Clothing Co.; Baron de Hirsch Lodge, No. 222, I.O.O.F.; George Feldman and Harry Feldman, residents of Woodbine, N.J.; William C. Hunt, of Wildwood, N.J.; and the Wildwood Chapter of Hadassah, Wildwood, N.J., protesting against the inhuman acts of the Hitler government against the Jewish race; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1003. By Mr. BERLIN: Petition of Greensburg (Pa.) Jewish community at a public meeting under the auspices of Greensburg Lodge, No. 194, U.S. Order Brith Sholom, protesting against the atrocities practiced upon Jewish people of Germany and urging action that will result in the discontinuance of discrimination against the Jews; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1004. By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Memorial of King David Lodge, No. 120, Progressive Order of the West, M. Cytron, president, Al Cohen, secretary, of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the persecution of Jews in Germany and urging action by the United States with a view to bringing about a speedy termination of discrimination against the Jews; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1005. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Brooklyn Council, Kings County, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, opposing all such issues of tax-exempt obligations and urging Congress to take the necessary procedure to prevent the issuance of such tax-exempt obligations in the future and also, where possible, to subject all existing obligations and the income therefrom to the tax laws of the Government; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1006. By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of Crippen-Fellows Post, No. 50, American Legion, Castleton, Vt., opposing removal of the regional office of the Veterans' Administration at Burlington, Vt.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1007. By Mr. GRANFIELD: Petition of the City Council of the City of Cambridge, memorializing Congress to enact House Joint Resolution 191 and Senate Joint Resolution 105; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1008. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of the Senate of the State of Texas, urging that the Wagner relief bill be amended so that funds appropriated thereunder may be used for the construction of roads; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1009. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolution of the International Shipmasters Association, of Duluth, Minn., expressing opposition to reductions in the Naval Reserve appropriations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1010. By Mr. LESINSKI: Petition of the Wayne County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, urging retention of regional office of the Veterans' Administration at Detroit, Mich.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1011. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Steinway & Sons, New York City, piano manufacturers, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1012. Also, petition of William S. Gray & Co., New York City, opposing House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1013. Also, petition of National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, Washington, D.C., concerning the independent offices appropriation bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1014. By Mr. McCORMACK: Petitions of Patrick J. Connelly, president Dorchester Board of Trade, Dorchester, and employees of Aeolian-Skinner Organ Co., Inc., 215 Sydney Street, and Albre Marble & Tile Co., Inc., 64 Mount Vernon Street, Dorchester; American Stay Co., 299 Marginal Street, East Boston; Barney & Carey Co., Dorchester and Milton; Block Jones Photo Co., Inc., 27 Von Hillern Street, and Boston Insulated Wire & Cable Co., 65 Bay Street, Dorchester; D. R. Campbell Machine Co., 55 Mildred Avenue, Mattapan; Frost Coal Co., 488 Neponset Avenue, Freeport Marble &

Tile Co., 264 Adams Street, Harrison Square Foundry Co., 110 Gibson Street, Healey-Seaver Co., 90 Freeport Street, McGovern Coal Co., 188 Geneva Avenue, Joseph Pollak Corporation, 79-85 Freeport Street, and Shawmut Engineering Co., 195 Freeport Street, Dorchester; and Thompson Wire Co., 41 Mildred Avenue, Mattapan, all of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against the passage of the so-called "Black-Connery 30-hour week labor bill", referred to Committee on Labor.

1015. Also, petition of the United Irish-American Societies of New York, James MacDermott, secretary, 205 East Sixty-seventh Street, New York City, opposing further reduction of foreign debts due the United States and the transferring of the weight of European war debts to the shoulders of the already overburdened people of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1016. By Mr. McFARLANE: Petition of the Texas House of Representatives, urging amendments to the Wagner bill so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds to be appropriated to the Texas Relief Commission may be used for the building of good roads; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1017. By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of the Common Council of Bridgeport, Conn., urging that the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the naturalization of Brig. Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko be commemorated by the issuance of a memorial series of stamps; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1018. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Steinway & Sons, New York City, opposing the passage of House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1019. Also, petition of William S. Gray & Co., New York City, opposing the passage of House bill 3759; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1020. By Mr. TRAEGER: Petition of the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, dated May 2, 1933, urging enactment of the Ludlow unemployment bill, H.R. 1553; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1021. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of California, dated April 26, 1933, urging a tariff on rubber, and to include in the Government supply bills a requirement that rubber purchased be grown in the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1022. By Mr. WOLVERTON: Telegraphic petition of Samuel Shane, chairman, representing 2,000 citizens of Camden, N.J., protesting against the unjust persecution of Jews in Germany, and urging action that will result in the discontinuance of discrimination against the Jews; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
